

CIVLIUS CESAR

COMMENTARIES

C. Julius Cæsar,

Of His WARS in

GALLIA

And the CIVIL WARS betwirt him and POMPEY.

With many Excellent and Judicious Observations thereupon.

As also the ART of our Modern Training.

By CLEMENT EDMONDS Esquire

To this Edition is now added, at the end of every Book, those Excellent Remarks of the Duke of Roban.

Also the Commentaries of the Alexandrian and African WARS, Written by Aulus Hirtius; now first made English.

With a Geographical Nomenclatour of the Ancient and Modern Names of Towns.

Together with the Life of CESAR.

And an Account of his Dedais;

REVISED, CORRECTED, and ENLARGED.

In the SAVOT,

Printed by Edward Jones, for Thomas Chapman at the Angel in the Pall-mall. MDCXCV.

To my Friend Master CLEMENT EDMONDS.

EPIGRAMME.

Or Cassar's deeds, nor all his honours won In these West-parts; nor, when that war was done, The name of Pompey for an Enemy; Cato to boot; Rome, and her liberty; All yielding to his fortune: nor, the while, To have ingrav'd these Acts with his own stile; And that so fitrong, and deep, as might be thought. He wrote with the same spirit that he sought; Nor that his Work liv'd, in the hands of soes, Un argu'd then; and (yet) hath same from those; Not all these, Edmonds, or what else put to, Can so speak Cassar, as thy Labours do. For, where his person liv'd scarce one; just age, And that 'midst envy and Parts; then, fell by rage; His deeds too dying, save in Books: (whose good How sew have read! how sewer understood!) Thy learned hand, and true Promethean Art, As by a new creation, part by part, In every Counsel, Stratagem, Design, Action, or Engine, worth a Note of thine, Tall surure time not only doth restore

Ben. Folmfon

Another of the same.

Ho, Edmonds, reads thy Book, and doth not fee What th'antique Soldiers were, the Modern be? Wherein thou flew'ft, how much the later are Beholden to this Mafter of the War:

And that in Action there is nothing new,
More then to vary what our Elders knew.

Which all but ignorant Captains will confes:
Not to give Casfar this makes ours the left.

Yet thou, perhaps, shalt meet fome Tongues will grutch
That to the World thou shouldst reveal so much;
And thence deprave thee, and thy Work. To those

Casfar stands up, as from his Urn late rose
By that great Art; and doth proclaim by me,
They murder him again, that envy thee.

Ben. Johnson.

CÆSARIS

[a 2]

COMMENTARIES

C. Jelus Celar,

Of His WARS in

GALLIA

And the CIVIL WARS betwixt him and

With vary Excellent and Judicious Observations therewere

As also the ART of our

Modern In

To this Educion is now added, at the end of every Book, those Excellent Remarks of the Duke of Rohan.

Also the Commontaries of the Alexandrian and Assicta WALS, Written by Aulus Hirtius; now first made singlishe.

With a Geographical Nomenclatour of the Ancient and Manes of Towns.

e and Macaulte of the Architect

Fille SAF DE

ំ ីសីសាសា ក្នុងក្នុងភ

€5

CÆSARIS ELOGIUM. C. Julius Cæfar.

Ucii Cafaris F. Lux Cafarum & Pater, Romanus Alexander. Terræ Mars: Omnibus tam metuendus, quam mitis: . Pretium fecit fervituti. Victo orbe Urbem victricem orbis vicit. Defuere illi hostes, hostem habuit Patriam, Ne deeffet unquam quod vinceret. Ingratam Patriam patriis armis puniit. Eam vicit invitus, qua vixit invita. Qui Roma propugnator non regnavit, regnavit expugnator s Pro Roma triumpharat, de Roma triumphavit: Amavit tamen inimicam, nolenti profuit. S'ape a fulmine lauro servatus regia, Quem inermem timuerunt arma, armata necavit toga. Ceffet Civibus Cafar Cafus: Sero cognitum luxit Patria; Viventem hostem, mortuum vocavit Patrem, Parricidium confessa tum patrem dixit. Disce letter : Melius sæpe quæ non habes vides, quam quæ habes.

TO THE

PRINCE.

SIR,

Aving ended this task of Observations, and according to Your Gracious Pleasure and Command, Jupplied such parts as were wanting to make up the Total of these Commentaries: it doth return again, by the lowest steps of Humbleness, to implore the high Patronage of Your Princely Favour; emboldened especially because it carrieth Casar and his Fortunes, as they come related from the same Author: which, in the deep fudgment of His Most Excellent MAJESTY, is preferred above all other profane Histories; and so commended, by His Sacred Authority, to Your Reading, as a chief Pattern and Master-piece of the Art of War. And herein Your admired Wisdom may happily the rather deem it capable of freer Passage, in that it is not altogether unproper for these happy days; as knowing, That War is never so well handled, as when it is made an Argument of Discourse in times of sweet and plenteous Peace. The Blessings whereof may ever Crown Your Years; as the Sovereign Good of this Temporary Life, and the chiefest Ornaments of Princely Condition.

The humblest

of Your Highness's Servants,

In Clementis Edmondi De Re Militari ad Ful. Calaris Commentarios Observationes.

UR creperos motus, & aperto prælia Marte Edmondus nobis pace vigente refert? Cur sensus mentesq; Ducum rimatur, & effert?

Diserteq; Anglos bellica multa docet? Scilicet, ut media meditetur prælia pace Angliz belli potens, nec moriatur bonos. Providus bæc certe patriæ depromit in usus; Ut patriæ pacem qui cupit; arma parat.

Guil. Camdenus, Cl.

To my Friend, Master CLEMENT EDMONDS.

HO thus extracts, with more than Chymick Art, The Spirit of Books, flews the true way to find Th'Elixir that our leaden Parts convert Into the golden Metal of the Mind. Who thus observes in such material kind The certain Motions of his Practices. Knows on what Centre th'Actions of Mankind Turn in their Course, and sees their fatalness. And he that can make these Observances, Must be above his Book more than his Pen. For, we may be affur'd, he men can guels, That thus doth CAESAR know, the Man of Men. Whose Works, improv'd here to our greater gain. Makes Co ESAR more than Co ESAR to contain.

Sam. Daniel.

To his worthy Friend, Master CLEMENT EDMONDS.

Blerving well what Thou hast well Observed In CASAR's Works, his Wers and Discipline; Whether His Pen hath earn'd more Praise, or Thine, My shallow Cenfure doubtfully hath swerv'd. If strange it were, if wonder it deserv'd, That what He wrought so faire, He wrote so sine; Me thinks, it's stranger, That Thy learned Line Should our best Leaders lead, not having fero'd. But hereby (Clement) hast thou made thee known Able to counsell, aptest to record The Conquests of a CASAR of our own; HENRY, thy Patron, and my Princely Lord. Whom (O!) Heav'n profper, and protect from harms, In elorious Peace, and in victorious Arms.

Fosbua Silvester.

The Contents.

The Life of JULIUS CASAR, with certain Historical Observations upon his MEDALS.

Chap. 1. Callia described. The Heloetians dis-like their Native Seat, and propound to themselves larger Territories in the Continent of Gallia: Orgeotrix feedeth this humour, for his own advantage. Fol. 1.
Chap. 2. Orgenerix's Practices are discovered; his Death. The Helvesians continue the Resolution of their Expedition, and prepare themselves accordingly.

Chap. 3. Cefar denyeth the Heloetians Passage
Descriptor He fortifieth the pasfage between the Hill Jura and the Lake of Ge-

Chap. 4. The Helverians failing to pass the Rhone, take the way through the Country of the Sequeni Cafar hafteth into Italy, and there enrolleth more Legions, and returning, overthroweth part of them at the River Arar.

Chap. 5. Casar passeth over the River Arar; his Horsemen encounter with the Helvetians, and are put to the worft.

Chap. 6. Cafar fendeth to get the advantage of a Hill, and fo to give the Heloetians Battle; but is put off by false Intelligence: The opportunity being lost, he intendeth Provision of Corn. 6.
Chap. 7. The Helvetians follow after Caesar, and overtake the Rereward. He imbattelth his Legions upon the tide of a Hill, and giveth Order for Chap. 8. Cafar fendeth away all the Horses of ease, exhorteth his Men, and beginneth the Battle.

Chap. 9. The Helvetians fainting in the Battle, retire to a Hill; the Romans follow after, and the Battle is continued.

Chap. 10. The Helvetians continue their fight at the Carriages; but at length they leave the Field, and march towards Langres.

Chap. 11. Cafar, after three days respite, followeth after the Helvetians: He taketh them to Mercy, and fendeth them back again to the Coun-

Chap. 12. The States of Gallia congramlate Ca-far's Victory; they call a Council, and discover their inward grief, concerning Arioviftus and his Forces.

Chap. 13. The Reasons that moved Cafar to undertake this War.

Chap. 14. Ariovistus's Answer. A second Embaffage, with the fuccels thereof.

Chap. 15. The Treviri bring News of one hundred Townships of the Suevi that were come to the Rhene, Cafar taketh in Befancon: His Soldiers are furprifed with an extream fear of the Germans.

Chap. 16. Cafar's Speech to the Army concerning this fear.

Chap. 17. The Treaty between Cafar and Ario-

Chap. 18. Cafar preventeth Ariovistus of his pur-Chap. 19. Cafar feeketh means to give them battle, and the Germans dispose themselves thereunto.

Chap. 20. The Battle between Casar and Ario-

The Second COMMENTART of the Wars in GALLIA.

Chap. 2. C Efar hafteth to his Army, marcheth towards the Confines of the Belge, and taketh in the Men of Rheims.

Chap. 2. The power of the Belge, and their preparation for this War. Chap. 3. Casar passeth his Army over the River Axona, leaving Titurius Sabinus encamped on the other fide with fix Cohorts. Chap. 4. The Belge attempt the Surprise of Bi-brax: Casar sendeth Succour unto it. 33.

Chap. 5. Cefar confronteth the Belge in form of Battle, but without any blow given: The Belga attempt the passing of the River Axona, but in vain, and to their loss; they consult of breaking up the Chap. 6. The Belge break up their Camp, and as they return home, are chased and slaughtered by the Romans.

Chap. 7. Cafar followeth after the Belgae into the Country of the Suessones, and there besiegeth

Chap. 8, Cesar carrieth his Army to the Territories of the Bellovaci, Ambiani, and the Nervii.

Chap. 9. The Romans begin to fortifie their Camp, but are interrupted by the Nrevii; Cafar maketh hafte to prepare his Forces to Battle. 40. Chap. 10. The Battle between Cafar and the Chap. 11. The Battle continueth, and in the end Cafar overcometh.

Chap. 12. The Aduatici betake themselves to ftrong hold, and are taken by Cafar.

Chap. 13. Crassus taketh in all the Maritime Cities that lie to the Ocean. The Legions carried into their Wintering Camps.

CHAP. I. Lib. III.

SErgius Galba being fent to clear the Passage of the Alpes, is besieged by the Seduni and Veragri.

Chap. 2. The Enemy fetteth upon the Wintering Camp; Galba overthrowerh them. Chap. 3. Galba returneth into the Province; the

The CONTENTS.

Unelli give occasion of a new War. Chap. 4. Cafar having advertisement of these new troubles, hasteth into Gallia, and prepareth for the War.

Chap. 5. The proceedings of either Party in the entrance of this War.

Chap. 6. The manner of their shipping, and their Sea-fight. Chap. 7. The Battle continueth; and Cafar o-vercometh. Chap. 8. Sabinus overthroweth the Unelli, with the manner thereof. Chap. 9. The Proceedings of Crassus in Aquitanie.

Chap. 10. The Gauls raife new Forces against

Chap. 11. Craffus taketh the Camp of the Gauls, and with their Overthrow endeth that War. 61. Chap. 12. Cafar undertaketh the War with the Menapii and Morini.

CHAP. I. Lib. IV.

THe Ufipetes and Tenchthers bring great Multitudes of People over the Rhene into Gallia; the nature of the Suevi. 65.

Chap. 2. The Motives inducing the Usipetes to come over the Rhene into Gallia.

Chap. 3. Cafar cometh to his Army, marcheth towards the Germans, and by the way treateth of Conditions of Peace.

Chap. 4. The Germans, contrary to their own request made to Casar, set upon the Roman Horsemen, and overthrow them. Chap. 5. Cafar marcheth directly to the Camp of the Germans, and cutteth them all in pieces, and fo enderh that War Chap. 6. Cafar maketh a Bridge upon the Rhene, and carrieth his Army over into Germany. Chap. 7. Casar taketh revenge upon the Sicambri, giveth liberty to the Ubii; and returneth again

Chap. 8. Cafar thinketh of a Voyage into Britannie: He enquireth of Merchants concerning the nature of that people.

Chap. 9. Cafar fendeth C. Volusenus to discover the Coast of Britannie, and prepareth himself for that Voyage.

Chap. 10. C.esar faileth into Britannie, and landeth his Men.

Chap. 11. The Britans make Peace with Cafar, but break it again upon the loss of the Roman Ship-

Chap. 12. Cesar new trimmeth his late shaken Navy: The Britans fet upon the Romans as they harvested, but were put off by Cafar.

Chap. 13. The Britans make head with their Forces, and are beaten by Cafar. His Return into Gallia.

Chap. 14.

CHAP. I. Lib. V.

CAfar returneth into Gallia; findeth there great ftore of Shipping made by the Soldiers, and commandeth it to be brought to the Haven Itius.

Chap. 2. Cafar preventeth new Motions amongst the Treviri, and goeth to his Navy. Dummorix refuseth to accompany him into Britain; his Flight and Death.

Chap. 3. Casar saileth into Britain; landeth his Forces, and seeketh the Enemy. 82.

Chap. 4. Cafar returneth to his Navies, to take Order for fuch Losses as had happen'd by Tempest the Night before.

Chap. 5. The Britains make Cassivellanus General in this War. The Island and the manner of the People described Chap. 6. Divers Skirmishes between the Romans and the Britans.

Chap. 7. Cafar giveth the Britans two feveral Overthrows.

Chap. 8. The Conclusion of the British Wat. Cafar returneth into Gallia: Chap. 9. Celar disposeth his Legions into their Wintering Camp, and quieteth the Carnutes. 88. Chap. 10. Ambiorix attempteth to surprise the Camp of Sabinus and Cotta, and failing, practifeth to take them by guile.

Chap. 11. The Romans call a Council upon this Advertisement, and resolve to depart, and joyn themselves to some other of the Legions.

Chap. 12. The Romans take their Journey towards the next Legion; and are fet upon by the Chap. 13. The Romans caft themselves into an Orb, and are much discouraged. Chap. 14. Ambiorix directeth the Gauls how they might best fight with advantage, and frustrate the Weapons of the Roman Soldiers.

Chap. 15. The Romans are overthrown. Chap. 16. Ambiorix hafteth to befiege Cicero, and ftirreth up the Aduatici, the Nervii, and fo raiseth a great power.

Chap. 17. Cicero defendeth his Camp from the furprise of the Nervis, and prepareth himself against Chap. 18. The Nervii propound the fame things to Cicero which Ambiorix had done to Sabinus, but are rejected.

Chap. 19. The Nervii beliege Cicero with a Ditch and a Rampire, and work means to fet fire on their Tents.

Chap. 20. The Emulation between two Centurions, Pulfio and Varenus, with their Fortunes in the Encounter.

Chap. 21. Cicero findeth means to advertise Cafar of this accident, who hasting, raiseth the Siege, and putteth the Enemy to a great Slaughter. 97. Chap 22. The Commotions of the States of Gallia. Inducionarus attempting great matters, is flain, and the Country quieted.

CHAP. I. Lib. VI.

Æsar fearing a great commotion in Gallia, muftereth more Forces.

Chap. 2. The Treviri follicite the Germans and some of the States of Gallia. Cafar carrieth Four Legions into the Territories of the Nervii. 103.

Chap. 3, Cafar furnmoneth a general Council, and carrieth his Army against the Senones. 104. Chap. 4. Cafar intendeth the War of the Treviri.

Chap. 5. Labienus overthroweth the Treviri by a Guile. Chap' 6. Cafar carrieth his Army over the Rhene into Germany, Chap. 7. The Factions in Gallia in Cafar's time.

Chap. 8. Two forts of Men in Gallia, Druides. and Equites, Chap.

The CONTENTS.

Chap. 9. The second fort of Men in Gallia, called the Equites in Cefar's time.

Chap. 10. The manner and life of the Germans.

Chap. 11. Bafilius his Surprise upon Ambiorix.

Chap. 12. Cativulcus poysoneth himself. Cafar divideth his Army into three parts.

Chap, 13. Celar fendeth Meffengers to the bordering States, to come out and fack the Eburones.

Chap. 14. The Sicambri fend out Two thousand Horse against the Eburones; and by fortune they fall upon Cicero at Vatuca.

Chap. 15. The Sicambri come to Vatuca, and offer to take the Camp.

Chap. 16. The Sicambri continue their Purpose in taking the Camp. Chap. 17. The Sicambri give over their purpole and depart. Chap. 18. Cefar returneth to spoil the Enemy, and punisheth Acco.

CHAP. I. Lib. VII.

THe Gauls enter into new Deliberations of Re-

Chap. 2. The Men of Chartres take upon them the beginning of a Revolt, under the Conduction of Cotuatus and Conetodunus. Chap. 3. Vercingetorix stirreth up the Arverni to the like Commotion and Revolt. Chap. 4. Cafar cometh into Gallia, and by a device getteth to his Army. Chap. 5. Vercingetorix beliegeth Gergovia. Ca-far taketh in Vellaunodunum and Genabum. Chap, 6. Cefar taketh in Noviodunum, and beateth the Enemy coming to rescue the Town, 127.

Chap. 7. Vercingetorix persuadeth the Gauls to a new course of War. 128. Chap. 8. Cafar befiegeth Avaricum, and is dif-treffed for want of Corn. Chap. 9. Cafar leaveth the Siege, and goeth to take the Enemy upon advantage; but returneth again without fighting. Chap. 10. Vercingetorix excuseth himself to the Gauls for his absence. Chap. 11. Cafar continueth the Siege at Avaricum, and describeth the Walls of the Towns in Chap. 12. The Siege of Avaricum continued.

Chap. 13. Cafar by an Assault taketh Avari-Chap. 14. Vercingetorix doth comfort the Gauls for the lofs of Avaricum. Chap. 15. Vercingetorix laboureth to unite all

Gallia into one League, for the upholding of their Chap. 16. A Controversie fell out in the State of the Hedui, touching the Choice of their Chief Magistrate. Chap. 17. Cafar passeth his Army over the River Elaver, and encampeth himself before Ger-Chap. 18. Convictolitainus moveth the Hedui to a Revolt.

Chap. 19. Cafar hindreth the Revolt of the Hedui. 140.

Chap. 20. The Hedui rob and kill divers Roman Citizens. 141.

the Service at Gergovia.

Chap. 22. The Romans make an Affault upon

Chap. 23. The Romans continue the Affault, and are beaten off with loss. Chap. 24. Cafar rebuketh the rashness of his Soldiers, and maketh light, but successful Skir-mithes upon the Enemy. Chap. 25. The Hedui revolt. Cafar passeth his Army over the River Loire.

Chap. 26. Labienus cometh to Lutetia with four Legions. Chap. 27. Labienus passeth the River Sequana, and fighteth with the Gauls, Chap. 28. The Gauls confult of the carriage of that War.

Chap. 29. The Cavalry of the Gauls do fet upon the Roman Army, and are beaten. Chap. 30. Casar besiegeth Alesia, and fighteth with the Enemy's Cavalry. Chap. 31. Vercingetorix fendeth away the Horse. Cafar incloseth Alefia with a strong Wall. Chap. 32. The Gauls raile an Army of 248000 to raise the Siege at Alesia. Chap. 33. Critognatus Speech at Alefia, touching the keeping of the Town.

Chap. 34. The Gauls do fet upon Cefar's Camp, both from the Town and the Field-fide. Chap. 35. The Gauls do chuse out 60000 of their best Men, and do assault the weakest part of Cafar's Camp. Chap. 36. Vercingetorix yieldeth himself and the Crown to Cafar.

A Continuation of the Wars in GALLIA. together with the manner of our Modern Training or Tactick Practice.

Chap. 1. THe Gauls raise new Troubles in divers Places. Cafar fcattereth and wasteth the Bituriges, and after that the Carnutes.

Chap. 2. The Bellovaci and other States under the leading of Corbeus and Comius, invade the Sueffiones: Cafar marcheth against them. Chap. 3. Cesar strengthens himself with more Forces. The Men of Rhemes worsted by the Enemy, and they again by the Germans on Casar's Par-Chap. 4. The Gauls Decamp, and are pursued by Casar. The routing of part of them, and the Death of Corbeus. Chap. 5. The Remainder of the Gauls submit themselves to Casar. Comius in danger to be slain by Treachery.

Chap. 6. Cafar disposeth his Forces into several parts of Gallia, and himself wasteth the Country of Ambiorix.

Chap. 7. A new War raised in the Territories of the Pictones. C. Fabius putteth to flight the Forces of Dimnocus; subdueth the Carnates, and Are-

Chap. 8. Drapes and Luterius feize upon Uxellodunum. Caninius pursueth them, overcometh their Forces, taketh Drapes Prisoner, and with Fabius befiegeth Uxellodumi

Chap. 9. Cafar having punished Guturvatus for the Revolt of the Carnutes, joineth with Caninius and Fabius before Oxellodunum: Upon his depriving them of Water, the Town yeildeth; Cafar cutteth off their Right hands.

Chap. 10. Drapes dyeth. Luterius brought to Chap. 21. C.esar spieth an occasion to advance Casar. Labienus's good Success against the Treviri. 142. Cafar, after his Expedition into Aquitania, putteth his Army into Winter Quarters.

The CONTENTS

Chap. 11. Comius of Arras overthrown in a Bartle of Horfe by C. Volusenus, Submitteth to M. Antonius, and receiveth Pardon.

Chap. 12. While Cafar is bufie in quieting and ordering things in Gallia, and visiting some munierpal Towns in Italy, his Enemies Conspire against Itim at Rose Observations upon the Eighth Commentary of the Wars in Gallia.

Observations upon CASAR's Commentaries of the CIVIL WARS betwixt him and POMPEY.

CHÂP. I. LIB. I.

THE Senate's Affection on Cafar's behalf, Chap. 2. The Senate proceed against Cefar with all eagerness.

Chap. 3. The Senate prepare for War. 175. Chap. 4. Cafar tafteth the Affection of the Sol-

Chap. 5. Cafar taketh Ariminum, receiveth and aniwereth Meifages from Pompey. Chap. 6. Calar taketh divers Municipal Towns.

Chap. 7. Lentulus fleeth in great fear out of Rome. Cafar cometh to Corfinium. 180. Chap. 8. Cafar goeth on with the Siege of Corfinium, and taketh it. 182. Chap. 9. Pompey goeth to Brundusum: Casar maketh means to treat with him. 186.

Chap. 10. Pompey leaveth Brundusium, and shippeth himfelf for Greece. Chap. 11. Cafar dispatcheth Forces into Sardi-

Chap. 12. Cefar goeth to Rome, and calling a Senate complaineth of the Injuries done unto him? Chap. 13. Cafar leaveth the City, goeth into Gallia, and treateth with the Marfeillians, Chap. 14. Cafar hasteth into Spain. Chap. 15. Cefar coming to his Army, advanceth forward and encampeth near unto the Enemy. 193.

Chap. 16. Cafar's Attempt to possess himself of a small Hill; what disadvantage he ran into by miffing of his purpole, what means he used to recover himfelf.

Chap. 17. Cafar brought into great extremity, by overflowing of two Rivers. Chap. 18. Afranius marcheth with three Legions, to cat off a Party. The Scarcity of Victuals in Cafar's Army.

Chap. 19. The Maffilians encounter with Brutus at Sea, and are beaten. Chap. 20. Upon the making of the Bridge at Herda, the Enemy resolveth to transfer the War into Celtiberia.

Chap. 21. The Enemy fetteth forward, and is ftay'd by C.efar. Chap 22. Afranius seeketh to take the Stroights between certain Mountains, but is prevented by Chap. 23. Cafar refuseth to fight upon an Advantage offered, contrary to the Opinion and Defire of all Men. Chap. 24. Petreine breaketh off the Treaty, and new sweareth the Soldiers to the Party. Chap. 25. The Endeavour which Afranius ufed to return to Herda, but failed in his DeChap. 26. Cofar goeth about to inclose the Ene-my, and he to hinder Cafar. Chap. 27. The Treaty of Peace.

Chap. 28. The Execution of the Articles agreed 208.

CHAP. I. Lib. II.

THe Preparations for the Siege, as well within as without the Town. Chap. 2. The Marseillians prepare themselves for a Sea-fight. Chap. 3. The Fight, and the Marfeillians Over-

Chap. 4. The Works which the Legionary Soldiers made against the Town. Chap. 5. The Marseillians got a Truce of the Romans, and broke it deceitfully. . .214. Chap. 6. The Marfeillians taking advantage of the Truce, confume with Fire all the Roman Works, which are afterwards re-edified. 215. Chap. 7. Varro raiseth great Troops to maintain Pomper's Party in Spain, but to no purpole. 216. Chap. 8. The Province and the Legions revolt from Varro. Cafar fetleth Spain, and returneth to Marleilles.

Chap 9. The Marfeillians give up the Town. Chap. 10. Curio transporteth two Legions into Chap. 11. Curio marcheth to Utica: His Cavalry putterh to flight great Troops coming from King Jula. His Army strangely possessed with an idle Fear. Chap. 12. Curio disputeth the matter in a Council of War.

Chap. 13. Curio calleth a General Affembly of nia and Sicily. Cato's Endeavour to keep Sicily for the Soldiers, and speaketh unto them concerning their Fear and Retraction.

Chap. 14. Curio bringeth forth his Troops, and putteth Varu's Army to flight.

Chap. 15. Curio leaveth Usica, to meet with King Juba. His Cavalry overthroweth the Forces led by Sabura, which leadeth him on to his Overthrow.

Chap. 16. Curio purfueth the Enemy with more hafte than good fuccefs.

Chap. 17. Curio defeated and flain; some few of the Army get Passage to Sicily, the rest yield themselves to Varie.

CHAP. I. Lib. III.

CAEfar giveth Order to Rome, for matters of Credit and Usury, and other things. Chap. 2. A particular View of Pompey's For-

Chap. 3. Cefar paffeth over into Greece, and returneth his Shipping to Brundusium. Oftavius be-Chap. 4. Cafar fendeth to Pompey, touching a Peace; taketh in Oricum, Apolonia, and other Chap. 5. Cafar taketh up his Lodging for Winter. Bibulus distressed at Sea for want of Provifions, feemeth defirous of a Treaty; which being carried on the other fide with good caution, breaketh off again.

Chap. 6. Bibulus dieth. Cafar useth means to procure a Treaty of Peace, but prevaileth not.

Chap.

The CONTENTS.

Chap. 7. Calius Rifus moveth Sedition in Italy, and is flain. 238.

Chap. 8. Libo taketh an Island right over against the Haven of Brundusium, and is beaten off by a Stratagem.

Chap. 9. C.esar's Supplies pass over into Greece, and take Landing.

Chap, 10. Cafar hafteth to meet with Antonius, and preventeth Pompey.

Chap. 11. Scipio's Preparation in Asia, to come into Greece to atfift Pompey.

Chap, 12. Cafar fendeth Forces into Theffalia, Æsolia, and Macedonia. Scipio cometh into Greece.

Chap. 13. The Paffages between Domitius and Scipio.

Chap. 14. Domitius draweth Scipio to a loss by an Ambushment. Young Pompey's Attempt upon Oricum.

Chap. 15. Cafar marcheth towards Pompey, offerreth him Battle, and cutteth him off from Dir-

Char. 16. Cafar goeth about to beliege Pompey.

Chap. 17. A Paffage that happened between both Parties, about the taking of a place. Chap. 18. The Scarcity which either Party endure in this Siege.

Chap. 19. A Relation of divers Encounters that happened between both Parties, Chap. 20. Casar moveth Scipio to mediate a Peace.

Chap. 21. An accident which fell out by two Brethren of Savoy in Cafar's Army.

Chap 22. Pompey attempting to break out, putteth Cefar's Party to great loss.

Chap. 23. C.esar purposeth to alter the course of War, and attempteth to cut off one of Pompey's Le-

Chap. 24. The Fight continueth, and Cafar lo-

Chap. 25. Cafar speaketh to the Soldiers con-cerning this Mishap, and for saketh the Place. 254. Chap. 26. Cafar goeth on in his Retreat : Pom-per cealeth to follow him: Chap. 27. Pomper hasteth to Scipio. Domitius heareth of the Overthrow. Chap. 28. Cafar facketh Gomphi in Theffaia.

256 Chap. 29. Pomper cometh into Theffalia; his Army conceiveth affured hope of Victory. Chap. 30. Cafar finding the Enemy to offer Bar-tle in an indifferent Place, prepareth to undertake

Chap. 31. The manner of imbatteling their At-Chap. 32. The Battle beginneth, and Cafar of vercometh. Chap. 33. C.efar preffeth hard after the Enemy, and taketh the Camp.

Chap. 34. C.efar befiegeth those that were escaped into the Hills. Chap. 35. Lelius attempteth to block in the Haven at Brundussum; and Cassius fireth Casar's Ships at Messina. Chap. 36. Cafar pursueth Pompey, who is flain in Egypt, Chap. 37. Prodigious Accidents happening upon the Battle in Pharfalia. Cafar cometh into Egypt, Chap. 38. Cafar landeth his Forces, taketh Pharus, and caufeth Photimus to be flain. The Commentaries of the Alexandrian War.

The Commentaries of the African War, The manner of our Modern Training or Tactick Practice.

The manner of Exercising of composed Battalions, with their different Motions. 206. Countermarching Files and Ranks. 307. Of Marches. 308. How directions are delivered in the Wars.

C. Julius Cæsar;

With certain Historical Observations upon His Medals.

H E exceffive Lustre of a Million of Gallant Atchievements successfully performed by Casar (the most illustrious and celebrated Favourite of Fortune) hath through all Ages so dazled the greatest part of Mankind, especially those, both Ancient and Modern, who made it their business kind, especially those, both Ancient and Modern, who made it their business to describe the great Transactions either of their own, or former Ages; that they have not only parallel'd him with the Greatest Heroes of the first Ages, but have ballanc'd him with Alexander, the most Generous and the most Glorious of all Monarchs. Nay, in their account Cassar far outweighs him, since that all that may be call'd Great or Illustrious, either as to Virtue, Valour, true Magnanimity, or Clemenzy, is more Conspicuous in him than in all the Roman Emperors, who after him sate at the Helm of that Monarchy. Those who made difficulty to assign him the first place among the Roman Emperors, considered not certainly that the Designation of a Building is the Master-piece of the Architect, and that the Superstructure may require no eminency of Perfection. For having consummated those innumerable Trophies he had erenency of Perfection. For having confirmmented those innumerable Trophies he had erected amongst the Galls by those about Pharfalia, he laid the Foundation of that Eternal Fame, the World hath deservedly honoured him with since: Nay, to that height of Adoration had he raised the minds of Posterity, that his very Succellors thought it their greatest glory to wear the Livery of his Name, and after him to be called Casar.

To offer at a perfect Anatomy of this great Man's Actions, were to quote most Authors and Writers that have been, and confequently a Work of too long a breath. It shall therefore suffice to trace him out in those great designs, whereby he laid the soun-dations of the Roman greatness.

The first thing worthy, not only notice, but admiration, is the strange Judgment of Sylla of him: who resecting on the great perfections of Casar when yet a Youth, and the strange vivacity and conduct of his first actions, made that Inhumane proposition that the Irrange vivacity and conduct of its intra actions, made that innumane proposition that he might be killed, (as if even Virtue may be exceffive and a Crime) as he had caus'd divers of the Kindred and Party of Marius, who had married Julia an Aunt of Caefar's by the mother fide. Nor doth Envy want pretences, fince as he conjectur'd, one Caefar contain'd many Marius's, and should, if fuffer'd to live, prove the Viper of the Commonwealth. But this may be easily passed by, fince that they are indeed the greatest actions that must expect Centure. But it must in the mean time denote a strange transcendency of Courage and Confidence, to think to Conquer that People who had conquer'd the Universe; it must be the effect of an ambition more than Humane, for this is commonly Universe; it mult be the effect of an ambition more than Humane, for this is commonly fetter? do probabilities. The Emperor Julian, though he hath made it his business to Satyrize against his Predecessors, yet having to do with Casar, he by a strange siction discovers the greatness of his designations. Casar says he, a Person of a Gallant and Graceful Presence, being entered the place, where Romains was to entertain the Gods, and Roman Emperors at the Saturnalian Feasts, came in with such an Insolent Deportment, that the Gods were of opinion, he was not come thither unless it were to manage some ambitious Plots against the Majesty of Heaven, whereof Jupiter being very jealous, he was thrust by, till at last Mars and Venus made him place. The ingenuity of this Satyrist amounts only to thus much, to paint over that great Virtue, that great indulgence of Nature and Fortune, in the colours of an insatiable ambition, which had not this Central Parties of Nature and Fortune, in the colours of an insatiable ambition, which had not this Central Parties of Nature and Fortune, in the colours of an insatiable ambition, which had not this Central Parties of Nature and Fortune, in the colours of an insatiable ambition, which had not this Central Parties of Nature and Fortune, in the colours of an insatiable ambition, which had not this Central Parties of Nature and Fortune, in the colours of an insatiable ambition, which had not this Central Parties of Nature and Fortune, in the colours of Nature and Parties of Nature and Parties of Nature and Nature an for been exceffively guilty of, might have prov'd fomewhat.

But the endowments of Nature, the constant presence of Fortune, and the surprizing Glory confequential to his Actions, were the Genius's that rais'd him to fuch high adventures, as the sudden change of the Democratical State of Rome into a Monarchical, to pretend a title to the great acquests of a valorous People for 700 years; and to assume to himself an Empire far greater than the Assgrian, Persian, or Macedonian, both in extent of time, greatness, and power. For not to descend to the acquisitions of the later Emperors, we shall only take a view of the Roman Empire as it stood, before Cafar seiz'd the Reins of Government. In Europe they were Malters of all Italy and Gallia Cifalpina, or Lombardy, Austria, and Illiricum now call'd Sclavonia, reaching as far as Danubius. They had reduc'd all Greece, the States of Athens, Lacedamon, Thebes, Corinth, and all Peloponesus now call'd Morea; Macedon, and Epire, now call'd Albania and Thrace. They had the Islands of Sicily, Sardinia, Creet, Cyprus, Rhodes, and Negropont, and divers others in the Manus of offices, Surama, Crees, Cyprus, Acousts, and receptopons, and utilities of the best Provinces of Affa were Tributaries, as Spria, Phantia, Phantia, Phantia, Phantia, Crees Cilia and Offices as Spria, Phantia, P Palestina, Judæa, Phrygia, Caria, Cilicia, and Bithynia. Agypt and Cappadocia were Consederates. In Armenia and Colchos they had forces. Albania, Iberia, and some other Countries, paid Contributions and did Homage. In fine, they were fo great, that they were Unconquerable, unless by their own strength, that so they might have this satisfaction and glory in their Conquest, that they Triumph'd over themselves.

It is easie to attribute to Ambirion and Discord what is the Design of Fate. Greatness must expect a period; and to be successful presumes a happy Conjuncture of Men and Astairs. Some disserences there were between Casar and Pompey, (the most eminent and the most powerful in Rome) rak'd up in the Embers of the Civil War between Sysla and Marius; wherein the later being slain, the other made himself Distaur, and seiz'd Rome, but quitted both before his death. Pompey had sided with Sysla, Casar with Marius, a being his Kinsman. But to ascend a little higher in these Broils, we are to note, That Sysla having dispower'd himself, Pompey and Crassiss came into repute. The later was the more recommended by his Wisson. Eloquence, Nobility, and excessive Riches; the other had gain'd the popular Esteem by his Victories and great Actions in War, even in Sysla's time. While the differences of these two encreased with their greatness, Cassar returns to Rome, from his Praetorship in Spain, bringing that Reputation with him, that swell'd the Greatness and Ambition of his Thoughts. He had gone through most Charges, civil and military; he had been Quassar, Tribune of the Soldiers, Adule, High-pries, and Praetor. All which, with other Accomplishments he was simmified with, which we shall mention elsewhere, though they brought him into much Esteem, yet was he not yet arrived to near the Authority and Reputation of either Crassiss or Pompe

Cafar, though he were come to Rome, yet stifled all thoughts of aspiring for a while; so that both Crassus and Pompey applyed themselves to him, hoping by his accession to ruine one the other. But Cæsar declin'd both, and carried himself with circumspection, that he endeavoured to reconcile them, so hoping by his Neutrality to undermine them both, which was, as Piutareb says, observed only by Caso. At length he so order d things, that he made an Agreement between them, and so obliged both; which caused that, retaining some jealousies of each other, they equally courted Casar's Friendship, by which means he became equal to either: So that the Power which before was between two, became now tripartite. Things being thus appeas d, Cæsar demands the Consulship; which obtain'd, he carried himself in it with that Reputation, that his Co-Consul Bibulus lest all to his Management. To maintain the Authority he had got, he himfelf took to Wife Calpurnia, the Daughter of Lucius Piso, who was to succeed him in the Consulate, and beflows his own Daughter Julia on Pompey; and so taking in Crassian, they make a League, and being equally ambitious, conspire to invade the Common-wealth. Casar chuses for his Province the Gauls, or France; Craffus, Afa; Pompey, Spain; whither they went with three puillant Armies, as if the World had been to be trichotomiz'd among these three. What Casar did in his Province, what Battels he fought, what People he subdued, what Valour, Policy, Success, follow'd him every where, may be feen in his own Commentaries of that War, approved by his very Enemies as modelf and impartial, and atteffed by Gicero, Plutarch, Suetonius, Appianius Alexandrinus, Lucan, Paulus Orestus, Florus, Entrepius; too great a testimony against one censorious Asimin Polito. By this War Casar got the Reputation of the greatest Captain that ever was, subduing all France, from the Pyrenean Hills the Alps, and so to the Rhine. But to forbear particular instances, as that he conquer'd the Suiffers and Tigurins, (who were according to Plut arch 200000 men, whereof 19000 were well disciplin'd) this is most worth our Remark, That during these so great Wars, he omitted not, both by Intelligence and Presents, to endear his Friends, both at Rome and elsewhere, doing many things without the Senate's leave, upon the score of the League with Pompey and Crassiu. Nay, his courting of all forts of People, both Soldier and Citizen, was none of his least Master pieces; by which means he had supplanted Pompey in matter of Esteem, before he perceived it. To this putpose hath Psiny observed, Lis. 32, 269, 3. That in the time of his & Edility, that is to say, his Sprievedom, he was so prodigal, that the Utensis and Arms that he made use of at publick Sports and Combats, were all of Silver, which yet afterwards were bestiowd among the People; and that he was the first that ever brought forth the Beasts in Chariots and Cages of Silver. This it was made some suspected him guilty of Rapine, and that he plundered Temples and Cittes sepins ob predam quam ob aleistum.

The LIBE of JULIUS CASAR.

But this Reputation of Casar begat Jealousie in Pompey, which (the tye of their Correspondence being loosed by the death of Julia) was easily seen to break forth into a slame, especially now that Crassiss, the third Man, was, together with divers stout Roman Legions, buried with infamy in Parthia. Thus the foundations of Friendship and Alliance in great ones being once taken away, the Superstructures fall down immediately. Nothing could decide the Emulation of two fo great Persons as Pompey and Casar, (the one defying fuperiority, the other equality) but as great a War. It could not but be univerfal, when Senate, Armies, Kingdoms. Cities, Allies, all were fome way or other embarqu'd in the quarrel. There was on one fide 11 Legions, on the other 18. The feat of the War was Italy, France, Epirus, Thessay, Egypt, Asia, and Africk; through all which, after it had ravag'd five years, the Controversie was decided in Spain. That Ambition (the impersection only of the greatest minds) might have been the occasion of so inveterate a War, hath been the opinion of divers others, who charge not Pompey with fo great difcoveries of it as Cafar, to whom they affign a greater than the Empire; as if their mutual distrust and jealousie of one another, should be able to cause so many Tragedies through fo many Countries. Befides, Casar had his Enemies at Rome, and among others Cato, who threatned to impeach him when he was once out of Command. What bandying there was against him, we find somewhat in the latter end of the eighth Commentary to this purpose. Lentulus and Marcellus, both of Pompey's Faction, being Consuls, it is mov'd in the Senate, That Cafar might be called home, and another fent to supply his Command of the Army then in Gallia; fince that he, having written for the Confullfine, should according to Law have been personally in Rome. Caesar demands to be continued in Commission of the Continued in Continued i fion and Government, and that he might demand the Confulship absent. This Pompey opposes, though he himself, as much contrary to Law, had had the Consulship and other Dignities before he was at full Age.

This deny'd, Casar proposes, That he would come to Rome as a private man, and give

This deny'd, Casar proposes, That he would come to Rome as a private man, and give over his Command, so that Pompey quitted his Employment in Spain. About this the Senate was much divided. Cieero proposes a mediation: but Pompey's Party prevailing, it was decreed, That Casar should by a certain time quit bus Command, and should not pass his Army over the River Rubicon, which bounded his Province; declaring him an Ememy to the Rom ann State in case of Refusal. C. Cario and M. Antonias, the Tribunes of the People, out of their affection to Casar, endeavouring to oppose this Decree, were thrust differacefully out of the Senate, which occasion'd them to repair to Casar; whereby they endear'd the affections of the Soldiery to him, the Office of the Tribunes being ever held facred and un-

violable

Cafar understanding how things stood at Rome, marches with 5000 Foot and 200 Horse to Ravenna, having commanded the Legions to follow. Coming to the statal Passage of Rabison, he enterd into a deep Deliberation, considering the Importance and Miseries that might ensure that Passage. At last, in the midst of his anxiety, he was animated to a profecution of his designs, by the Apparition of a Man of an extraordinary Stature and Shape, sitting near unto his Army, piping upon a Reed. The Soldiers went down to the River side to hear him, and approach'd so near, that he caught one of their Trumpets, and leaping into the River, began with a mighty blast to found, and so went to the Bank of the other side. This resolves Cassar, who cryed out, Let us go whither the Gods and the injurious dealings of our Enemies call us. With which he fet Spurs to his Horse, and pass the River, the Army following. Who would be more particularly inform'd, may be fatiss'd out of Appianus Alexandrinus, Saetonius, Plutarch, in the lives of Cassar, Cato, and Ciero, St. Augustine, l. 2, de c. d. Cassar himself in his Commentaries, Florus, Livy, Paulus Orosus, Having pass'd the River, and drawn the Army together, the Tribunes came to him in those dilhonourable garments wherein they had fled from Rome. Whereupon he made an excellent Oration to the Soldiery, opening to them his Cause: which was answer'd with general Acclamations, and promises of Dury and Obedience to all Commands.

This done, he feizes Ariminum, and divers other Towns and Castles as he past, till he came to Corsnium: where Domitiue, who was to succeed him in his Command, was garriford with 20 Cohorts.

Cassar's Advance and Intentions altonished Rome, Senate and People; nay, so surpry, that he could not believe Cassar would thrust himself into so much danger, or that his Forces were fo confiderable. But though Pompey was impower'd by the Senate to levy Forces, recall the Legions, and provide for the defence of Italy, yet all could make nothing against Cector. The rumour of his Advance spreading, Pompey and the Senate leave Rome, and repair to Capua, from thence to Brundusum; from whence the Confuls were dispatch'd to Dyrrachium, to unite what Forces they could, since they despair'd of resisting Casar in Italy: who hearing the Confuls and Pompey were at Brundusium, march'd thither; and having invested the Town, Pompey in the night time embarks for Dyrrachium, where the Conful expected him: so that Casar became absolute Master of Italy. Having not Shipping to pursue him, he resolv'd for Spain, which held for Pompey, where his best Legions were, and two Captains, Petreius and Afranius.

Returning from Brundusum, he in 60 days master'd all Italy without any Bloudshed. and coming to Rome, the memory of the Devastations of Sylla's days frightned the people extreamly. But Cafar's Clemency, and his attributing the cause of all the Distractions to Pempey, quieted all things. He so sar justified his own Cause, that he mov'd that Ambaffadors might be fent to Pompey for Peace, and caufing himself to be chosen Conful, he opened the Roman Treasury, and made a Dividend of it among the Soldiery. This done, he provides for Spain, having taken care for the Civil as well as Military Government. Brundossum, Otranto, and other massitime places, he fortifies against Pempey's entring into Italy, in case he should attempt it. Hortensius and Dolabella were to provide Shipping for him at Brundussum, against his return. Quintus Valerius he sends with a Legion into Sard.nia, against Marcus Cotta, who held it for Pompey. To Sicily he sends Curius against Marcus Cato: which when he had taken in, he was to march into Africk. He leaves Lepidus to govern at Rome, and Antonius for all Italy. Thus intending to leave Licinius Craffus in France, he, with his wonted celerity, went on his Journey, meeting with no reliftance, but at Marfeilles; which leaving D. Brutus and C. Trebonius with sufficient Forces to besiege, he went forward towards Spain, where he was expected by Petreius and Afranius: with whom, though he met with no Inconveniencies of the Winter and high Rivers, he had divers skirmishes; yet at length he carried his business so, that the Enemies were forc'd by hunger to a Composition, the Legions and Captains, such as would not remain with Casar, having leave to depart whither they pleas d.

The spring now coming on, (to leave nothing unsubdu'd) he marches into Batica, now called Andaluzia, where quarter'd Marcus Varro, with one Legion of Soldiers, as Pompey's Lieutenant; who conceiving himself unable to make opposition, resign'd both the Country and Legion to Casar, whereby all was quieted.

Thence he marched to Cordova, where aflembling the Estates of the Provinces, he acknowledg'd their Affection and Devoirs, and fo went to Cales; where he took fuch Ships and Galleys as Marcus Varro had there, with what others he could get, and embarqued. Having left Q. Cassius with four Legions in that Province, he marches to Narbona, and so to Muriciles, which having suffered great Miseries during the Siege, at length surrendred; yet he protected it from any Violence, preserving the consideration of the Antiquity of the place, before the Affronts he had received from it: and so having sufficiently garriford it, he marches into Italy, and so to Rome, all things succeeding prosperously to him, though not so to his Captains. For Antonius (who was joynt General at Sea with Delabella) was overthrown and taken Prisoner by Octavius, Pompey's Lieutenant, in the Gulf of Venice, and that by a ffrange Stratagem. Amonius being forced, for want of Ships, to put his men into Long-boats, the Pompeians ty'd Ropes under the water, by which means one of them, which carried a thouland Opinerim, thou young men, was turprized, and affaulted by the whole Army; yet making refiltance from morning till night, they at laft facing all their efforts ineffectual, did, by the infligation of their Commander Vulteius, kill one another. Delabella was also overcome; as aiso Curio, who was ordered to go into Africa, was overthrown by Pompey's Friend Juba, King of Mauriania.

While Cafar was at Rome, bufy in cauling himself to be made Did stor, and then, putting off that, Consul, that so he might send Practors into the Provinces, as Marcus Lepidus into Spain, A. Albinus into Sicily, Sextus Peduceius into Sardinia, and Decius Brutus into France; and taking such farther Order as he thought fit: Pompey was as busy in Macedonia, raising of Men and Money, and providing Ships in order to his return into Italy. What his Forces might amount unto, may be judg'd from the almost infinite affistances came into him from divers Kingdoms and Provinces of Asia and Greece, from Syria, Pontus, Bythinia, Cilicia, Phanicia, Cappadocia, Pamphilia, Armenia the less, Agypt, Greece, Thellaly, Baevia, Achaia, Epire, Athens, Lacedamon, the Illes of Crete and Rhoder, and divers other places; there coming to his affiftance in person the Kings Deiotarus and Ariobarzanes. These certainly, with those he had brought with him out of Italy, must needs make up a vast Army by land; nor could the number of Ships and Galleys but be proportionable. However, Casar knowing all this, leaves Rome in December, and so marches to Brundusium, whence he was to embarque for Macedonia, out of this confideration, that his Victory confifted in expedition; though Pompey in the mean time, upon intelligence of Cafar's being at Rome, had feattered his People into Macedonia and Thessay; conceiving the inconveniencies of the Winter would have deterted him from croffing the Seas. But Cafar being come to Brandulum, (now called Brindez) he embarques seven Legions of his choicest men in the beginning of January; leaving Order to those that were coming, to make hast and joyn with those which remained behind, all whom he would speedily fend for.

The Life of JULIUS CASAR.

Three days after, he arrives upon the Coast of Macedonia, before Pompey had so much as heard of his embarquing, and lands in spite of Pompey's Captains, and presently comas neart of the entire return for the remainder of his Army; which done, he takes in by florm Apollomia, (now called Belloma) and Oricum, two Cities kept by L. Torquatus and L. Stra. berius, for Pompey; who allarm'd by this, fends for fuch Troops as were nearest, and marches to Dyrrachium, where all his Ammunition and Provision lay, to secure it from being surpriz'd by Cafar: which indeed he had atrempted, but, by reason of the natural firength of the place, to no purpole.

Pempey being come, both Armies lodg d not many Furlongs from one another, only they were divided by a River. Which Post, as it gave occasion of divers Skirmishes, so they were divined by a Kiver. Which Poir, as it gave occasion or divers skirmlines, so it begat many Overtures of Peace from Cafar; which Pompey, prefuming upon his firength, would not hear of. This Proposition of Cafar's, though it proceeded from his meekness, which was not the least of his Virtues, yet argued some conscience of his own weakness at this time. For he was extreamly perplex'd, that the other part of his Army was not come, in so much that he embarqued in a Brigandine disguized to setch them. Having pass'd down the River, the Sea was so temperations, that the Master of the Vessel would not adventure out: whereupon, as it is said, Caefar discovered himself, and said to him, Friend, then carrief Caesar and his Fortune. Whereat the Master being encouraged, ventured out into the Sea; but the Tempest was so violent, that it brought Caefar back again. This action of his was like to have raifed a mutiny in his Army, as a thing, which though it spoke Courage, yet was a stranger to Discretion: Which it may be is the reason that Cafar hath made no mention of it in his Commentaries.

But some sew days after, Antonius arrives with sour Legions of the remaining part of the Army, and fends back the Ships for the reft. These joyning with Casar, there past divers skirmilhes and pickeerings (being so nearly lodged) between both Armies: But that which was most remarkable was near the City of Dyrrachium, wherein Caefar's Troops were so routed, that no Threats or Entreaties could flay them from running to their Camp; which though fortified, yet was abandoned by some. Pompey in the mean time, either out of sear that the flight might be feigned, and in order to some ambush, or that he thought Caefar fufficiently conquered, doth not profecute the Victory. Which weakness in him Cefar dissembled not, when asterwards he said to his Men, That that day had ended the War, if the Enemy had had a Captain that knew how to overcome. But Caefar, as no Prosperity disorder'd him, so in Adversity he had a Courage, and such a Considence of Fortune, that he was nothing cast down. He lost in that Engagement, besides the common Soldiery, 400 Roman Knights, 10 Tribunes, and 32 Centurions, with as many Colours. This Success obtained, Pompey sends the News of it into all parts of the world, so advantagiously to himself, as if Casar were utterly routed; who though he did not decline fighting, yet thought it not Policy to engage his Men lately worsted, (though indeed exasperated with shame and indignation at their loss) with those that were animated and flesh'd with a Victory. He therefore disposes his maimed Men into Apollonia, and in the night takes his way towards Thessay, both to hearten and refresh his Army; as also to draw the Enemy farther from the Sea-coast, where his main Force and all his Provisions lay: or at least to meet with Scipio, who, he had intelligence, was to joyn with Pompey

This unexpected departure of Gæsar's brought Pompey almost to a Resolution to return into Italy, to recover that, with France and Spain, and afterwards to meet with Cafar. But the Roman Lords that were about him (a fort of proud, infolent, indisciplinable people, who indeed proved his ruine,) disfluaded him, and caused him to alter his design; and so he fell upon the hot Pursuit of Cafar, who, making a stay in the Fields of Pharjalia, till that his Menhad reassumed their Courage and Resolution, was now willing and eager to fight. But Pompey perceiving this readiness of Cæsar to proceed from want of Provision. and a fear his Army should diminish, purposely avoided Fighting, and would have prolonged the War, and so have deseated his Enemy without hazarding his own Army. But the Murmurings, Mutinies, and Importunity of those that were about him, had such a prevailing Influence over him, (as Plutareh, Lucan, and Casfar himself acknowledgeth) that they forced him, contrary to his Intentions and Policy, to give Battle; which was such, that all the flower and force of Rome was engaged in it. Cae/ar's Army (according to the computation of most Writers) amounted to half Pompey's: but in compensation his Men were more active and versed in War, and knew their advantages; whereas the other swas a tumultuary fort of people raked together, befides what Romans he had. The exact number of both these Armies is not agreed on by Authors: Some raise them to 300000. of which opinion was Florus; others bring them down to 70000. But if we agree with Appianus, we must conceive, that so many Countreys and Nations having sent in their Assistances on either side, there must needs be vast Armies on both sides: And therefore those who pitched upon the leffer number, meant only the number of Romans, who were the main force and hope of both Generals. But here we may make a ffrange Remark upon the uncertain Events of War. We have two of the greatest Captains that ever were, the Routest Armies that ever met, such as Experience, Force, and Valour was equally divided between, and, to be short, the most exasperated Parties that could be; and yet it proved but a very short Fight: So weak is the confidence and affurance that is only placed in number. We may farther note the ftrange Influence of Religion upon Mankind in general, in that it enforces Man in the greatest Exigencies to Consultation. For Pompey met with divers things that might fomewhat have informed him of the Success of that famous Battel. The running away of the Beafts destin'd for Sacrifice, the swarming of Bees, the Sky darkened, and his own fatal Dream of being in mourning in the Theatre, seconded by his appearance in the head of his main Battel the next day in a black Robe, which might fignifie he mourned for the Liberty of Rome beforehand.

Being both refolved to give Battel, they pur their Armies into fuch Order as they thought fit, and harrangued their Soldiers according to their feveral Pretences. In the beginning, Pompey's Horse, consisting most of the Roman Gentry and Nobility, prevailed over Cafar's, and made them give ground: which he perceiving, causes a Battalion, set apart for that purpose, to charge them; with order to aim altogether at the face: Which Pompey's Horse not able, or not willing to endure, began to retreat, and so made way for the total Overthrow; by which means the Foot being discouraged, and seeing Casar's Horse falling on the Victory was soon decided on Casar's side, Pompey slying to his Camp, and leaving the Field to his Adversary. Here was the greatest missortune of Pompey, to out-live the Liberty of his Country, (which he pretended so much to fight for) and his own Glory, in this Battel, being forc'd to a dishonourable flight, and to deliberate whither he should retire, whether into Parthia, Africk, or Egypt.

Casfar being thus Malter of the Field, and meeting with no opposition, falls upon Pompey's Camp, which, without any great difficulty, he enter'd. Whereupon Pompey difguizing himself, takes up the first Horse he met, and with four more (his own Son Sextus Pompeius, the two Lentuli, and Favonius) makes his Escape, and stays not till he came to Larissa: where meeting with some of his own Horse, who were in the same condition of running away, he continued his flight till he came to the shore of the Legaan Sea; where meeting accidentally with a certain Merchant's Ship of Rome, he embarques himfelt in her, and fails to Mitylene, where his Wife and Family were. Having taken them with him, and got together what Men and Ships a shatter'd Fortune could turnish him with, he departed thence in very great doubt and perplexity, not able to resolve whither to dispose of himself. He was advised by some to march into Africa, and shelter himself with Juba, whose Friendship and Affection towards him he had received testimony of but very lately: others were of opinion, his best course was to retire among the Parthians. But at last, by his own wilfulness, it was voted he should go into Egypt; which he was the more inclin'd to, out of a confideration of the Friendship and Correspondence which he had had with King Ptolomy, Father to him who then reign'd: and so touching at Cyprus, he fails towards Agypt, and arrives at Alexandria.

Thus was the Controversy, for no less than the known World, decided in one day, Cafar being Master of the Field and Victory. Of Pompey's side there were slain sisteen thousand, if you will take it upon Cafar's Credit; and of his own, not two thousand. Cafar having Intelligence of Pompey's flight, pursues him without any stay, with the swiftest and lightest of his Army, so to give him as little breath as he could afford, that he might not meet with any means or opportunity to recover or repair himself. Reducing all Cities as he passed, he comes to the Sea side, and taking up all the Ships and Gallies he could meet with, and such as Cassims (who was received into his savour) could furnish him with, he embarques such Troops as he could, and passed into Asia the less: where understanding that Pompey had been at Cyprus, he easily presumed that he was gone for Agypr. He thereupon resolves to take the same course; and taking with him only two Legions of his old Soldiers, he fafely arrives at Alexandria; where he foon understood that Pompey was arrrived, upon a confidence (as was faid before) there might have remained fome fente and memory in young Ptolom, of the Entertainment and Fayours he had done his Father. But he was as much miltaken in this, as he had been eluded by Fortune in the War: For he finds that the Friendship of great Men and Princes seldom outlives their Prosperity. and that Adversity makes them the greatest Strangers that may be. Being by this King my invited into Protection, and upon that confidence coming towards the shore in a fmall Boat, he was, e're he could reach the land, murdered, by the fame King's Commandment, by Septimius and Achillas, who thought by that means to purchase Cafar's Favour. This was done by the contrivance of Photimus, an Eunuch, whose Authority both with King and Court was very great. Cafar receives also news, That Cornelia, Pompey's Wife, and his Son Sextus Pompeius, were fled from that Port in the fame Veffel wherein they came. Being landed and received into the City, he was foon presented with the head of the Great Pompey; which, out of a confideration of the horridness of the fact, he would not by any means fee. His Ring alfo, and his Seal with his Coat of Arms upon it, were prefented to him; which caufing him to reflect on the great Succelles, Adventures, and Prosperities of that great and glorious Man, (besides that he was to look on him as his Son in Law) it drew tears from him, to compare them with his unfortunate end. Thus is he who had three times triamph'd, been fo many times Conful, been the most eminent and the most concerned person that Rome had for so many years together, one who had been acquainted with all the Dignities fo great a Common-wealth could conferr upon a deserving Citizen, most inhumanly and perfidiously affassinated, to the greatest Regret of him who was look'd on as most desirous of it. This in the mean time concludes that opinion erroneous, that Casar was so extreamly over-joyed at the news of Pompey's death, that he caused, upon that very place where he had order'd his head to be interr'd, a Temple to be built to the Goddess Nemesis; which some interpret a most unnatural Revengesulness, a horrid Infultation over a calamitous Virtue, and a Prophanation of divine Worship, to abuse the name of a Goddess to immortalize the memory of his Vengeance, and to authorize the Injustice of it. But it is as easie to give the title of Barbarism and Cruelty to Magnanimity and height of Courage, as to fay the contrary: and therefore Caefar certainly could not be guilty of so great an Hypocrifie, as to shed tears over his Enemy's head, when he was inwardly furpriz'd with joy.

The LIFE of JULIUS CASAR.

Casar, upon his arrival in Agypt, finds it embroiled in Civil Wars, arising from some differences between young Ptolomy and his Sifter Cleopatra, about the Division and Inheritance of the Kingdom; wherein Cafar (as Conful of Rome) thought fit to be a Mediators Photinus and Achillas, the Plotters and Practicers of Pompey's Death, fearing from Caefar a Reward of Vengeance proportion'd to fo horrid a Crime, and perceiving his Inclination to favour Cleopatra, take fuch order, by their great influence over King and Court, that they brought what Army the King had near the City, which confifted of about 20000 able Men: And this they did out of a Design to entrap C = f = r, and act the same perfisions Butchery upon him, as they had done upon P = r. By this means there began, between what Forces C = f = r had brought with him, and those of the £gyptians within and about the City, as also between the Ships and Gallies in Harbour, the hottest Disputes and sharpest Encounters he ever met with; which we shall not particularize here, because it is the proper work of a compleat Hiltory. One thing our Observation cannot baulk in these hot and occasional Engagements, that Cafar himself was personally engaged in most Disputes, both within the City, and among the Ships, and that to the great hazard of his Person; as may appear by that one Adventure, when he was forc'd to leap out of the Boat wherein he was, into the Sea, and by swimming to recover one of his Galies: and being in this great extremity, (if you will believe Suetonius) he carried his Commentaries in one hand above the Water, and his Robe in his Teeth, that it might not fall into the Enemy's hands. In these Conflicts were there nine Months spent; at which time Caefar receiving his Forces out of Afia, made an end of the Controversie, with the same attendance of Firtune and Victory which had waited on him every where eife. Had Caejar been acquainted with no other War but this, he might justly challenge the Title of the greatelt Captain in the world, for much personal Valour, Wisdom, Conduct, Circumspection and Policy, did he express in all passages thereof, though encompassed with all the Inconveniencies and disadvantages imaginable.

Agypt being thus quieted, the Murtherers of Pompey punished, and Cleopatra (by whom Caesar had a Son called Caesario) established Queen, Caesar takes his march towards Asia, through Syria, having received Intilligence, that, while he was engaged in the Wars of Legypt, King Pharnaces, the Son of the mighty Mithridates, taking his advantage of the Diffensions among the Romans, entertained some hopes of recovering what his Father had loft; having, in order thereto, overthrown Domitius, whom Cafar had left Governour in those parts, and taken in by force the Provinces of Bithynia and Cappadocia, expelling thence Ariobarzanes, a Friend and Subject of Rome. The like he intended to have done with Armenia the loss, which King Dejotarus had made subject to the Romans. But Cafar coming upon Pharnaces before he expected him, they in a few days came to a Battle, which in a few hours was dispatched, to the overthrow of the King, and the infinite slaughter of his People, which he himself escaped by flight. This Victory gave Casar more satisfaction than any of his former, because of the great defire he had to return to Rome, where he was informed many Scandals were spread, and Infolencies committed by the encouragement of his absence. He had also understood that Pompey's eldest Son had seized a great part of Spain, and, out of those that M. Varro had lest there, and some Gleanings of his Fatuer's Troops, had gotten together some considerable Force. He also knew that most of the principal Romans, who had escaped the Battle at Phon alia, were gathered together in Africk, and headed by M. Cato, (firnamed Uticensis, for having kill'd himself at Utica) and Scipto, Pompey's Father in Law; that they had a great part of Pompey's Navy; that with the affistance of Juba, King of Mauritania, they had subdued all that Country, and had a great Army in readiness against Cafar, having chosen Scipio for their General, because that name had been fortunate in Africk. Cafar, upon Intelligence of all these Transactions, with his wonted Celerity and Diligence recovers all that Pharnaces had usurped, and chasing him from Pontus, regained all those Countries, which he recommended to the Government of Calius Minucius, with two Legions; where having reconciled Differences, decided all Controversies, and settled all things, by rewarding and gratifying those Kings and Tetrarchs who had continued firm to the Common-wealth and Interest of Rome, he made no longer aboad in Asia, but passing with all expedition into Italy, he came to Rome within a little more than a year after he had departed thence; wherewith if we compare his great Expeditions and Adventures, it would prove matter of Faith and Aftonishment, to confider how fuch vaft Armies should pass through so many Countries in so short a time.

Some few days after his coming to Rome, he is created the third time Conful, and, as far as time and the exigencies of his affairs permitted, studied the Reformation of what disorders there then were. For that his Enemies before-mentioned should be Masters of Africk, was a thing he could not eafily digeft. Therefore with his ordinary expedition he marches thitherward, and commands his Forces to follow. He took Shipping in Sicily, and so passed into Africk, having no great Force with him: However, such was his confidence of his Fortune, that he staid not the arrival of either his Army or Navy. Being landed with his finell Forces near unto to City of Adrumetum, he marches unto another called Leptus; where he was received, and where he took occasion by some Conflicts to keep the Enemy in Action, so to divert them from augmenting their Forces. In fines his Legions being arrived, he very earnestly set himself to the prosecution of the War; in which, though it lasted but four Months, (from the beginning of January to the end of April) there happened many Encounters and Battles. For having dispatched what work Petreius and Labienus found him, he came to deal with Scipio and King Juba, who hed brought an Affiltance of 8000 men, whereof one half were Cavalry; Africa at that time being very abundant in Horse, as may appear partly in that Casar's Enemies had, among them, raifed in that Country, besides eight Legions of Foot, 20000 Horse. Hirtius, Plutarch, Lucan, and Florus, have written at large of this War, and tell you that Cessar was many times in very great danger as to his own Person; yet at last, by the af-fistance of his Forces, and the Compliance of his great Fortune, he put a period to that War by one fignal Battle, wherein there being flain of the Enemies fide 10000, they were utterly defeated; Cafar remained Mafter of the Field, and shortly after, of all the Country. The principal Captains of the adverse Party, though they escaped death at the Fight, died most of them miserably and unfortunately. King Tuba himself being for want of refuge brought to that defpair, that fighting with Afranius, and killing him, he commanded one of his own Slaves to dispatch himself. Marcus Cato, being in Utica, hearing of Cas(ar's approach, though consident not only of his Pardon, but his particular Favour, yet either out of an indignation to be obliged by his Enemy, or an extravagant zeal to Liberty, laid violent hands on himself. Cicero wrote a Book in commendation of Cato, to justifie that action, which Casar answer'd with another, which he called Anti-Cato, both which are loft. The Ceremony of his death was very remarkable; for upon hearing of the miscarriage of most of his Partners, he embraces his Son and Friends, and bids them good night, preending to go to bed. Refing upon his bed, he took into his hand Plato's Book of the Immortality of the Soul; wherein having fatisfied himfelf, he, about the relieving of the Watch, with a Roman Refolution, drew his fword, and ran himfelf into the Body. Being not quite dispatch'd, Physitians came in and apply'd something to the wound, which he fuffer'd while they stay'd with him, but as soon as they were departed. he pull'd all off, and thrust his dying hand into the wound. Scipio, the General in this War, having escaped, and shipp'd himself in certain Gallies, was met by Cæsar's Navy; but to avoid being taken by them, he gave himself some wounds, and leap'd over-board, and fo was drown'd.

Casfar being by this means absolute Victor, spends some time in ordering the Provinces of Africk: Which done, and reducing Juba's Kingdom into a Province, he comes to Utica, whence he embarqued the third of June for Sardinia; where having staid some sew days, he arrives at Rome, July 25, whither as soon as he was come, there were granted unto him four Triumphs. The first was for his Conquest and Victories in France, wherein were fet forth the Rivers of Rhodanus and the Rhine, wrought in Gold. In the fecond, which was for Agypt and King Ptolomy, were represented the River Nile, and the Pharos of Alexandria burning. The third was for his Victory over King Pharnaces, wherein a certain Writing represented the Celerity he used in the profecution of that Victory, which only contain'd three words, Veni, Vidi, Vici, I came, I fam, I overcame. The fourth was for his Reduction of Africk; wherein was placed Juba's Son as a Captive. As for the Battle against Pompey, Cafar would not triumph for it, because it was against Roman Citizens.

These Triumphs ended, and great Rewards scatter'd among the Soldiery, who had been affiltant in fo great Transactions, the People being also entertained with Feasts, Sports, and Prefents, Cafar is chosen the fourth time Consul. But there yet remain'd some swordwork to do: For Gneius Pompeius, Great Pompey's Son, had got together most of the Remainder of the African Army, and was gone into Spain, to joyn with his Brother Sextus, who (as was hinted before) was there, and had possessed himself of a great part of Spain, with the Cities of Sevil and Cordova, the Spaniards being ready enough to come in to their affiftance. Cafar takes with him his most experienced veterane Soldiers, and with extraordinary speed arrives in Spain within a few days, being accompanied with his Nephew Octavius, who was about fixteen years of Age.

The Live of JULIUS CASAR.

Being come into Batica, (now Andalazia) where the two Pompeys were with fuch Legions as they had got together, he foon began a hot and bloody War; whereof, to be Battle, which proves the sharpest and sold sharpest and sold sharpest and sharpest to one fide, sometimes to another. Suctomiss and Estropius tell us that Cafar one time, upon his mens giving ground, was in flich a plunge, that he was almost resolved to have killed himself, so to have avoided the shame and dishonour of being conquer'd; and that killed himself, so to have avoided the shame and dishonour of being conquer'd; and that in that heat of Indignation and Despair he friatched a Target from one of his Soldiers, saying with a loud voice (as Plutarch relates) If you are no albam'd, leave me, or diver me into the hands of these Beyr, for this shall be the last day of my Life and your Homour. With which words the Soldiers being animated, and heighten'd by his example, regain their lost ground, turn, by degrees, the scales of the Battle; and, towards the Evening, the Enemy sainting and sying, became apparent Victors. The Enemy lost in this field 30000 Men; Celar, beside the common Soldiery, 1000, all Persons of Quality. This did Cessar account the most glorious of all his Victories, (the commemoration of hazzatds and fuffering being to fome the greatest satisfaction conceiveable) for he would often say afterwards. That at other times he fought for Fame and Victory, but that that day he fought for his Life, which he had never fought for before. Pompey, who had performed all that a wife and from Captain could, perfecuted by a malicious Fortune, and feeing there was no other Remedy, ecaped by flight: But being hopeles and religieles, he was at last surprized by fome of Cassar's Friends, kill'd, and his head brought to him; which was also the Fate of Labianus. Sextus upon this quite Cardova, and shortly after, Spain, leaving all to Cassar, who in a fhort time reduc'd and settl'd the whole Country. Which done, he returns to Rome, and triumphs for the Wars of Spain; which was his fifth and last Triumph.

Having thus conquer'd the greatest part of the World, and by consequence gain'd the Reputation of the Hoft famous and most powerful man in it, it was at least a pardonable Ambition, if he thought no Title, Name, or Dignity too great for him. It requires some faith to believe that such vast Bodies as Roman Armies, consisting of many Legions, could at an ordinary rate march through so many Countries, and cross so many Seas, had they had no Enemy to engage; but to conquer them, transcends its and must be attributed to Miracle: For within less than five years, through infinite Conquests and Victories, he confummated the Roman Monarchy, making himself Perpetual Dictator, Sovereign Lord or Emperor. Which later Title, though it had not that height of fignification which his Succesfors have rais'd it to, yet was it the greatest Attribution of Honour which that, or after-ages have acknowledg'd.

But if his Thoughts were so high, and his Ambition so exorbitant, as to deserve a severer censure, certainly it may prove so much the more excusable, by how much it was enflam'd by the general Acclamations and Acknowledgments. For both the Senate and fiam'd by the general Acciamatons and Acknowledgments. For both the Senare and People of Rome, some out of sear, some out of affection, some out of dissimulation, were forward enough to invent those Appellations of Honour and Preheminence, and afterwards to elevate them to the height of his ambitious mind. Hence was he called Empetor, Father, Restorer, and Preserve of his Country; hence created Perpetual Distator, and Constitution of the Country of the Rings of Rome: hence he had his Thrones and Chairs of State in the Theatre and Temples, which, as also publick places, were filled with his Pictures and Images. Nay, their Adoration ascended to that point, that from these humane honours they attributed to him divine; finding Marble little enough for Temples and statues for him, (which were dedicated to him with the same veneration as to their Gods) and Metal little enough to represent his high and almost incredible Adventures.

But all the Power and Command of fo many Nations as he had conquer'd, was inconfiderable as to the extent of his mind; whereby we may see what small acquaintance there is between Ambition and Acquiescence. It was not sufficient to have been personally engaged in fifty fignal Battles, and to have laid with their Bellies to the Sun a Million ninety and odd thousand Men, (abating all those that fell in the Civil Wars) but there yet remains fomething to do greater than all this. The fierce Parthians break his fleep, they are yet unconquer'd, which once done, 'twere easie, like Lightning, to pass through Hyrea. yet unconquer q, which once done; twere came, the Lighthing, to pais unough hipromis and other Countries to the Caftian Sea, and to focure the Provinces of Septima Affatian, and so paffing over the River Tanais, to come into Europe, and bring in Germany and the bordering Provinces under the Wings of the Roman Eagle. In order to this expedition had he in findry places raifed 10000 Horse and 15 Legions of choice Foot. But another greater Power thought fit he should leave some work for his Successors.

Nay, some things he aim'd at, beyond Man's attempt, correcting even nature it self. As that delign of making Peloponnesus an Island, by cutting off that neck of Land which is between the Agean and Inian Seas. He thought to have altered the Courles of the Rivers Tiber and Avien, and made them navigable for Ships of the greatest burtheri. He had begun to level divers Hills and Mountains in leap, and to dry up Lakes and Feriris. He re-edified and re-peopled the once famous Caribage and Corimb. These and friarif other things he

he had done without doubt, had not an unexpected and barbárous Death surprized him in the midft of his Designations. Which, because it is the tragical part of this Relation, we shall refer to the last place, while in the mean utime we shall divert out thoughts with a short entertainment of his personal Excellencies and Endowments, his Extraction, Birth, Desiscation, and Names; as we have already satisfied our selves with the consideration of his Actions: And so pass to that part of our undertaking, wherin we presume to promise the curious and critical Reader no less Content than he hath found in what he hath already reflected on, that is to say, the description and dilucidation of what MEDALS have been snatch'd out of the Jaws of hungry Time, that have had any relation to the great Name of CÆSAR.

Afar was of a full and handsom Composure of Body, of a graceful Carriage and Deportment, of a whitish Complexion, his Eyes were somewhat big, black, quick and piercing, his nose streight and large enough, but his mouth was more than ordinary wide, his Cheeks lean. In his later days, he became bald towards the fore-part of his head, and, through his continual hazzards and hard/hijss, much wrinkled in the Forehead. These last Impersections are easily discernable in his Medals, as also in some graven Stones and Marbles; and this made him feem somewhat older than he was, his baldness, wrinkles, and wide mouth taking away much of the gracefulness of his Countenance, and causing him to have a ruflick Phyfiognomy. This grave occasion to Silenus, the oldest among the Satyrs, very pleasantly (in the CÆSARS of the Emperor Julian) to boast that, besides other similarudes between them, he had a head like Julius Casar's. But as to the baldness, it is no more to be objected to him as indecent, than to divers other great Personages of Antiquity, as may be frequently seen in Medals and Marbles, Hercules himself being one of the Tribe. They are the highest and sublimest things, nay, the more divine, as approaching the Sky, that are freed from all superfluities. The highest Mountains are bald on their tops, though in other places they are perriwig'd with Woods, and have fertile Descents. Casar was much troubled at the loss of his hair, infomuch as, having effected his Defigns, he always wore a Crown of Lawrel, the better to cover the nakedness, thrusting up the hair he had towards the hinder part of his head as much as he could, as may be remarked out of his Effigies in the Medals. He had a ftrong and vigorous body, able to endure any thing of Labour or Hardship; an active and lively mind, capable of any undertaking; his Judgment and common Sense most exquisite. He was furnished with a thrange Fore-fight and Vigilance, a Dexterity and Presence of Mind above ordinary, and and an incredible Resolution and Courage in all Exigencies and Emergencies. In the Wars of Afia, under the Prator Marcus Termo, he obtained a Civical Crown. He was admirable for his Eloquence and incomparable Memory. He was well verfed in Afrology, and by the affiliance thereof foreknew many things. It was by that that he was jealous of the Ides of the Months, as being fatal to him. Nay, he writ Books of the motion of the Stars, regulated the Year, and reduc'd it to the Course of the Sun; which Science he learned from the Agyptians. From his Skill in that Science he rais'd himself to attempt that great Change and Alteration which he brought about, from the strange Prodigies which had happened not long before, as you have them elegantly described by Petronius and Lucan; the Heavens, Earth, Sea, nay the very Mountains and Rivers, intimating that great Vi-

But in the whole Constellation of his Virtues and Perfections, none shines brighter than his Clemency and Generosity. His Propensity to pardon his Enemies, when conquer'd, whether Barbarians or Citizens, was exemplary: And it is much to be questioned whether his Lenity raised him more Friends or Enemies. When he had passed the Rubicon, he takes the City Corsnium, and in it Domitim, whom the Senate had designed to succeed him in his Command in France; yet, though all were at his mercy, he dissinsted Domitics, with what part of the Legions would go with him, to repair to Pompey. Nor was his Clemency and Liberality less remarkable at the Battle of Pharfatia, where he not only pardoned his Enemies, but received some of the most inverterate into Favour and Familiarity, and engaged them into the Government of Provinces and Countries: Not to mention the confidence in him of Caso Uricensis, and his severe punishing of the Murtherers of Pompey. Much more might be said of him; but since it is not our business to write any Panegyricks on him, we come to his Extraction.

As for his Extraction, we find that those of the Julian Pamily boasted that they were originally descended from Julian, the Son of Anchises and Venus, which was a common and yet no criminal Ambition in those times. The Poets, above all other, those that lived in the times of Casar and Angustus, strove who should most celebrate this Genealogie, and that by very remarkable Casts of their inherent Flattery. To omit what may be gathered out of Lucan, Petronius, and others, we shall content our selves with what we have from Mamilius, Altron. 1th. 1.

Julia descendit calo, caluma, replevit.

And Properties, lib. 4. Eleg. 1.

Tunc animi wenere Decii, Brutiq; securer, Vexit & tossa sui Cæsaris arma Venus, Arma resurgents portans victricia Trojæ: Felix terra tuos cepit, Iule, deos.

But that which $Ces\[\arganteright{ar} \] fuffers in this business, is, That it was objected to him as a great Vanity; to derive himself from this Goddess, as being so far guity of it, that he recommended to her the Success and Conduct of his most signal Enterprizes, trusting her with all his good Fortune. We mention not his Dalliances with Cleopatra, because the Tempt tation on her side was more than ordinary; not only that of her Beauty, but her strange Profitution of her self; even to that point, that before she had seen $Ces\[\arganteright{ar} \], the caused her felf to be put up into a Basket, and, as if it had been some Present, to be brought to him; searing, if seasing discovered in his Coins, being surnish of with several shapes of this Venus Generius, this Goddess of Generation, sometimes sitting on the Prow of a ship, sometimes of surnish and its venus Vistrix, such as whereof Hippermucs a Vistory in her right hand, to represent a Venus Vistrix, such as whereof Hippermucs are such as the Word Ces\[\arganteright{ar} \) gave at the Battle of Pharselia, wherein he was afterwards imitated by Augustu and the Fight of Asimon. The same reason may be given for his placing a Venus Vistrix upon the other side of his own Effigies in his Medals, with a of Pharselia, he made a Vow to build her a Temple, (as Appianar records, 1.2.) and as terwards caused his Statue to be placed next to that of this Goddes of Generation. To assign the such of their Veneration of her and the Julian Family.

DIVO JULIO
LIB. JULIA EBORA
OB ILLIUS IMMUN. ET MUN.
LIBERALITATEM
QUOIUS DEDICATIONE
VENERI GENETRICI
CESTUM MATRONÆ
DOMUM TULERUNT.

IVENERI GENETRICI
D....JULI
IN MEMORIAM GENT.
JULIÆ STATUAM CUM...
JUNIUS VIRBIUS ATTICUS
FLAM DIVI JULI
D.S. P. D

But we shall have more to say of this Goddes when we come to the Medali; we there-

Cas ar was born under Sagitary, that is to fay, upon the twelfth day of July, which denoted to him great Victories, and many famous Triumphs in his own Country, according to Manilius, liv. 4. in these Verses, but the end should be dismal and unfortunate; as indeed it happen'd. But Apollinaris SL donius, in his Panegyrick of Anthemius, ver. 120, makes another observation, wherein of all Authors he is singular, saying that Ciefar was born at the same time when a Crown of Lawrel was burning.

Nec non arcitenens prima eum veste resurgit, Pettras clara dabit bello, magniss; triumbiss Conspicuum patrias Victorem ducit in arces; Sed nimium industens rebiss Fortuna secundis, Invidet in facie, sævitg, asperrima fromi, &C.

Julius in lucem venit dum Laurea flagrat.

What prefage could arise hence to signifie his innumerable Victories, we have only this Author to inform us. But indeed there is one other discovers this mystery, but another way: For when they would presage the fertility or sterility of the ensuing year, they were wont to east a Crown of Lawrel into the fire, and according to the crackling of the leaves, they gave their judgment. This is Thullus, 1.2. Eles. 5.

Ut succensa sacriu crepitet bene Lautea stammu; Omine quo selix O sacer amus eat. At Laurus bona signa dedit, gaudete coloni, Distendet spicus aurea plena Cerei;

Therefore at Cafar's Birth it may be thought fome one, out of Superfition, bethought him of this Ceremony, or it happend by chance. But in fine, those that were affistant at the the Birth, were by that accident raised to a certain considence that the Child then born should prove a most fortunate Man, and should arrive to great Fame and Wealth.

As concerning his Deification, there is not much to be faid. In the first place, we suppose it a thing not so miraculous, That the Romans should believe that one who had done fuch great and transcendent actions as Cajar did, might be thought somewhat more than a Man, and had in him something divine; besides that he was one acknowledged to have descended from Venus Genitrix, the Mother of the Universe. Other Nations had that cufrom of adoring and invoking their Kings as Gods, after their Death; as the Agyptians, Persians, and the Moors, who in Casar's time put Juba into the number of the Gods. In the fecond place, we meet with two cenforious Remarks upon this Deification. First, how that Genius of Virtue and Generofity which was wont to animate the Roman People, was fo metamorpholed into that of Flattery and Vanity, as to deifie one who, by the greatest, if not the most, was look'd on as the greatest Oppressor of the Roman Liberty, and only the most fortunate Malesactor that ever was, when they had not vouchsafed that honour to Numa Pompilius, who had been the Moses, the Law-giver, the most just and the most pious among the Roman Princes. Secondly, whether, if he had miscarried at the Battle of Pharfalia, he had not been the most infamous Person among the Romans that ever was, and more abominable than Catiline; and on the contrary, whether Rocks, Mountains, Seas, and the Cabinets of conquered Kings and Citizens, had furnished Marble, Porphyry, Jusper, and Precious (tones enough, to erect Pillars, Statues and Temples, to celebrate the Glory of the Great Pompey, who was so zealous for the Liberty of Rome. But Divine Providence was p'eafed to make use of Cafar as an Instrument to change that Common-wealth into a Monarchy, that the Prince of Peace and Saviour of the World should be born under the peaceable Reign of one fole Monarch.

As for the Name of Julius, fince, as is before noted, the Julian Gens derived it felf from Julius the Son of America, the Son of America, a prodigious Coition with Venus, it must be granted Julius was the Author of this Family, as Virgil Lys. This Julius was also called llus, and more frequently Assamus, from a place in Phrygia called Assamum, or from a River named Assamus. That of llus was in memory of llus, the most renouned King of the Trojans, from whom Troy was called llium. But to be yet more critical, the Name Julius, or Iulius, was given him, because of his hairiness about the Checks sooner than his age required: according to the same, Virgil,

Julius à magno deductum nomen Iulo.

At puer Ascanius, cui nunc cognomen fulo Additur, Ilus erat dum res stetit Ilia regno.

Upon which place Servius tells us, That the Name was given after the Battlethat Ascanius gain'd against Mezenius, ob barba lanuginem (quam in @ Græci) qua ei tempore victoria nascebatur. So that in @ fignifies the telegraphy pareas, the soft hair which first appears upon the Cheeks.

The Name Cafur feems to have some relation to the other, for that Katouşia, in Hesselius, fignifies merusearda, that is to say, a certain thick and clotted hairines, such as Woomen's, when they plat and twift their hair about their heads; and he that either naturally or artificially had such an one, had first the honour of that Name, which likely was some one of the Posterity of Iulius, the Son of Emess; unless we would rather trust Spartianus, who would have the first of this Family to be so called, Quod cum magnia crinibus sit usero parents essentially, because he was born with abundance of hair. In sine, however it came, it was so venerable during the long Reign of Augussus, that of Tiberius, and three more of the Family, that it alone designed the Emperor, and became a Name of Invocation upon any accident of halt, surprize, or admiration.

We might here bring in what Sustainus delivers in the Life of Angufus, That the first letter of the Name Casar, which is C, being dash'd out by a Thunderbolt, it was predicted that he should die within a hundred days, because that letter stands for that number; and that after his Decease he should be received into the number of the Gods, because ESAR signified in the Hetruscan tongue GOD. This gave occasion to all that have commented on that Author, to criticize and puzzle themselves about the fignification of the Word CESAR. But all being trivial and imaginary, we sorbear farther Disquisition, and pass to our Observations upon his MEDALS.

Observations

The LIVE of JULIUS CASAR.

Observations upon

CÆSARS MEDALS.

Upon the First Medal.

THE Effigies of Venus Genitrix, with a Globe or World before her, without any Infeription; though Occo and Urfinus mention one inferibld with L. BUCA: The other Side hath Venus giving Anchifes a Meeting, near Mount Ida. This it should seem Cafar caused to be done out of Flattery to himself, in that it served both to make his Original more illustrious, and as a Monument of that Happines and good Fortune which this Goddes had procured him in all his Enterprizes. For it was his Ambition to have descended in a right Line from Anchifes and Venus, by whose Indulgence he had conquered the Universe, as being his Directrix in all his Designs, as is represented by the Globe or World; whereof this Goddes was thought to be in some fort the Protectres, as being effected the Sovereign Genius of Generation, according to Solimus, Cuncta suis, totus pariter tibi parturit orbis.

And her Worship was, questionles, very ancient; for it was the Head of Venus Genitrix that the Saracess and Ishmeelites worshipped, alledging that Abraham had by the means of it enjoyed Hager, from whom proceeded a great Generation; as Embymiss Zigabenus, in his Table of the Opinions of that Nation, and the Anonymous Greek Author of the Saraces History, have observed. So have we here the same Goddes accossing that great Hero, to have lifte by him. The Genius destind to surrher the Establishment of the Roman Great ness, hath a Sceptre in his Hand, to signific the sixture Majetity of that Monarchy.

The Second Medal.

SEPULIUS MACER. Venus standing with a Victory in the Right Hand, and a Pike in the other; being the other Side of that which bore the Efficies of Cafat, and the Star of this Goddes. Servins, quoting an Observation of Vario, says upon the sufficient venus in the Day-time; she shining then purposely to direct him to Lawrenum, the place for which the Destinates had designed him. The Exprism represented this Star by the Figure of a most beautiful Woman, it being thought the brightest in the Firmament; whence it was called Kalusson, pulcherima; being named in the Morning Phosphorum or Lucifer, in the Evening Visper. This Star therefore, that was Enacs's Conductres, was no other than that Midwife of the Light, Venus; being the same which the Saracens call Gubar, or Kabar; which Word signifies, Great; being also otherwise called Assaries, Claus, or Casles : By all which Names is meant no other but this Genitric, under which Epithet the Lacedemonian ador'd and invok'd her as ari Advancer of Generation. The Romani, in the Circensian Games, brought forth the Statue of Casar in Pomp, having the Plante Venus on his Head. Now this Urania (because of her procreative Instince) was held in particular Devotion by the Women, as divers Medals of the Enipres's discover, being commonly inscribed Venus calest, and having that Star. Gualterus urnishes us with an Inscription of a certain Priestes of hers, out of the ancient Monuments of Sciety.

ΔΙΟΔΩΤΟΣ ΤΙΤΙΕΛΟΤ ΑΠΠΕΙΡΑΙΟΣ ΤΑΝ ΑΔΕΛΦΑΝ ΑΤΤΟΤ ΤΑΝ ΜΙΝΤΡΑΝ ΑΡΤΕΜΟΝΌΣ ΙΕΡΑΤΕΟΤΣΑΝ ΑΦΡΟΔΙΤΑΙ ΟΤΡΑΝΙΑΙ

Diodotus Tsiell filius Appeiræus fororem fuam Minyram Artemonis filiam Sacerd dosem Veneris Caleftis.

She was also inscribed Venus Calestis Augusta, (possibly, in favour of some Empress;) as also, Invista Calestis.

The Third Medal.

ESAR DICT. PERP. Cesar perpetual Distator. A Venus Vistrix naked, holding an Helmet and a Buckler. There is before her a Pillar, upon which is placed an Eagle, and behind a Military Ensign. The meaning is this: We have Venus here naked, with an Helmet in her Hand; to signific her victorious over Mars, by her charming Ac tractions, as if that God had quite loft all Courage, delivering up his Arms, and rendring himself her Prisoner. Thus Memelaus casts away his Pike, Sword and Buckler, having had but a Glimpse of the delicate Breast of the fair Hellen. But in this Medal Venus dewar-like Enterprizes, that he had obtained abfolute Victory over all his Enemies; whereof the Helmet, Buckler, and military Enfign, being the marks, Cafar had confecrated them to her in acknowledgment of her Favours. The Eagle pitched upon a Pillar fignifies, That his Victories have affured him the Reman Empire, which should be his eternally. The Eagle denotes Empire and Royalty, and presages and fignifies absolute Victory. It fignifies also that the Empire shall be affured to him, maugre all the Force and opposition of the Galls and Germans, or any other whatloever, whom he should despife, as this Bird doth Thunder; for that of all Creatures it can ascend above the Clouds, where it can suf-

The Fourth Medal.

ERMAN. INDUTI. III. A River lying by a Mountain fide pours out his Water, having a Boat or Bark near him. This Medal feems to have been flampt purpolely to exercise our Divinations. We conceive it should be read GERMANA INDUTIA, and that the number three stands for nothing essential that the number three stands for nothing essential that the stands of the stands to exercise our Divinations. We conceive it should be read GERMANA INDUTIA

The Fifth and Sixth Medals.

E have these two Medals from Goltzius; whereof one in Greek hath a Tripod and two Stars: The Inscription of the Head and the other fide is, KAIEAP ATTO-RPATOP APKIRP. MET. O'IONIETHE. Cefar Imperator, Pontifer maximus, Augur. This Tripod of Apollo hath something in it more particular. Apollo, Augur, or $\sigma_0 i \tilde{\Omega}$, who Tripod of Apollo hath something in it more particular. Apollo, Augur, or $\var21600_{\text{op}}$, who is here designed by one of the Stars which accompanies that of Venus Generics or Calefis, shows that Casar was affilted in his Charge of Augur, and his Study of Altrology and Prefaging, (whereof the Lituus and the Tripod were the marks) by these two Divinities. For Phabus or $\var2160_{\text{op}}$ hath two significations, which relate much to his Star and Tripod, that is to say, splendid and luminous, so that he is both Foreteiler and Augur. But to return to the Star of Venus, or Phosphorus, or (as Philo Judeus calls it) Exphorus, and to this Sun or Star of Phabus Apollo: It may be conjectured they are placed above this Tripod, to give us to understand, That these Gods should promise the Roman Augur Casar, by a continual Success in all his Enterprizes, the absolute Conquest of both East and West.

The Seventh Medal.

#SAR. An Elephant with a Serpent betwirt his legs. On the other fide, the Utenfils and Instruments that belonged to facrificing, with the Head-Ornament of the High-Prieft. Divers Antiquaries have so commented upon this Medal, as to make the the High-Friett. Divers Anaquares have to commented upon this Meda, as to make the word Cefer fignifies at Elephant. But in my opinion, this Device fignifies altogether as much as if he had this infcription about it, IMP. CÆSAR, or CÆSAR DICTATOR PERPon one fide, and PONTIF MAX. on the other. For as the one TOR PER Pon one fide, and PONTIF. MAX. on the other. For as the one flews the Royal Quality, the other fuppoles the Pontifical to have been in those times joyned with it in the Person of C_{afar} . An Elephant in Italy (according to Artemidoris) fignifies a Royal, Imperial; or Supream Power. But Achmet, in his Omirocriticks, Chap. 271, tells us that this Creature had the same fignification in the Indies and C_{afg} therefore Artemidorus hath not done well to reftrain it to Italy. But it may be the Moore, imitating other Nations herein, took an Elephant to fignifie a Monarch; and became C_{afg} are the most former and Monarch in the Indies and Acquire the Moore of the Company of the Postar Commanded Kings and Monarch. was the most famous Man that ever was, one that commanded Kings and Monarchs, would make his Name stand for an Elephant; for this word is little less than African. The fame Artemidorus fays, That a Dragon feen in a Dream fignifies a King and a fupream Magiltrate; which agreeing with what he fays of the Elephant, and both these Creatures being on the other fide, I conceive my Interpretation the more receiveable.

The Eighth Medal.

ESAR DICTATOR. Cefar with the Augural Stick. In the Reverse there is L. LIVINEIUS REGULUS, a Bull furiously running with his head stooping. It is conceived this was stamped by Regulus, in Cassar's Favour, when Cassar was created Dictator, or shortly after. This Bull is trought in as the Emblem of Principality, as Diam Chryfostome says, who hath made an excellent Parallel between this Creature, and a King Chrysoftome says, who hath made an excellent Parallel between this Creature, and a King and his Kingdom. But before him, St. Denys, in the 15 Chap, of his Hierarchy, said that the strength of a Bull represents the Force necessary for a Prince, and that his horns signific Scruatricem and involvem noim. Stephinus observes upon the word muyers, that the Antients called nuleys all things that were excessive for Greatness or Strenges. The Intention therefore of Regulus was to let Casia understand, that having overthrown Pompey, and become Perpetual Dictator, he was in effect the most powerful and most redoubted Monarch that ever was and was in a condition to puttie and accompiling the putter redoubted Monarch that ever was, and was in a condition to pursue and accomplish the utter ruine

Monarch that ever was, and was in a condition to pursue and accomplish the inter ruine of his Enemies, and protect his Friends. There is a Reverte among the Medals of Augustus, where there is also a Buill in a different Figure and Posture from this, bending his knee, to represent (as is conceived) the Taurus Celefus, which signified the Invincibility of Augustus. It may be also considered, that this Bull may signific tasty, subdued and subject to the Laws of Augustus, as being, now the Civil Wars were over, ready to receive the Yoke. For that Province took is Name from a Bull, which the Tyrrhemians called the that Italy submitted in pack to receive the Yoke of the new Government. Mandr; so that Italy submitted its neck to receive the Yoke of the new Government, as

> Summittit aratris Colla, juguma; sus poscit cervicibus ipse.

The Ninth Medal.

DIVO JULIO. The Effigies of Casar deified, the Star of Venus before him, or if you will, Casar's own. On the other fide Mass upon an Altar, or rather Casar representing Mass, before whom sits a Figure, which hath a Commospin or horn of abundance under the left Arm, in the right, holds a Victory, which prefents a Crown to him. This Medal feems to have been made fhorely after Cefar's Death, to keep his Me-Inst. Inst. Aleast teems to nave been made morely arer clejar's Death, to keep his memory in veneration, and nourish that belief of the People, That he was, while living, a God transformed into a Man. It was indeed an excellent artifice of Augustus and his party, to make the siperfittions Vulgar believe, That Julius Cassar was become a Fellow. Commoner among the Gods, to make his Succession the more plausible. For being all the common plausibles are the common common of the Common ready perfinded that no other than a Demy-God could have arrived to that Glory which Cafar had, having baffled the Universe; it was not very hard to persuade them that the Comet which appeared in the North after his Death, was his deified Soul. But the cheat was, that this Soul must appear there to render Augustus more illustrious; who to retri-bute the glory, and make the business more authentick, must erect Casar's Statue in the Capitol, representing upon the head of it that Star in Gold, and giving it this bold Inscription, KAIEAPI HMIGEO, to Casar the Demi-God. To make any long Discourse upon Comets from hence, were supershous, since all that can be said its, That they signifie Changes and Revolutions of States and Empires, and sometimes savourably. This signified, nall likelihood, the War then kindling against Augustus; after which, a general Peace ensuing, the Prince of Peace should be born; the Comet at whose Birth denoted the universal change of Religion that asterward happened. To be short, all that the Poets, those since Cooks of Fictions and Inventions, could dress, that would be any way digestible with the credulous Vulgar, was served up at this time, to raise the Memory of Julius Cassar to the greatest Reputation that might be: But it will be to no purpose to repeat their Adulations in this place.

Observations upon CÆSAR'S MEDALS.

On the Reverle of this Medal, we find Mars, who receives the Crown which Vittory prefented him with, reprefented with a Dart. The Vittory is Venus Vittins, or the Victorious City of Rome, and the Mars, Julius Cokfe mimfelf, in the posture of that God. The Statue is conceived to be the same with that of Mars, erected by the Romans in the Temple of Quirimus, with this magnificent Title, OEO ANTKHTO, Dec invoito. This supposition is constitued by the Dart; for Mars was ordinarily represented with a Spear, as divers Medals discover. But in this Statue he hath a Dart, which is that piece of Arms which is capable of farthest casting, and that indeed which the Romans most used, and at the Fight of Phasfalis was one main cause of the Victory, Casar having given his Men Order that they should aim at the Faces of the raw Roman Nobility they had to deal with; as divers Hilstorians have delivered. Yet this argues not, but that Casar sometimes made use of a Javelin or Pike as well as Mars; but it is to be conceived this was more for the convenience of his travelling, which was asoot, (and that many times in the Winter, haply over the Alpi) according to the sulform of most of the great Captains and Generals of Rome, as Livy and Plutareh abundantly attest.

The Tenth Medal.

I OTAIOT RAIEAPOE ATTOKPATOPOS AOTKTATOPOS.

Cai Julii Caefaria Imperatoria Diffiatoria. The Effigies of Caefar crowned with a thick Crown of Lawrel, which closed before, the better to cover his Baldness, the hair being thrust forward to help it. The Reverse hath I AION BIEN BE OKOPON Illensium is Necerorum; Annea carrying his Father and the Palladisms at their quitting of Troy, the luttle Islas going before with his hat in his hand. That which in this falls under question, is, first, to know the situation of this Illium; wherein Strabe hath spent more sweat than all the Geographers; affirming it was not the Illium of his time, a Town well known, nor any thing built upon the ruines of the old one foil Itrated by the Greeks, as being distant from this thirty stadia; That in that place there was only a small Village bearing up the Names that it was built up by Alexander, from a small Town that it was before, having a little Temple of Minerva much ruined, and received from him divers Privileges and Immunities, with a promise, after his Victory over Darius, of a magnificent Temple, and the toleration and setting up of Games and Exercices. This was partly executed after his Death by Lysimabus, who enlarged the City by a Wall of forry stadia, disposing thinker many out of the neighbouring Cites that were ruined. After which it was ruined and restored divers times; but lastly it received great favours from Sylla, which is conceived to be the reason that it declared against Ceefar in the Civil Wars: Whence it may be inserted that those of that City knew not at that time that Ceefar pretended to be of the Race of Viens and Anchises, which was only sound out after his Victory. But at length Ceefar receives them into lavour, restores and confirms their antient Privileges and Immunities, and, imitating Alexander, did them many Courrelies.

In the fecond place, the understanding of these words, IAION, or IAIEON NEAROW, which we cannot render properly in English, but by Oversters, Supervisors, and those that are entrusted with the Charge of the Temples, and dispose of all things facred; or in some fort, they were such as we call Church-wardens in our Churches. But they are not those Neccori of the Temples that this Medal and divers others represent unto us, but the word was analogically applied to whole Nations, as also to Cities and Bodies Corporate, to whom the Kings, and afterwards the Emperors gave Commissions, to make Panegyricks and Encomissifick Orations upon their Statues, Pomps, Religious Worships, publick Recreations and Exercises, to the Honour of their Gods and Princes; which was done out of the publick Stock, or by the Contribution of the Corporations. As therefore the Neacorist hat belonged to the Temples, were Disposers and Guardians of the things sacred, that were in their Sanctuaries, nay, haply entertained the people or strangers with the

Observations upon CASARS MEDALS.

Rarities and Antiquities of their Worthips and Mysteries; so these National Neocori had the Superintendency over the Pomps and Solemnities, Panegyrical Celebrations, Exercifes, Sacrifices, and Ceremonies, which were to be observed upon the more festival days, whereof they had the absolute disposal. This I build upon the Conjecture of the great and learned Selden, who was the first cut this Gordian knot, upon a passage of the Acts of the Apostles, Chap. 19. There we have Demetrius and those of his Profession raising a Tumult, and accuring St. Paul and others for preaching that the Statues made with the hands of men were not Gods. The Town-Clerk or Church-warden having appealed the Tunult, tells them that it was well known the City of Epbelus was then Neocore (in the English Translation worshipper) of the great Goddess Diana, and of the Image fallen from Jupiter, and that therefore, there being no contradiction in that, they ought not to do any thing rashly. For these men, saith he, are neither sacrilegious nor blasphemous persons, and therefore have done nothing against the Majesty of Diana. But if they had any matter against any man, the Law was open: But in case it were something else relating to their Goddels, whether by Blasphemy, Impiety, or Sacrilege, (the Cognizance whereof did of right belong to the Ephegians in Body, as being then Neocori) they should have satisfaction in a full Affembly, convocated for things of that nature. Now those Silver Shrines which Demetrius is faid to make, are conceived to be Models of that magnificent Temple, which the Ephefians being Neocori, caused out of Magnificence to be made of that rich Metal. Had this Controversie between the Apostles and the Goldsmiths come to a Decision, they had proceeded thus; They would have had some to make publick Panegyricks of their Goddess in the first place; then, if Paul and his Companions should not rest satisfied, this Neocorean people would have punished them according to their manner. Now, that the Neocori of the Temples were used to commend to all Comers (especially Travellers) the greatness and power of their Gods, and that the Neocori of Cities imitated them, but did it with great Pomp, employing persons eminent for Learning and Eloquence, as Poets and Orators, for the Honour of their Gods, as also their Kings, Monarchs, Emperors, Founders, and that upon days inflituted and ordain d for that purpole, may be learn d from Horace, who, Lib. 2. Ep. 1. writing to Augustus, calls those Poets Adituos, who should immortalize the Virtue of that Emperor, or rather those who were charg'd to choose such as fhould do it, in these Verses:

> Sed tamen est operæ pretium cognoscere qualen Ædituos, belli spectata domig; Virtus, indigno non committenda Poetæ;

But besides, Selden hath well observed, that there were none of these Medals in the time of the Common-wealth; for that the Gities of Greece were not yet arrived to that esteem of the Roman Greatness, by the Fabrick of their Monies and other figns of Veneration, which they have come to fince it became a Monarchy. This is the opinion of that great judicious Man, which yet is not absolutely true; for there were found the marks of this Magnificence, under the Title of Neocori, abundantly among the Medals of Alexander the Great: whereof Goltzins reckons above twenty with this Infcription, KOINON MA-KEAON ΩN NEΩKOPΩN. Whence may be observed, That the people of Macedonia being generally Neocori, had caused these Coins to be stamp'd in the Honour of Alexander, having upon the Reverse the Figures of Statues, Chariots, Temples, Columns, Oc. Nay, the Maroneans in Philip's time, though but the People of a particular City, were honour'd with the Charge of Neocori; there being a Medal, which hath on one side the Effigies of Bacchus, crown'd with Vine-branches, inscrib'd, AIONIEIOE ENTHP; on the Reverse, that of Philip, thus, MAPONEITON NEOKOPON. In fine, the Inhabitants of Ilium obtained leave of Cafar to make some Magnificence under the Title of Neocori, to honour him and the Julian Family; having erected, in memory of his Extraction from Anchifer, Exact, and Iulus, some Colossus, representing the Posture of Exact when he less Try, doing a signal Act of Piety both towards the Gods and Men, having the Palladium in his hand, and carrying the old Man his Father in his right Arm, as Women carry Children, the little Iulus marching before, having his hat in one hand, and asking his Father the way with the other. The wdor B I E fignifies that this was the fecond time they had been honoured with the Quality and Commission of being Neocori, and that they had celebrated the folemn days with Panegyricks, Pomps, Exerciles, and other Magnificences befitting the Grandeur of Cæsar.

Observations upon CASAR'S MEDALS.

The Wives of Cæsar.

It's first Wife was COSSUT! A, whom he married in his Youth, but divored her at the seventeenth Year of his Age, before he had lived with her, though she was rich, and descended of a Family of the Roman Knights.

rich, and descended of a Family of the Roman Knights.

The second was CORNELIA, the Daughter of Cornelium Cinna, one who had been four times Conful; by whom he had only one Daughter, named Julia, afterwards first Wife to Pompey. He took her Death very heavily, and publickly commended her in a most elegant Funeral Oration.

The third was POMPEIA, the Daughter of Q. Pompeius, who had gotten that evil Report, as if Publim Claudius had been somewhat too samiliar with her, which was the reason that Cesar divorced her.

The fourth and last was CALPHURNIA, who out-lived him, and was the Daughter of Lucius Plfo; a Woman of a generous spirit and well spoken, and had that Honour and Affection for Cafár, that after his Death she herself made a most elegant Funeral Oration to his Honour, and afterward retird to Mark Amborn.

The Medal of the

TRIUMVIRI

His Medal is of Copper, small, of the Greek fashion: It represents the three Effigies of Ciefar, Amonins, and Lepidus, done fide-ways one upon another on the fame fide. without Inscription. On the Reverse it represents an Hermathena; before which Image there is an Altar, out of which iffues a Serpent that lifts it felf above it; behind there is a Legionary Eagle: Time hath worn out the Inscription to this half word, APXIEP. This Figure represents Mercury and Minerva joyn'd in one Statue; that is to fay, the upper part is of that Goddess, arm'd with a Helmet, Buckler, and Javeline; the lower part per parts of that Gooden's aind with a recture, bucker, ain Javenire, the lower part is a Termina or Herner. For the Interpretation of this Device; this Hernathena, comprehending in it the God Terminia, with Minarota and Mercury, denotes an excellent union, as to Affection, Interest, and good Understanding, among the Triamviri, as well for the management and conduct of Civil Assan, as Military. Which being so, the Invention must needs be ingenious, denoting that, though their Employments were several, yet there was fuch a Concurrence between their Countels and Intentions, as that they jump'd into the fame Refolution for to carry on the Interest of the Common-wealth. As for the Altar and Serpent, they fignific certain Sacrifices performed by that people, for the Welltar an oeipent, they against certain sacrinees personned by that people, or the weinfare, Union, and Concord of choic three Powers; as also either to obtain some Victory, or to give Thanks to the Gods for one received. For a Serpent illuing from under a Table, was taken by Sylla to prefage Victory, as the Historian Sifems observes upon Cicera, lik. t. de Divinations. See also Val Maximus, lib. t. do. 6. and Plearets in his Lift. Tis therefore the Symbole of Health, Victory, and Felicity. Of which opinion is also Theephrastian, who giving the marks of a speciations Mass, tays, That if he surprise a Serpent in any place, he prefently railes a Chapel or an Ahar in that place, as it were to thank the Gods for to good an Adventure. There may this faither season be given of this Juncture in the Hermathem, That as Monerous hadh a Dominion over Wrestling, as well as Mercury, to were they also both equally Patrons of Traffick and Merchandise.

We shall divert a little to speak of another kind of Statues, called Hermberaeles, consisting, the lower pair of Hermes, the upper of Hockets. Both these, and the Hermathenais, were placed in the places of Publick Exercities, Matterny and Statuent, unapplying strength and single. The reason with Mercury was so often joyn'd with the other Gods, was, That he could conform to any, and was one with all, as lambitions affirms, Ing. (Lays he) de Discould conform to any, and was one with all, as lambitions affirms, Ing. (Lays he) de Discould conform to any and was one with all, as lambitions affirms, Ing. (Lays he) de Discould conform to any and we will be a lambition of the state of the Antients dedicated all their Works under his only Name. Alexaks was held in such Veneration for the God and Genius of all Gymnick Engagements, that they came to be called (angustivii vocabulo) Herculea certamina. He was the Institutor of the Olympick Games, wherein having had the Honour to wrestle with Jupiter, he was thought sit to be the Patron of them: Whence Lycophron calls him Itanacis, the Wrestler.

Observatious upon CASAR'S MEDALS.

The Second Medal.

ANTONIUS ÎMP. AUG. IIIVIR. R.P. C. Marcus Antonius Imperator Angur Triumvir Reipublica confliuendae. A facrificing Vessel called Liums. On the Reverse there is L. P.I.ANCUS IMP. COS. An Urn between a Thunderbolt and a Caduceus. It is to be noted, first, That there is a Vessel on either side of this Medal; and therefore it is not enough to say, That that on one side, with the Liums, is the mark of an Augural Eignity, which Antonius obtained from his Favourite L. Plancus, being Consul; but something must be said of this Urn, so thonourably placed between a Thunderbolt and a Caduceus, on the other. Appianus Alexandrinus, in his Book of the Wars against the Partbians, speaking of the design which Mark Antony had, being at Athens, to undertake the War against them, and to partake of the Glory might follow the ruining so great and powerful a Nation, says. That, to saisse the admonition of a certain Oracle, he carried with him a Vessel study. That, to saisse the admonition of a certain Oracle, he carried with him a Vessel study of Water, taken out of the Sacred Fountain which was in that City, called Clessis. Et us oracuse audium saissays was within the Citadel of Athens. Now this is the representation of that Vessel, and a Monument of the Transportation of that Water by Mark Anthony, which must needs be of great Concernment to him, since he was advised to do it by the Oracle, and specified the Fountain, As sor the Thunderbolt and Caduceus, they signifie that Mark Anthony should in that Expedition make a thundring and dismal War against the Parthians, with a great number of old experienced Legions, who should tread under sot the Parthians, with a great number of old experienced Legions, who should tread under so the Parthians, with a great number of old experienced Legions, who should read under so the Parthians, with a great number of old experienced Legions, who should tread under so the Parthians Greates, elevated against the Romans by the Miscarriage of Crassus and his stourishing Legions; or those Barbarians shou

ATILIUS CIMBER.

V E should have no more to say of this Cimber, than we have of Brutus, Cassius, and the other Massacres of Cassar, were it not that his Medal serves to correct divers passages in History, (which it hath been the main Design of these our Observations to clear up.) wherein his Name is corrupted.

panages in tamon, wherein his Name is corrupted.

All who have mentioned this Man, have been mistaken in his Name, except Appianus Alexandrinus, and that in one place only; for in some others he calls him Tising. Others Tullius, or Amiss. Seneca, Epist. 32. Cai Cessaris cade (ilsus dico qui, superato Pompeio, Rempublicam tensit) tam creditum est Tillia Simbro quam Cesso. Cassis tota viita aquam bibis, Tillius Cimber of minisse erat in vino & scordass. In home rem jocatus est ipse; Ego, inquit, quenquam feram, qui vinum ferre non possum? Upon which pallage, (which gives a strange Intimation of the vicious qualities of this Man) Pintianus says it ought to be read Tullius Cimber, as the same Seneca essente calls him, and as he is called in Plutarch and Suevonius. But it is doubtless he should be called Arilius Cimber, and that Suevonius, Quintilian, and the other later Authors, should be corrected, as having trusted the corrupt Manuscripts, and nor seen this Medal.

But to come to the Device on the Reverse first. The Cap signifies (as is obvious to any one) the Liberty obtained by the means of the Ponyard wherewith Casar, who oppressed the Common-wealth, was dispatched. The Wings, or Talaries of Mercury, with the Serpents and the Rod, which was ceremonious at the manumission of Slaves, or rather the Wand which Mercury made use of to conduct the Souls delivered out of the Miseries of this Lise to their expected Rest, signific that the Diligence, Dexterity, and Prudence, which Arisius Cimber had used in this Execution, had restored the Universe to its Liberty, the Romans from the Tyranny of Casar, and had established a Peace and Tranquility in all Families. The conduct and affishance of Mercury to the departed Souls, with this Wand, is expressed by Statius in these Verses, Summa pedum propere plantaribus illigat alis, Obnubitq; comas, & temperat aftra galero; Tum dextræ virgam infer it qua pellere dalces; Aut fuadere iterum fomnes, qua nigra fubire Tartara, & exfangues animare adjucverat umbras.

There is yet another thing, whence it may be inferred that Mercury was a God very antiently effeatmed well affected to Liberty; which is, That in the Isle of Greet, (now Candia)

they celebrated an Anniversary, which they called Equator, to the Honour of this God; wherein, after the manner of the Saturnals at Rome, Slaves and Servants had all manner of Liberty, and were magnificently waited on at Table by their Masters, as Athenaus af-

On the other fide we have this Infeription, ATILIUS CIMBER, a Man beyond middle aged, with a great Beard, and a ruftick Countenance, with a long Poniard before him. That which may be more particularly deduced hence is, That he was more than ordinarily desirous the Conspiracy should prosper, though before, he had been a great Creature of Casar's, (as Seneca affirms in his Book de Ira.) Nay, under Pretence of presenting a Petition to him, he was so importunate with him, and held him in Discourse with fuch eagerness till he came into the Senate, that he had not the time to read a Note which was presented to him, wherein the whole Conspiracy was discovered. This Poniard therefore stands to signific the great Zeal he had to this Execution, wherein he thought the Liberty of his Country was concerned; to vindicate which, as it was his ambition to appear the most eager and the most resolute of all the Gang, so he thought it his Glory to give Clefar the first Wound. Which consideration leads us by the hand to what we had defigned for the last part of this Discourse, namely, the tragical Catastrophe of this miraculous person,

For Motives to the Conspiracy, we may lay down partly the irreconcileable hatred that some bare, in others, the aversion they had from Tyranny, in others, a kind of zeal to publick Liberty; the Encouragements, Cafar's own Carelefness of himself, according to that Apothegme of his, when advised to take a Guard about his Person, That it was better to die once, than live in continual fear; his not humouring that people, who, if courted with Majefy, (as they had been wont in the time of the Common-wealth) had fuffered anything; his derisory Expressions of the Common wealth, saying, That it was a Shadow, and an imaginary Notion; Antonius his profering him a Crown, which though (feeing the acclamations of the people backward) he accepted not, yet was his Defign eafily discovered; the Report that he was to be declared King, and would translate the Seat of the Empire to Troy, whence he pretended to descend, or to Alexandria, to spend his days with Cleapatra; the Tribunes shewing a certain Law to a Friend of his in Writing, whereby it was lawful to take as many Wives as one would, the better to people the Common-wealth. These and such like passages gave occasion to Libels and Placards, which were set up at every Corner, whereof divers particularly addressed to Brutus, who by his Influence over the chiefest Citizens, got together above 60. who under the Conduct of Brutus, (whose very Name they thought to be fatal to Tyrants) would prefer the Liberty of their Country before Lives, Fortunes, or Relations. Some time before his Death, so many Signs and Prodigies happened, that it was become the general belief that Cafar's Death was near at hand. Among other things, his Soothfayer Spurina bid him beware of the Ides of March. All which put together, somewhat startled him, insomuch that he was once resolved to defer the Senate for that day, had not Brutus advised him in no case to betray so much fear; whereupon he went.

Going therefore in his Litter towards the Senate the fifteenth day of March, it could not be but divers would be presenting Petitions, and discoursing with him; but the Conspirators kept some of them so close to him, that he had not the leisure to peruse any thing he had taken; which if he had, he had in an Epistle given him by Artemidorus, or some other, discovered the whole Plot. Meeting by the way with Spurina, he told him the Ides of March were come; to which he answered, 'tu true, but they are not past. Being come to the Temple, where the Senate was to fit that day, and Sacrifice done according to the custom, he took his Chair in the Senate. The first came up to him was one Celer, who while he was entreating him to release a Brother of his that was in Captivity, the rest came up to him: Whereat he suspecting some Violence, cryed out, What Force is this? To which the above-mentioned Atilius Cimber answered him with a wound in the Throat, which the rest of the Conspirators seconded with others. But that which amazed him above all, was to fee Brutus among them, one whose Authority was great, and one whom he had obliged beyond all expression of Gratitude, when a conquer'd Enemy; upon which he could not but break forth into these words, And thou, Son Brutus, art thou one? Whereupon feeing there was no possibility of escaping, he remembred to keep the honour of his Person, covering his Head with part of his Robe, and with his lest hand settling his Cloaths about him; and so having received 23 Wounds, he fell to the ground a Sacrifice to the publick Liberty, near the Base of Pompey's Statue, which was noted as a Judgment of the Casar having neither Son nor Daughter legitimate at his Death, had by his Will before adopted his Nephew Octavius Casar, who was afterwards called Octavianus Augustus, who fludied in Apollonia at the time of this Murther of Casar, and expected to go with him to the War against the Parthians, being then about 17 years of age.

This Death (as all extraordinary accidents) must needs beget Tumult and Confusion in the City; all Offices ceased, the Temples and Courts of Justice were shut up; Casfar's Friends were afraid of the Conspirators and they reciprocally of them. This Tumuk Death of JULIUS CASAR.

fomewhat startled the Conspirators, who seeing the Design took not with the people as they expected, to secure themselves, seized the Capitol, crying as they went, Liberty, Li. berty, Liberty. Whereupon, Antonius and Lepidus being all this while in Arms, divers Treaties of Accommodation passed between them; whereby it was at last agreed the Senate should sit, whither Brutus and Cassius came, Antonius's Sons being Hostages for their Return. The Senate approves the Fact; the People dissemble their Satisfaction: For as the Authority of Brutus and Coffus, with the name of Liberty, was very charming on one fide; so the horror of the Fact, and the love some bare Casar, exasperated them againft the Murtherers. But Mark Antony, endeavouring to trouble the Waters as much as he could, among other things got Cc/ar's Testament to be opened, wherein he had bequeath'd to the People of Rome certain Gardens and Heritages near the River Tiber, and to every Citizen of Rome a certain Sum of Money: Which being known, it re inflamed their old affection to Caefar, and raifed a Compassion and a Regret for his Death. The day appointed for his Funeral, (the Ceremony whereof was to burn his Body in the Field of Mars) Antonius being to make the Oration, brought with him the Robe wherein Casar was affaffinated, which being all bloudy he shewed to the people, using some Expressions which raifed in them both Indignation and Pity; infomuch as, before the folemnity of the Funeral was ended, they all departed in great fury, with the Brands of the fame Fire, to fer afire the Houses of Brutus and Cassius, and the rest of the Conspirators, whom they fought running up and down the Streets. In which Fury they killed Ælius Cinna, miftaking him for Cornelius Cinna, who indeed was one of them. This Tumult forced Brutus, Cassus, and all who conceived themselves guilty of Casar's Death, to depart from Rome; whereupon Antonius took occasion to dispense with the Decree of the Senate, and assuming Cafar's Powerand Authority, perfecuted them all he could. Bruins and Cassius went into Greece, to govern those Provinces which Caefar (whom they had murther'd had conferred on them, which were Macedonia and Syria; and in like manner were all the rest dispersed, and that so unfortunately, that within the space of three years they all came to violent Deaths.

He was flain in the 56th year of his Age, somewhat above sour years after the Death of Pompey, 700 years after the Foundation of Rome, 3010 years after the Creation, but according to the 70 Interp. 5157. in the 184th Olympiad, and 42 years before the Birth of Chrift. Having made himself Perpetual Distator, he enjoyed it three years, four months, and fix days.

Thus have we traced this transcendent Personage through all his great and incomparable Actions and Atchievements; we have viewed him in his Diffresses and Extremities, and we have also seen him in his Victories and Triumphs, expressing the same Greatness, that is, the same Equality of Mind in both; we have surveyed him in all his Excellencies and Abilities both of Mind and Body; we have confidered the Invincibility of his Spirit, his incomparable Courage, his Clemency and Magnanimity, his Policy, Vigilance, Prudence, Conduct; we have, as near as we can, enumerated the many Battles he fought, the many Victories obtained, the many People and Provinces reduced, the many Kings and Countries subdued, so to figure a Person imitable in all things that may be called great or virtuous, not exceedable in any; we have described and dilucidated his Medals, wherein if we have committed any offence, it hath been in fludying brevity, purpofely omitting many things that might have been faid, and forbearing the multitude and particularity of Citations, left it might be thought a vanity: Laftly, we have accompanied him to his Funeral Pile, the fire whereof confumed his Murtherers and Enemies, while he himfelf is carried up by the same Element, to shine eternally a Star of the first magnitude, in the Firmament of famous and heroick Spirits. And there we leave him, recommending the Reader to fee and find him haply far greater than our Commendations, in his own everlasting COMMENTARIES.

Reading

Reading and Discourse are requisite to make a Soldier perfect in the Art Military, how great soever his Knowledge may be, which long Experience and much Practice of Arms hath gained.

course in discovering the nature of unacquainted Objects; choosing rather to hold any fensible Impreffice, which cuftom hath by long practice inured, than to hearken to some other more reasonable pertuation: I co not marvel that fuch Soldiers, whose knowledge groweth only from experience, and confifteth in the Rules of their own practice, are hardly perfuaded that Hiftory and speculative Learning are of any use in perfecting of their Art; being so difscreet in nature from the Principles of their Cunning, and of fo small affinity with the life of Action, wherein the use of Arms and Atchievements of War seem to have their chiefest being. But those purer Spirits, embelished with Learning, and enriched with the knowledge of other Mens Fortunes, wherein variety of Accidents affordeth variety of Instructions, and the mutual conference of things happened, begetteth both Similitudes and Differences, contrary Natures, but yet joyntly concurring to feafon our Judgment with Discretion, and to enstall Wisdom in the Government of the Mind: These Men, I say, mounting aloft with the wings of Contemplation, do eafily discover the ignorance of such Martialists as are only trained up in the School of Practice, and ence, which ferveth to interpret no Author but it felf, nor can approve his Maxims, but by his own Authority; and are rather moved to pity their hard Fortune, having learned only to be ignorant, than to enby their skill in matter of War, when they oppose themselves against so manifest a Truth as this, That a meer practical Knowledge cannot make a perfect Sol-dier. Which Proposition that I may the better confirm, give me leave to reason a little of the grounds of Learning, and dispute from the habitude of Arts and Sciences; which are then faid to be perfectly attained, when their particular parts are in such fort apprehended, that from the variety of that individuality, the intellectual Power frameth general Notions and Maxims of Rule, uniting terms of the fame nature in one head, and diftinguishing diversities by differences of Properties; aptly dividing the whole Body into his greatest and smallest Branches, and fitting each part with his Descriptions, Duties, Cautions and Exceptions. For unless the Understanding be in this fort qualified, and able by logiftical Difcourse to ascend by way of composition from Singu-Jarity to Catholick Conceptions, and return again the fame way to the lowest order of his Partitions, the Mind cannot be faid to have the perfection of that Art, nor to be instructed in the true use of that Knowledge; but guiding her felf by some broken Precepts, feeleth more want by that the hath not, than benefit by that the hath. Whereby it followeth that a Science divided into many Branches, and confifting in the multiplicity of divers Members, being all fo interested in the Bulk, that a maim of the smallest part causeth either debility or deformity in the Body, cannot be faid to be throughly attained, nor conceived with fuch a profiting Apprehension as steeleth the Mind with true Judgment, and maketh the Scholar Mafter in his Art, unless the nature of these particularities be first had and chrained.

7 Hen I consider the weakness of Man's And forasmuch as no one Science or Faculty what Judgment in centuring things best known foever, in multitude and plurality of parts, may any unto it felf, and the disability of his Dif- way be comparable to the Art Military, wherein every fmall and unrespected circumstance quite altereth the nature of the Action, and breedeth fuch disparity and difference, that the resemblance of their equal paticipating properties is blemished with the diffimilitude of their difagreeing parts; it cannot be denied, but he that is acquainted with most of these particular Occurrances, and best knoweth the variety of Chances in the course of War, must needs be thought a more perfect Soldier, and deferveth a Title of greater Dignity in the profession of Arms, than such as content themselves with a few common Precepts and over-worn Rules: Without which, as they cannot be faid at all to be Soldiers: so with them and no more, they no way deserve the name of skilful and perfect Men of War. Now, whether meer Experience, or Experience joyn'd with Reading and Discourse, do feast the mind with more variety and choice of Matter, or entertain Knowledge with greater plenty of Novelties, incident to Expeditions and use of Armies. I will use no other reafon to determine of this Question, than that which Francifcus Patricius alledgeth in his Parallels, where he handleth this Argument which I intreat of.

He that followeth a War (faith he) doth fee either taught their Rudiments under a few years Experi- the course of the whole, or but a part only. If his knowledge extend no farther than a part, he hath learned less than he that faw the whole: But admit he hath feen and learned the Instructions of one whole IVar, he hath notwithstanding learned less than he that hath seen the Proceedings of two such Wars: And he again hath not seen so much as another that hath served in three several Wars: And so by degrees, a Soldier that hath served ten years, must needs know more than one that hath not served so long. And to conclude, he that hath received 22 years Stipend, (which was the just time of Service among it the Romans, before a Soldier could be difmist; hath greater neans of Experience than another, that hath not so long a time followed the Camp, and cannot challenge a Difcharge by Order and Custom. And hence it consequently followeth, that if in one or more or all these Wars, there have happened few or no Actions of Service, which might teach a Soldier the practice of Arms; that then his learning doth not countervail his labour. And if the War, through the Negligence or Ignorance of the chief Commanders, have been ill carried, he can boast of no knowledge, but that which acquainted him with the corruptions of Military Discipline: If the part which he followed were defeated and overthrown, he knoweth by experience how to lofe, but not how to gain. And therefore it is not only Experience and Practice which make a Soldier worthy of his Name, but the knowledge of the manifold Accidents which rife from the variety of human Actions; wherein Reason and Error, like Merchants in Traffick, interchange contrary Events of Fortune ; giving sometimes Copper for Silver, and Balm for Poyson; and repaying again the like Commodity as time and circumstances do answer their Directions. And this knowledge is only to be learn'd in the Registers of Antiquity, & in Histories recording the Motions of former Ages.

Cains Julius Cafar (whole Actions are the Subject of these Discourses) after his famous Victories in France, and that he had gotten the Provinces of Spain, and broken the strength of the Roman Empire at Pharfalia, all her exceptions; and yet notwithstanding all this, graceful Lineaments, he will never stand to take the the Battle he had with Pharnaces, King of Pontus, was Symmetry by Scale, nor mark it out according to like to have buried the Glory of his former Con- Rule; but having his Judgment habituated by Knowquests in the dishonourable memory of a wilful Overthrow, For having poffest himself of a hill of great Proportions, his Knowledge guidest his Eye, and advantage, he began to encamp himself in the top his Eye directeth his Hand, and his Hand followeth thereof: Which Pharnaces perceiving, (being lodged both with such facility of cunning, that each of them likewise with his Camp upon a Mountain confronting the Romans) imbattled his Men, marched down from his Camp into the Valley, and mounted his Forces up the hill, where the Romans were bufied about their Intrenchments, to give them Battle. All turned it to the key of true Apprehension. which Cafar took but for a Bravado; and, measuring the Enemy by himself, could not be perfuaded that any fuch Fool-hardiness could carry Men headlong into to dangerous an Adventure, until they were come so near, that he had scarce any time to call the no means acknowledge, that those monstrous and Legions from their Work, and to give Order for the Battle: Which so amazed the Romans, that unless, as Calar himself saith, the advantage of the Place, and Time should never want such Treasure) can any way the benignity of the Gods had greatly favoured them. Pharnaces had at that time reveng'd the Overthrow of Pompey and the Senate, and restor'd the Roman the lustre of a Golden Age, nor yet comparable to Empire to Liberty. Which may learn us how ne-selfary it is (befides Experience, which in Cesar was no better Title than Earth or Clay, whereof the frame Chances; and to meditate upon the effects of other they) is between the Customs of our Times, and Mens Adventures, that their Harms may be our Warnings, and their happy Proceedings our fortunate Directions.

And albeit, among so many Decads of History. which pregnant Wits have presented to these latter Ages, we feldom or never meet with any one accident which jumpeth in all points with another of the like nature that shall happen to fall out in managing a War, or ferting forth of an Array; and fo do feem to reap little Benefit by that we read, and make small use of our great Travel; yet we must understand. That in the Audit of Resson there are many Offices, hath subverted both Faith and Equity, and our Va-which through the sovereign Power of the discussive lour affecteth nothing but Ambition; Pride and Cru-Faculty, receive great Commodities by whatfoever elty tyrannize in our thoughts, and Subtilty teacheth falleth under their Jurisdiction, and fuffer no action to pale without due trial of his nature, and examination of his flate; that so the Judgment may not be defrauded of her Revenues, nor the Mind of her Learning. For notwithstanding disagreeing circuma-own, but covering that which is not ours; Men ef-ftances, and differences of forms, which seem to cut seem to cut. off the privilege of Imitation, and frustrate the know-Addge we have obstained by reading; the intellectual petite with wanton Luxury; supplanting Virrue Faculty bath authority to examine the use, and look with Treachery, and using Victory with such such into the inconveniencies of these wants and diversities, and by the help of Reason to tuen it to her adwantage; or fo to counterpoise the defect, that in Trial and Execution it shall not appear any Difadvantage. For as in all other Sciences, and namely in Geometry, of certain bare Elements, and common. Sentences, which Sense admitteth to the Apprehension. the Powers of the Soul frame admirable Theorems and Problems of infinite use, proceeding with certainty of Demonstration from Proposition to Proposition, pheth in the Conquests of Virtue, and in every Page and from Conclusion to Conclusion, and still make erecteth Trophies unto Valour, making his Difcourse new Wonders as they go, befides the strangeness of their Architecture, that upon such plain and easie her entire Majesty, and so sweetned with the Pre-Foundations, they fould exect fuch curious and beautiful Buildings: So in the Art Military, these Ex behold her are wrapt with admiration of her Excelamples which are taken from Histories are but plain lency, and charmed with the love of her Perfection: kind of Principles, on which the Mind worketh to But Guichardine hath more than Thefeus's Task to her best advantage, and useth Reason with such dex- perform, being to wind through the Labyrinths of terity, that of Inequalities the concludeth an Equality, and of Diffimilitudes, most sweet Resemblances; ticians, wherein publick and open designs are oftenand so she worketh out her own Perfection by Dif- times but shadows of more secret Projects; and these course, and in time groweth so absolute in Knowledge, that her Sufficiency needeth no further dire- ing also discoloured with Diffimulation, and so en-

Pharfalia, was held a Soldier furmounting Envy and skilful Painter. That being to draw a Portraiture ledge, and perfected with the variety of Shapes and ferves for a Rule whereby the true Measures of Nature are exactly expressed. The like may I say of a skilful Soldier, or any Artizan in his Faculty, when Knowledge hath once purified his Judgment, and

And although there are many that will eafily admit a Reconciliation of this Disagreement, in the resemblance of accidents being referred to the Arbitrement of a well-temper'd Spirit; yet they will by inimitable Examples of Valour and Magnanimity, (whereof Antiquity is prodigal, and spendeth as thô avail the manners of these days; which, if they were as they ought to be, would appear but counterfeit to infinite) to perfect our Knowledge with variety of of this Age confifteth. For what Refemblance (fay the Actions of those antient Heroes? They observed Equity as well in War as in Peace; for Virtue rather flourished by the natural disposition of Men. than by Law and Authority; the greatest Treasure which they effeemed, were the Deeds of Arms which they had atchieved for their Country, adorning the Temples of their Gods with Piety, and their private Houses with Glory, pardoning rather than perfecuting a Wrong, and taking nothing from the Vanquished but ability of doing injury: But the Course of our Times hath another Bias; for Covetoufness us to carry rather a fair Countenance than a good Nature: Our means of getting are by Fraud and Extertion, and our manner of spending is by Wast and Prodigality, not efteeming what we have of our Servants to Wickedness, and preventing Natures Appiety, as though injuriam facere, were imperio uti: And therefore the exemplary Patterns of former Times, wherein true Honour is expressed, may serve to be gazed upon, but no way to be imitated by this Age; being too fubril to deal with Honesty, and wanting Courage to encounter Valour. I must needs confess, that he that compareth the History of Livy with that of Guichardine, shall find great difference in the subjects which they handle; for Live triumlike Cleanthes's Table, wherein Virtue is described in sence and Service of the Graces, that all they which Subrilty, and discover the quaint Practices of Poliagain serve as Foils to more eminent Intentions; be-Ctions. But as Lomazzo the Milanele, in that excel- fnared in the slights of Subtilty, that when you lent Work which he writ of Picturing, faith of a look for War, you shall find Peace; and expecting

Peace, you shall fall into Troubles, Diffentions, and tout of something practised before) these preposterous

But to answer this Objection in a word, and so to proceed to that which followeth: I fay, those immortal Memories of Virtue which former time recorderb. are more necessary to be known, than any Stratagems of fubrier Ages: For Equity and Valour being truly apprehended to featon the motions of the Soul, that albeit in so corrupt a course they cannot peradventure ftir up imitation; yet they oftentimes hinder many malicious Practices, and devilish Devices, when Evil is reproved by the knowledge of Good, and condemned by the Authority of better Ages. And if we will needs follow those steps which the present course of the World hath traced, and play the Cretian with the Cretian; this Objection hindreth nothing, but that Hiltory, especially these of later times, affordeth sufficient Instructions to make a Soldier perfect in that point.

Let not therefore any Man despise the found Infiructions which Learning affordeth, nor refuse the helps that History doth offer to perfect the Weakness I take the Office of a chief Commander to be a Subject capable of the greatest Wisdom that may be apprehended by natural means; being to manage a multitude of difagreeing Minds, as a fit Instrument to execute a Design of much consequence and great expectation, and to qualifie both their Affections and Apprehensions according to the Accidents which rife Judgment which he ought to have of fuch Circumflances as are most important to a fortunate End, from Learning or Experience, to prevent Difadvan-Or to conclude, if we thirst after the knowledge of ten but by Use and Practice. our own Fortune, and long to foresee the end of that Wars. So crabbed and crooked is his Argument in Men, after they are made Confuls, and placed at the respect of Lioy's Fortune; and such Art is required below of Government, begin to read, when they should to unfold the truth of those Mysteries. in time is most necessary that ream, amay to reway such infufficiency of knowledge, by using our of time that which in time is most necessary. This Testimony gave Marius of Reading and Book-learning, being himself an Enemy to the same, forasmuch as all his knowledge came by meer experience. But howfoever his Judgment was good in this point : For fince that all Motion and Action proceedeth from the Soul, and cannot well be produced, untill the Idea thereof be first imprinted in the Mind, according to which Pattern the outward Being and fenfible Refemblance is duly fathioned; how is it possible that any Action can be well expressed, when the Mind is not directed by Knowledge, to dispose it in that fort, as shall best agree with the Occurrents of fuch Natures as are necessarily interessed both in the Means and in the End thereof? And therefore Speculative Knowledge, as the Tramontane to direct the course of all Practice, is first to be respected.

But that I may not feem partial in this Controversie, but carry an equal hand between two so neof a short Experience, especially when no Worth can countervail the Weight of so great a business: For word the Benesit of Practice, and define the Good which cometh from Experience; that so nothing that hath been spoken may seem to come from Affection, or proceed from the Forge of unjust Partiality. And first it cannot be denied, but that Practice giverh Boldness and Affurance in Action, and maketh Men expert in such things as they take in hand: For no Man can reft upon fuch certainty through the Theoin the course of his Directions; besides the true rick of Knowledge, as he that hath seen his Learning verified by Practice, and acknowledged by the Testimony of assured Proof. Besides, there are mawherein our Providence cannot have enough either ny other Accomplishments gotten only by Practice, which grace the Presence of Knowledge, and give tages, or to take hold of Opportunities. Neither Credit to that which we have read: As first to learn can it be denied, but as this Knowledge addeth Per. the use and advantage of the Arms which we bear; fection to our Judgment, so it serveth also as a Spur secondly, by frequent aspect and familiarity of danto Glory, and encreaseth the defire of Honour in gers, and accidents of terrour, to learn to fear nofuch as behold the Atchievements of Virtue com- thing but Dishonour; to make no difference between mended to a perpetual Posterity, having themselves Heat and Cold, Summer and Winter; to sleep in all the like means to confected the Memory to face places as on a Bed, and at the fame time to take ceeding Ages, wherein they may ferre for Bramples pains and fuffer Penury; with many other Difficulties of Valour, and reap the Reward of true Honour, ties which Culton maketh eafer, and cannot be gotties which Cuftom maketh eafie, and cannot be got-

And thus at length I have brought a shallow Dis-Race which we have taken, which is the chiefest course to an abrupt end, wishing with greater Zeal matter of consequence in the use of Arms; what of Affection, than I am able with manifest Proof of better Conjecture can be made, than to look into Reason, to demonstrate the Necessity that both these the Courie of former times, which have proceeded parts were by our Soldiers so regarded, that neither from like Beginnings, and were continued with like Practice might march in obstinate blindness without Means, and therefore not unlikely to fort unto like learned Knowledge; nor this again be entertained with an idle apprehension without Practice: But that And now if it be demanded whether Reading or both of them may be respected as necessary parts to Practice have the first place in this Art, and serveth make a compleat Nature; wherein Knowledge, as as a Foundation to the reft of the Buildings; let Mathe Intellectual part, giveth Life and Spirit to the rius answer this Question, who envying at the NoAction; and Practice, as the material Substance, ma-Seius, de bility of Rome, saith thus, Qui postquam Confules fasti, keth it of a lensible Being, and like a skullul workbeld Jugor sum, alta Majorum & Grecorum militaria pracepta leman sepression expersion is bomines preposeris, nam legere quamsseri, tempore posterius, re & insu prius est. Whereas (saith est of the) Reading ought to go before Practice, (although it follow it in course of time, for there is no Reading, little grant sorties fastum off?

Geographical INDEX

All fuch Places in Germany, France and Britain, as are mentioned by Casar.

Collected chiefly from Ortelius his Thesaurus Geographicus, and now very much enlarged and amended.

D'baldubis: So 'tis read by Ful. Dialoubis: So its read by rus.

Orfinus upon Cafar, though other Copies in the fame place have Alduafdubis and Alduafdalis. In Ptolemy is Dubis, and fo it ought to be read in the Epiffles of Julian the Emperour, inflead of Danubis. 'Tis a River of France in Lionnois.

now call'd le Doux, fay Poldus and Marlianus. Jouatici, or Atuatici: Whose Metropolis (acwhole rectropolis (according to Casfar) was Atuatuca; though 'Artadzaslov is found in Prolemy, a City of the Tungri, and a Bishop's See; afterwards translated to Maestricht on the Meuse, from thence to Liege. Therefore the Atuatici are the Leodienses, or inhabitants of the Bishoprick of Liege.

Bunoprick of Liege,

#Pauli, or Debuti, a People of Gallia Celtica, who dwelt about the River Lotre, and were possess of the greatest part of the Dukedom of Burgundy. Their chief Town was Augustodunum, now Autun.

agendicum, a City of the Senones, now call'd Sens.
The Scholiasts upon Casar have blunds d extreamly in their Exposition hereof. 'Tis an Archbishop's

Aleria, a Town of the Mandubij in Gallia Celtica, call'd Alesia by Paterculus. By Diodorus and Polyan. I. 8. Strateg. 'tis call'd l' Aussois en Burgogne. But Paradin fays there is now nothing remaining of it, fave a faint refemblance of the Name, Alize; with whom agrees Vigenereus.

Bliobroges; Their chief Town was Vienne. The greater part of 'em are now subject to the Duke of Savoy. Tho' formerly the Savoyards, were within the Maritime Alpes, as appears by the Notitia Im-

Alnes, a long tract of Mountains, that divide Italy from Germany and France, as it were with a Wall. Strabo fays, they were anciently called Alpia, and Strato tays, titey were anciently canter appar, and alpiania, Stephanus files them alpeia and alpeioi; Phavorinus, Olpia; and in many places of Germany they are ftill call'd Alpen. In Lycophron they see to be called Salpij, as IJacius upon him thinks. The Poets fometimes use Alpis in the Singular Number. Serapio Cap. de Refina calls em Abax. For further Satisfaction consult Alciatus, in his Commentaries upon Tacitus De Morib. Germ. and Jofins Simler.

Amagetobzia: See Bagetobzia.

Ambarri, a People of Gallia Celtica, a part of the Hedui in the Dukedom of Burgundy, fays Vigeneeus, mbiani, the inhabitants of Amient in Picardy to ambiani, the inhabitants of Amient in Picardy to called. Ambianum or Amient, according to Sigelbert was first called Sommonbria, which we must not con-found with Samarobriva, which is a different City, as appears out of Cafar and Antonines

Imbibarri, supposed by Ortelius to be a People of Aquitain Baudrand says, they were a People of Aquitain, Baudrand (ays, they were a People of Gallia Grica.

Ambiliates, or Ambiatites: They dwelt amongst the Cella, in the leffer Bretany, where is now the Diocess

Imbibariti, a People of Gallia Belgica near Antwerp fays Ortelius, which is contradicted by Cheverius. fays Ortelius, which is contradicted by Cofar, bordering on the Daci. Blasius Vigenereus, says they are the Walachians, Servians and Bulgarians. Ancalites, a People of the Isle of Britain. The Inhabitants of a Place call'd Ankelut, by Glareanus; and by Cambden. The Hundred of Henley.

Index, the inhabitants of the Dutchy of Anjou, so nam'd from a place call'd Andegavi, or Anjour, a Bishops See. Intuates : See Mantuates.

Attuates: See systemulates.

Aquitain: Assystem divided it into three great Provinces. Prima Aquitainia, whose thertopolis is Bonges; Secundas, whose theretopolis is Bondesse; and Toris, named also Novempopulania, whose chief Toris Aire an Guinne, the fame that Coff and I fown is directly continued, circumscribed by the Garone, the Premer and the Corem. Name some by these and the defeated of the Premer and the core of the Premer and the pre Ocean: Now, even by those of Aguitain, call'd Gascoigne, to distinguish it from the rest of the Province. The Limits therefore of the Aquitania of Casar are not so spacious as to make a third part of Brar, a River of Gallia Narbonensis, by Pliny and Virgil nam'd Araris. Paradin says, That it is call'd Sangona, in Ammianus Marcellinus, and there is also found in him Sauconna. The Scoras of Polybius feems to be the same. 'Tis now call'd the Saone. The Author of a Book De fluminibus, says, 'twas anciently call'd Brigulus, the Truth whereof depends upon the Credit of the Author.

Brouenns, a very Large Wood, or Forest in Gallia Belgica, which still recains the Name of Ardennes. Frenicus.

Irenicus calls it Achterwalt, and thenanus Lutticherwalt, Bibooci, (or which some read Bibrocassi) a People i e the Wood of the People of Liege.

Bricomici. They were of two forts ; Volca Arecomici policifed of that Tract of Ground where now fland Nemours and Narbonne; and Arecomici Tellofages, of that where now flands Tholoufe.

Aremo, ica. Cafar places the Cities thereof, in that part call'd Britannia Minor by Sigebert; nam'd also Hermiona, by Rob. Canalis, and vulgarly Bretaigne. Leland fays that Armorica fignifies upon the Sea in the Language of the Britains. Armorica was also named Letavia.

Arberni, A People of the Celta, called Aroerni by Stephanss. From them Auvergne takes its Name. Arras, in the Dukedom of Arrais.

Arios, in the Durceoin of Arios.

Abaricum. Tis madness to suppose it any other than Bourges. Tis, as we said before, the Metropolis of Aguitania Principles.

Allerti. They are of four sorts; Aulerci Eburovices from whence Eureux in Normandy takes its Name; Aulerci Diablintres; Aulerci Cenomanni, whence Mans takes its Name; and Aulerci Brannovices.

Buscii. Whose chief Town, Aix en Guienne, the Metropolis of Novempopulania or Gascoigne, is a Bishop's

Arona: A noted River, now call'd Aifne, which rifing in the Dukedom of Berry, runs a long winding course, and at last falls into the River l' Oise, above Compiegne.

B.

Eacenis. A Wood in Germany, which, according to Cafar, divides the Cherufci from the Sweeds. Althamerus thinks 'cis Thuringerwalt. Some confound it with Sylva Hircynia and Martiana, i. c. Schwartz-

Watter By Ptolemy, Tacitus and Cafar, 'cis a Country of Lower Germany, at the Mouth of the Rhine, now improperly called Holland. For that part of Holland, which stretches it self-like two Arms from Lobicum to the Ocean, between the Rhine and the Waal, was anciently called Batavia, which still the man, was anciental cancer being call'd Betaw by the Natives. Pliny, Dion, Cefar and Tacitus call is an Island of the Bataci. Tis call'd Battua and Badua, by Aimoinius.

Etlar. A People made mention of by Csfar in the beginning of his Commentaries, inhabiting Gallia Belgica, near to the Sea Coasts.

Selfgium. The Name of the Country of the Belga, and not a City, as the Scholiass foolishly imagine. See a large description hereof in Baudrand, and

Efficaffes, Elelocaffes, and Bajocaffes, an ancient People of the Country of Bajonne, whose chief ctent People of the Country of Bayane, whose chief Town is Bayenx, a Bishop's See.

Se filerassis, or Sellecasses, The same with the Verscasses or Velocasses, and the Town is offers. Some place them in the farthest Parts of Galla Armerica, and Castless, and Casslows, and Casslows in Cambden. And Marlianus makes a diffinction, and fays that the Bellocassi were of Gallia Celtica, and are now call'd Bajocenses: Velocasses were of Gallia Belgica, and are those that now live about Cassel in Flanders.

Bellobaci. They dwelt in Gallia Belgica, whence Beauvais.

Bibzatte, The largest and most Populous Town of the Heduans, call'd Peaulne by Orontius in his Tabula Gallia, and by Vigenereus; and Marlianus fays it retains the Name still. 'Twas sometimes called Julia, except it be a fault in Constantine's Panegyrick, where towards the End, are these Words, Bibratte quidem bue usque dilha est Jalia. Petrus Santto-Julianus in his Burgundia, will have Bibraffe, and Augustodanum to be the same Place. Beuray a' Autun. Eilizap. A Town of Gallia Belgica, bordering upon the Sueffones, now call'd Brayne a little Town in Compagnia, of Britain. Glareanus calls the place where they dwelt Bibrogger ; Cambden, The Hundred of Bray.

igerrones. Inhabitants of that part of Aquitain. call'd Novempopularia: whence Bigorre their chief call'd Novempopularia: whiche Digote their cinet Town, now a Bilhoy's Sec. 2: furriggs. There are two Sorts; The Cubi Bitmiges, now call'd Berri, in the Eurohy of Berry; and the Bitmiges Vibifei in the Balywick of the Bondebis. Cafar mentions only the Cubi v. hofe chief Town was Avaricum, or Bourges.

Boii, A People on the further fide the Rhine: A part of those that together with the Helvetians invaded Gaul, and placed themselves in the Territories of the Adui by main Force, and are thought to have lived in that part now call'd Bourbonnois. Cafar makes mention of Boia, the name of a Town.

Brannovices. An ancient People of Gallia Narbonenfis, inhabiting the Country call'd la Maurienne, in the Dukedom of Savoy. Batufpantum, or Batufpantium; A Town in the Borders, between the Bellovaci, and the Ambiani, afterwards call'd Cafaromagus, now Beauvais as most think, says Bandrand.

Bzitain. If we may give credit to other Writers. twas little known in Cafar's time, Lorwithstanding he describes it presty exactly. Hence some have doubted whether those Commentaries which give a Description thereof were writ by him. Be it as it will, under the Name Britain, the Ancients comprehended all this great Island; and the leffer circumjacent ones, which are now divided into the Kingdoms of England and Scotland.

Cabillonum. A Town of the Advans, according to Marlianus. Now Chalons fur Saone. Cadetes: A People of Gallia Celtica.

Cadurci : Ancient Inhabitants of Querci; their chief Town Cahors, a Bishop's See, which retains something of their Name.

Carefii, or Careti : A People of Gallia Beleica: a part of the Treviri, in the South part of the Durchy of Luxembourg, in the Bishoprick of Triers.

Caletes: A People of Gallia Belgica. Strabo makes their Country extend as far as the Mouth of the Seine. Divens makes their Country to have been that we now call Le Pais de Caulx. Turnebus fays they possessed that part about Diep and Honfleur, and that they were called Caletenfes.

Cantium: An Eaftern Promontory of Britain, according to Strabo and Diodorus; now call'd Northforeland. Cafar calls all that part of the Island which extends it felf towards the East, Cantium; Beda, Cantiam; now Kent. In the Notitia Imperii, 'is nam'd Litus Saxonicum.

Catuaci, a part of the Belge fo call'd, near Namue, about the meeting of the Save and the Maeze.

Caturiges: A People inhabiting the Alpes, in the Country of Ambrun. There chief Town is Ambrun, an Archbishop's See.

Celta: Who these were is plain from the beginning of Cofar's First Book. Their Name I shall have occafion to speak of more largely in another place. Under this Name the Greeks comprehended both the Germans and Gauls.

Cenimagni, a People of Britain, called Cenman by Glareanus. Cambden will have 'em to be the same with the Iceni. Ernomanni, a People in the Princedom of Main, whose chief Town is Mans, a Bishop's See.

Centrones, Neighbours to the Nervii, but we rather suspect it to be a false reading. Baudrand says they dwelt in Gallia Belgica, and were comprehended amongst the Morini.

Centrones, Inhabitants of the Alpes, in le Pais de Tarantais, whose chief Town is Tarentum, an Archbifhop's See.

Cherusci, so called by Treitus, Paterculus and Strato; Cherusci by Ptolemy, and Ceruscii by Vib Sequester. A People of Germany divided from the Sweeds, by the Forest of Thuringerwalt. Supposed to be the Mansfielders by Scaliger: But H. Junius thinks they are the Lunenburghers. See Althamerus upon Ta-

Cimbai, a People in the farthest Northern Parts of Germany, by us call'd Jutlanders, the same that Strabo calls Cimmerii. Becamus also fays they are called Cerberii by the Scholiast upon Aristophanes.

Cocolates, (or Cocoffates Sexignani as Pliny calls'em) a People of Aquitain, in that part now call'd le Bazadois.

Conducti, and Condrusones according to Vigenerea People of Germany, or rather Brabant; whence Condrutz, in the Bishoprick of Liege, whose Capital is Huy, upon the Maes. Molanus in the Life of S. Beregifies calls it Condoftrum Auftrafie.

Confluentes, or the Meetings of the Meuse and the Rhine, in Gallia Belgica, not far from Bommel.

Curiosolita, Inhabitants of Armorica, now Bretaigne near the Sea. Marlianus says they are call'd by many Corisopetenses.

Decetia, a City upon the Loyre with a Bridge, now nam'd Decife fur Loire.

main Design par Louise.

Misblintess, or Diablintess. They were a part of the Celtse so call'd. Urfinus makes them the same with the Diablindi of Pliny. Villonovanus supposes them to be the Deaulita of Ptolemy. Marlianus favs Leondoul belonged to them, which Becanus in his Atnatici calls Linter. 'Tis a Village of Brabant, upon the River Gete.

Durocottozum, now Rheims, an Archbishop's See; the Metropolis of the Rhemi, or People of Rheims. Buranium, a River. This River is not mention'd in the Righth Commentary, De Bell. Gall. though pointed at in fpeaking of Uzellodunum, which is built upon a high broken Rock adjoining to the fame, now call'd la Dordonne. Anciently 'twas call'd

Duranius by Ausmin and Sidonius, but afterwards Dordonia by Gregory Turonensis. The largest and most noble River of Aquitain, near the Garonne.

Cburones, call'd also Aulerci Eburones. They were a part of the Belge, and Tributaries of the Treviri. Dion names them Eburi. Their chief Ciry was that which is now commonly call'd Liege. The Was that which is now commonly can a large. The Germans call it Layek and Luttich.

Churobices. Their chief Town was that now called Eureux. A People of Gallia Celtica, in the middle between the Velocasses, Lexovii, Aulerci Diablintres, and Carnutes. Claber. A River of the Celta in Auvergne, which Marlianus calls Allier, and Sidmius Elear. See Gabriel Simeonius, in his Dialogus pius & speculativus. Eleutheri. The Word in the Greek imports these to have been a Free People: and hence it is that in Cafar we meet with Eleutheri Sueffones, and Eleutheri Caurti.

Elliates: Anciently their Bishop's See was Elusa, now Le pais de Euse in Gascaigne. See the Lessiones Ausmianae of Joseph Scaliger, where the Opinion of those, who make the Elusates and Foxenses the same,

Effui. Bandrand fays they were a part of the Celta, in the Dukedom of Normandy, and their chief Town was that which is now call'd Seer.

Babali Ancient inhabitants of Givaudan, whose chief Town is now call'd Mende. Tis an Episcopal See, attributed to the Province of the Bituriges. They trifle who fay they are now subject to the Bishoprick of Arles.

Balli. Who it is Cafar means by em, is apparent from the Beginning of his first Book of his Commentaries De Rell Gall Barites, in Novempopulania, the Aquitania Tertia of C.sfar; in that part now call d le Pais de Gaure.

Baroceti, a People within the Alpes. Marlianus and Paradin place them in Mount Cenis; Vigenereus in the Valley of Mawienne.

Barumna. A River dividing the Celta from those of Aquitain, in Ptolemy nam'd Garyna, now Garonne. Cafar calls fuch as dwelt near it Garunni.

Barumni, in Cafar are fuch as dwelt a long the River Garonne.

Bebenna, and Gebennici Montes, are those that divide those of Auvergne from the Helvii. Ptolemy mentions Cemmenus Mons, now Mount Cevennes. Benahum: An Episcopal City of the Aurelianois. in Cafar's time attributed to the Carnutes, now call'd Orteans. Geneba: A City of the Allobroges near the Lake, Lemanum, or Lemans; by the Natives call'd Geneve, and by the Helvetians and Germans, Genff.

Gergobia. Diftant about an hour from Clermont, a Bishop's See in Auvergne, where some Ruines, and other Marks of the Ancient City still remain. The place is commonly call'd Gergovia, as I am inform'd by Friends.

Gergobia Boiozum, is plainly suppositious, in the Seventh Commentary, De Bell. Gall. For the Town of the Boit is not named, that Vercingetorix determined to demolish: and there are other places in Cafar befides this which are rather hinted ar, than named. Therefore the Boil had no Town nam'd Gergovia.

Germania: By the Natives nam'd Teufschland, and by the French Allemagne. By the Englift, Germany. Gozduni: A Branch also of the Belge. Ortelius is of Opinion that they dwelt about Ghent in Flanders.

Grudii: A Branch of the Belge, amongst the Morini, in that part now call'd Le Quartier de Bruges in Flanders.

Gandii: Tributaries of the Nervii. Inhabitants of Launois says Marlianus, of Bruges in Flanders says Becanus, of Lovain say others.

Darrides: People beyond the Rhine, brought by Arioviftus, into the Territories of the Hadni and Delbetii, who, fufficiently described by Casar. By the Natives call'd Schweitzers, and by the French

Belbii, or rather Civii, People on the further fide the Rhoine, whose chief Town, being a Bishop's See, is call'd Castrum by Vivarius, now Viviers, the Metropolis of the Princedom of Vivarez.

Dercynia; A vast Wood in Germany, the Orcynia of Eratoftbenes, says the Scholiast upon Apollonius. 'Tis call'd Orcynium by Ptolemy, Hercynius Saltus, and Hercynium Nemus by Pliny. Rhellicanus in his Notes upon Cafar (and Althamerus upon Tacitus to the fame effect) ipeaks thus of it : Unam eandemque effe effect) 19eaus tius of it: onam eauscunque eje-fisham wetevum Baceinin, Martiaman, Gabriam, Se-manam & Herspiam. Now it goes by several Names; as about Fribong 'is call'd Schartzwalt; about Heidelberg, Oaenwalt; about Writzbong, Stepgerwalt; about the River Lonne, near Coblentz, Westerwalt; about Franck fort, Speshart; in the Confines of Saxony, within the Territories of Mansfield.

tives call'd Erin, by the Germans Irlandt. Dibernia, or rather Ibernia, Ivernia, or Juverna, by the English Ireland. Subject to the King of England.

I.

Accing Portus. Strabo fays 'tis a Port of the Movini, an ancient People inhabiting the Sea Coaffs of Belgium, but he has also Itius; as it is in several Manuscript Copies of Casar's Commentaries. Lloyd makes it appear to be the same with that now call'd Calais; which City (as fays P. Oudegerst in his Annals of Flanders) is sometimes in the Common Dialect call'd Petresse. Some there are who think St. Omers to have been the Portus Iccius of Old; led thereto partly from the fituation of the place, which being very low, yet the Shore rose very high about it, and it had anciently a very Capacious Harbour; and partly from the Ancient Name thereof, Sithieu, as much as to fay, Sinus Ithii. Add to these the Distance, which is, to the nearest part of the British Continent from this Town, exactly CCCXX Stadia, which is the Diflance Strabo attributes to it: For CCCXX Stadia make just XIII French Leagues, which is the Computed Diftance. Cafar makes it Thirty Thoufand Paces, Pliny Forty, and Dio increases it to Forty Six Thousand in his Thirty Ninth Book. Pliny in another place feems to call this Port Portus Britannicus Morinorum. For further Satisfaction fee the Learned Mr. Edmund Gibson's Portus Iccius Illustratus, lately Published. Bura, and Jurassus Mons, now Le Mont Jura, in the Confines of Burgundy.

Latobziges, Borders upon the Helvetians. Inhabitants of that part now called Le Brifgam, beyond the Rhine. Lemanus, A Lake of the Helvetians, by Ptolemy call'd Limene, and in the Itinerary of Antoninus 'tis nam'd Lausonius. The French now call it Lac de Losanne, and de Geneve, and the Germans Genf-

Lemonices: In the Prima Aquitania of Cesar now call'd Limosin, whose chief Town, being a Bisshop's See, is called in Latin Ratiassum, now Limo-

Lepontii, a People of Rhatia of the Helvetians according to Strabo, in whose Country Casar says the Rhine begins its Course. In Scudus, Rhinwalder are those that dwell on the very Top of the Alpes. Pliny the Vibici who live about the Head of the Rhosne, Lepontii. Marlianus thinks they may perhaps be those now called Suitenses.

Lebati: Among the Belga or Low-Dutch, in Brabant, in the Bishoptick of Liege, Four Miles from Lowvain, about Leewe.

Leuci, Low-Dutchmen. Ptolemy calls their City Tullum, as does also Antoninus in his Itinerary; which is the Toul in the Dukedom of Lorrain, of Marlianus and Diveus.

Leropii, or Lexobii: A Branch of the Celte, Inhabitants of Lifieux, in the Dutchy of Normandy, according to Marlianus and Vinetus, Ligeris and Liger, a great River of the Celta.

now called Loire." Limonum, a Town between Xainlies and Poilton mention'd in the Eighth Book of Cafar's Commentaries De Bell. Gall. Unknown both to Ptolemy and Lingones, a part of the Celta, in Ptolemy called Langones. Gregory Turonenfis calls their chief Town Urbs Lingonica, now Langres.

Lutetia, A Town of the Parifians in the Isle of Paris, now the Royal Seat. In Ptolemy 'tis Lucotecia, and in Julianus his Misopogonus, Leucetia, M.

Magetrobia, a City of the Celta: Unknown, fays Scal. But Elisha Cole renders it Mont Belliard, which Man Dubii, a part of the Celta, whose chief Town was Alexia, now Alife, in the Dutchy of Burgundy, as Marlianus thinks.

Barcomanni, a people of Germany, who invaded Gaul under Arivistus. Their chief Town is now called Merhern by Dubravius and others. Batifco, a City of the Heduans, upon the Same, now Matrona, a River of France, which divides the Cel-te from the Belga, now called Marne.

Spediomatrices, a part of the Belga, whom Rhenanus calls Westreicher. Their Metropolis is Metz, in the Dukedom of Lorrain

Benapii, a Maritime People in Brabant. Their chief Town is now called Keffel upon the Maefe. Detioleoum, thrice so called by Casar; asterwards named Melodunum, now Melun.

Detioledum, or Josedum, near Sequana; which Marlianus interprets Corbeil.

Mona, an Island between England and Ireland. 'Tis doubted whether it be that in the mid-way between 'em (where Cssar also places it) which the Natives call Menau, and the English, Man: Or that which is near England, and was called Mon, by the English now called Anglesey.

Spoint. Their chief Town was Taroana, a Bishop's
See, levell'd with the Ground: But Teronane holds up the Name

Dozini, Belgians, whom Marlianus and others point at in Teroanne, and Bovillus in Monstrevil.

Mola, a famous River of Gallia Belgica, by the French now called Meufe, and by the Germans, Maes, or Maase.

N.

Mannetes, or Namnetes: Nauvntas in Ptolemy: Whose chief Town being a Bishop's See, was Condivienum, now Nants.

Rantuates, a People amongft the Veragri, and in the Confines of the Territory of Geneva, upon the Banks of the Lake Lemani. They blunder woefully, who take the Monastery of Nantua between Lyons and Geneva, to be the place of the Nantuates; for they are different Countries. Nor ought we from a little Similitude of Names, presently, hand o-ver head, declare in savour of our own Opini-

Rarbo, the chief City of a Roman Province, whence Gallia Narbonensis; now Narbonne.

Remetes, a people upon the Rhine, whom Rhenanus and others take to be those of Spiers, where is an Imperial Chamber.

Remetocenna, a Town of the Belga, the same with Nemetocerna of Baudrand, which he from Cluverius. Sanson, and others, takes to be Arras.

Merbii. some take 'em to be the Inhabitants of Tournay; though Casar seems to place 'em beyond their Confines. Bandrand and others take 'em to have been the Inhabitants of Bavay in HaiA Geographical INDEX.

Mitiobziges , People of the Secunda Aquitania. whole Bishop's See is Aginnum, now Agen. All have been hitherto most abominably mistaken who took 'em for those of Montpelier, as if Cafar had ever made War upon the Province of Narbonne: They are only mistaken about seven Days Journey, which cannot be less than 140 Miles, reckoning but 20 Mile a

Rozices, and Rozica Urbs, in Germany; perhaps the fame we now call Normberg, and Noringbers, the Inhabitants whereof might anciently be call'd Robiodunum of the Heduans, a City of the Nivermis, as it is in the MS. Notitia. 'Tis a Bishop's See, Rhenus. Rhene, or Rhine, a most famous River now call'd Nevers.

Robiodomum of the Belgs, a Bishop's Sec, now named Noon, in Latin Noviomagus. In the Rhobanus, or vulgarly Rhose, a noted River of Synods and Geffa Francorum 'tis fivled Noviemum. whence the new French name is hammer'd. As from Rigemagus, Riomum, now Riom; and from Rotomaneumagus, Romum, and now Roien.

Robioblumum, Biturigum, a City in Gallia Aguitanica, the same, as Vigenereus supposes, with that we now call Neufry four Baranjon, sitteen/Miles from

Bourees.

o.

Deelum : Cafar and Strabo make it to be a Town in the Alpes, which Villanovanus and Varrerius call Onla; the Alpes, which y ruambounus and varieties can one, the Italians; Our Similerus, Jelles; J'ignereus, Ejelles; Martiams, Novalelia, and Calitioneus, Chielano, tho fally, fays Varretins. Scadus learnedly thows, that its not the fame with the Offetla of Ptoletis, which he places among the Lepontii.

Ditologues, a Town of the Vergeri, call'd St. May-rice : Now, fays Marlianus, Martenach.

Dfilmi, or rather Ofilmii, the same that Pithaus up-on Strabo calls Timii and Sismii, a People upon the British Coast, Inhabitants of a place call'd Landriguet, fays Conalis.

P.

202 mani, a branch of the Belge, who dwelt towards the Maeje amongst the Eburones.

Parifit, a People upon the Seyne, in the Isle of France, whose chief Town is Paris.

Detrogozii, in the Secunda Aquitania, Inhabitants of Perigord. Their City is Episcopal, divided into two Parts, the City and Town, anciently call'd Vefuna. The City takes its Name from the People, and is called Perigueux.

Dittones, in the Secunda Aquitania, now call'd the Country of Poillou, which extends it felf a long way, and has a City which is a Bishop's See, anciently called Augustoritum, now Poisters, a very large and most flourishing City.

Dicumofii, a branch of the Belga, between the Ner-vii, Attrebates, and Gorduni, in the Diocess of Tournay in French Flanders.

Pzeciani, In Novempopulania, or Gascoign, about Pre-

Probincia Romanorum, or the Roman Province, is that part of France call'd Gallia Narbonensis, and in part retains the old Name, being still call'd Pro-

Dyrenzi, and Pyrenaus Saltus, very high Mountains which separate France from Spain, by the Spaniards commonly called Los Pyreneos. But they have divers names in divers places.

Rauraci, a People upon the Rhine, Neighbours to the Helvetians, in Scudus called Bafler, i. e. Inhabitants of the Territories of Balil.

Rhebones, a part of the Aquitanians or Britons. Their chief Town being Episcopal, was anciently called Condate, now Remes.

Rhemi: Their chief Town is an Archbishop's Sec; anciently called Durocottorum, now Rheims. which separates Gallia from Germany: In the Ger-

France, dividing the Provincia Romanorum, or Provence, from the Celta.

Ruteni, in the Prima Aquitania, about Rovergne, whose chief Town was anciently called Segodunum now Rhodes.

Sabig, a River of Gallia Belgica, which runs into the Maes; now called the Sambre.

Samarobaina, now Amiens, an Episcopal Ciry of the Ambiani. Many have made a great sputter about this Word to no purpofe. Santones, in the Secunda Aquitania in the Government of Xaintonge; whose chief Town being a Bishop's See, was anciently called Mediolanum, now Xaintles.

Scaldis, the Tabada of Ptolemy; a River of Gallia Belgica, which ttill retains its Latin Name. The Germans call it Schelt, and the French, PEf-

Seduni, a People of France bordering upon the Alpes a the upper Vallois. Their Metropolis was call'd Sedunum, in the Savoy Dialect Sion, in the German, Sit-

Seduci, a People amongst the Germans, in France-

Segni, a People of the Belge, be ween the Eburones and Treviri, in the Bishoprick of Liege. Segontiaci, A People of Bretaign, says Glareanus, placing them at a place called Sengerer. But Cambden thinks they dwelt amongst the Belg a in that part now called Holeschot.

Segusiani, Inhabitants of the Country now called Le pais de Fores. They had two chief Towns; one named Forum Segufianorum, now Fours en Fores, or vulgarly Fores, as much as to fay Foreses, that is Forenses: The other was Rodunna, now Rouan, a very famous Town upon the Lorre. Ptolemy places, very ill, Lyons among the Segufiani.

Senones. See Agendicum. Sequana, in Strabo Sequanus, a great River di-viding the Celta from the Belga; now called Sequani, Inhabitants of the Franche Comté, whose Metropolis was called Vijontio, now Besançon, a Royal City beyond the Territories of the Dutchy of Burgundy.

Selubii, Ancient Inhabitants of Bretaigne. Dibutzates, in Baudrand Sibuzares, ancient Inhabi.

Siburgates, in Baudrand Siburgates, ancient Inhabitans of Normappulania, or Galciagne.

Sicambri, a People of Galia Belgica. They feem to have been the ancient Inhabitants of the Dukedom of Guelderland (1ays Marianus) between the Mass and the Rhine. But in Prolemy (who calls them Syngambri) they are placed on the further fide of the Rhine, with whom agrees Suetonius in the Life of Augustus. Some will have them to have been the Inhabitants of the Earldom of Zutphen. Strabo calls them SugamSotiates, Inhabitants of Galoriene, now called Suts. Their chief Town is built upon a high Hill in the Patrimony of the Metropolitical Church of Suctiones, Inhabitants of Soiffons. Their City being Episcopal, is in Latin called Augusta Sues-

Suebi. Poffeffors anciently of the greatest part of Germany; yet their Country was but little known in Cafar's time. And those that now inhabit Swaben, are without doubt a branch of the ancient Suevi.

T.

Mamefis, the Jamissa of Ptolemy; a very large and commodious River of England; which the Natives write Thames, but pronounce Tems: 'Tis the Port of Landon

Tarbelli, a People in the furthest part of Gascoigne upon the Banks of the Aturus. They have two Episcopal Cities, Acqs, in Latin Aque Tarbellice, which is not to be confounded with Tarba in the Government of Bigorre in Gascoigne; and Bayonne. See the Lestiones Ausoniana of Joseph Sca-

Martifates, Inhabitants of the Aquitania Cafaris: Some take them to have inhabited about Turfa, a Bishop's See in the Province of the Auscii: Though there really be no such place, nor aby Bishoprick of that name in all Gascoigne.

Tursan indeed is a Town in the Territories of the Labretii : But how they will inferr that it took name from the Tarufates, I cannot Maurentum, a Town in the Secunda Provincia Narbonnesis, of which we have nothing certain. They that take it for Telonum or Toulon have not confidered the Antiquity thereof. Commerce the Antiquity Interest.

Lettolarges* : These were a People of Germany, according to Cofar (though there were a People of this Name in Gaul) about that place which is now called the Forest of Schwarzwais. Rhenanus thinks they dwelt on the Banks of the Neckar, where there still remains an old Castle named Teck. Urfinus upon Cafar reads Volca for Tellofages : And others, not without ground, Volce Teffeloger

Eentlitheri; by others Thenchteri; by Appian. Tan-chari; by Plutarch, Tenterides; and by Ptolemy, Tingri, a People of Germany. Willichius takes them to be those that now inhabit along the Rhine and the Lon, where there are abundance of Faffians, and some French. H. Junius takes them to be those in and about Drema, from the Similarde Migurinus Pagus : The chief Town and City whereof was Aventicum, now Avenches, as appears by an old Infeription at Avenches, viz. GEN. P A G. T I G O R. i. e. Genio Pagi Tigorini : And in another Inscription the City is called Aventicum Helvetiorum.

Molofates, the People in Narbonnois, who fill retain the Name of Tholoufians, or People of Tho-Mrebiri in Cefat, Tribori in Ptolemy, and Tribori in the Book De Notit. Imp. a People of Gallia Belgica, which you may now call Trierifebe, from their Metropolis Triers.

Triboces : So Cafar : Ptolemy, Tribocci. A People of Germany, whom Rhenanus calls Strasbourghers from their Metropolis. In Ofwald the Miller there is mention of Zun dreyen Buchen, which feems to have fome Affinity with the Word Tribacci.

Arinobantes, or Arinobantes, a People of England, are those, according to Letand and Lloyd, that dwell now about Landen. Nevilling ascribes to them Effex and Middlefex.

Hulingi, those of the Celte that bordered upor the Helvetii. Marlianus and Rhellicanus think they are those by the Germans called Lothringers, and by the French, Lorrainois. Scudus makes mention of Stulingen and Nellenburg, as taking name from them.

Turones: Whose chief City, being Archiepiscopal, is Tours. In Ptolemy there is a false reading of Tue Extes for Tue orios.

Clangiones, a People of German upon the Ribne. By Rhenause and Litchenevius, called Wormfeber Bifthound; which Pirchapmerus gainslays, inpposing them to be the Inhabitants of Spire, and the Rethem to be the innantants or opier, and the re-metes, those of Worms. But Sigebertus Gemblacessis, who writ above a hundred Years ago, calls Worts the City of the Vangiones; and Joannes Heroldus gathers from an old Inscription there, that Worms was anciently called Spesula Vangionum.

Missing teneur operator various and angionium.

Misis, a People of Germany, called also by Tacitus, Agrippinenses, from the place now called Colonia Agrippina. Obich a Village in the Country of Justers perhaps ftill retains their Name.

Belauni, and Pagus Velaunus, now le pais de Velai : Their chief Town is now called Le Pay.

Stellaunobumum, a Town of the Senners. If we may believe Caradis, 'its that we now call ducere, Vigenerus, thinks 'cis.chafteallandon, and others that 'its Villenerf in Lorrain. Welocaffes. See Bellocaffes.

Meneti, a part of the ancient Britons, whence Vannes in the leffer Bretany.

Mertenach, as fome think, a People between the Rhofne and the Alpes, Merbigenus, a Village of the Helvetians, in Gallia Lugdunensis, called also Urbigenus, and Urba, by An-

Meromanoui. Ptolemy in his Martyrologium calls their chief Town Augusta Veromanduorum, now St. Quintin. en Vermandoic Wesontio : The chief Town of the Sequani. See Seauani.

Mienna, a City of the Allobroges, upon the Rhofne, subject to the Meduli, a People of Aquitain : Now Unelli, a People of Gallia Celtica, about le Contantin in lower Normandy.

Mocates, an ancient People of Aquitain in that part now called le Captalar de Bruch, fays Briefins. now called te captaiar are truco, 129, STREFER.

"Incontil They had two Epifcopal Towns; the one named Dia Vocantiorum, now Die in Dauphine; the other Vafio Vocantiorum, now Vaijon in Pro-

Montelus, a Mountain upon the Confines of the Territory of Langres, where is the Head of the Maes. Vinetus calls it Mont de Fancille.

Molcæ. See Arecomici.

Allipetes, a People of German, which Platarch in the Life of Jalin calls Huffpin. Rhellicanus places them between the Rhine and the Mountains of Hesse in that place now called Hochrug. Williching thinks these Usingtes are the same with the Using of Tacitus, the Vifpii of Prolemy, and the Syfipetes of latins, the vipi of Proteins, and the Stiperes of Appian. Yet Ufpit and Ufperes in Pacities are different People. The Nofisi of Strabo, H. Janius in his Batavia, nolens volens, will have to be the Inhabitants of the place we now call Zutphen. He shows in his Tables, that the Vispii of Ptolemy differ Zilahalis.

manais, or malis, a River of the Batavi, a Branch of the Rhine, now called Waal. Tacitus speaks of a River named Nabalia, but some Copies read Vahalis in that very place.

Areijobunum, a Town finate on a ragged Rock which hangs over the Derdame in the Terrisories of the Cadurci, a People of the Prima Aquitania. The Natives ftill call it la Puech d'Usoldun, that is,

Pedium Uxelloduni. There are many pieces of old Coyns daily dug up there, and fome Monuments of great Antiquity are fill remaining. The Spring or Well that is mentioned by Cesar in the Righth Book of his Commentaries in the Siege of this Book or his Commentaries in the Siege of this place, is fill shown by the Country People, being remarkable for the Town's holding out so long remarkable for the lowns holding out to long by means thereof, against the utmost Efforts of Ca-far's Army. The Opinion of those is to be re-jected as ridiculous, who take it for Cadenac. See

The Ancient Names of some Cities and Places in Spain, with the Modern Names thereof.

A Nas fl. Gnadiana. Aftures, Afturia. Bætica, El reyno de Granata. Batis fl. Guadalchibir. Baleares, major, & minor. Barcinon, Barcelona. Cæfarea Augusta, Saragofa. Caftilon, Caftiglia. Calpe, Gibralter. Cinga fl. Ringa. Cartheia, Tariffa. Corduba, Cordova. Carpentani montes, I monti de Segovia. Calleci. Gallecia. Derthofa, Tortofa. Durias fl. El Duoro. Emporia, Emporius. Ebufus, Eviza. Girunda, Girona.

Sec. 2004 2

Hiberus fl. Hibero. Hispalis, Sibilia. Malaca, Malaca. Numantia, Sora, Nérium promontorium, S. Maria de finibus terra: Ofcenfes, Ofca. Olifippo, Lisbona, Ophiufa, Frumentara Pompeiopolis, Pampeluna en Navarra, Rhoda, Rofes, Saguntum, Mon vedro. Sicoris, fl. El Segro. Setebum, Saiva. Sacrum promontorium, Cape S. Vincentio. Tartaco, Arragon. Tagus fl. El Tago.
Turdetani, Andahdia. Valentia, Valenza, Rections on Geveral Parts of Husbandry. In Six Books.

By the famous Monfieur De La Quinting, chief Director of all the Gardens of the French King. To which is added, his Treatife of Orange Trees, with the rai-fing of Melons, omitted in the French Editions. Made English by John Evelyn Esquire, illustrated with Copper

The Fables of Asop, and other Mythologists; with Morals and Reflections. By Sir. Roger L'Estrange.

Cabala, five Scrinia Sacra: Mysteries of State and Government, in Letters of Illuffrious Persons, and Great Ministers of State, as well Foreign as Domestick, in the Reigns of King Henry VIII. Queen Elizabeth, King James, and King Charles. Wherein Juch Secrets of Empire, and Publick Affairs, as were then in Agitation, are clearly reprefented; and many remarkable Paffages faithfully collected. To which is added, in this Third Edition, A Second Part, confifting of a choice Collection of Original Letters and Negotiations, never before Published. With Two exact Tables to each Part; the One of the Letters, and the other of the most Remarkable Occurrences.

Essays of Michael Signieur de Montaigne: With Mar-ginal Notes, and Quotations of the cited Authors. Made English by Charles Cotton Efg;

The History of Scotland, from the Year 1423, until the Year 1542. containing the Lives and Beigns of James I, II, III, IV, and V. With several Memorials James 1, 11, 111, 117, and v. WITH IEVERSI INFERDISES of State, during the Reigns of James VI. and Chatle.
1 By William Drummad. With a Prefacory Introduction, taken out of the Records of that Nation: By Mr. Hall of Gray's Inn. The Second Edition.

An Introduction to the History of all the Principal Kingdoms and States in Europe. Written Originally in High Durch by S. Puffendorff, Counsellour and Historicgrapher to the King of Sweden, and Duke of Brandenburgh. Now compared with the Latin and French Editions: And from all faithfully made English. With the Addition of Chronological and other Notes in the Mar-

Anglia Notitia : Or, The Present State of England: With divers Remarks upon the ancient State thereof. By Edward Chamberlayne, Doctor of Laws. The Eighteenth Edition, with great Additions and Improvements. In Three Parts.

The Roman Hiftory, from the building of the City,

H E Complest Gardner: Or, Directions for Cultivating and right Ordering of Fruit-Gardens and Kitchen-Gardens: With divers Reason and Kitchen-Gardens: With divers Reason and Kitchen-Gardens and Kitchen-Garde

The Life of the Famous Cardinal-Duke de Richlieu. Principal Minister of State to Lewis XIII. In Two

The Present State of Persia: With a faithful Account of the Manners, Religion, and Government of that People. By Monfieur Sanfon, A Miffionary from the French King. Adorn'd with Figures. Done into

The Present State of the Empire of Morocco; wherein the Situation of the Country, the Manners, Cu-floms, Government, Religion, and Politicks of that People are fully described. By Monsieur De St. Olon, the French King's Ambassador at the Court of Morocco. To which is added, Audiences given by the Emperour, with the Answers. Adorn'd with Sculp-

An Introduction to the History of the Chief Kingdoms and States of Europe. Written Originally in High Dutch, by Samuel Puffendorph, Councellor and Historiographer to the King of Sweden and Duke of Brandenburgh. Afterwards translated into Latin; from thence into French; and now compared with all, and made English.

Kalendarium Hortense: Or, the Gard'ner's Almanack. directing what he is to do monthly throughout the Year. And what Fruits and Flowers are in Prime. To which is now added in this Eighth Edition, a new Conservatory, or Green-House. With many other useful Additions. By John Evelyn Esq. Fellow of the

The Fifteen Comforts of Rash and Inconsiderate Marriage: Or, Select Animadversions upon the Mic-carriages of a Wedded State. Done out of French. The Fourth Edition, with the Addition of Three Moral Maxims and Reflections. In Four Parts. Written in French by the Duke of Rochefoucault, Now made English.

Arcana Aulica: Or, Walfingham's Manual of Prudential Maxims for the States-Man and Courtier. To which is added, Fragmenta Regalia : Or, Observations on Queen Elizabeth, herTimes, and Favourires. By

The Summ of the First Book of Cafar's Commentaries; with Observations upon the same, discovering the excellency of Cæsar's Militia.

The Argument.

TN this First Book are contained the specialities of two great Wars, begun and ended both in a Summer: The first, between Casar and the Helvetii: The second between him and Ariovistus King of the Germans. The History of the Helvetians may be reduced to three principal Heads: Under the first, are the reasons that moved the Helvetians to entertain so desperate an Expedition, and the Preparation which they made for the same. The second containeth their Deseat by Casar: And the third, their return into their Country. That of Ariovistus divideth it self into two Parts: The first giveth the Causes that induced Casar to undertake that War: The second intreateth of the War it felf, and particularly describeth Ariovistus's Overthrow.

tive Seat, and propound to themselves larger Territories in the Continent of Gallia. Orge-torix feedeth this Humour, for his own ad-

ALLIA is all divided into three Parts; whereof the Belges do Inhabit one, the Aquitanes another, and those which they call Celtes, and we Galls a third: All these do differ each from others in Manners, Language, and in Laws. The River Garun doth separate the Galls from the Aquitanes, and Marne and Seine do bound them from the Belges. Of these the Belges are most Warlike; as furthest off the civility and politure of the Province, and less fre-quented with Merchants, or acquainted with such things as are by them imported to effeminate Mens Minds; as likewise being sited next to the Ger-Minal; as the wife period fixed next to two Gen-mans beyond the Rhine, with whom they have con-tinual Wars. For which cause also the Helve-tians do excel the rest of the Galls in Deeds of Arms, being in daily Conflicts with the Germans, for defence of their own Territories, or by invading theirs. The part inhabited by the Galls, beginneth at the River Rhone, and n bounded with Garun, the Ocean, Agour Khone, ama n vounaea was Gaiun, soe Ocean, and the confines of the Belges; and reaching also the Rhine, as a Limit from the Sequans and Helvetians, it stretched Northward. The Belges take their beginning at the extreme Confines of Gallia, and Inhabit the Country which lieth along the lower part of the Rhine, trindling to the North, and to the East. Aquitania spreadeth it self between the River Garun and the Pyrenean Hills, and butteth upon the Spanish Ocean, between the West and the

C H A P. I.

Consuls, being stirred up with the desire of a Kingdom, he moved the Nobility to a Commotion; perfoading the State to go out of their Consines with their whole Power: As an easie matter for them, that exwoode Fower: As an eagle muster jou steam, was called all other in Valour and Prowels, to feize upon the Empire of all Gallia. To which he did the rather personade them, for that the Helvetians were on every fide sout up, by the Strength and Nature of the Place wherein they dwelt; on the one side, with the depth and breadth of the River Rhine, which divides their Country from the Germans; on the other fide, with the high ridge of the Hill Jura, which runnesh between them and the Sequans; and on the third part they were flanked with the Lake Lemanus, and the River Rhone, parting their Territories from our Province.

Hence it happened, that being thus straightned. they could not easily enlarge themselves, or make War upon the bordering Countries: And thereupon, being Men wholly bent to Arms and War, were much grieved, as having too little Elbow-Room for their multitude of People, and the renown they had got of their Valour; their whole Country containing but 240 Miles in length, and 180 in breadth. Spurred on with these Inducements, and moved specially with the Authority of Orgetorix, they resolved to make Provision of such things as were requisite for their Expedition, bought great numbers of Carrs and Horses, for Carriages; Sowed much Tillage, that they might for Carriages; Jowed much Tillage, that they might have plenty of Corn in their Geurne; made Peace and Amity with the confining Countries. For the vicinis poperfecting and fupply of which things, they took Two list up as in Fears to be fufficient; and in the third, enalted we vicinos their fetting forward by a follown Law, affigning O1- would getorik to give order for that which remained.

The First OBSERVATION.

Amongst the Helvetians, Orgetorix did far exceed all others, both for Noble Descent and store of Helvetians, by the transfinigrations and stirtings of other Nations, shall find some unexamines of the Nations, shall find some unexamines of the state of the Nations.

Observations upon CESAR's

pled Particularities in the course of their proceed- own direction, thought it nothing without the ing: For, first it hath never been heard, that any Marks and Title of Dignity, unto which the in-People utterly abandoned that Country which Nature or Providence had allotted them, unless they were driven thereunto by a general Calamity, as the Infection of the Air, the Cruelty and Oppreffion of a Neighbour Nation, as were the Suevians, who thought it great Honour to fuffer no Man to border upon their Cohfines; or fome other univerfal, which made the place Inhabitable, and the People willing to undertake a voluntary Exile. But oftentimes we read, that when the Inhabitants of a Country were so multiplied, that the place was over-charged with multitudes of off-fpring, and like a poor Father, had more Children than it was able to fuftain, the abounding furplus was fent out to feek new Fortunes in Foreign Coun- torix, as the fitteft means to attempt an Innovatrics, and to possess themselves of a Resting-seat, which might recompence the wants of their Native Country, with a plenteous Revenue of necesfary Supplements. And in this fort we read that Rome fent out many Colonies into divers parts of her Empire. And in this manner the ancient Galls disburthened themselves of their superfluity, and fent them into Afia. The Gothes came from the Islands of the Baltick-Sea, and in Sulla's Time fwarmed over Germany: Befides many other. Nations, whose transmigrations are particularly described by Lazius. But amongst all these, we find none that so forsook their Country, but there Discontent will be thrown; and the remained some behind to Inhabit the same; from it hard to effect what he intendeth. whence, as from a Fountain, fucceeding Ages might derive the stream of that over-flowing multitude, and by them take notice of the Causes. which moved them unto it. For their manner was in all fuch Expeditions, and fending out of Colonies, to divide themselves into two or three Parts, equal both in equality and number: For after they had parted their common People into even Companies, they divided their Nobility with as great equality as they could, among the former Partitions: And then cafting Lots, that part which went out to feek new Adventures, left their Lands and Possessions to the rest that remained at home; and fo by Industry they supplied that defect which continuance of Time had drawn upon them. And this was the means which the first Inhabitants of the Earth found out after the Flood, to People the uninhabited Places, and to keep off the Inconveniences of Scarcity and Famine.

The Second OBSERVATION.

HE that would prognosticate by the course of these several Proceedings, whether of the two betokened better Success, hath greater reason to foretel happiness to these which I last spake of, then to the Helvetians; unless their Valour were the greater, and quitted all difficulties which hatred and envy would caft upon them: For an always understood in sending out a Colony) hath a more plaufible Pasport amongst Men, than that which proceedeth from a proud voluntary motion. For, as Men can be content to tolerate the one, if it concern not their particular; so on the other fide, they count it gain to punish Pride with Shame, and to oppose themselves against the other.

The Third OBSERVATION.

O^{Rgetorix}, thirsting after Princely Dignity, discovereth the humour of Vain-glory. For, not contented with the substance of Honour, being already of greatest Power amongst the Helveing already of greatest Power amongst the Helve-sians, and ordering the Affairs of the State by his force of Arms, and to that end scould raise the Coun-conveniences of Majesty are annexed: Not confidering that the best Honour fitteth not always in Imperial Thrones, nor weareth the Diadems of Princes : but oftentimes refteth it felf in meaner Places, and shineth better with obscurer Titles.

For proof whereof, to omit Antiquity, take the Family of the Medices in Florence, and particularly Cofimo and Lorenzo, whose vertue raised them to that height of Honour, that they were nothing Inferiour to the greatest Potentates of their Time, being themselves but private Gentlemen in that State, and bearing their proper Names as their greatest Titles. But how/loever, the opportunity of changing their Soil was well observed by Orgetion: but the fuccess depended much upon the fortunate proceeding of their Expedition.

For, as a multirude of that nature can be content to attribute a great part of their happines, wherein every Man thinketh himself particularly interessed, to an eminent Leader; and in that univerfal extafie of Joy, will eafily admit an alteration of their State: fo, if the iffue be in any respect unfortunate, no Man will acknowledge himfelf Faulty, but every one defiring to discharge his Passion upon some Object, a chief director is likelieft to be the Mark, at which the Darts of their Discontent will be thrown; and then he will find

CHAP. II.

Orgetorix's Practices are discovered : His Death. The Helvetians continue the resolution of their Expedition, and prepare themselves accor-

Rgetorix thereupon undertook Imployment Caelar. to the adjoyning States; and first per-Swaded Casticus, the Son of Catamanta- . lides a Sequan (whose Father had for many Years Reigned in that place, and was by the Senate and People of Rome filled with the Title of a Friend) to poffefs himfelf with the Signiory of that State which his Father formerly enjoyed; and in like manner dealt with Dumnorix the Heduan, Diviriacus's Brother (who at that time was the only Man of that Province, and very well beloved of the Commons) to endeavour the like there; and withal, gave him his Daughter in Marriage; skewing them by lively reafons, that it was an easie matter to effect their Designs; for that he being sure of the soveraignty of his State, there was no doubt but the Helvetians would do much throughout all Gallia, and fo made no question to settle them in those Kingdoms, action which favoureth of Necessity (which was with his Power and Forces. Drawn on with these Inducements, they gave Faith and Oath each to other, hoping with the support of the soveraignty of three mighty Nations, to possess themselves of all

This thing being discovered, the Helvetians (according to their Customs) caused Orgetorix to anfwer the matter in durance : whose Punishment upon the Attaint, was to be burned alive. Against the day of Tryal, Orgetorix had got together all his Family, to the number of Ten Thouland Men, befides divers Followers, and others far indebted, which were many; by whose means he escaped a judicial hearing. The People thereupon being much incenfed, try: But in the mean time Orgetorix was found dead, not without suspicion (as was conceived) that he himself was guilty thereof.

Notwithstanding his Death, the Helvetians did Casar denieth the Helvetians Passage through the pursue their former design of leaving their Country:

Roman Province: He Forrises the Passage through the Roman Province: He Forrises the Passage through the Passage throu And when they thought themselves ready prepared, they set Fire on all their Towns (which were in number Twelve) together with four hundred Villages, besides private Houses, and burnt likewise all the Corn, fave that they carried with them; that all hope of return being taken away, they might be the readier to undergo all hazards: And commanded that every Man should carry so much Meal with him as would ferve for three Months.

ferve for three Months.

Moreover also they personated the Rauraci, the Tulingi, and Lacobrigi, their Neighbour Borderers, that putting on the same Resolution, they would set

Fire on all their Habitations, and go along with them.
And likewise rook unto them the Boii, which had dwelt beyond the Rhine, but were now seated in the Territories of the Notici, and had taken the Capital Town of that Country. There were only two ways which gave them Passage out of their Country; the one through the Sequans, very narrow and difficult, ome inough we sequans, very narrow and aifficus, between the Hill Jura, and the River Rhone, by which a fingle Cart could [carce pa]s; and had a high Hill hanging over, that a small Force might easily hinder them. The other was through our Province, far easier and readier; forasmuch as the River Rhone, running between the Helyetians and the *Savoyards. * Allobroges (who were lately brought in obedience to the People of Rome) did give passage in divers places by Fords.

The utmost Town belonging to the Allobroges, that bordereth upon the Helvetians is Geneva; whereunto adjorneth a Bridge leading to the Helve-tians; who doubted not but to perswade the Allobroges (that seemed as yet to carry no great affection to the People of Rome) or at least to force them to give them passage. Things being now ready for their Journey, they assigned a day when all should meet together upon the Banks of Rhone: which day was the first of the Calends of April, in the Consul-ship of Lu. Piso, and A. Gabinius.

OBSERVATION.

The emission in the Helve-tian Expedi. A S these Proviso's were all requisite; so one tian Expedi. thered their good Fortune more than any thing thought of: which was, to have concealed by all means the time of their departure. For all the Beafts of the Wood must needs stand at gaze, when fuch Lyons rouzed themselves out of their Dens; and be then very watchful of their fafety, when they knew the inftant of Time, when fome of their Spoils must needs be offered to appeale their Fury. Or at the least it behoved them so to have dealt by Hostages and Treaty, that such as were likelieft and best able to cross their Designments might have been no hindrance of their Proceedings: Confidering there were but two ways out of their Country by which they might go; The one narrow and difficult, between the Hill Jura and the River Rhone, by the Country of the Sequani; the other through Provence, far easier and shorter, but not to be taken but by the permission of the Romans. But howsoever, their Error was, that after two Years Provision to go, and having made an exterminating Decree, which enjoyned them to go, when they came to the point, they knew not what way to go.

CHAP. III.

Roman Province: He Fortifieth the Paffage between the Hill Jura, and the Lake of Geneva.

S soon as Cælar was advertised that their purpose was to pass through our Privince, he hasted to leave the * City, and posting by great Journeys into the further Gallia, he came to Geneva. And inrolling great Forces throughout all the Province, for that there was but one Legion in those Parts, he brake down the Bridge at

The Helvetians having intelligence of Cælat's arrival, sent divers of the best of their Nobility Em-bassadors unto him, whereof Numeius and Verdoctius were the Chief, to give him notice, that they had a purpose to pass peaceably through the Province, having no other way to go : and therein to pray his fufferance and permission.

Cæsar, well remembring how Lu. Cassins the Cousul was slain, his Army beaten, and the Soldiers put under the Yoke, did not hold it convenient to grant their Request. Neither did he think that Men fo ill-affected could forbear to offer Wiengs and Insclencies, if leave were given them as were required. Howbeit, for the better gaining of Time, and getting such Forces together as were caused to be Inrolled, he answered the Commissioners that he would take a time of Deliberation; and to that end willed them to return again by the Ides of April. And, in the mean time, with that Legion he had ready, and the Soldiers that came out of the Province, he made a Ditch, and a Wall of sixteen Foot in height, from the Lake Lemanus, which runneth into the Rhone; to the Hill Jura, that divideth the Sequans from the Helvetians, being in length nineteen Miles; and disposed Garisons and Fortresses along the Work, the better to impeach them, if happily they went about to break out by Force.

break, out by Force.

It the day appointed, when the Embassadors returned for a Resolution, he utterly denied to give any leave to pust through the Province; having neither Custom nor President from the People of Rome to warrant him in that kind. And if they should endeavour it by Force of Arms, he would oppugn them.

The First OBSERVATION.

THis manner of prolonging of time to reinforce the Troops, or get fome other advantage, as it was then of great use to Cassar, and hath oftentimes been practifed to good purpole; so doth it discover to a circumspect Enemy, by the directions in the mean time (which cannot easily be shadowed) the drift of that delay, and fo inviteth him with greater Courage to take the opportunity of that present Advantage; especially if tract of Time may ftrengthen the one, and not further the other; which is eafily discerned by the circumstances of the

The Second OBSERVATION:

THe Request of the Helverians seemed to deserve a facile Answer; being in effect no more than Nature had given to the River Rhone: which was to pass through the Province, with as much speed and as little hurt as they could. But Casar looking further into the matter, and comparing things already past with Occurrences that were to follow after, found the Majesty of the Roman Empire to be interessed in the answer; being either to maintain her Greatness by resisting her Enemies, or to degenerate generate from ancient Vertue by gratifying such Camps near about Aquileia: And with these five Leas sought her Ruine: Which in matter of State gions went the next way over the Alps into the furknew it to be an unsafe course to suffer an Enemy to have means of doing hurt; confidering that the nature of Man is always prone to load him with further wrongs whom he had once injured: Not but that he could peradventure be content to end the Quarrel upon that advantage; but fearing the other whom he wronged, to expect but an opportunity of Revenge, he gets what advantage he can a bloody end to an injurious beginning

The Third OBSERVATION.

Oncerning this marvellous Fortification between the Hill and the Lake, how serviceable fuch works were unto him in all his Wars, in what fort, and in how fmall a time they were made; I will deferr the Treatife of them until I come to the height of Alefia, where he gave some ground of that hyperbolical Speech, An me deleto, non animadvertebatis decem habere lectas quidem legiones populum Romanum, que non solum vobis obsistere, sed esiam calum diruere possent?

CHAP. IV.

The Helvetians failing to pass the Rhone, take the way through the Country of the Sequani. Cafar hafteth into Italy, and there Inrolleth more Legions: And returning, overthroweth part of them at the River Arar.

HE Helverians frustrated of their former hope, went about, some with Boats coupled together, others with Flats (whereof they made great store) the rest by Fords and Places where the River was shallow, sometimes in the Day, and oftentimes in the Night to break out: But being beaten back by the help of the Fortification, and the concourse of Soldiers, and multitude of Weapons, they desisted from that attempt.

There was only another way left through the Sequans, which they could not take by reason of the narrowness thereof, but by the favour of the Country. And for almuch as of themselves they were able to prevail little therein, they fent Meffengers to Dumnotix the Heduan, that by his mediation they might obtain so much of the Sequans. Dumnorix, what through favour and bounteous Carriage, was of great Power in his Country, much affecting the Helvetians by reason of his Marriage with Orgetorix's Daughter : and drawn on with a defire of a Kingdom, gave his Mind to new Projects; labouring to gratifie many States, to tie them the rather to favour his courses. And thereupon undertaking the business, got the Sequans to give the Helvetians leave to pass through their Confines; giving each other Pledges, that the Sequans should not interrupt the Helvetians in their Journey, nor they offer any injury to the Country.

It was told Cæfar that the Helvetians were determined to pass through the Territories of the Sequans and Heduans, on the confines of the Santons, who are not far from the borders of the Tholosans, a People of the Province; which if they did, he fore-faw how dangerous it would be to have a Warlike Na-tion, and fuch as were Enemies to the People of Rome to come so near them, and to have the advantage of an open and plenteous Country.

For which causes he left T. Labienus a Legate to command those Works, and he himself made great Journeys to get into Italy; where he Involled two are things of great confequence. And further, he ther Gallia. Where, by the way, the Centrons, Garoceli, and Caturiges taking advantage of the open Ground, did seek to keep the Army from passage: But being beaten and put off by many Skirmilhes. they came in seven days from Ocellum, a Town in the furthest Parts of the nearer Province, into the Confines of the Vocontii, a People of the further Province : From whence he led them into the Territories of the Allobroges, and fo unto the Sabufians, that beforehand, and so ceaseth not until he have added are the first beyond the Rhone, bordering upon the

By that time the Helvetians had carried their Forces through the Streights and Frontiers of the Sequans, into the Dominions of the Heduans, and egan to Forage and Pillage their Country. Who finding themselves unable to make Resistance, sent Messengers to Cæsar to require Aid; shewing their deferts to be fuch from time to time of the People of Rome, that might challenge a greater respect than to have their Country spoiled, their Children led into Captivity, their Towns Affaulted and Taken, as it were in the fight of the Roman Army. At the same instant likewise the Ambarri, that had dependency and alliance with the Heduans, advised Cafar that their Country was utterly wasted, and they scarce able to keep the Enemy from entring their Towns. In like manner also the Allobroges that had Farms and Possessions beyond the Rhone, fled directly to Cafar. complaining that there was nothing left them but the Soil of their Country.

With which advertisements Casar was so moved that he thought it not convenient to linger further, or expect until the Fortunes of their Allies were all wasted, and that the Helvetians were come unto the Santones. The River * Arar, that runneth through Sounce the confines of the Heduans and Sequans into the Rhone, paffeth away with fuch a stillness, that by view of the Eye it can hardly be discerned which way the Water taketh. This River did the Helvetians pass over by Flotes and Bridges of Boats. When Cæfar was advertised by his Discoverers that three parts of was advertised by BB Liscoveress some some pairs of their Forces were already pass the Water, and that the south was lest behind on this side the River; About the third Watch of the Night he went out of the Camp with three Legions, and surprising that part which was not as yet got over the River, flew a great part of them: The rest sted into the next Woods.

This part was the Tigurine Canton: And the Zurick. Helvetians being all parted into four divisions, this Canton alone in the Memory of our Fathers flew L. Caffius the Conful, and put his Army under the Yoke. So whether it were by chance, or the Providence of the Gods, that part of the Helvetian State which gave so great a Blow to the Roman People, was the first that did Penance for the same. Wherein Cxfar took Revenge not only of the Publick, but of his particular Loss too; for a finuch as the Tigurines had in that Battel with Cassius slain L. Pifo. the Grandfather of L. Piso, his Father-in-law.

The First OBSERVATION.

This Defeat being chiefly a fervice of execution upon fuch as were taken at a dangerous difadvantage, which Men call unaware, containeth these two Advisoes. First, Not to neglect that advantage which Sertorius by the Hairs of his Horse-Tail hath proved to be very Important; that beginning with a part, it is a matter of no difficulty to overcome the whole. Secondly, It may ferve for a Caveat, fo to transport an Army over a Water, where the Enemy is within a rea-Legions, and took three more out of their Wintering sonable March, that no part may be so severed from the Body of the Army, that advantage may thereby be taken to cut them off altogether, and separate them from themselves. The fafest and most Honourable way to transport an Army over a River, is by a Bridge, placing at each end fur-ficient Troops of Horfe and Foot, to defend the Army from fuddain Affaults as they pass over the Water. And thus went Cafar over the Rhine into Germany two feveral times.

Lib. I.

COMMENTARIES.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the circumstance of Time, when Cafar went out of his Camp, which is noted to be in the third Watch, we must understand that the Romans divided the whole Night into four Watches, every Watch containing three hours: And these Watches were distinguished by several Notes and Sounds of Cornets or Trumpets; that by the diffinction and diversity thereof it might eafily be known what Watch was founded. The charge and office of founding the Warches belonged to the chiefest Centurion of a Legion, whom they called Primipilus, or Primus Centurio; at whose Pavilion the Trumpeters attended, to be directed by his Hour-Glass. The first Watch began always at Sun-setting, and continued three hours (I understand such hours as the Night contained, being divided into Twelve: For the Romans divided their Night as well as their Day into twelve equal spaces, which they called hours:) The second Watch continued until Midnight; and then the third Watch began, and contained likewise three hours: The fourth was equal to the reft, and continued until Sunrifing. So that byt his Phrase de tertia vigilia, we understand that Cafar went out of his Camp in the third Watch, which was after Midnight: And fe we must conceive of the rest of the Watches, as often as we shall find them mentioned in Hiftory.

CHAP. V.

Cafar paffeth over the River Arar: His Horsemen Encounter with the Helvetians, and are much Fter this Overthrow he caused a Bridge to be made over the River Arar, and carried over his Army to purfue the rest of the Helvetian Forces. The Helvetians much daunted at his fuddain coming, that had got over the Ri-ver in one day, which they could fearce do in twenty, fent Embassadors unto him, of whom Divico was Chief, that Commanded the Helvetians in the War against Cassius: Who dealt with Casar to this effect; That if the People of Rome would make Peace with the Helvetians, they would go into any part which Cæsar should appoint them: But if otherwise he would prosecute War, that he should remember the Overthrow which the People of Rome received by their Valour; and not to attribute it to their own Worth, that they had surprized at unawares a part of their Army, when such as had passed the River could not come to succour them. They had learned of their Forefathers, to contend rather by Valour, than by Craft and Devices; and therefore let him beware that the place wherein they now were did not get a Name, or carry the Mark to all future Ages of an eminent Calamity to the People of Rome, and of the utter destruction of his Army.

To this Cæsar answered; That he made the less doubt of the Success of these businesses, in that he well remembred, and knew those things which the

Helvetian Commissioners bad related: And was so much the rather grieved thereat, because it happened without any cause or desert of the People of Rome; who, if he were guilty of any wrong done unto them, it were a matter of no difficulty to beware of their Pra-Etices: but therein was his Error, that he could think of nothing which he had committed, that might cause him to fear; neither could be fear without occasion. And if he would let pass former Insolencies, could be forget those late and fresh Injuries? for, that they had attempted to pass through the Province by force of Arms, facked and pillaged the Heduans, Ambars, and Allobrogians that did so insolently vaunt of their Victory, admiring that thefe Injuries were Suffered so long time to rest unrevenged, came all in the end to one pass. For the Immortal Gods were wont sometimes to give happiness and long Impunity to Men, that by the greater alteration of things, the Punishment should be the more grievous for their Offences. Howbeit if they would give Hostages for the Performance of those things which were to be agreed upon, and satisfie the Heduans and Allobrogians, together with their Allies, for the Injuries they had done unto them, he would be content to make Peace

Divico replied, That they were taught by their Ancestors to take Hostages rather than to give them, whereof the People of Rome were Witneffes : And thereupon departed. The next day they removed the Camp, and the like did Casar, sending all his Horse before, to the number of Four Thoufand (which he had raised in the Province, and drawn from the Heduans and their Affociates) to understand which way the Enemy took; who, profecuting the Rereward overhotly, were forced to undertake the Helvetian Cavalry in a place of disadvantage; and thereby lest some few of their Company.

The Enemy made Proud with that Encounter, having with Five Hundred Horse beaten so great a multitude, did afterwards make head with more affurance; and sometimes stuck not to fally out of the Rereward and affault our Party. Casar kept back his Men from Fighting; and held it enough for the present, to keep the Enemy from spoiling and harrying the Country : And went on for fifteen days together in such manner, as there were but five or six Miles between the first Troops of our Army, and the Rereward of theirs.

"His example of the Helvetians may leffen a Commander, not to wax infolent upon every Overthrow which the Fnemy taketh, but duly to weigh the true causes of a Victory gotten, or an Overthrow taken; that apprehending the right current of the Action, he may neither vaunt of a blind Victory, nor be dismayed at a casual

OBSERVATION.

And herein let a heedful wariness so moderate the sequels of Victory in a triumphing Spirit, that the care and jealousie to keep still that sweet-sounding fame on foot, may as far furpals the Industry which he first used to obtain it, as the continuance of happiness doth exceed the beginning of good Fortunes. For fuch is the nature of our Soul, that although from her Infancy, even to the Manhood of her Age, the never found want of that which the lufted after; yet when the meeterh with a counterbuffe to check her Appetite, and restrain her Affections from their satisfaction, she is as much troubled in that want, as if she had never received any Contentment at all: For our Will to every object which it feeketh after, begetteth always a new Appetite, which is not fatisfied with a former quittance, but either seeketh present Payment, or returneth discontentment un- beral: For a great number of Horsemen did only live to the Mind.

And as our Soul is of an everlafting Being, and cannot think of an end to her beginning; so she seeketh a perpetual continuance of such things as the lufteth after: Which he that meaneth to hold Fortune his Friend, will endeavour to maintain.

CHAP. VI.

Cafar fendeth to get the advantage of a Hill, and fo to give the Helvetians Battel: But is put off by false Intelligence. The opportunity being lost he intendeth Provision of Corn.

N the mean time Cæfar pressed the Heduans from day to day to bring in Corn, according to their promise: For by reason of the cold Temperature of Gallia, which lieth to the Northward, it happened not only that the Corn was far from being ripe, but also that there was scarce Forrage for the horses. And the Provisions which were brought along the River Arar stood him in small stead at that time, forasmuch as the Helvetians had taken their Fourney clean from the River, and he would by no means forfake

The Heduans putting it off from one day to another, found the matter so long delayed, and that the day of meting out Corn to the Souldiers was at hand, calling before him the chiefest Princes of the Heduans, of whom he had great numbers in his Camp, and a-mongst them Divitiacus and Liscus, who for that time were the fovereign Magistrates (which they call Vergobret, being yearly created, and having power of life and death) he did greatly blame them, that he was not supplied with Corn from them, the Enemy being so near, and in so needful a time, that it could neither be bought for money, nor had out of the fields: Especially when for their sake, and at their request he specially when you reed you are such as the rather grieved, because he found himself forsaken of them.

At length Liscus, moved with Carlars Speech, dif-

covered (which before he had kept secret) that there were some of great Authority amongst the Commons, that could do more being private persons, than they could do being Magistrates. These by seditious and bad Speeches, did deferr the people from bringing Corn: shewing it better for them, since they could not attain to the Empire of Gallia, to undergo the Sovereignty of the Galls, than the Romans : For they were not to doubt but if the Romans vanquished the Helvetians, they would bereave the Heduans of their liberty, with the rest of all Gallia. By these men are our deliberations and counsels, or whatsoever else is done in the them from him fo long.

Cæfar perceived that Dumnorix (Divitiacus Brother) was shot at by this Speech of Liscus : but forasmuch as he would not have those things handled in the presence of so many, he speedily brake off the Council, and retaining Liscus, asked privately after those things which he had delivered in the Assembly; whereunto he spake more freely and boldly than before. And enquiring secretly of others, he found it to be true, that Dumnorix was of great Courage and fingularly favoured for his Liberality of the Common People, defirous of Novelties and Changes, and for many years had kept at a low rate the Taxes and Impositions of the Heduans, forasmuch as no man durst contradict what pon his Entertainment, and were continually about him, being not only powerful at home, but abroad also amongst divers of the neighbour States; and for this cause had married his Mother to a great rich Man, and of a noble House, in the Country of the Bituriges, bimself had took a wife of the Helverians, bad matched his Sister by his Mother, and others of his Kin, into other States. For that Affinity he favoured and wished well to the Helvetians: and on the other side hated the Romans, and specially Cæsar of all others; for that by their coming into Gallia his power was weakened and Divitiacus his Brother restored to his ancient Honour and Dignity. If any miscasualty happened to the Romans, his hope was to obtain the Principality by the favour of the Helvetians: whereas the Sovereignty of the Romans made him not only despair of the Kingdom, but also of the Favour, or what other thing soever he now enjoyed. And Cafar had found out by inquiry, that the beginning of the Flight, when the Cavalry was routed, came from Dumporix and his Horsemen; for he commanded those Troops which the Heduans had fent to aid Cæsar; and out of that disorder the rest of the Cavalry took a fright

Which things being discovered, for a smuch as these suspicions were seconded with matters of certainty, in that he had brought the Helvetians through the Confines of the Sequans. had caused Hostages to be given on either side, and done all those things not only without warrant from the State, but without acquainting them therewith, and lastly, in that he was accused by the Magistrate of the Heduans, he thought it cause sufficient for him to punish him, or to command the State to do Justice upon him. One thing there was which might seem to oppugn all this; the singular Affection of Divitiacus his Brother to the People of Rome; the great love he bare particularly to Cæsar, his Loyalty, Justice and Temperance; and therefore he feared least his Punishment might any way alienate or offend Divitiacus sincere Affection. And therefore before he did any thing, he called Divitiacus, and putting afide the ordinary Interpreters, he spake to him by M. Valerius Procillus, one of the principal Men of the Province of Gallia, his familiar Friend, and whom he specially trusted in matters of importance, and took notice what Dumnotrix had uttered in his presence, at a Council of the Galls, showing also what informations he had privately received concerning him: and therefore by way of advice defired, that without any offence to him. either he himself might call him in question, or the State take some course in the same. Divitiacus embracing Cæfar with many tears, be-Sought him not to take any Severe Course with his Brother; he knew well that all those things were true, neither was there any Man more grieved thereat than himself. For whereas he had Credit and Reputation, Camp, made known to the Enemy. That they were both at home and amongst other States of Gallia, and not able to keep them in obedience. That he knew well his Brother being of finall Power by reason of his withall what danger he fell into by acquainting Casiar Youth, was by his Aid and Assistance grown into Faweith these from him so lone. vantage not only to weaken his Authority, but to bring him to Ruine : And yet nevertheless he found himself overruled through brotherly Affection, and the opinion of the Common People. And if Cæsar should take any strict Account of these Offences, there was no man but would think it was done with his Privity, confidering the place he held in his Favour; whereupon would consequently follow on his behalf, a general alienation and distast of all Gallia.

As he uttered these things, with many other words accompanied with Tears, Cæfar taking his Righthand, comforted him, and defired him to entreat no further: For such was the respect he had unto him, that for his sake, and at his request he forgave both he would have done. By which courses he had increa- the Injury done to the Common-wealth, and the Difsed his private Estate, and got great Means to be li- pleasure which he had justly conceived for the same.

And thereupon ealted Dummorix before him, and in place by a natural Inclination did further their the presence of his Brother steward him wherein he had course. deserved much blame and reproof; told him what he had understood, and what the State complained on : advised him to avoid all occasions of mislike for the future; that which was past he had forgiven him, at Divitiacus his Brothers Entreaty. Howbeit he set Espials upon him, to observe his courses, that he might be informed what he did, and with whom he con-

The same day, understanding by the Discoverers that the Enemy was lodged under a Hill, about eight Miles from his Camp, he fent some to take a view of the Hill, and of the Ascent from about the same. Which was found, and accordingly reported unto him to be very easie. In the third Watch of the Night he fent away T. Labienus the Legat with two Legions, and those Guides that knew the way; commanding him to posses himself of the top of that Hill. Himself, about the fourth Watch, marched on after the Enemy, the same way they had gone, sending all his

P. Causidius, that was held for a great Souldier first in the Army of L. Sylla, and afterwards with M. Craffus, was fent before with the Discoverers. At the breaking of the day, when Labienus had got the top of the Hill, and himself was come within a Mile and half of the Helvetian Camp, without any notice to the Enemy either of his or Labienus's Approach it is.
(as was afterwards found by the Captives) Caufidius came running as fast as his Horfe could drive and told bim that the Hill which Labienus should have taken, was sheld by the Galls; which he perceived plainly by the Armes and Ensigns of the Helvetians. Whereupon Cæsar drew his Forces to the next Hill and embattelled the Army.

Labienus (according to the directions he had from Cæsar, not to sight, unless he saw his Forces near the Enemies Camp, that they might both at the same time affault them from divers Parts at once) when he had took the Hill, kept his Men from Battel, expecting our Army.

At length when it was far in the day, Cæsar understood by the Discoverers that the Hill was possessed by his Party; as also that the Enemy was distoded, and that Causidius was so astonished with fear, that he rereported to have feen that which he faw not. The Same day he followed the Enemy at the distance he had formerly used, and encamped himself three Miles from them. The day following, for a fruch as the Army was to be paid in Corn within two days next after, and that he was but eighteen Miles distant from Bibract, a great and opulent City of the Heduans, he turned aside from the Helvetians, and made towards Bibract.

The First OBSERVATION.

Plate of ad-wanage in the The getting of this Hill as a place of advantage, was marvellous important to the happy fuccels of the Battel: for the advantage of the place is not only noted as an especial cause of easie Victory throughout this Hiftory, but in all their Wars, from the very Cradle of their Empire, it cleared their Armies from all difficulties, to what extremities foever they were put. The first reason may be in regard of their Darts and Slings, and especially their Piles; which being a heavy deadly Weapon, could not any way be so available being cast countermount, or in a plain level, as when the declivity and downfal of a fwelling Bank did naturally fecond their violent impression. Neither can the shock at handy-blows be any thing so furious (which was a point of great respect in their Battels) when the Soldiers fpent their Strength in franchi-

And to conclude, if the Battel succeeded not according to their defire, the favour of the place afforded them means of a ftrong Retreat. in the higheft part whereof they had commonly their Camps well fenced, and fortified against all Chances. If it be demanded, whether the upper Ground be of like use in regard of our Weapons; I answer, that in a Skirmish of Shot I take the advantage to lie in the lower Ground rather than on the Hill; for the Pieces being haftily charged, as commonly they are after the first Volley, if the Bullet chance to lie loofe, when the Nose of the Piece is lower than the Breech, it must needs sly at Random, and be altogether uneffectual: but when the Nose shall be raifed upward to the fide of a Hill, the Bullet being rammed in with its own Weight, shall fly with greater certainty and fury: Confidering the nature of the Powder to be fuch, that the more it is flopt and thut in, the more it feeketh to enlarge its room, and breaketh forth with greater violence

Concerning other Weapons, I take the upper Ground in the Shock and Encounter to be advantageous, as well for the Sword as the Pike, and would deserve as great respect, if the Controversie were decided by these Weapons, as seldom times

The Second OBSERVATION.

BY Caufidius his demeanour we fee that verified which Physitians affirm, that nothing will fooner carry our Judgment out of her proper Seat, than the paffion of Fear; and that amongst Souldiers themselves, whom custom hath made familiarly acquainted with Horror and Death, it is able to turn a Flock of Sheep into a Squadron of Corfelets, and a few Canes or Ofiers into Pikes and Lanciers. Which may ferve to advise a discreet General not easily to credit a Relation of that Nature, when a Man of Reputation in to perfect a difcipline, and to experienced in the fervice of three famous Chiefs, was fo furprized with Fear, that he could not differn his Friends from his Enemies. But I will speak more of this Passion in the War with Arioviftus.

The Third OBSERVATION.

N every Relation throughout the whole course their manner of this Hiftory, the first words are commonly of the duling. these, Re frumentaria comparata, as the Foundation and Strength of every Expedition, without which no Man can mannage a War according to the true Maxims and Rules of the Art Military, but must be forced to relieve that inconvenience with the loss of many other Advantages of great Consequence. Which gave occasion to Gasper de Coligni, that famous Admiral of France, amongst other Oracles of Truth wherewith his mind was marvelloufly enriched, often to use this faying, that he that will shape that Beast (meaning War) must begin with the Belly. And this Rule was diligently observed by C.cfar, who best knew how to expreis the true Portraiture of that Beaft in due proportion and lively refemblance.

The Order of the Romans was at the day of measuring, to give Corn to every particular Souldier for a certain time, which was commonly defined by Circumstances: And by the measure which was given them, they knew the day of the next Paiment; for every Footman received after the rate of a Bushel a Week, which was thought sufficient ang the Injury of a rifing Mountain, as when the for him and his Servant. For if they had payed them their whole Stipend in Money, it might have again, began to attack our Men in the Rere. Which been wasted in unnecessary Expences: But by this means they were fure of Provision for the time determined; and the Sequel of the War was pro-vidently cared for by the General.

The Corn being delivered out, was husbanded, ground with Hand-mills, which they carried al-ways with them, and made into hafty Cakes, dainthemselves and their Servants. Neither could they sell it or exchange it for Bread; for Salust reckoneth this up amongst other dishonours of the Discipline corrupted, that the Souldiers fold away their Corn which was given them by the Treasurer, and bought their bread by the day. And this manner of pro-vision had many special Commodities, which are not incident to our Cuftom of Victualling: For it is impossible that Victuallers should follow an Army upon a Service in the Enemies Country, twenty or thirty Days together, with sufficient Provision for an Army: And by that means the General cannot attend Advantages and fitteft Op-portunities, which in tract of time are often offered, but is forced either to hazard the whole upon unequal Terms, or to found an unwilling Retreat.

And whereas the Victuallers are for the most part voluntary, respecting nothing but their gain, and the Souldiers on the other side careless of the morrow, and prodigal of the present; in that turbulent Marr-market, where the Seller hath an Eye only to his particular, and the Buyer respecteth neither the publick Good nor his private Commodity, there is nothing to be looked for but Famine and Confusion. Whereas the Romans by their manner of Provision, imposed the general care of the publick Good upon the Chief Commander, whose duty it was to provide Stores of Corn for his Army; and the particular care upon every private Soldier, whom it especially concerned to see that the Allowance which the Commonweal had in plential manner given him for his Maintenance, might not be wafted through Negligence or Prodigality; Which excellent Order the nature of our Victuals will no way admit. Their Provinces, and the next Confederate States, furnished their Armies continually with Corn; as it appeareth by this place, that for Provision of Grain he depended altogether upon the Hedui: And when they were in the Enemies Country, in the time of Harvest, the Soldiers went out to Reap and gather Corn, and delivered it threshed and cleansed to the Treasurer, that it might be kept until the day of Payment.

But to leave this frugal and provident manner of Provision, as impossible to be imitated by this Age, let us return to our History, and fee how the Helvetians were led, by a probable Error, to their last overthrow,

The Helvetians follow after Cafar, and overtake the Rereward. He Embattelleth his Legions upon the fide of a Hill; and giveth order for the Battel.

Hereof the Enemy being advertised by certain Fugitives of the Troop of Horse Commanded by L. Emilius, presently, whether it were that they thought the Romans did turn away for fear, (and the rather, for that the day before, having the advantage of the upper Ground, they refused to Fight) or whether they thought to cut them off from Provision of

Cæfar perceiving drew his Forces to the next Hill, and Sent the Cavalry to Sustain the Charge of the Enemy: And in the mean time, in the midft of the Hill made a Triple Battel, of four Legions of old Soldiers; and upon the highest ridge thereof be placed the two Legions which he had lately Inrolled in the hither Gallia, together with the affociate Forces, filling the whole Front of the Hill with Men, and stowing the Carriages in one place, which he commanded to be fenced and guarded by those that were in the uppermost

The Helvetians on the other side conveyed their Carriages and Impediments into one place; and having beaten back Cæsar's Horsemen with a thick thronged Squadron, they put themselves into a Phalanx, and so pressed under the first Battel of the Roman Legions.

The First OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the true fense of this Triple Battel The menner Oncerning the true tenne of this Lippe Dealer to States which Coffer made upon the fide of the Hill, of their In I understand it according to the ancient Custom sometime, of the Romans, who, in the Infancy of their Military Discipline divided their Army into three forts of Soldiers, Hastati, Principes, and Triarii; for I omit the Velites, as no part of their standing Battels: And of these they made three several Battels, from Front to back. In the first Battel were the Hastati, and they possessed the whole Front of the Army, and were called Acies prima. Behind these, in a convenient distance, stood the Principes in like fort and order disposed, and Briples were called Acies featural. And lastly, in a like soil. correspondent distance were the Triarii Imbattelled, and made Aciem tertiam.

Their Legion confifted of Ten Companies, which they called Cohorts, and every Cohort confifted of three small Companies, which they named Manipuli: a Maniple of the Hastats, a Maniple of the Princepes, and another of the Triarii, as I will more particularly fet down in the Second Book. And as these three kinds of Soldiers were feparated by diffance of place from Front to back: fo was every Battel divided into his Maniples; and these were divided by little Allies and Ways one from another, which were used to this purpose: The Hastari, being in Front, did ever begin the Battel: And if they found themselves too weak to repel the Enemy, or were happily forced to a Retreat, they drew themselves through these Allies or Distances, which were in the second Battel, between the Maniples of the Principes, into the space which was between the Principes and the Triarii; and there they rested themselves, whilst the Princes took their Place and charged the Enemy. Or otherwife, if the Commanders found it needful, they fill'd up those distances of the Principes; and so united with them into one Body, they charged the Enemy all in gross; and then if they prevailed not, they retired into the spaces between the Triarii, and so they gave the last Assault, all the three Bodies being joyned into one.

Now, if we examine by the current of the Hi-ftory whether Casar observed the same order and division in his Wars, we shall find little or no alteration at all: For first, this triplex Acies here mentioned, was no other thing but the division of the Hastari, Principes and Triarii, according to the manner of the first Institution. And least any Man should dream of that ordinary division, which is likewise threefold, the two Cornets and the Battel, and in that sense he might say to have Corn, they altered their purpose, and turning back made triplicem Aciem, let him understand that the circumstances of the Division have no coherence with that Division: For in that he saith of the Helvetians, Successerunt sub Aciem primam, they pressed near the first Battel or Vanguard, he maketh it clear that the Army was divided into a triple Battel from the Front to the Rere: For otherwife he would have faid, Successerunt sub dextrum aut smistrum cornu, aut mediam Aciem; for so were the parts of that Division termed. Again, in the retreat which the Helvetians made to the Hill when he faith that the first and second Battel followed close upon the Enemy, and the third op-posed it self against the Boii and Tulingi, and flood ready at the foot of the Hill to charge the Legions in the Hank and in the Rere; it is manifest that no other Division can so fitly be applied to this Circumstance, as that from Front to Rere.

Lib. I.

But that place in the first of the Civil Wars taketh away all scruple of Controversie, where he useth the very same terms of prima, secunda, and theta nie vety same terms of prima, Jecunaa, and tertia Acies: For being to Encamp himself near unto Afranius, and fearing left his Soldiers should be interrupted in their Work, he caused the first and fecond Battel to stand in Arms, and keep their diffance, to the end they might shroud and cover the third Battel (which was imployed in making a Ditch behind them) from the view of the Enemy: And this kind of Imbattelling Cafar observed in most of his Fights: By which it ap-peareth that he used the very same Order and Discipline for Imbattelling, as was instituted by the old Romans.

Concerning the ancient Names of Hastati, Principes, and Triarii, which Ramus in his Milieia Julii Cafaris urgeth to be omitted throughout the whole Hiftory, I grant they are feldom used in these Commentaries in the sence of their first Inflitution: For the Hastati, when the Discipline thution: For the Haffatt, when the Dilcipline was first ercled, were the youngest, poorest of the Legionary Soldiers; and the Principes were the lufty and abbe-bodied Men; and the Triarii the eldest and best Experienced. But in Cefais Camp there was little or no difference either of Valour or Years between the Hastati, Principes and Triarii; which he nameth Prima, Secunda, and Tertia Acies; and therefore they were never termed by those Names in respect of that diffe-

Notwithstanding, in regard of Order and Degrees of Discipline, that Virtue might be rewarded with Honour, and that Time might challenge the privilege of a more worthy place, the faid diftinctions and terms were Religiously observed. For in the Battel with Petreius at Ilerda in Spain, he mentioneth the Death of Q. Fulginius, ex primo Hastato legionis quartedecime : And in the O-Lib. 3 de bello Civili. verthrow at Dyrrachium, he faith that the Eaglebearer being grievoully wounded, commended the fafety of his Enfign to the Horfemen, all the Centurions of the first Cohort being slain, Preter Principem priorem. And for the Triarii, there is no term more frequent in Cafar than Primipilus; which name, by the rules of the ancient Discipline, was given to none but to the chiefest Centurion of the first Maniple of the Triarii: Whereby it appeareth that the Maniples kept the fame Names in regard of a necessary distinction, although peradventure the Haftati were as good Soldiers as either the Principes or the Triarii.

As touching the spaces between the Maniples, whereunto the first Battel did retire it self if occasion urged them, I never found any mention of them in Cafar: excepting once here in England, where, in a Skirmith, the Britains so urged the Roman Camp, that Cafar fent out two other Cohorts to fuccour them; who making diffance between them as they flood, the Court of Guard retired it felf in fafety through that space into the Camp. Otherwise we never find that the first Battel made any Retreat into the Allies, between the Maniples of the fecond Battel; but when it failed in any part; the second and third went presently to second them; as appeareth in the Battel following with Arioviftus, and in divers others.

Concerning the use of this triple Battel, what tib 5 de can be faid more than Lipfius hath done? where militia Rohe layeth open the particular Commodities there- mans. of, as far forth as a speculative Judgment can discern of things so far remote from the use of this Age, which never imitateth this triple Battel but only in a March: For then commonly they make three Companies, a Vanguard, a Battel, and a Rereward: But in Imbattelling they draw these three Companies all in Front, making two Cornets and the Battel, without any other Troops to fecond them.

But let this fuffice concerning Cafar his manner of Imbattelling, and his triplex Acles, until I come to the Second Book; where I will handle more particularly the parts of a Legion, and the Usefulness of their small Battalions.

The Second OBSERVATION.

THE Macedonian Phalanx is described by A Phalanx Polybius to be a square Battel of Pikemen, described confifting of fixteen in Flank, and five hundred in Front; the Soldiers standing so close together, that the Pikes of the sifth Rank were extended three Foot beyond the Front of the Battel: The reft, whose Pikes were not serviceable by reason of their diftance from the Front, couched them upon the Shoulders of those that stood before them; and so locking them in together in file, pressed forward, to hold up the sway, or giving back of the former Ranks, and fo to make the affault more violent and irrefiftible.

The Gracians were very skilful in this part of the Art Military, which containeth Order and Disposition in Imbattelling: For they maintained publick Professors, whom they called Tactici, to teach and instruct their Youth the Practice and Art of all Forms convenient for that purpole. And these Taltici found by experience that fixteen in Flank, so ordered as they were in a Phalanx, were able to bear any shock, how violent so ever it charged upon them. Which number of fixteen they made to confift of four doubles: As first Unity maketh no Order, for Order confisteth in number and plurality; but Unity doubled maketh Two, the leaft of all Orders, and this is the double; which doubled again maketh the fecond Order, of four Soldiers in a File; which doubled the third time maketh eight; and this doubled maketh fixteen, which is the fourth doubling from an Unit; and in it they stayed, as in an absolute number and square, whose Root is four, the Quadruple in regard of both the extreams. For every one of these places the Tactici had several Names, by which they were diffinctly known. But the particular description requireth a larger Discourse than can be comprehended in these short observations. He that defireth further knowledge of them, may read Ælianus, that lived in the time of Adrian the Emperour; and Arianus in his Hiflory of Alexander the Great, with Mauritius, and Leo, Imperator; where he shall have the divisions land, where, in a Skirmith, the Britains so urged the Court of Guard, which kept Watch before an Unit, with all the Discipline of the Gracians.

CHAP. VII.

Lib. I.

red a Phalanx before all other Forms whatfoever; either because the Figure in it self was very strong; or otherwise in regard that it fitted best their Weapons, which were long Pikes and Targets. But whether Casar termed the Battel of the Helvetians a Phalanx, in regard of their thick manner of embattelling only, or otherwise forasmuch as besides the Form, they used the natural Weapon of a Phalanx which was the Pike, it remaineth doubtful. Brancatio in his discourses upon this Place, maketh it no Controversie but that every Soldier carried a Pike and a Target. The Target is particularly named in this Hiftory: But it cannot so easily be gathered by the fame that their offensive Weapons were Pikes. In the Fight at the Baggage it is faid, that many of the legionary Soldiers were wounded through the Cart-wheels, with tragulæ and matera, which are commonly interpreted Spears and Javelins : And I take them to be Weapons longer than common Darts; but whether they were fo long as the Sariffa's of the Macedonians I cannot tell. However this is certain, that the Helvetians have ever been reputed for the true Phalangitæ, next unto the Macedonians; and that in their thick and close embattelling, they failed not at this time of the Form of a Phalanx: For they roofed it so thick with Targets, that Cesar faith they were fore trou-bled, because many of their Targets were fastened and tied together with Piles darted through them. Which argueth that their Phalanx was very thick thronged, whatfoever their Weapon was.

CHAP. VIII.

C.sfar fendeth away all the Horses of Ease; exhorteth his Men; and beginneth the Battel.

Esar, to take away all hope of Safety by flight, first caused his own, and then all the private Horses of Ease to be carried out of fight ; and so using some motives of Courage, began the Battel. The Soldiers casting their Piles, with the advantage of the Hill, did eafily break the Helvetians Phalanx, and then with their Swords betook them-Selves to a furious Close.

The First OBSERVATION.

Cifar.

THe ancient Sages found it necessary to a faithful and serious Execution of such an Action, to prepare the Minds of their Men with words of Encouragement, and to take away all Scruple out of their Conceits, either of the unlawfulnels of the cause, or disadvantage against the Enemy: For if at any time that faying be true, that Oratio plus potost quam Pecunia, it is here more powerful and of greater Effect. For a Donative or Gift can but procure a mercenary Endeavour, ever yielding to a better offer, and do oftentimes breed a fuspicion of wrong, even amongst those that are willingly enriched with them; and so maketh them flack to discharge their Service with Loyalty, yea, oftentimes of Friends to become Enemies. But inafmuch as Speech discloseth the secrets of the Soul, and discovereth the intent and drift of every Action, a few good Words laying open the Injury which is offered to Innocency, how Equity is controlled with Wrong, and Justice controlled by Iniquity (for it is necessary that a Commander approve his Cause, and settle an opinion of Right in the Mind of his Soldiers, as it is easie to make that feem probable which so many offer to defend with their Blood; when indeed every man relieth upon able; but nothing answerable to the descripti-

The chiefest thing to be observed is, that the anothers Knowledge, and respecteth nothing less Grecians having such Skill in embattelling, preservation than the right;) a few good Words I say, will so stir their minds in the ferventness of the Cause, that every man will take himself particularly engaged in the Action by the Title of Equity; and the rather, for that it jumpeth with the necessity of their Condition. For Men are willing to do well, when well-doing agreeth with that they would do: Otherwise the Act may happily be effected, but the Mind never approveth it by affent.

And this manner of Exhortation or Speech of Encouragement was never omitted by Cafar in any Conflict mentioned in this Hiftory: But he ftill u-fed it as a necessary Instrument to set Vertue on foot, and the only means to ftir up alacrity. Or if it happened that his Men were at any time discouraged by difafter or cross Accident, as they were at Gergobia, and at the two Overthrows he had at Lib. 7. de Dyrrachium, he never would adventure to give Battel until he had encouraged them again, and confirmed their Minds in Valour and Resolution. But this Age hath put on fo fcornful a humour, that it cannot hear a Speech in this Case, sound it never fo gravely, without scoffing and derision: And on the other side discontinuance of so necessary a part hath bred at length fuch an Inutilem Pudorem in our Chief Commanders, that they had rather lofe the gain of a great advantage, than buy it with words to be delivered in publick.

The Second OBSERVATION.

IN this Chapter we may further observe the vio-I lence of the Roman Pile, which being a heavy deadly Weapon, could hardly be frustrated with any refistance, and in that respect was very proper and effectual against a Phalanx, or any other thick and close Battel or wheresoever else the Stroak was certain, or could hardly deceive the aim of the Cafter: For in such Encounters it so galled the Enemy, that they were neither able to keep their order, nor answer the Assault with a stout refiftance. By which it appeareth that the only remedy against the Pile was to make the Ranks thin; allowing to every Soldier a large Place to ftand in, that so the Stroak might of it self fall without hurt, or by fore-fight be prevented; as it shall plainly appear by the Sequel of this History, which I will not omit to note, as the Places shall offer themselves to the Examination of this Dif-

But as touching the Pile, which is so often men- The Roman tioned in the Roman History, Polybius describeth it Pile described in this manner; A Pile, faith he, is a cafting Weapon, the Staff whereof is almost three Cubits long, and it hath Palmarem Diametrum, a Hand-breadth in Thickness. The Staves were armed with a head of Iron, equal in length to the Staff it self: But in that sort, that half the head was fastened up to the middle of the Staff, with Plates of Iron like the head of a Halbert; and the other half fluck out at the end of the Staff like a Pike, containing a finger's breadth in thickness, and so decreafing less and less unto the point, which was barbed. This head was so slender toward the point, that the weight of the Staff would bend it as it stuck, as it appeareth in this Battel of the Helvetians. This Weapon was peculiar to the Romans, and was called Pilum, as Varro noteth, of Pilum a Pettel, Quod Hoftes feriret ut pilum. Lipfius find-11b. 3. de ing that Palmarem diametrum was too great a militia Rothickness to be managed by any Man's hand, in-menaterpreteth it to be four Inches in Circuit, if the Staff were either round or fquare, for they had of both forts, and fo he maketh it very manage-on by Polybius, either in Form or Weight. Battel took Charge of them that stood ready to en-Patricius in his Par illeli, maketh the Stass to close them about. And here the Fight was doubtful have Palmarem d'unestum in the butt-end, but and furious for a long time; until at length they the reft of the Staff he maketh to decrease taperwife, unto the head of Iron, where it hath the both in form and weight to a Peftel, as may be feen by the Figure, and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and I take it to be the meaning of Pakhin. Burney and ing of Polybius. Patricius in that place fetterh down four Discommodities of the Pile. First, a furious and hot spirited Enemy will easily prevent the darting of the Pile, with a nimble and speedy close. And so we read that in the Battel which Cafar had with Arioviftus, the Germans came fo violently upon them, that the Soldiers caft away their Piles and betook them to their Swords. And likewise in that worthy Battel between Cataline and Marcus Petreius, they cast away their Piles on either part. The fecond Discommodity was, that the Piles being so heavy could not be cast any diffance, but were only ferviceable at hand. Thirdly, they could not be cast with any aim, or as they fay, point-blank. And laftly, The Soldiers were to take advantage of Ground backward when they threw them: Which might eafily diorder their Troops, if they were not very well experienced.

The Third OBSERVATION.

THE last thing which I observe in this speciality is, That the Legionary Soldiers had no other offensive Weapon but one Pile or two at the most, and their Swords. By which it may be gathered that all their Victories came by buckling at handy-blows; For they came always so near before they cast their Pile, that they left themselves no more time than might conveniently ferve them to draw their Swords: Neither would their Arms of defence, which was compleat, befides a large Target which they carried on their Left Arm, fuffer them to make any long pursuit, or continued chase, whensoever a light-armed Enemy did make any speedy Retreat; as will more plainly appear by that which followeth.

CHAP. IX.

The Helvetians fainting in the Battel, retire to a Hill: The Romans follow after, and the Battel is continued.

C=G-Twas a great hindrance to the Galls in their Fight, that many of their Targets were struck through, and tied together with one fall of a Pile: For so it happened that it could neither be pulled out, by reason of the bowing of the Iron, nor could they use their Left-hand for the defence of themselves. Whereby is fell out that many of them made of the circumstance of time.

(after a wearisome Toil) did cast away their Targets, and fought naked and unarmed. At length, fainting with Wounds, they began to give place and retreated to a Hill a Mile off.

The Hill being taken, and the Legions following on to drive them from thence, the Boil and Tulingi, to the number of Fifteen Thousand, being in the Rere of the Enemy, to guard the lag of their Army, fetting on our Men as they were in pursuit of the rest, did charge them upon the open side, and began to inclese them about: Which the Helvetians that had got the Hill perceiving, began again to fall upon our Men, and renewed the Battel. The Romans diwere no longer able to endure the violence of the Le-gionary Soldiers: And so one part betook themselves

And hitherto there was not one Man Seen to have turned his back in all this Conflict; although the Fight continued from the seventh hour until the Evening.

The First OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the Enfigns of the Romans, we are The Enfigus of to understand that the chiefest Enfign of every the Romans. Legion was an Eagle, which always attended upon the Primipile or chief Centurion of the faid Legion. The Enfign of a Maniple was either a Hand or a Dragon, a Wolf or a Sphinx; as it appeareth (befides the Teltimony of Hiftory) by the Column of Trajan in Rome, wherein the Enfigns are figured with fuch Pourtraictures: So that these Ensigns resembling the proportions of living Creatures, had their Fore-parts always car-ried that way which the Legions were to March or where they were to Fight. And therefore in this History, by the aspect and carrying of the Ensigns, the Front of the Army was commonly noted; as in this place it is faid, that the Enfigns of the first and second Battel were carried towards the Hill, whither the Helvetians had made their Retreat; and the Enfigns of the third Battel looked another way, towards the Boii and Tulingi, which stood on the foot of the Hill. By which is fignified how the Legions were divided to refift the brunt of the double encounter.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the time of the day, we are to understand that the Romans used not the same division of the day as we commonly do: For they The division of divided their artificial (which is the space be-their Des tween Sun-rifing and fetting) into twelve equal parts, which the Aftronomers called unequal or Planetary hours. The first hour of the day began always at Sun-rising: the fixth hour was always high Noon; and the twelfth hour was Sun-fetting. And as the day waxed longer or fhorter, so these hours were either greater or less: Neither did they agree with equal or equinoctial hours, fuch as are now used, but only at the Æquinoctium: So that by this manner of reckoning, Ab hora septima ad vesperum is meant, the Battel began about one of the Clock, according to our Computation, and continued until the Evening. The like we must understand throughout this whole Hiftory, as often as there is mention

CHAP. X.

The Helvetians continue their Fight at the Carriages: But at length they leave the Field, and march towards Langres.

N like manner the Fight was kept on Foot at the Carriages, until it was far in the Night; the place being fortified with Carts instead of a Rampier: And the Enemy casting their Weaon Men, and renewed the Battel. The Romans dipons from the upper ground, and boarts and viding themselves, turned their Ensigns two was;

Javelins under the Waggons, and from between the the fust and second Army sought against the HelveWoeels, did wound and gall many of our Men.

After a long Constiti cur Soldiers took their Carriages

F 2

And The Exemy casting their Weaand

and their Camp; wherein Orgetorix's Daughter, and one of his Sons were taken. There were faved out of that Battel about one hundred and thirty thouand Persons; who marching continually all that Night, and making no stay in any place, came the fourth day into the Consines of the Lingones: for by reason of the Soldiers Hurts, and the Burial of the Slain, wherein there was, spent three days, there was no pursuit after them.

OBSERVATION.

TF we confider the nature of the Action, and look into the true cause of their Overthrow, as far as the right sense of the History shall direct our Judgment, we shall find Valour not to be wanting in the Helvetians, but rather superlatively abounding in the Romans. For that vehicment Opinion of their Valour and Manhood, which carried them out of the straits of the Country to feek larger Fortunes in other Kingdoms, was not fo abated with the loss of the fourth part of their Army at the River Arar, nor with the terrible Fury of those Veterane Legions; but it yielded this effect, which Casar in his estimate of Valour thought memorable, that for five hours space or more there was not one Man feen to have turned his back. Their manner of Imbattelling, had not the Romans been the Enemy, was unrefiftable. For being cast into a Phalanx, which in the Plains of Afia had made Alexander the Great and the Macedonians famous, they did as far furpals any other Form of embattelling (supposing that the Conveniency of the Place did fit that disposition) wherein the ftrength of the whole is divided into many particulars, as the Violence of a great Body exceedeth the Force and Motion of his Parts, when it is divided into smaller Cantons. For as in a Phalanx many particular Souldiers are ly a close and compact Order incorporated into one entire Body; so their several Vertues are gathered into one Head, and are as parts united into one general Force; which eafily fwalloweth up the ability of many other leffer quantities, into which a greater strength is equally divided.

The advantage of the place which they got by retreat, and the double charge wherewith they engaged the Romans, both in Front and Flank, was able, in an indifferent Conflict to have made For-Anne fugitive, and bear Arms on their fide; or at the least so to have stemmed the swelling Tide of Victory, which carried the Romans so violently in the chase, that they might have been equal sharers in the Honour of the day; had it not followed from an Ocean of Valour, whose course could not be hindered with any ftops and oppositions, until it came to that height which true Valour and unexampled resolution affected. And yet the height of this Courage could not fo allay the heat of the Helvetians Fury, but it brake forth into dangerous Flames, when it came to the place where their Carriages were laid, and cost much Blood and many Mens Lives before they quitted the Place: For they fought with that Spirit and Industry, as though they meant to make Tryal whether their Fortune would prove no better in the Night, than it had done in the day.

The Overthrow of the Tigurine Canton at the River Arar proceeded rather from want of good directions (which is the less to be marvelled at, confidering they had no chief Commander as we Rules of Military Government require especial fu- care in paffing over a Water; For then especially an Army is in greatest danger, when it is disoratchieved this Victory by the horrible vigilancy (as Tully calleth it) of their Commander, who always watched opportunitates rei bene gerende, as necessary and speedy means to overcome in all his

CHAP. XI.

Casar, after three days respite, followeth after the Helvetians: He taketh them to Mercy, and fendeth them back again to their Country.

Afar sent Letters and Messengers to the Lingones, forbidding to Supply them either with Corn or any other thing; which if they did, he would esteem of them as of the Helvetians. Himself, after three days respite, followed after with all his Forces. The Helvetians, pressed with the want of all necessary Provisions, sent Commissioners unto him to treat of their Rendition. Who meeting him on the way, cast themselves at his Feet. and with humble Words and Tears defired Peace. Being commanded to attend in the place they then were, they accordingly obeyed. Cæsar being come up unto them, required Hostages, together with their Arms and Servants; as also the Fugitives that were sled

While those things were sought out and brought, in the Night time, fix Thousand Men, or thereabouts of the Canton called Verbigene, whether moved through fear of being executed after their Arms were torings year of verification with lope of escaping (as thinking that amongs such a multistude of Reople that were there to be rendred, their slight should not be missed or at least would be conceased) did in the beginning or at least would be conceased) did in the beginning of the Night leave the Helvetian Camp, and made towards the Rhine, and the Consines of the Germans.

Cæsar understanding through whose Territories they passed, Commanded them to feek them ous, and bring them back again, if they would be blameles in that behalf; And being brought back, deals with them as Enemies. All the rest, after Hossages, Arms, and Fusitives were given in, be received to Mercy; and commanded the Helvetians, Tulinges, and Latherines to return time this Commens. tobriges to return into their Country, from whence they came. And forafmuch as having loft all their Provision of Corn, there remained nothing at home to satisfie Hunger, he gave order to the Allobroges to supply them with Corn; and willed the Helvetians to re-edifie their Towns and Cities, that they had before destroyed and forsaken. Which he did specially for this cause; that the Germans inhabiting beyond the Rhine might not be invited with the richness of that Soil, to seat themselves so near Neighbours to the Province of Gallia, and the Alobroges. The Boii, at the Mediation of the Heduans, as knowing them to be Men of great Valour, were permitted to dwell in their Country; to whom they gave Lands and Possessions, and received them into the same Liberties and Immunities as they themselves enjoyed.

In the Helvetian Camp was found a List, or Regifter writ in Greek, and brought to Casfar, containing by Pole the whole number that left their Country, how many of them were able to bear Arms : And in like manner the Boys, Old Men and Women were enrolled apart by themselves, the Summary whereof was, that the whole number of the Helvetians amounted to Two Hundred Sixty Three Thousand, the Tulinges to Thirty Six Thousand, the Latobriges to Fourteen, the Rauracks to Twenty Three, the Boil read of) than from any defect of Valour : For the to Thirty Two. Of these there were that bare Arms One Hundred Ninety Two Thousand. The total of all were three Hundred fixty eight Thousand. A view being taken by Cæsar's appointment of those that returned dered and divided. And therefore the Romans home, there were found one Hundred and ten Thousand.

OBSERVATION.

Lib I.

THe directions concerning their rendry and return were very found, and of good confequence. For first, in that he commanded them to attend his coming in the place where they were, he took away all motions of new Trouble, which often removes might have caused, by the opportunity of some Accident which might have happened: Affuring himself that their Abode in that Place would increase their Miseries, and consequently ripen that defire of Peace which they made flew of: confidering that the Lingones, in whose Territories they were, durft not for fear of Cafars displeasure furnish them with any Necessaries in that Extremity. Touching the fecurity which the Romans required of the Loyalty of such People as they conquered, their manner was to take as Hostages a fufficient number of the Men-Children of the chiefeft Men of that Nation; whose Lives depended upon their Parents Fidelity, and ended with the first suspicion of their Rebellion. Which Custom, besides the present good, promised the like or better Security to the next Age; when as those Children by Conversation and Acquaintance should be so affected to the Roman Empire, that returning to their own Country, their Actions might rather tend to the Advancement thereof, than any way be prejudicial to the fame. And left the love of Liberty and Freedom should prevail more with them, than that Affection which Nature had enjoined them to bear to their Children; he did what he could to take away the Means and Instruments of their Rebellion, by causing them to deliver up such Arms and Weapons as were there present: And so to become fuitable to that Petition of Peace which they had made.

The fum of all is this; he corrected the Infolency of a furious People, and reduced them to a free themselves from their Sovereignty; only himself feeling of their own Madness. He kept them from facking the Possessions of many Thousands in the Continent of Gallia, and fent them back again to continue their Name and Nation in the place where they first inhabited; which continueth unto this day. And thus we fee that there is no humour fo head-ftrong, nor fo backt with ftrength of Circumftances, but it may meet with a Remedy to qualifie the infolency thereof, and make it fubject to Correction and Controulment.

CHAP. XII

The States of Gallia congratulate Cafar's Victory: they call a Council, and discover their inward Grief concerning Ariovistus and his Forces.

He Helvetian War being thus ended, the Princes and chief Men of all the States of Gallia came to Cæsar, to congratulate the happiness of this Victory; insomuch as they well understood, that albeit the People of Rome had by the course of this War revenged the injuries which heretofore they had done unto them : Yet nevertheless the Issue thereof did redound no less profitable to the peace of Gallia, than to the Roman Empire; for a much as the Helvetians left their Houses and Country abounding with all plenty and prosperity, for no other purpose but to invade the whole Country of Gallia, and to bring it in Subjection to themselves; and choofing out of that large Continent Some fit and fruitful Place of Habitation, to make the rest of the States their Tributaries. They required further, that with his good leave they might call a general Assembly at a day prefixed, of all the States of Gallia, foras-

much as they had matters of great Importance to be handled, which they defired (with a common consent) to preferr to his consideration. Which being granted; and the day of meeting appointed, they bound then:selves by Oath not to reveal the causes of their Assembly, but to such as soould be designed by common Council

The Parliament being broken up, the same Princes returned to Cæsar, and desired that they might in secret treat with him of the Safety of themselves, and all the rest: which being granted, they cast themselves in lamentable manner at his feet, contending with a great earnestness, that those things which they delivered might not be revealed, as they did to have their petition granted: Forasmuch as they saw that the discovery of such Declarations as they propounded, would necessarily pull upon them most grievous Afflictions.

Divitiacus the Heduan, in the name of the rest, delivered, That Gallia was divided into two Factions: The Hedui were the Head of the One, and the Ar-Veni of the Other. These two States contending many years for the Principality, the Arveni with the Sequans their Clients, bired the Germans to take their part; of whom at first there passed over the Rhine some Fifteen Thousand: but afterwards, these barbarous People having tasted the Plenty and Civility of the Galls, drew over many more, that now there were no less than One Hundred and Twenty Thousand. With these the Hedui and their Clients had once or oftener fought; but the Success sorted to their own Calamity, and the utter Overthrow of their Nobility and Senate: With which Loffes they were so broken and decayed. that whereas heretofore as well by their own Credit. as by the Favour of the People of Rome, they fruck a great Stroak throughout all Gallia; they were now driven to deliver the chiefest of their State as Pledges to the Sequans, and to bind themselves by Oath never to Jeek their release or freedom, nor to implore the Aid of the People of Rome, nor to feek means to of all the Heduans could not be brought to take that Oath, or to give his Children as Hostages: For which cause he sted to Rome, and besought help of the Senate, being no way obliged to the contrary either by Oath or

But it so fell out, that the Victory became more grievous to the Sequans than to the Heduans: For that Ariovistus King of the Germans was planted in their Territories; and being already possest of a third part of their Country, which was the best part of all Gallia, did now require the Sequans to forego another third Part, for that a few Months before there were come unto him Twenty Four Thousand Harudes, to whom Lands and Possessions were to be allotted. Whereby it would come to pass within a few Years that all the Galls would be driven out of their Dwellings, and all the Germans would come over the Rhine; for there was no comparison between Gallia and Germany, either in richness of Soil or fashion of Life.

Concerning Arioviftus, after he had once defeated the Galls in a Battel near Amagetobrig, he carried himself very cruelly and insolently, requiring the Children of all the Nobility for Hostages, and shewing strange Examples of torture upon them. If any thing were done not according to his Command or Defire, he would eafily shew himself to be a barbarous, sierce, and hasty Man, whose Tyranny they could no longer endure: And unless there were help to be found in Gæsar and the People of Rome, all the Galls must, as the Helvetians did, for sake their Country, and seek new houses and feats of Habitation, far remote from the Germans. and try their Fortunes, whatever befel them. If these things should haply be discovered to Ariovistus, be would doubtless take a severe Revenge of all the Pledges in his Custody. Cæsar might by his own Authority, or the Presence of his Army, or by the Renown of his late Victory, or by the Countenance of the People of Rome, keep the Germans from transporting any more Colonies into Gallia, and defend it from the Injuries of Ariovistus. This Speech being delivered by Divitiacus, all that were present wich much weeping befought Gæsar to give them Relief.

Cæsar observed that only the Sequans of all the rest did no such matter, or were so affected as the others were; but with their heads hanging down, looked mournfully upon the Ground: and wondering at it, asked them the cause thereof. To which they made no reply, but stood silent, with the same countenance of forrow. And having oftentimes iterated his demand, without gaining any word of answer; Divitiacus the Heduan replied, That the state of the Sequans was herein more miserable and grievous than Sequans was verein more migration and greeous that the rest; that they of all others durst not complain, or implore aid, although it were in secret, as having before their Eyes the Cruelty of Ariovistus being abfent, no less than if he were present. And the ra-ther, for that other Men had safe means of slying ther, for that other Men had Jafe means of flying away; but the Sequans, having received Artiviffus into their Country, and made him Master of their Towns, were necossarily to undergo all Misferies. These things being known, Ceelar incouraged the Galls with good words, and promised them to have a care of that matter, as having great hope shat by his means and power Ariovistus should be forced to offer no further Injuries. And thereupon dismissed the

OBSERVATIONS.

IN this Relation there are divers points worthily recommended to the discretion of such as are willing to be directed by other Mens Mifadventures. As first, into what Extremities Ambition doth drive her thirsty Favourites, by suppressing the better faculties of the Soul, and fetting fuch unbridled Motions on foot, as carry Men headlong into most desperate Attempts. For as it had de-ferved Commendation in either Faction, so to have carried their Emulation, that by their own means and strength applied to the Rule of good Government, their Authority might wholly have fwayed the Inclination of the weaker States; fo was it most odious in the Sequani to call in foreign Forces, to fatisfie the Appetite of their untempered humour; and in the end they were accordingly rewarded.

Secondly, it appeareth how dangerous a thing it is to make a Stranger a Stickler in a Quarrel which civil Diffention hath broached, when the Party that called him in shall not be able to refuse his affiftance upon occasion, as he was willing to entertain it for advantage.

Laftly, the often discontents of these States shew the force of a prefent Evil, which possesseth so vehemently the powers of the Soul, that any other Calamity, either already past, or yet to come, how great foever, feemeth tolerable and easie, in regard of that fmart which the present Grief inflicteth.

So the Sequani chose rather to captivate their liberty to the Barbarism of a savage Nation, than to endure the Hedui to take the hand of them. And again to make themselves Vassals to the Romans, rather than endure the usurping Cruelty of the Germans. And finally (as the Sequel of the Hiftory will discover) to hazard the loss of Life and Country, than to fuffer the Taxes and Impositions of the Romans. So predominant is the prefent Evil in Mens Affections, and so it prevaileth at the Seat of our Judgment.

CHAP. XIII.

The Reasons that moved Casar to undertake this War.

Any were the inducements which moved Carfar him to take that bufiness to Heart. As first, That the Heduans, who were oftentimes stiled by the Senate with the Title of Brethren, Cousins and Allies, were in the servitude and thraldome of the Germans, and that their Hostages were with Ariovistus and the Sequans: Which in so great a soveraignty of the People of Rome, he took to be very dishonourable both to himself and the Commonweal. As also for that he saw it very danerous for the Roman Empire, that the Germans Should accustom by little and little to slock in such multitudes into Gallia. Neither did he think he rould moderate or restrain such fierce and barbarous People; but that having possessed all the Continent of Gallia, they would, as the Cimbri and Teutons had done before, break out into the Province, and So into Italy: especially the Sequans, being divided from the Province but with the River Rhone.

These things he shought fit with all speed to prevent: And the rather, for that Ariovistus was grown to that Pride and Arrogancy, as was not to be suffered. For which respect he thought it expedient to send Embaffadors into him, to appoint fome indifferent place for Parlee; for that he had to treat wish him concerning publick Affairs, and some matters that did much import both of them.

OBSERVATIONS.

May here take an occasion to speak somewhat The authority concerning the Authority of the Roman Gene- of the Roman rals, which we fee to be very large; confidering Generals, that Cafar of himself, without any further leave of the Senate and People of Rome (for what may be gathered by this History) did undertake a War of that confequence, and put in Jeopardy the Legi-ons, the Province, or what other interest the Romans had in Gallia.

Wherein we are to understand, that when the State of Rome did allot the Government of any Province to a Pro-conful, they did likewife recommend unto him the careful managing of fuch Accidents as might any way concern the good of that Regiment. For confidering that fuch causes as may trouble a well-ordered Government, are as well external and forreign, as internal and bred within the Bounds of that Empire: It had been to fmall purpose to have given him only Authority to maintain a course of wholesom Government at home, and no means to take away fuch Oppositions which forreign Accident might fet up against him. And so we see that Cafar undertook the Helvetian War, in regard of the fafety of the Province: And this again with Ariovistus, left the Germans should so multiply in Gallia, that the Province it self might at length be endangered, Neither had their Generals authority only to undertake these Wars; but the absolute disposition also of the whole course thereof, whether it were to Treat, Capitulate, Compound, or what else they thought convenient for the advancement of the Commonweal, did wholly reft upon their direction; republica bene gesta being the stile of the Warrant for all their Actions.

Neither may we think that any fubordinate or depending authority can be so powerful in the course of businesses, as that which absolutely commandeth without Controlment, and proceedeth according to the opportunity of Time and Occafion, further than either prescription or limitation had vouchfafed to esteem of him as a King in his Decan direct it. And therefore whensoever the Rominions, and as a Friend unto their State) and that man Affairs were diffressed, and driven to an exigent, they created a Dictator, that had regiam potestatem, such an absolute Command, that whatfoever Power refted either in the Confuls or in the Tribunes, in the Senate or in the People, it gave there might be no lett or retracting Power to weaken that course, which nothing but an abso-Jute Command could establish for the good of the Commonweal. And yet notwithstanding this abfolute Government, they attributed fuch Power to the course of humane Actions, that by the Puniftment which they inflicted upon diffolute and unfortunate Leaders, they feemed to acknowledge that no Man, how circumfpect foever, could promise more than likelihoods or probabilities of good Fortune, as far forth as his means and industry could atchieve it. For old M. Fabius pleading for the Life of his gallant Son, and oppofing the rigour of Papirius the Dictator with examples of Antiquity, faith, Populi quidam, penes quem potestas omnium rerum esset, ne iram quidem unquam atrociorem fuisse in eos qui temeritate atque inscitia exercitus amisssent, quam ut pecunia eos multaret : Capite acquisitum ob rem male gestam de imperatore nullum ad eam diem esse. The People, faith he, in whom the fovereign Power of things confifteth, never shewed greater displeasure against such as had lost an Army either by rashness or unskilfulness, than imposing a fine upon them: But to bring the Life of a General in queftion for failing in his Endeavours, was never heard of to that day.

The condition of the inferiour Officers of their Camp was far otherwise in regard of Military Discipline: For prescription guided them in all their Services, and the chiefest part of their duty was Obedience; although they saw evident reafon to the contrary, and found their directions imperfect in that behalf: And therefore Casfar faith upon that occasion, Alia funt legati partes atque imperatoris: alter omnia agere ad prascriptum, alter libere ad summam rerum consulere debet. The office of a Legate or Lieutenant different from that of a General: The one doing all things by prescription; and the other freely deliberating of whatfoever may concern the cause. And this course the Romans held concerning the authority of their Generals.

CHAP. XIV.

Arioviftus's Answer. A second Embassage, with the fuccess thereof.

10 that Embassage Ariovistus answered; That if his occasions had required Cæsar's Affistance, he would have furthered them with his own Presence: And he thought it as reasonable, that if it were in his hand to pleasure the Romans, Cafar ought not to think much of the like labour. For his own part, he durst not come in-to those Parts of Gallia which Cæsar possessed, without an Army; nor could be draw an Army to a head without great Trouble and Expence. The thing that he most wondered at was, That the Romans or Cæsar had to do in that part of Gallia, which the law of Arms had made his Inheritance.

Upon the return of this answer Casar framed a second Embassage, the purport whereof was; Forasmuch as he thus requited the Honour wherewith the People of Rome had beautified his best Dignity (for minions, and as a Friend unto their State) and that he disdained to admit of a Parlee concerning the common Good; let him know that these were the things that he required to be performed by him: First, That he should not suffer any move Troops of Germans to be Transported over the Rhine into way to the greatness of that Magistrate; that Gallia. Secondly, That he stroud deliver up those Hoftages which he had of the Heduans and Sequans, and should cease to molest them further with War or other Injuries. These things, if he did perform, Cæsar would assure him of a grateful acceptance on Casta would appre nim by a gration uncertaintees the behalf of the People of Rome: Otherwife, for-afmuch as in the Confulfhips of M. Messala and L. Piso the Senate had decreed, That he that should obtain the Government of the Province, Should, as near as it would stand with the good of the Commonweal, endeavour the defence of their Afficiates and Friends, he would not neglect the Injuries done unto the

> To these Mandates Ariovistus replied: The Law of Arms kept this tenure amongst all Nations. That a Conqueror might Govern a fubdued People according as he thought best for his own safety. The People of Rome did not direct the course of their Government by another Man's prescript, but by their own Arbitrement: And as he had not directed the Romans, fo ought not they to meddle with his pro-

The Heduans having tried the fortune of War, were by right become his Stipendaries; wherein Cælar offered great Wrong, for that his coming this ther had made their Tribute much less unto him than before. Touching their Hostages, his purpose was still to retain them. Neither would he make any unjust War upon any of their Associates, if they observed the Aricles of Asgreement, and paid their yearly Tribute: But if they failed in that, the Fraternity of the Romans would come too late to their succour. If Cafar would needs undertake their Quarrel, he was to let him know, that no Man ever contended with Ariovistus but to his own destruction. Try when he would, he should find what Valour consisted in the Germans, that for fourteen Years space never were covered with other Roof than the Hea-

OBSERVATION.

A Nd thus far proceeded C.cfur with Arioviftus, in debating the Wrongs and Grievances of the Hedui. Wherein appeareth the difference between a matter handled according to Moral Civility, in terms of Mildness and pleasing Accent, and that which is rudely delivered, and dependent rather upon the plainness of the Project, than fuited with words fit for perswasion. For that which Ariovistus alledged to make good his Interest in Gallia, was as consonant to reason his interest in Gassia, was as communant to reasons as any thing to the contrary urged by Casar.

But as the Laccdemonians said of one, That he spake the Truth otherwise than it should be spoken: So it may be faid of Arioviftus's Answer, that it wanted that fweetning Humanity which giveth credit to verity it felf, forafmuch as it proceedeth from a well-tempered Spirit, wherein no turbulent Paffion feemeth to controul the force of Reason, nor hinder the Sentence of true Judgment; but rather feafoning her Conceptions with Humility, doth covertly complain of open wrong, and strengthen her Assertions with a pleasing delivery. And therefore how great foever the Controversie be, that Party which exceedeth not the bounds of Modesty, but maketh Mildness his chiefest Advocate, will so prevail in any Auditory, in Cælar's Consulship the authority of their Empire that albeit Equity doth disallow her Title, yet the manner of his Carriage will clear him from of Testaments. And through the talk and searfulness offering wrong, in that he useth the sequels of Inof these Men, the old Soldiers and Centurions, and offering wrong, in that he useth the sequels of In-nocency to prove his Interest in that which he

Lib. I.

CHAP. XV.

The Treviri bring News of one hundred Townthips of the Suevi that were come to the Rhine. Casar taketh in Besançon: His Soldiers are furprised with an extream sear of the Germans.

T the same time that this answer was returned to Cæsar, there came likewise Embassadors from the Heduans and Trevires. The Hednans complained that the Harudes lately transported into Gallia, did depopulate and waste their Borders, and that they could not buy their peace of Ariovistus with giving of Hostages for their Allegiance. The Trevires brought News of one hundred Townships of the Suevi that were come to the River Rhine, to seek a passage into Gallia, conducted by Nasua and Cimberius, two Brethren. Whereat Cæsar being exceedingly moved, thought his best means of prevention to confift in Celerity, left the difficulty of resssing slower love when those new Forces of the Suevi were joyned with the Power which was already with Ariovistus. And therefore having provided Corn, he made hast to seek the Germans. And having gone three days Journey on his way, he had Intelligence that Ariovistus with all bis Forces was gone to take in Besançon, the greatest Town of the Sequans: and that he was three days Fourney on his way already.

Cæsar knowing how much it imported him to prevent that disadvantage (forasmuch as the Town was so situate that he that commanded it might prolong the War at his own pleasure; being encircled with Le Doux. the River Alduabis, excepting a small space of fix hundred Foot, which was Fortified with an exceeding high Hill, the foot whereof did at each end joyn unto the River, and the Hill strengthned with a Wall, and so joyned to the Town) made all the hast he could to take the Town, and there left a Garrison. And as he rested there a few days, to make Provision of Corn and other Necessaries, the Romans enqui-ring of the Gauls and Merchants concerning the quality of the Germans, understood that they were Men of a huge Stature, of Courage invincible, and of great Practice and Experience in Feats of Arms; whereof the Gauls had oftentimes made Trial: For when they encountred them, they were not able to endure so much as the Sternness of their Countenance or the fierceness of their Looks. The whole Army conceived such a fear thereat, that all Mens Minds were wonderfully appalled. This fear began first amongst the Tribunes and Commanders of Horse, and fuch others as for friendship sake followed Casar from Rome, and had small or no skill in matter of War. These Men feigning some one excuse and some another, of very earnest business which called them home, defired leave to depart. Some others, whom shame would not suffer to forsake the Camp, bewrayed the like Paffion in their Countenances and Behaviour: for hiding themselves in their Tents, they either bewailed their Destiny secretly to themfelves, or otherwise with their Acquaintance and familiar Friends. They lamented the danger they were all like to fall into; fo that throughout the offering wrong, in that he utent the lequels or innocency to prove his Interest in that which he demandeth. But to leave this Circumstance, little and little to, apprehend the terror observe with as only to be noted, let us proceed to the War it self, which I made the second part of this History.

History.

History.

The old Soldiers and Centurions, and note that which he form observe with the tangent and great experience in the Camp, began by the and great experience in the Camp, began by the and great experience in the Camp, began by the the self-weight and those that would feem to be left fearful, faid, they feared not the Enemy, but the narrowness of the Ways, and they are these mand Ariovistus; or otherwise they cast doubts where they might have Provision of Corn. And many stuck not to tell Calar, that whensoever he should give Commandment to march forward, or advance the Standards, the Soldiers would refuse to do it.

OBSERVATION.

WHerein for that we find a strange alteration, no way answerable to that Courage which a late-gotten Victory doth usually breed in noble Spirits; it will not be amifs a little to infift upon the quality of the accident, and to gather such brief Instructions from their Weakness, as may best serve to qualifie the amazement of horror, and mitigate the phrensie of so violent a Passion. And albeit my ignorance in the works of Nature cannot promife any fuch Learning, as may difcover the true means and fecret motions whereby a fore-conceived fear doth trouble the Senses, and aftonish the Mind; yet since the History offereth it to our fcanning, give me leave only to note the ftrangeness of the circumstance, and rudely to delineate the Portraicture of a Beaft oftener feen than well known, using the unweildy Pile for my Pencil, and fuiting my Speech to a Warlike Auditory. I know not how it happeneth, but thus it may happen, that when the Senses receive Intelligence of an eminent Evil, which may either disposses the Soul of this Earthly Mansion, or trouble the quiet wherein the refteth, the Spirits (as it feemeth) by the direction of their Sovereign Mistress, retire themselves into the inner Cabinets and more fecret Pavilions of the Body, where the chiefest part of the Soul is most resident; and so they leave the Frontier Quarters of her Kingdom naked and ungarrifoned, the better to strengthen that Capital City of the Heart, out of which the Life cannot fly, but to the utter ruine and de-ftruction of the whole Body. For fear is not only a perturbation of the Soul proceeding from the opinion it hath of some Evil to come; but it is also a contraction and closing up of the Heart, when the Blood and the Spirits are recalled from the outward Parts to affift that place which giveth Life and Motion to all the reft. In this Chaos and confusion of Humours and Spirits when the multiplicity of Faculties (which otherwise require an orderly diffinction in their Service, and by the order of nature should be disposed into several Inftruments, and be dilated throughout the Body) are thus blended confusedly together, the con-ceptions of the Mind which presently rise from these advertisements, are suddenly choaked with the difordered mixture of fo many feveral Properties, and are stifled as it were in the throng, before they can be transported to our Judgment, or examined by reason, for want of that orderly uniformity of place which nature requireth in the powers of the Mind. And hence proceedeth that amazedness and aftonishment, which so daunteth the Hearts of Men, when they are taken with this Paffion, that because the Soul giveth no Counsel, the Body can afford no motion, but standeth frozen through the extremity of the Perturbation, benumbed in fense, and forsaken of the Spirits. So we read that Theophilus the Emwhole Camp there was nothing but making and figning perour, in an Overthrow which he had given him by the Hagarens, was strucken with such an ex-One of his chief Commanders shaking him by the Shoulder, as though he were to awake him out of by using that means which was only left for his

Again if in that turbulent Confiftory the Spirits chance diffinctly to receive any Apprehension proceeding from the forgeing Faculty of the Soul, they carry it presently to Execution before it be examined by reason, and follow the Action with fuch Vehemency, that they leave no Place for better Advice and Confideraton. And this is the cause that oftentimes through extremity of Fear, to avoid one Evil, we run headlong into a worfe, and find a greater Danger in the means we use to avoid a less; because Reason did not first try the Apprehension, before it was delivered to external Agents. And fo we find in the Battel between Germanicus and the Almans, that two gross Troops of Soldiers were driven into fuch an Ecstafie of Fear, that taking contrary Courses to avoid one and the same Danger, they either of them fled to that place which the other had quitted: Neither could they be advised by each others flight, that the Places which they fought after afforded them no Remedy.

And albeit Reason be called to Counsel when a Parley is summoned of Composition, yet it beareth fo fmall a Sway in the Consultation, that the Will of it self concludeth to betray Vertue to Dishonour, and fo to purchase Peace with the Loss of the Soul's chiefest Treasure: Which ought ever to be eftimated at a higher rate than any other Hap-piness which can betide the Mind. For among all the fensible things of this World, there is no Creature that hath such a confused Fear, or is more amazed therewith, than Man is: Neither is there any Misery greater, or any Bondage more shameful, servile or vile, than this, which maketh Men very Abjects of all other Creatures, to redeem the Evil which the Danger threateneth: And then doth Shame follow after so base a Part, and aggravate the Burthen of the Sin with loathforn Difgrace, and penitent Discontentment; adding oftentimes Aloes to Wormwood, and making the End more grievous than the Beginning. And thus doth Danger breed Fear, and Fear yieldeth to Dishonour, and Dishonour bringeth Shame, and Shame being always mingled with Wrath and Anger, revengeth it felf upon it felf, and bringeth more Peril than the Cofar's Speech to the Army concerning this Fearfirst Danger could threaten.

Whereby it appeareth that as the Affections of the Mind are bred one of another; fo on the contrary part some are bridled and restrained by others: For as Envy, Hatred and Anger rife oftentimes of Love; fo is Joy leffened with Grief, Envy with Mercy, and Fear with Shame.

But forasmuch as all such Perturbations proceed of Ignorance and Inconfiderateness, whereby we think that the Evil is greater than indeed it is; let us confider what disposition of our Judgment best moderateth the violent Heat of these Affections. And first, touching the Passages whereby the Soul receiveth her Advertisements, as they are of divers Natures, the chiefest whereof are the Eye and the Ear, so are their avisoes different in Quality, and require a feveral Confideration to be rightly difcerned. The Intelligence by the Eye is more certain than that which cometh by the way of hearing; forasmuch as the Eye is a Witness it self of every Action whereof it taketh Notice, neither is by the Haggiers, was ittucken with iten an ex-ceffive Fear, that he could not betake himfelf to flight (Adeo proof essam auxilia formidat) until when the Relations carry always that certainty. And albeit the Ear in like manner be not deceived Shoulder, as though he were to awake him out of in her proper Object, for it faithfully giveth up a deep Sleep, threatned him with prefent Death, if that Sence which Sound hath delivered unto it; he would not prevent the Ruin of the Empire, yet forasmuch as the Fantasse hath greater Scope to coin her vain Conceptions, in regard of the absence of the Action, it is necessary that the discourfing Faculty be called for an Affiftant, before the Judgment can truly determine: And then it will appear that the Truth doth not always answer the keport which is made thereof; inatmuch as difealed Spirits will not flick to dilate or qualifie Relations, according to the Key wherein they themselves are tuned. And therefore this first cometh to be considered of in all such violent Commotions, by which of these two Senses the first Intelligence was received. But concerning the Judgment it felf this is most certain, that the more it is infected with the corruptions of the Flesh, the more violent are the Affections of the Soul. And again, the purer the Judgment is, and the higher it is lifted up from Earthly Natures, being no further interessed therein than to hold a Resolution of well-doing, the fewer and lighter are the Affections which trouble and moleft it: For then it better discerneth the Truth and Falsehood, good or evil that is in things.

To redress this Inconvenience, Casar betook himself to the fittest and most proper Remedy; which was by the Authority of his Speech to reftore reason to her former Dignity, and by Discourse, which Fear had interrupted in them, to put down an usurping Passion, which had so troubled the Government of the Soul, recalling it to the mean of true Resolution, which was to moderate Audacity with Wariness, but not to choak Valour with beaftly Cowardice: For these Oratory Inducing Perswasions were not the least Point of their Discipline; confidering how they framed the inward Habit of the Mind (being the Fountain and Beginning of all Motion) to give Life and Force to those Actions, which the Severity of outward Difcipline commanded. For as Laws and Constitutions of Men inforce Obedience of the Body: fo Reason and Perswasions must win the Souls Confent according to that Saying, Homines duci volunt,

CHAP. XVI.

Æsar being informed of these things, called a Casar. Council of War, admitting all the Centurions, of what degrees or orders foever, unto the same. And being thus affembled, he greatly blamed them, First, that any should be so inquisitive, as to imagine to themselves whither, and upon what Service they were carried. Concerning Ariovistus, he had in the time of Casar's Consulship most earnestly sued for the Friendship of the People of Rome: And why then should any Man misdeem that Rome: Ana way toen pounts and the from his Duty? For his own part he was verily perswaded, that if Ariovistus once knew his Demands, and understood the reasonable Offers that he would make him, he would not easily reject his Friendship, or the Favour of the People of Rome. But if he were so mad as to make War upon them, why should they fear him? Or why should they despair either of their own Prowess, or of Cælar's diligence? For if it came to that Point, the Enemy that they were to encounter had been tried what it deceived in its proper Object: And therefore he could do twice before; first in the Memory of their Fathers, when the Cimbri and Teutoni were vanquished by Marius, at what time the Army merited no less Honour than the General: And now of late again in Italy, at the Insurrection of the Bondmen; who were not a little furthered through the Practice and Discipline they had learned of the Romans. Whereby it might be discerned how good a thing it is to be constant and resolute; insomuch as whom for a time they feared without cause, being naked and unarmed, the same Men afterwards (although well armed and Conquerors withal) they nobly overcame. And to be short, these were no other Germans than those whom the Helvetians had vanquished in divers Conflicts; and not only in their own Country, where the Helvetians dwelt themselves, but also even at home at their own doors: And yet the same Helvetians were not able to make their Party good against our Armies

If any Man were moved at the Flight and overthrow of the Gauls, upon inquiry he should find, that being wearied with continual Wars (after that Ariovistus had for many Months together kept himself within his Camp, in a Boggy and Fenny Country) and despairing of any occasion of Battel, he suddenly set upon them as they were dispersed, and so overcame them, rather by Policy than by Force. Which although it took place against savage and unskilful People, yet was not Ariovistus so simple as to think that he could ensnare our Armies with the like Subtilties. As for those that feigned the cause of their Fear to be the Difficulty of Provision of Corn, and the Dangerousness of the Way, they seemed very arrogant in their Conceits, in presuming to direct their General, as if he had not known what pertained to his Duty. The Sequans and Lingons had undertook that Charge; besides that Corn was almost ripe every where in the Fields: And what the Ways were should shortly be seen.

Whereas it was given out that the Soldiers would not obey his Mandates, nor advance their Standards, he little valued it; for he was well affured, that if an Army refused to be obedient to their General, it was either because he was thought to be unfortunate in his Enterprizes, or else for that he was notoriously convicted of Avarice: But the whole Course of his life should witness his Innocency, and the Overthrow of the Helvetians his Happiness. And therefore that which he was minded to have put off for a longer time, he would now put in Execution out of Hand: For the Night following at the fourth Watch he would dislodge from thence; that without further delay he might understand, whether shame and respect of their Duty would prevail more with them, than Fear or Cowardice. And though he knew that no Man elfe would follow him, yet notwithstanding he would go with the tenth Legion alone of whom he had no Doubt or Suspicion, and would take them as a Guard to his Person. Cæsar had chiefly favoured this Legion, and put much trust in them for their Valour.

muco trujt in them for their valuar.

Upon the making of this Speech the Minds of all Men were wonderfully changed; for it bred in every one a great Alacrity and Define to fight: Neither did the tenth Legion forget to give him thanks by their Tribunes for the good Opinion he had of them, assuring him of their readiness to set forward to the War.

And then likewise the rest of the Legions made means by the Tribunes of the Soldiers and Centurions of the first Orders, to give Cæsar satisfaction; pro-testing they neither doubted nor feared, nor gave any Censure of the Issue of that War, but always left it to the Wisdom of the General.

Their Satisfaction being taken, and a View being made of the Ways by Divitiacus (whom of all the Gauls he best trusted) and Report being by him made, that in fetching a Compass of fifey Miles he might carry his Army in open and Champaign Countries; in the fourth Watch of the Night, according to his former Saying, he fet forward.

TN the Speech itself are prefented many Remark-1 ables, both concerning their Discipline and Military Instructions, which deserve Examination: amongst which I note first, the extraordinary number admitted to the Council; Omnium Ordinum ad id Consilium adhibitis Centurionibus: Whereas there were usually no more admitted to their Council of War but the Legates, Questor, Tribunes, and the Centurions of the first Orders; which I understand to be the first Hastate, the first Princeps, and the first Pilum of every Legion. And this is manifeftly proved out of the fifth Commentary, where Cicero was befieged by Ambiorix: In which, amongst other, there were two valiant Centurions, Pulfio and Varenus, between whom there was every Year great Emulation for place of Preferment; Etjam primis Ordinibus appropinqua-bant, saith Cafar, that is, they had passed by De-wherein, as in all the rest, there were three Ma-The Second OBSERVATION.

The First OBSERVATION.

grees through the lower orders of the Legion, and were very near the Dignity of the first Cohort, niples, and in every Maniple two Orders.

He first Morive which he useth to recall their a exiled Judgment, discovered their Breach of Discipline: For contrary to the course of Military Government, they had prefumed not only to make Inquiry, but to give out whether, and upon what Service they were carried; which in the Rigour of Camp-policy could not pass without due Punishment. For what can more contradict the Fortunate Success of an Expedition, than to suffer it to be measured with the vulgar Conceit, or weighed in the Balance of fuch falle Judgments? Especially when those weak Censors are to be Actors and Executioners of the Defign: For then every Man, will fute the Nature of the Action according to his own humour; although his humour be led with Blindness, and have no other Direction than an uncertain Apprehension of Profit or Disadvantage.

And in this case there cannot be a better prefident than Nature hath prescribed: For as natural Agents, whilft they concurr to produce a Work of abiolute Perfection, neither know what they do, nor can difcern the things they look upon, but yield themselves to be guided by a Moderator of infinite Knowledge: fo ought a Multitude to sub-mit their Ability to the Direction of some wise and prudent Captain, that beholdeth the Action in true Honour, and balanceth the loss of many Particulars with the Health and Safety of the publick Good. For if every Man should prescribe, who should obey? Tam nescire quedam Milites, quam feire oportet, faith Otho in Tacitus, upon the like Disorder : And again, Parendo potius quam imperia Ducum sciscitando, Resmilitares continentur. Which proveth that the greatest Vertue which is required in a Soldier is Obedience; as a thing wherein the Force of all Discipline confisteth.

The Third OBSERVATION.

N the reason which he useth to prove their dif- Weather Mes parity of Valour in regard of the Romans, who have greate were fuperiour to the Helvetians that had often-towage the times overthrown the Germans, he strengtheneth a Stranger the Argument with the advantage of the Place, and Committee faith that the Helvetians had worsted them, not only where the Helvetians dwelt themselves, but even in their own Country, and at home at their own doors: As though an Enemy were charged with greater Fury in the presence of a Mans own Country and dearest Friends, than in a strange and unknown Land.

This Question was handled in the Roman Senate by Fabius Maximus, and Scipio furnamed Africanus, when they fate in Counsel how to rid their Country of that subtile Carthaginian, that for Sixteen Years Space had fretted like a Canker the Beauty of Italy, wasted the Land, and brought it to desolation, sacked their Confedrates, or alienated them from their Duty, overthrown their Armies, flain their Confuls, and threatned their imperial City with Ruin and Destruction. Fabius, upon the motion to make War in Africk, thought it agreeable to nature first to defend that which was their own, before they attempted other Mens Poffeffions: When Peace was established in Italy, then let War be fet on foot in Africk; and first let them be without scar themselves, before they went about to terrifie others: For those Forces afforded little hope of Victory in another Kingdom, that were not able to free their own Country from so dangerous an Enemy. Alcibiades overthrew the Athenian Common-wealth with the like Counsel: And concerning Hannibal, let them be fure of this, that they should find him a forer Enemy in his own Country than in another King-

Scipio on the other fide, carried on with the honour of so glorious an Enterprize, wanted neither Reasons nor Example to impugn Fabius's Authority: For he shewed that Agathocles the Syracusian King, being a long time afflicted with the Punick War, averted the Carthaginian from Sicily by transporting his Forces into Africk. But how powerful it was to take away fear by retorting danger upon the Oppressor, could there be a prefenter Example than Hannibal? There was great difference in the nature of the Action, between the Spoil and Waft of a Stranger's Country, and to fee their own native Country wasted with Sword and Defruction: Plus animi est inserenti periculum, quam propulsani. For he that invadeth another's Kingdom easily discovereth both the advantage which may be taken against the Enemy, and the Strength whereupon he refteth. And amongst the variable Events of War, many unexpected Occafions arise, which present Victory to him that is all his Estate; which affrighteth and troubleth, ready to take it; and many ftrange Chances fo alter the course of things, that no forefight can discern what may happen.

With these and the like Remonstrances this Question of no less doubt than importance was handled by two famous and worthy Captains, whose minds (as it seemed) were intangled with fuch particular Affections for the present, as might rather draw them to wreft reason to their own humour, than to determine in fincerity of Judgment upon what specialities the truth was grounded in the contrariety of their Politions. But to leave other Commodities or Difadvantages which were annexed unto either part, I will only fet down fome Reasons, to prove how Valour and Courage may either grow or be abated by the Accidents which rife in a War of that Nature. And first this cannot be denied, the Testimony of an infallible Truth being grounded upon the Property of Man's nature, that as advantage bringeth hope of Victory, and hope conceiveth fuch Spirits as usually follow, when the thing which is hoped for is effected, and thereby the Courage becometh hardy and resolute in Victory: So on the other fide, disadvantage and danger breed fear, and fear so checketh valour, and controuleth the Spirits, that Vertue and Honour give place to Diffruft, and yield up their Interest to such Directors as can afford nothing but diffidence and irrefolution.

Neither can it be denied but he that fetteth upon an Enemy in a strange Country, and so preventerh fuch Attempts as might be made upon his own Territories, hath that advantage which giveth life unto action. and steeleth his Enterprize with Refolution. For befides the commodity of leaving when he lift, and proceeding as far forth as he shall find his means able to promote his Attempts, he knoweth that the strife and Controversie is not for his native Country, which he quietly enjoyeth, and is referved at all times to entertain him, howfoever Fortune shall favour his designs: But for a Stranger's Kingdom, which his Ambition thirsteth after, wherein, forasmuch as the Riches and Wealth of that State are laid before them as the recompence of their labour, besides the honour which is atchieved thereby, every Mans Valour foareth at a high Pitch, and their Courage is increased, without any Trouble or Disturbance of the other Faculties of the Mind. But when a Prince shall be affaulted in his own Kingdom, and in the fight of his Subjects have his Land confumed with Ruin and Destruction; the danger will so disturb the Powers of the Soul, that through the turbulent Disorder of the weaker Parts, the better Faculties will lofe their Prerogative of advising how the Enemy may be beft refifted, when as every Man shall apprehend the terrour of the danger, and few or none conceive the true means to avoid it:

And albeit the presence of such things as are dearest to his Soul, as the Piety and Respect of aged Parents, the tender Affection towards Wife and Children, are fufficient to raise Valour to the highest point of Resolution; yet the Motives are of such Weight, as will rather make them diffident of their own worth, as infufficient to maintain fo great a cause, than hold them in that Resolution which true Honour affecteth: Forasmuch as the Terrour and Fear of fo great a Danger will present a greater measure of Woes to their Mind, than the hope of Victory can afford them Joy.

Hence therefore groweth the difference between him that feeketh to maintain that Estate which he hath in poffession by Force of Arms, and another that feeketh to increase his Means by Valour. For the former is presented with the danger of losing having no other Reward propounded unto him: And the other looketh upon the advantage which he gaineth by overcoming, which much increaseth his Valour, without any Loss or Disadvantage, if he chance to be worsted. And therefore there is always great Odds between him that hath already loft his Goods, and is by that means become defperate, having nothing further to lofe; and another that yet keepeth his Substance, but is in danger to lose it: For Fear will so dismay his Mind, that he will rather diftrust his own Ability, than entertain a Resolution of Valour.

To prove this, we need not feek other Examples than those imperial Cities in whose cause this controversie was first moved. For when Hannibal was come into Italy, and had defeated Sempronius the Conful at Trebia, the Romans were driven into fuch an Ecstafie of Terrour, that they believed verily that the Enemy was then coming to affault the City; neither had they any hope or aid in themfelves to keep or defend the same. On the other fide, Scipio was no fooner landed in Africk, but there was such a Tumult in Carthage, as though the City had been already taken: neither could the opinion of Victory, which Hannibal by a conquering Army in Italy had confirmed for fixteen Years together, prevail in the apprehension of so imminent a danger. And then that which Fabius borrowed of Nature to teach the Romans (that his own Kingdom.

The Fourth OBSERVATION.

The last Circumstance which I note in this Speech, was the trust which he reposed in the tenth Legion, being in it self peradventure as faulty as any other: Wherein he shewed great Art and fingular Wisdom. For he that hath once offended, and is both burdened with the guilt of Conscience and upbraided with the reproach of Men, can hardly be perfwaded that his Fault can be purged with any Satisfaction. And although the Punishment be remitted, yet the Memory of the Fact will never be blotted out with any vertuous Action, but still remaineth, to cast Dishonour upon the Offender, and to accuse him of Disloy-

And therefore it oftentimes happeneth, that an Errour being once rashly committed, through Despair of Remission admitteth no true Penitency but either draweth on more grievous Crimes, confirming that of the Poet, Scelere Scelus tuendum oft; or maintaineth his errour by wilful Obstinacy: As it is faid of the Lion, that being found by Hunters in a Cave, he will rather die in the place than quit it, for shame that he was found in so base a place of Refuge; and therefore his property is thus expreffed, ingrediendo cacus, exeundo protervus. This did Cesar wisely prevent, by clearing the tenth Legion of that of which he accused the rest of the Army; which made them the more earnest to answer his expectation, inafmuch as they were witness to themselves of a common Errour: And the other Legions envying at their Fortune, resolved to shew as great alacrity in the Sequel of the War, and to deferve more than the Judgment of the Emperour had imputed to their Fellows.

CHAP. XVII.

The Treaty between Cafar and Arioviftus.

He seventh day as he continued on his March, his Spies brought him word that Ario-viftus with all his Forces was within twenty four Miles of that Place: Who as foon as he understood of Calar's coming, sent Embassadors un-to him, declaring that for smuch as he was come somewhat nearer, and that he might do it without danger, he was content to admit of a Parley. Cæfar refused not the offer, thinking now to find him reasonable, in that he offered of his own accord what he had formerly denied at Calar's request : And thereby was in good hope that understanding what was required, he would in the end confider of the many Favours he had received from the People of Rome, and defist from fuch wilful courses.

The fifth day following was appointed for the Treaty. In the mean time there passed often Messages reciprocally between them. Ariovistus required that Cæsar would not bring any Footmen to the Parley, for that he feared to be circumvented by Treachery; and therefore thought fit that either Party (bould come only with their Cavalry: Otherwise he would not give by their means the Tribute due unto him should be a meeting.

feek other Mens Possessimans: For with all speed they feek other Mens Possessimans: For with all speed they fent for Hamibal out of Italy, to be their Champion against young Scipio. If therefore other things be correspondent (as there are many other particularities concerning the Power and Strength of either Nation to be seen that the state of the tenth Legion (whom he best trusted) unon their Horses; that, if he should be seen the state of th it much better for a Prince to invade an Enemy in done more for them than he had promifed; for he had his own Country, than to attend him at home in said before, he would make the tenth Legion as a Guard to his Person, and now, he had enrolled them all for Horsemen.

There was a great and open Plain, and in the midst thereof a rifing Mount, which was almost in the mid-way between both the Camps: and thither, according to the agreement, they came to parley. The Legion which Casar had brought with him on Horseback, he placed two hundred Paces from the faid Mount: And likewise the Horsemen of Ariovistus stood in the same distance. Ariovistus requested they might talk on Horseback, and bring each of them ten Persons to the Conference. As their meeting, Calar began his Speech with a Commemoration of the Favours and Benefits the Senate had done unto him, in that he was by their Authority entituled by the name of a King, and a Friend, and thereupon had received great Gifts: Which favour fell but unto a few, and was by the Romans given only to Men of great Defert: Whereas he without any occasion of access unto them, or other just cause on his behalf, had obtained those Honours through his Courtefie, and the Bounty of the Se-

He shewed him further what ancient and reasonable causes of Amity tied them so firm to the Heduans: What Decrees and Orders of Senate had oftentimes been made in their Favour and Behalf: That from all antiquity the Heduans had held the Principality of Gallia, and that long before they were in Amity with the Romans. The People of Rome bad always this Custom, not only to endeavour that their Allies and Confederates should not lose any thing of their Properties ; but also that they might increase in Dignity and Reputation: And therefore who could endure to fee that forced from them, which they quietly possessed when they entred League with the Ro-

In like manner he required the Performance of fuch things which he had formerly given in charge to his Embassadours; that he should not make War either upon the Heduans, or their Affociates: That he shoula restore their Hostages: And if he could not return any part of the Germans back again over the Rhine, yet he should forbear to bring any more into that Coun-

Ariovistus made little answer to Cæsar's demands. but spake much of his own Vertues and Valour; That he was come over the Rhine, not out of his own defire, he was come over the Klinic, not out of his own defire, but at the mediation and intreaty of the Gauls; that he had not left his Houfe and Kindred but with great hope of high Rewards; the Possession which he had in Gallia were given him by themselver; their Hosfages were columnarily delivered unto him; he took Tribute by the law of Arms, which was fuch as Conquerours might lay upon the Vanquished; he made no War upon the Gauls, but the Galls made War upon him: All the States of Gallia came to fight against him. and had put themselves into the Field, whose Forces were in one Battle all dispersed and overthrown. If they were desirous to make another tryal, he was ready to undertake them: But if they would have Peace, it were an Injury to retract that Tribute which of their own accord they had paid until that time. He expected that the Amity of the People of Rome should be rather an Honour and a Safety, than a Loss unto him, and that he had fought it to that end: But if retracted, he would as willingly refuse their Friendship pedient. Cæsar was unwilling to give any further as he had defired it. In that he had brought so many meeting; and the rather, for that the day before the Germans into Gallia, it was rather for his own defence, than of any purpose to subdue the Country; as might appear by that he had not come thither but upon intreaty, and fet no War on foot but for his own defence. He was feated in Gallia before the Romans came thither; neither had the People of Rome before that time carried their Army beyond the Bounds of their Province: And therefore he knew not what he meant to intrude himself into his Possessions. This was his Province of Gallia, as that was ours: And as it was not lawful for him to command in our Quarters, so it was not fitting that they should disturb his Government.

In that he alledged the Heduans were by decree of Senate adopted into the Amity of the People of Rome : he was not so barbarous, or unacquainted with the course of things, as to be ignorant that in the last War of the Allobroges they were aiding and affifting to the Romans: And in the Quarrel the Heduans had with the Sequans, the Romans were in like manner affifting unto them. Whereupon he had good occafion to suspect that Cafar under pretence of League and Amity, kept his Army in Gallia for his Ruin and Destruction: And that if he did not depart and withdraw his Army out of those Countries, he would no longer take him for a Friend, but for an Enemy. And if his fortune were to flay him, he foould perform a very acceptable Service to many noble and chief Men of Rome (as he had well understood by Letters and Messengers he had received from them) whose Favour and Amity he should purchase by taking away his Life. But if he would depart, and leave him the free Possession of Gallia, he would gratifie him with great Rewards : And what War foever he defired to ve undertaken, should be gone through withall, without his

Many things were spoken by Cæsar to shew why he could not desift from that course; for neither was it his Use nor the Custom of the People of Rome, to for-sake their well-deserving Associates: Neither could be think that Gallia did rather belong to Ariovistus than the Romans, The Arverns and Rutenes were in due course of War subdued by Q. Fabius Maximus: whom the People of Rome had pardoned, and not reduced to a Province, or made them Stipendiaries. And if Antiquety were looked into, the People of Rome had good Claim to that Country: But for a much as the intention and will of the Senate was they should remain a free People, they were suffered to be governed by their own Laws, and left unto themselves, notwith-

Handing any former Conquest by Force of Arms.

Whilf these things were treated of in Parley, it was told Cæsar that Ariovistus's Horsemen did approach nearer to the Mount, and that accosting our Men they assaulted them with Stones and other Wedpons: whereupon he brake off, and betook himself to his Party, commanding them not to cast a Weapon at the Enemy. For albeit he well perceived he might without Peril of that elect Legion give Battel to his Cavalry; yet be thought fit to refrain, leaft it should be said be had entrapped them with a Parley, contra-ry to Faith made and Agreement. After it was reported amongst the vulgar Soldiers how arrogantly Ariovistus had carried himself in the Treaty, forbidding the Romans to frequent any part of Gallia, and that their Cavalry had affaulted our Men, and that thereupon the Parley brake off; the Army was possessed with a greater Alacrity and defire to fight than before. Two days after Ariovistus sent Messengers to Cæsar, fignifying that he defired to treat with him concerning those things which were left unperfect, and thereupon willed him to appoint another day of meeting; or if he liked not that, to fend some untoihim with Authority to conclude of such things as skould be found ex-

Germans could not be restrained from Violence and Force of Arms. Neither did he think he might fafely expose the Person of any of his Followers to the iny expote the retyon of any of this routowers to the in-bumanity of fuch barbarous People; and therefore thought it fittest to find unto him M. Valerius Pro-cillus the Son of C. Valerius Caburius, a vertuous Young Man, and well bred, whose Father was made free of Rome by C. Valer. Flaccus: Which he did the rather in regard of his singular integrity, and his perfectness in the French Tongue, which Ariovistus through long continuance had learned; and that the Germans had no cause of Offence against him. And with him he sent M. Titius, that was familiarly acquainted with Ariovistus, with Instruction to hear what was faid, and to make report thereof to Cæfar. Whom as Soon as Arioviftus Saw come into his Camp, he cried out in the Presence of his Army, demanding wherefore they came thither, and whether they were not fent as Spies. And as they were about to make answer, he cut them off, and commanded them to be put in Irons.

The same day he removed his Camp, and lodged himself under a Hill, six Miles from Cæsar, The next day he brought his Forces along by Cæsar's Camp, and encamped himself two Miles beyond him; of purpose to cut off all such Corn and Convoys as should be for to the Romans by the Heduans and Sequans. From that day forward by the Space of five Days together Cæsar imbattelled his Men before his Camp: to the intent that if Ariovistus had a mind to give Battel, he might do it when he would. But Ariovistus all this while kept his Army within his Camp, and daily sent out his Horsemen to skirmish with the Romans.

This was the manner of fighting which the Germans had practifed: there were 6000 Horsemen, and as many frong and nimble Footmen, whom the Horsemen had selected out of the whole Host, every Man one for his Safeguard: These they had always at hand with them in Battel and unto these they resorted for Succour. If the Horsemen were over-charged, these ever stept in to help them. If any one were wounded or unhorsed, they came about him and succoured him. If the matter required either to adventure forward or to retire speedily back again, their Swiftness was such (through continual Exercise) that hanging on the Horse-mane by the one Hand, they would run as safe as the Horses.

OBSERVATION

T may feem strange unto the Soldiers of our Fortmen intime, that the Footmen should be mingled pell-transgled mell amongst the Horsemen, without hurt and dis-Horsemen. advantage to themselves; sounlikely it is that they should either succour the Horsemen in any danger, or annoy the Enemy: And therefore some have imagined that these Footmen in the Encounter, cast themselves into one Body, and so charging the Enemy affifted the Horsemen. But the Circumstances of this place, and of others which I will alledge to this purpose, plainly evince that these Footmen were mingled indifferently amongst the Horsemen to affist every particular Man as his Fortune and Occasion required: And therefore the choice of these Footmen was permitted to the Horsemen, in whose service they were to be imployed, that every Man might take his Friend, in whom he reposed greatest Confidence. When they were overcharged, these stept in to help them; if any Man were wounded or unhorsed, he had his Footman ready to affift him: And when they were to go upon any speedy Service, or fuddenly to retire upon advantage, they flayed

Lib. I.

Which Services they could not poffibly have performed without Confusion and Disorder, if the Footmen had not feverally attended upon them, according to the affection specified in their particular Election.

The principal use of these Footmen of the Germans, confifted in the aid of their own Horsemen upon any necessity, not so much regarding their Service against the Enemy, as the affiftance of their Horsemen. But the Romans had long before prachiled the fame Art to a more effectual purpose; namely, as a principal Remedy not only to refift, but to defeat far greater Troops of Horse than the Enemy was able to oppose against them. Whereof the most ancient Memory which History mentioneth, is recorded by Livy in the fecond Punick War, at the Siege of Capua, under the Regiment of Quintus Fulvius the Conful; where it is faid that in all their Conflicts, as the Roman Legions returned with the better, so their Cavalry was always worfted; and therefore they invented this means to make that good by Art which was wanting in Force.

Out of the whole Army were taken the choicest young Men, both for Strength and Agility, and to them were given little round Bucklers, and feven Darts apiece instead of their other Weapons: These Soldiers practised to ride behind the Horsemen, and speedily to light from the Horses at a Watch-word given, and so to charge the Enemy on Foot. And when by Exercise they were made fo expert, that the novelty of the Invention no whit affrighted them, the Roman Horsemen went forth to encounter with the Enemy, every Man carrying his Foot-Soldier behind him; who at the encounter suddenly alighting, charged upon the Enemy with such a Fury, that they followed them in flaughter to the Gates of Capua. And hence, faith Livy, grew the first Institution of the Velites: which ever after that time were enrolled with the Legions. The Author of this Stratagem is faid to be one Q. Navius a Centurion, and was Honourably rewarded by Fulvius the Conful for themselves upon the Mane of the Horses with one and so the Footmen might have place among hand, and so ran as fast as the Horsemen could them: Or otherwise for so good an advantage they would eafily make place for the Footmen to ferve among them: But howfoever it was, it appeareth by this circumstance how little the Romans feared Troops of Horse, considering that the best means to defeat their Horse was by their Foot Companies. But to make it more plain, of many Examples I will only alledge two; the one out of Livy, to prove that the Roman Horsemen were not comparable for Service to Footmen: The other out of Hirtius, to shew the same effect belle affect against Strangers and Numidian Horsemen.

Salust in the History of Jugarth saith, That Marius mingled the Velites with the Cavalry of the Affociates, Ut quacunque invaderent equitatus hostium propulsarent. The like practice was used by Casar, as appeareth in the third Book of the Civil War; faving that instead of the Velites, he mingled with his Horsemen four hundred of the Inflieft of his Legionary Soldiers, to refift the Cavalry of Pompey, while the reft of his Army passed over the River Genusum, after the Overthrow he had at Dyrrachium: Qui tantum profecere, faith the Text, ut equestri pralio commisso, pellemight be recited, but these are sufficient to prove, that the greatest Captains of ancient Times strengthned their Cavalry with Footmen dispersed amongst them. The Roman Horsemen, saith Potybius, at the first carried but a weak limber Pole or Staff, and a little round Buckler; but afterwards they used the Furniture of the Gracians : which Josephus affirmeth to be a ftrong Launce or Staff, and three or four Darts in a Quiver, with a Buckler, and a long Sword by their right fide. The use of their Launce was most effectual when they charged in Troops, Pouldron to Pouldron; and that manner of Fight afforded no means to intermingle Footmen: But when they used their Darts, every Man got what advantage of Ground

In the Confulships of L. Valerius and Marcus Horatius, Valerius having Fortunately overthrown the Equi and the Volsci, Horatius proceeded with as great Courage in the War against the Sabines; wherein it happened, that in the day of Battel the Sabines referved two thousand of their Men to give a fresh assault upon the left Wing of the Romans, as they were in Conflict: Which took fuch effect, that the Legionary Footmen of that Wing were forced to Retreat. Which the Roman Horsemen (being in number fix hundred) perceiving, and not being able with their Horse to make Head against the Enemy, they presently forfook their Horfes, and made haft to make good the place on Foot; wherein they carried themfelves fo Valiantly, that in a moment of time they gave the like advantage to their Footmen against the Sabines, and then betook themselves again to their Horses, to pursue the Enemy in chase as they fled. For the second point; the Numidians, as Casar witnesseth, were the best Horsemen that ever he met with, and used the same Art as the Germans did, mingling among them light-armed Footmen. An Ambuscado of these Numidians charging the Legions upon a fuddain, the History faith that primo impetu legionis Equitatus & levis armatura, hostium nullo negotio, loco pulsa & dejecta est de colle. And as they sometimes retired, and sometimes charged upon the Rereward of the Army, according to the manner of the Numidian Fight, the History faith, Casariani interim non amplius tres aut quatuor milites veterani si se convertissent, & pila viribus contorta in Numidas infestos conjecissent, amplius duorum millium ad unum terga vertebant. So that to free himself of this inconvenience, he took his Horsemen out of the Rereward, and placed his Legions there, Ita vim hostium per legionarium militem commodius sustinebat. And ever as he marched, he caused three hundred Soldiers of every Legion to be free and without burthen, that they might be ready upon all occasions; Quos in Equitatum Labieni immisit. Tum Labienus, conversis equis, signorum conspectu perterrisus turpissime contendis fugere, multis ejus oc-cisis, compluribus vulneratis: Milites legionarii ad latiff the Lexi, is equestry praise commings, practice of the configuration of the History, to rake away all furpiction of falfifying or wrefting any thing to an affected opinion. If any Man will look into the reason of this disparity, he shall find it to be chiefly the work of the Roman Pile (an unrefiftible Weapon) and the terror of Horfemen; especially when they were cast with the advantage of the place, and sell so thick that there was no means to avoid them.

But to make it plain that any light-armed Footmen could better make Head against a Troop of Horse, than the Cavalry of their own Party, although they bear but the same Weapons: Let us confider how nimble and ready they were that fought on foot, either to take an advantage, or to thun and avoid any danger; cafting their Darts he could, as our Carbines for the most part do, with far greater Strength and more Certainty, than the Horsemen could do. For as the Force of all the Engines of old Time, as the Baliffae, Catarbeau besides many other Advantages, all averpultæ and Tolenones, proceeded from that Stability and refting Center which Nature affordeth as the only Strength and Life of the Engine: So what force foever a Man maketh, must principally proceed from that Firmness and Stay which Nature, by the Earth or some other unmoveable rest, giveth to the Body, from whence it taketh more or less Strength, according to the Violence which it performeth; as he that lifteth up a Weight from the Ground, by fo much treadeth heavier upon the Earth, by how much the thing is heavier than his Body. The Footmen therefore having a furer flay to counterpoize their forced Motion than the Horsemen had, cast their Darts with greater Violence, and confequently with more Certain-

CHAP. XVIII.

C.esar preventeth Ariovistus of his Purpose by making Two Camps.

Hen Cælat perceived that Ariovistus meant nothing less than to fight, but kept himself within his Camp; least peradventure he should intercept the Sequans, and others of his Associates, as they came with Convoys of Corn to the Romans, beyond that Place wherein the Germans abode about fix hundred Paces from their Camp, he chose a Ground meet to encamp in: And marching thither in three Battels, commanded Two of them to stand ready in Arms, and the Third to fortifie the Camp. Arioviftus fent fixteen thousand Foot and all his Horse to interrupt the Soldiers, and hinder the Intrenchment. Notwithstanding Cæsar, as he had before determined, caused two Battels to withstand the Enemy, and the Third to go Battels to writhana the Enemy, and we Event to get through with the Work: Which being ended he left there two Legions, and part of the affociate Forces, and led the other four Legions back again into the greater Camp.

The next day Cæsar, according to his Custom, brought his whole Power out of both his Camps; and marching a little from the greater Camp, he put his Men in array, and proffered Battel to the Enemy: But perceiving that Ariovistus would not stir out of his Trenches, about Noon he conveyed his Army into their Several Camps. Then at length Ariovistus Sent part of his Forces to affault the leffer Camp. The Encounter continued very sharp on both Parts until the Evening; and at Sun-setting after many wounds gi-ven and taken, Ariovistus conveyed his Army again into their Camp. And as Cæsar made inquiry of the Captives, what the reason was that Ariovistus refused Battel, he found this to be the cause; The Germans had a Custom that the Women should by casting of Lots and Southsaying declare whether it were for their Advantage to fight or no: And that they found by their Art the Germans could not get the Victory, if they fought before the New Moon.

The First OBSERVATION.

First, we may observe what special Importance this manner of Incamping carried in that absolute Discipline which the Romans observed, and by which they conquered fo many Nations: For befides the Safety which it afforded their own Troops, it ferved for a Hold well-fenced and manned, or as it were a ftrong fortified Town in any Part of the Field where they saw advantage; and as oft as Carts and Carriages, that there might be no hope at they thought it expedient, either to fortifie them- all left to fave any Man by Flight. And in these they ring the Saying of Domitius Corbulo, dolabra vincendum esse Hostem: A thing long time neglected, but of late happily renewed by the Commanders of fuch Forces as serve the States in the United Provinces of Belgia; whom Time and Practice of the Wars hath taught to enterrain the use of the Spade, and to hold it in as great Reputation as any Wea-pons whatfoever, which may be thought worthy Executioners of the Feats of Arms.

The Second OBSERVATION.

N the fecond place we may observe that there was no Nation fo barbarous (for I understand the Germans to be as barbarous in regard of the Notions of Religion, as any known Nation of that time, being in a Climate io near the North, that it afforded no Contemplation at all) that could not make use in their greatest Affairs, of that Superstition to which their Mind was naturally inthralled, and forge Prophecies and Divinations, as well to ftir up as to moderate the irregular Motions of a Multitude, according as they might beft ferve to advantage their Proceedings. Neither did Cafar let slip the Occasion of making use of this their Religion: For understanding by their Prisoners, that their Divinations forbad them to fight before the New Moon, he used all the Means he could to provoke them to Battel; that their religious Opinion of Mischieving might prejudice their Resolution to return Conquerours. Which may serve to prove, that a superstitious People are subject to many inconveniences, which Industry or Fortune may difcover to their Overthrow

It is recorded that Columbus being General of fome Forces which Ferdinando King of Caftile fent to discover the West Indies, and suffering great Penury for want of Victuals in the Ille of Jamaica, after that he had observed how the Islanders worarter that he had otherwed how the manufest wor-hipped the Moon, and having Knowledge of an Eclipse that was shortly after to happen, he told the Inhabitants that unless they would furnish him with fuch Necessaries as he wanted for the time, the Wrath of their God should quickly appear towards them, by changing his bright shining Face into Obscurity and Darkness: Which was no fooner happened, but the poor Indians, strucken with a fuperstitious Fear of that which the Course of Nature required, kept nothing back that might affift their Enemies to depopulate and over-run their own Country.

CHAP. XIX.

C.e.far feeketh means to give them Battel and the Germans dispose themselves thereunto.

He next Day Cæsar left a sufficient Garri- Cæsar. fon in each of his Camps; and for asmuch as the Number of his legionary Soldiers was Small in respect of the Multitude of the Germans, he placed all the Auxiliary Troops for a Schew before the lesser Camp: And putting his Legions in a Tripple Battel, he marched towards the Camp of Ariovistus. And then at length were the Germans constrained to bring out their Power, fetting every Tribe and People by themselves, in like distance and order of Battel (as the Harudes, Marcomans, Triboces, Vangiones, Nemetes, Sedulians and Swevians) and environing their whole Army with selves or straiten the Enemy, by cutting off his placed their Women, that they by their out-stretched

Lib. 6.

Hands and Tears moving pity, might implore the Soldiers, as they descended by course to the Battel, not to deliver them into the Bondage and Thraldom of the Cæsar assigned to every Legion a Legat and a Questor, that every Man might have an Eye-witness of his Valour: And he himself began the Battel with the right Wing, for a finuch as he perceived that part of Ariovistus's Army to be the weakest.

The First OBSERVATION.

The Romans, even from the Infancy of their State, were ever zealous Admirers of true Honour, and always defired to behold with the Eye to what measure of Vertue every Man had attained; that the Tongue with greater Fervency of Spirit might found out the Celebration of Macte Virtue. which imported more Honour than any Wealth that could be heaped upon them. Neither was this the least part of their Wisdom; considering that the most precious things that are, lose much of their Worth, if they be not futed with other correspondent Natures, whose Sympathy addeth much moreExcellency thanis discerned when they appear by themselves without such Affistance. For how fmall is the Beauty which Nature hath given to the Eye-pleafing Diamond, when it is not adorned with an artificial Form? Or what Perfection can the Form give, without a Foil to strengthen it? Or what good is in either of them, if the Light do not illuminate it? Or what avail all these, where there wanteth an Eye to admire it, a Judgment to value it, and an heart to embrace it? Such an Union hath Nature imprinted in the diversity of Creatures concurring to Perfection, and especially in moral Actions, in whose Carriage there is a far greater Exactness of Correspondency required to approve them honourable, than was requifite to make the Jewel beautiful. And this did Cæsar in all his Battels; amongst the rest, that at Alesia is particularly noted in this manner, Quod in Confpe-All Imperatoris res gerebatur, neque recte aut turpiter factum celari poterat, utrosque E Laudis Cupiditas, E Timor Ignominia ad Virtuem excitabat. And when Livie would express how valiantly an Action was carried, he faith no more but in Conspectu Imperatoris res gerebatur : Which is as much as to fay, that forasmuch as the Romans were diligent obfervers of every Mans worth, rewarding Vertue with Honour, and Cowardice with reproach, every Man bent his whole Endeavour to delerve the good Opinion of his General, by discharging that Duty which he owed to the Common-wealth with all Loyalty and Faithfulness of Spirit.

The Second OBSERVATION.

The Romans had four Forms of the Front of their Battel. The first was called Acies recta, when neither the Wings nor the main Body was advanced one before another, but were all carried in a right Line, and made a straight Front; and this was their most usual manner of embattelling.

The second Form of the Front was called Obliqua, when as one of the Wings was advanced nearer unto the Enemy than the rest, to begin the Battel: And this was commonly, as Vegetius noteth, the right Wing; for the right Wing of an Army had great advantage against the left of the Enemies, in regard of their Weapons and Furniture. But Cafar did it in this place, because he perceived that the Enemy was weakest in that part; following are Mens Judgments to that which is already happened, that the Sequel of every Action dependeth for the most part upon the beginning. Dimidium facti qui bene capit habet, saith a Poet: And not without great reason, so forcible continually is the beginning, and so connexed to the Sequel by the Nature of a precedent Cause, that the End must needs err from the common Courfe, when it doth not participate of that Quality which was in the Beginning. Neither can there be any good End without a good Beginning: For although the Beginning be oftentimes disaftrous and unlucky, and the End fortunate and happy, yet before it came to that End there was a fortunate Beginning: For the bad Beginning was not the Beginning of a good, but of an evil End. And therefore that his Men might foresee a happy End in a good Beginning, it behoved him with the best of his Army to affault the weakest part of the Enemy.

The third Form of the Front is called Simuata, when both the Wings are advanced forward, and the Battel standeth backward off from the Enemy, after the fashion of a Half-Moon. Scipio used it in Spain, having observed some days before that the Enemy continually so disposed of the Battel, that his best Soldiers were always in the midst; and therefore Scipio put all his Old Soldiers in the Wings and brought them out first to charge upon the weakest Part of the Enemy, that those might decide the Controversie, before the other that were in the midft could come to fight.

The last Form is called Gibbosa, or gibbera Acies, when the Battel is advanced, and the two Wings lag behind. This Form did Hannibal use in the Battel of Canne; but with this Art, that he ftrengthened his two Wings with the best of his Soldiers, and placed his weakest in the midst, that the Romans following the Retreat of the Battel, which was eafily repell'd, might be enclosed on each fide with two Wings.

CHAP. XX.

The Battel between Cafar and Arioviftus.

He sign of the Battel being thereupon given Casar. our Men charged upon the Enemy very fiercely; and they on the other fide received them fo warmly, that the Legions had no time to cast their Piles, and in that regard made hast to betake themselves to their Swords: But the Germans according to their manner, putting themselves into a Phalanx, received the force of their Swords. In the Battel there were many legionary Soldiers feen to leap upon the Phalanx, and to pull up with their hands the Targets that covered it, and jo to wound and kill those that were underneath: And so the left Wing of the Enemy was overthrown and put

Now while the right Wing was thus busied the left Wing was overcharged with an unequal Multitude of the Germans : Which young Craffus the General of the Horse no sooner perceived (having more Scope and Liberty than any of the Commanders that were in the Battel) but he sent Tertiam Aciem, the third Battel to rescue and aid their Fellows that were in Danger; by means whereof the Fight was renewed, and all the Enemy was put to flight, and never looked back until they came to the Rhine, which was about fifty Miles from the Place where they fought. Where Some few of them Saved themselves by Swimming: Others found some Boats, and so escaped. Ariovistus and Maxim of great Authority, that the wakeft part lighting upon a little Bark tied to the Shore, recovered of an Enemy is in the beginning to be charged the other fide, and so save himself: The rest were all with the Strength of an Army: For so savourable stands by the Horsemen. Ariovistus had troe Wiver:

One a Swevian, whom he brought with him from home; and the Other of Novica, the Sifter of King Vocion, fent unto him by her Brother into Gallia, and married there: Both these perished in that Fight. His two Daughters likewise being there, One was slain, and the Other taken.

At Castar purjued the German Horsemen, it was his chance to light upon Valerius Procillus, as he was drawn up and down by hit Kepers bound in three Chains: Which Accident was as grateful to him as the Vistory it self; being so fortunate to recover his familiar Friend, and a Man of Reputation in the Province, whom the barbarous Enemy (contrary to the Law of Nations) had cass into Prifon. Neither would Fortune by the loss of him abate any thing of great Plassire and Contentment: For he reported that in his own Presence they had three several times cast loss whether he should be hurned alive; and that still be essent by the stortune of the Lots. And M. Tittus was found in like manner, and brought unto him. The Fame of this Battel being carried beyond the Rhine, the Swevians that were come to the Banks of the Rhine returned home again: Whom the Inhabitants near upon that River purjued, sinding them terrissed and distracted, and stew a great Num-

Casar having thus ended two great Wars in one Summer, brought bis Army into their wintering Camps, somewhat somer than the time of the Year required; and leaving Labienus to command them, himself returned into the hither Gallia, to keep Courts and publick Diets.

The First OBSERVATION.

This Phalanx here mentioned can hardly be proved to be the right Macedonian Phalanx; but we are rather to understand it to be so termed by reason of the close and compact Embattelling, rather than in any other respect: and it resembled much a Testudo, as I said of the Helvestian Phalanx. Secondly, I observe that Casar kept the old Rule concerning their Discipline in Fight: For although the name of Triaries be not mentioned in his Hiftory; yet he omitted not the Substance, which was, to have primam, secundam, & tertiam Aciem : and that prima Acies should begin the Battel, and the second should come fresh and affist them: Or peradventure if the Enemy were many and ftrong, the first and second Battel were joyned together, and so charged upon the Enemy with greater Fury and Violence; but at all Adventures the third Battel was ever in Subfidio, as they termed it, to fuccour any part that should be overcharged; which was a thing of much Consequence, and of great Wisdom. For if we either respect the encouragement of the Soldiers, or the cafualty of Fortune, what could be more added to their Discipline in this behalf, than to have a fecond and a third Succour, to give Strength to the fainting Weakness of their Men, and to repair the disadvantage which any Accident should cast upon them? Or if their Valour were equally balanced, and Victory stood doubtful which of the two Parties she should honour, these always stept in, being fresh, against weary and over-laboured Spirits, and so drew Victory in despight of casualty unto themselves.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Concerning use of Lots, it will not be amiss to news of Lats to look into the nature of them, being in former times fo general, that there was no Nation, civil or barbarous, but was directed in their greatest Affairs by the Sentence of Lots. As is undeniable from that which Solomon faith in the fixteenth of Proverbs, The Lots are cast into the Lap, but the direction thereof belangesh to the Lord: Through the Knowledge whereof Joshna was directed to take Achan, the Mariners Jonas, and the Apostles to consecrate Marthias: So whether the Heathen and barbarous People, whose Blindness in the way of Truth could direct them no further than to sense less superfiction, and put them in mind of a Duty which they owed, but could not tell them what it was, nor how to be performed; whether these, I say, were perswaded that there was any supernatural Power in their Lotteries, which directed the Action to the decree of Destiny, and as the Gods would have it, it remainestif doubsful, Aristale, the wisest of the Heathen concerning things natural, nameth that Event casual, or proceeding from Fortune, of which the reason of Man could affign no cause, or (as he faith) which hath no cause. So that whatsoever happened in any Action besides the intent of the Agent and Workman, was termed an effect of Fortune, or chance of Hab-nab: For all other Effects, which depended upon a certainty and definite cause, were necesfarily produced; and therefore could not be cafual, or subject to the inconstancy of Chance. And because many and sundry such Chances daily happened, which like Terra Filii had no Father, and could not be warranted as lawful Children, either to Nature or to Reason, by the appearance of an efficient Cause, they reduced them all to the power of Fortune, as the principal efficient and sovereign Cause of all such unexpected Events: That is, Caute of all fuch unexpected Events: I had is, they made nothing else the Governess and Directress of many things. Which afterward grew to such Credit amongst Men, that it surpassed in dignity all natural Causes, and was desired with celestial Honour, as the Poet saith, Te Nos facimus Fortuna Deam, Caloque locamus. By the providence of this blind Goddess, which held her Deity by the Tenure of Mens ignorance, were all casual Acti-Tenure of Mens agnorance, were an Causa Actrons directed and especially Lots; the event whereof depended only upon her pleasure and decree. Neither could their direction be affigned to any other power; for then their nature had been altered from Chance to Certainty, and the event could not have been called Sors, but must have been reputed in the order of necessary Effects, whereof discourse of Reason acknowledgeth a certain foregoing Cause.

Whereby we fee upon how weak an Axle-Tree the greatest motions of the godlefs World were turned, having Irregularity and Uncertainty for the Intelligentie that governed their revolutions. And herein all forts of Men (although in divers refpects) refled as well contented as if an Oracle had spoken unto them, and revealed the mysteries of fatal Definy.

of fatal Deftiny.

Rome directed the main course of her Government by the fortune of this mock-deftiny. For although their Confuls and Tribunes were elected by the People, who pleased their own fancy with the free choice of their Commanders, and faited their obsedience with a well-liking Authority: Yet the publick Affairs which each Conful was severe.

rally to manage, was shared out by Lots. For if an invented to interess the One in that Office, and to Enemy were entred into their Confines to depopulate and wast their Territories, the Lots affigned this Conful for the Government of the City, and the other to command the Legions, and to ma-

If Forces were to be fent into divers Provinces, and against several Enemies, neither the Senate nor the People could give to either Conful his task; but their peculiar charges were authorized by Lots. If any extraordinary Actions were to be done in the City, as the dedication of a Temple, the san-Ctifying of the Capitol after a Pollution; Sors omnia versat; that did all in all. And yet (not-withstanding the weak Foundation of this Pra-Gice in their Theology and deepest Divinity) we absolute Government, wherein Vertue joyned with true Wisdom to make an unexampled Pattern, we may not think, I fay, but they forefaw the manifold Danger, which in the course of com-mon Actions could no other way be prevented but by the use of Lots. For when things are equal-ly levelled between divers Objects, and run with indifferency to equal Stations, there must be fome controlling Power to draw the Current to-wards one Coaft, and to appropriate it unto one Channel, that the Order of Nature be not inverted nor a well established Government disturbed. So the state of Rome casting many things with equal charge upon her two fovereign Magiftrates, which could not be performed but by One of them; what better means could there be discharge the Other, than to appoint an Arbiter, whose decree exceeded human Reason? Of which it could not be faid why it was fo, but that it was fo. For if the Wifdom of the Senate had been called to Counfel, or the voices of the People calculated to determine of the matter; it might eafily have burst out into civil Discord, considering the often Contentions between the Senate and the People, the factions of Clients, and the constant mutability of every Mans private Affections neceffarily inclining unto One, although their worth were equal, and by true reason indiscernible; which might have made the One proud of that which peradventure he had not, and cast the other lower than would have well befeemed his Vertues: And therefore to cut off these with many other Inconveniencies, they invented Lots, which without either Reason or Will might decide such Con-

By this it appeareth how little the ancient Lawmakers respected the ground and Reason of an Ordinance, fo the Commodity were great and the Use important to the good of the State: For as they faw the thing it felf to be casual, so they saw that casual things are sometimes more necessary than demonstrative Conclusions: Neither ought the Nature, and speculative consideration of Laws and Statutes to belong to the common People; but the Execution and Obedience thereof maketh the Common-wealth flourish. And thus endeth the first Commentary of Cafar's War in Gallia.

The

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

HE resolution of this People, which feems Barbarous, and is universally condemned, by reason of its ill success, has Invade Provence, and approach too near Italy. nevertheless the same principles by which all Conquerors act, viz. a defire of Commanding, and of extending their Territories. Their Prudence is remarkable, in taking three Years time to make Preparations, and their Conftancy in perfifting in their Defign, norwithstanding the Death of their Leader, and in the Execution thereof, by burning their Goods and Houses, to remove all hopes of a return, depending only upon the good fuccess of their Swords. From thence we may gather, that great Defigns ought never to be un-dertaken timorously; That we ought not to think on the means to elcape, but rather on those that there in order to cover their own Shame, by the conduce to Victory: For if at the beginning of general disgrace of the whole Army; which is a a dangerous undertaking, you discover how you may fave your felf, the natural impatiency or timerousness of Mankind will put them upon seek-ing the way to do it, on the least accident that happens: And had not the Switzers encounter'd with the incomparable Vertue of Calar, who, by his Valour, Industry, Diligence, and good Fortune ftop their Fury, they might have succeeded in their undertaking.

In the management of this War, Cafar has shown (as in all the others) that the happy success of all his Exploits is to be imputed to his invariable Order in Incamping fecurely, always retrenching himself, to avoid being constrain d to Fight against his Will, and to be in a condition to improve all advantages to beat his Enemies: To his care, that Provision might not fail him, and to his keeping his Soldiers constantly in Exercise and upon their Guard, to be the better able to execute his defigns with speed, and in good order.

The Pardoning of Dumnorix is remarkable. His natural Clemency inclin'd him to it, fuffering himsfelf to be Vanquish'd at the intreaty of his Brother Divitiac, whom he lov'd; nevertheless he had a constant Eye upon him, lest new Inconveniencies might thereby arise for the future.

The Fault of Confidius shows how necessary it is to employ Persons of experience to view an

And his ordering the Switzers to go back to Inhabit their own Country again, was a great piece of Prudence, to hinder the Germans (a very powerful Nation) from taking possession of it, and coming too near Provence.

Whereupon we may observe how dangerous fuch Auxiliary Affiftances prove, especially when we require em of fuch as are more Potent than our selves. Casar indeed drove out Ariovistus, but the Gauls only chang'd their Master; he engag'd in that War for two Reasons; First, BeInvade Provence, and approach too near Italy. Secondly, Because that War was a step towards the Conquest of the said Gauls, which he manag'd with so much Art, keeping up their Divisions, that he made use of some to overcome others, and finally fubdued them all.

We must also observe his diligence (so much commended in all his Actions) in preventing his Enemies by making himfelf Mafter of Bezancon, whereby he provided for the Subsistance of his Army. It was in this Expedition a Panick Fear feiz'd his Soldiers, which began by the Volunteers, who being defirous to retire, discourag'd the ogeneral difgrace of the whole Army; which is a thing a General ought carefully to look to, never hazarding a Battel without having first Incourag'd his Men, which Cefar did at that time by a Speech; a Talent in which he excell'd all others. He also took the advantage (as several other Generals have done, particularly Marius) of a very strong Camp, before fo formidable an Army, to show his Soldiers, by divers Skirmishes, that their Enemies were neither Invincible, nor braver than they: Making them fensible, that adding order and Military Discipline to the Prudence of their General, they were superior to them: For the Romans did never subdue other Nations by Number, or Valour, but by their Skill in War, which daily improv'd by the observation of their Order, and by Retrenching of their Camp Whereupon it is observable that Arisviffus having Encamp'd his Army between Cafar and the place from whence he receiv'd his Provisions, and Casar not having been able in five days time to draw him to a Battel, having well fortifi'd his Camp, he marches with his whole Army in order of Battel, to fortifie another that was not so large, in a more advantageous place, two Miles diftance from the first, which open'd a way for his Provisions, cau-fing one third part of his Army to work, while the other two remain'd in Battalia, which repulfed the Forces Arioviftus fent, to hinder the faid For-tifications; which being finish'd, C.s.far leaves two Legions in it, and marches back with the remainder of his Army into his former Camp. The next day Cafar places his Men in Battel Array between the two Camps: He being gone back again Ariovistus attacks the little Camp, and is repuls'd. Cafar having thus reviv'd the Courage of his Soldiers, causes his whole Army to march out in Battalia, and goes up to the very Retrenchments of Ariovistus, provokes him to Fight, he comes out and is beaten.

The Second COMMENTARY of the Wars in GALLIA.

The Argument.

Ike as when a heavy Body lieth upon the skirt of a larger continued quantity, although it cover but a small parcel of the whole surface, yet the other Quarters are burthened and kept under with a proportionable measure of that weight; and through the union and continuation which bindeth all the parts into one Totality, feel the same suppression which hath really seized but upon their fellow Part. In like manner the Belga, Inhabiting the furthest skirt of that triple Continent, seemed to repine at that heavy burthen which the Roman Empire had laid upon the Province, the Hedni, and other States of that Kingdom. And lest it might in time be further removed, and laid directly upon their Shoulders, they thought it expedient whilst they felt it but by Participation, to gather their several Forces into one Head, and try whether they could free their Neighbour Nations from so grievous a Yoak, or at the least keep it from coming any nearer unto themselves. And this is the Argument of this second Book; which divideth it self into two Parts: The first containing the Wars between Casar and all the States of Belgia united together, the second recording the Battels which he made with some of the States thereof in particular, as time and occasion gave him means to effect it.

CHAP. I.

C. far hasteth to his Army, marcheth towards the Confines of the Belgæ, and taketh in the Men of Rheims.

Hile Cæsar was in his Winter Quarters in the hither Gallia, there came every day fresh Rumours to him (the same ady Irefo Rumours to him (the lame thing being also certified by Letters; from Labienus) that all the Belga, being a third part of Gallia, had leagued together against the People of Rome, and had given mutual Hostages one to another. The grounds of their Confedracy were these: First, they were afraid that Cæsar having settled all the rest of Gallia in quiet, would bring his Armies upon them. Secondly, they were follicited to do it by Some of the Gauls, such namely, who, as they did not desire the company of the Germans longer in Gallia, so they were very much troubled to think that the Roman Army should winter and setttle themselves there: and such again as Levity and Inconstancy prompted to seek new Governments; lastly such as saw that it was an easie matter for those Men that were powerful and had the command of Monies, to seize upon Kingdoms in Gallia, which they could not so easily do in those Parts where the Romans bare sway. Cæsar being moved with Letters and other Intelligence to this purpose, levied two new Legions in the hither Gallia, and as som as Summer came on, sent them by Q. Pedius his Legate into the further Gallia: And as soon as there was Forage in the Fields he himself came to the Army. He had before given charge to the Senones and other of the Gauls that bordered upon the Belgæ, to learn every day what they could of their Doings, and to give him an what toey could by forth Dongs, and to grow aim an Account thereof. These presently informed him, that of a certainty there was nothing in Belgia but Mu-stering of Soldiers, and gathering their Forces into one Head. He thought it not therefore safe to make any further delay; but having made Provision of Corn, he drew out his Army from their Winter Quarters, and within fifteen days he came to the borders of Belgæ. As foon as he was come thither, which was much sooner than was looked for, the Men which was much joiner than was looked for, the Men of Rheims being the uttermost of the Belgæ, next adjoining to the Celæ, thought it best to entertain a peaceable Resolution, and sent Iccius and Antebrogius, troo of the chief Men of their State, unto Cæsar, to submit themselves and all that they had to the Mercy of the Roman Empire; affirming, that they were innocent both of the Counfel of the Belgæ, and of their Conspiracy against the Romans. For proof whereof they were ready to give Hostages, to receive them into their Towns, and to furnish them with Corn, or what other thing they stood in need of. That the rest of the Belgæ were all in Arms, and the Germans on the other fide of the Rhine had promised to send them succour : yea, their Madness was so great, that they themselves were not able to hold back the Suessones from that attempt, being their Brethren and Kinsmen in Blood, and using the same Laws and Customs as they did, having both one Magistrate, and one form of Government; but they would needs support the same Quarrel which the rest of the Belgæ had undertaken.

OBSERVATION.

Might here take occasion to speak somewhat of a particular revolt in a general cause; and how a confederate State may in regard of their own fafety forfake a common quarrel, or whatfoever the universal Society hath enacted prejudicial to their Commonweal; but that I only intend to discover Warlike Practices, leaving these Questions of Law and Policy to Men of greater Judge-ment and better Experience. Onely I observe in the behalf of the Roman Government, that such Cities as yielded to their Empire, and became tributary to their Treasury (howsoever they were otherwise combined by Confederacy) seldom or never repented them of their Fact, in regard of the Noble Patronage which they found in that State, and the due respect observed towards them.

CHAP. II.

The Power of the Belga, and their Preparation for this War.

Esar inquiring of the Embassadours which came from Rheims, what the States were that had taken Arms, and what they were able to do in matter of War, found the Belgæ to be descended from the Germans, who passing over the Rhine time out of mind, and finding it to be a Fertile Countrey, drove away the Gauls and seated themselves in their Possessions: and that these onely of all the Gauls kept the Cimbri and Teutoni from entring into their Countrey; and in that regard they challenged to themselves great Authority, and vaunted much in their feats of Arms. Concerning their number they had these Advertisements; (a) The coun- The (a) Bellovaci exceeded all the Belgæ in Promefs, Authority, and number of Men, being able to make 100000 Fighting Men, and out of that number had promised 60000 towards this undertaking, and in that regard they demanded the administration (i) The coun of the whole War. Next to them lay the (b) Sueffones, who dwelt in a large and fruitful Countrey, and had lately Divitiacus for their King, being the most Powerful Man in all Gallia, who had in poffession a great part of these Countries, and also of Britain it felf. Galba was their King now, on whom, for his fingular Justice and Prudence, generally with one inguar stricte and retuence, generally with one confent they bestowed the management of the War. They had twelve Walled Towns, and promised to set (c) The peo-forth 50000 Men. The (c) Nervii, who were the most barbarous amongst them all, and dwelt furthest off, promised as many; the (d) Atrebatii 15000, the (e) Ambiani 10000, the Vellocassii and (f) (b) Verman-Veromandui as many; the (g) Morini 25000, the dois.
(p) Tervenne, Menapii 9000, the Caletes 10000, the Aduatici 29000; the (h) Eburones, Condruss, and others 40000. Casar encouraging the Men of Rhemes to perfift in their faithfulness to the Roman Empire, propounded unto them great offers and liberal promi-fes of recompence, and commanded all their Senate to come before him, and bring with them their Noblemens Sons to be given up for Hoftages: which they diligently performed by a day appointed. And having received two especial Advertisements from the Men of Rhemes, the one concerning the multitude of the Enemy; and the other touching the fingular opinion which was generally held of their Manhood: he provided for the first, by perswading Divitiacus the Heduan, that it much imported the whole course a Head, that so he might avoid the danger of ena treat, total jo we migot wrote time tanger of en-countering fo great a power at one inflant. Which might easily be brought to pass, if the Hedui would where with a strong Power into the Marches of the Bellovaci, and sack their Territories with Sword and Confusion. Which Divitiacus promised to perform, and to that purpose he speedily returned into his Countrey. Upon the second Advertisement, which presented unto him the great Valour and Manhood of his Enemies, he resolved not to be too hasty in giving them Battel, but first to prove by Skirmishing with his Horsemen what his Enemies by their Promess could do, and what his own Men durft do.

OBSERVATFON.

This Rule of making tryal of the worth of an Enemy, hath always been observed by prudent and grave Commanders, as the furest principle whereon the true judgement of the event may be grounded. For if the Doctrine of the old Philosophers, which teacheth that the word non putabam, I wift it not, was never heard out of a wife Man's mouth, hath any place in the course of humane actions; it ought especially to be regarded in managing these main points, whereon the State of Kingdoms and Empires dependeth. For, unless we be perswaded that blind Chance directeth the course of this World with an uncertain confusion, and that no foresight can fway the balance of our hap unto either part of our Fortune, I fee no reason why we should not by all means endeavour to ground our knowledge upon true Causes, and level our proceedings to that certainty which riseth from the things themselves. And this is the rather to be urged, inafmuch as our Leaders are oftentimes deceived when they look no further then to match an Enemy with equality of number, referring their Valour to be tried in the Battel : not confidering that the Eye of it felf cannot different the difference between two Champions of like presence and outward carriage, unless it see their strength compared together, and weighed as it were in the Scale of Trial: which Cafar omitted not diligently to observe, before he would adventure the hazard of Barrel. For, befides his own fatisfaction, it gave great encouragement to his Men, when they faw themselves able to encounter an Enemy, and knew their task to be within their power to perform. Neither did he obferve it only at this instant, but throughout the whole course of his actions; for we find that he never incountered any Enemy, but with fufficient power, either in number or in valour, to make head against them : which equality of strength being first laid as a sure foundation, he used his own industry and skill, and the Discipline wherein his men were trained, as advantages to overfway his Adversaries; and so drew Victory, maugre fortune, unto himself, and seldom failed in any of his Battels.

CHAP. III.

Cafar passeth his Army over the River * Axona, . La Difne leaving Titurius Sabinus encamped on the other fide with fix Cohorts.

S foon as Cæsar understood as well by his Castar. Scouts, as from the Men of Rheims, that all the Power of the Belgæ was affembled together into one place, and was now making towards him no great distance off; he made all the haste of the businesses, to keep assumer the power of the be could to pass his Army over the River Axona, which Enemy 3, and to with-hold their Forces from making divided the Men of Rheims from the other Belgar, and there encamped. Whereby he brought to pass that which was first Enrolled, was called the first no Enemy could come on the back of him to work any Legion, and that which was second in the choice, disadvantage; and that Corn might be brought unto him from Rheims and other Cities without danger. And further, that he might command the passage back again, as occasion should serve, to his best advantage, he fortified a Bridge which he found on the River with a strong Garrison of Men, and caused Titurius Sabinus, a Legate, to encamp himself on the other fide of the River with fix Cohorts, commanding him to fortify his Camp with a Rampier of 12 foot in altitude, and a Trench of 18 foot in breadth.

Lib. II.

OBSERVATION.

IF it be demanded, why Cafar did pass his Army over the River, leaving it on his Back, and did not rather attend the Enemy on the other fide, and fo take the advantage of hindring him, if he should attempt to pass over; I will set down the Rea-fons in the sequel of this War, as the occurrences shall fall out to make them more evident. In the mean time let us enter into the particularity of these fix Cohorts, that we may the better judge of fuch Troops as were employed in the services of this War. But that we may the better conjecture what number of Souldiers these fix Cohorts did contain, it seemeth expedient a little to discourse of the Companies and Regiments which the Romans used in their Armies. And first we are to understand, that the greatest and chiefest Regiment in a Roman Army was term-Alegion ed by the name of Legio; as Varro faith, quod le-whit it was guntur milites in deletu; or as Plutarch speaketh, De via Ro-quod leti; ex omnibus essent militares; so that it taketh the name Legio, from the choice and feletting of the Souldiers. Romulus is faid to be the first Author and Founder of these Legions, making every Legion to contain 3000 Souldiers: but shortly after they were augmented, as Festus recordeth, unto 4000; and afterward again from 4000, to 4200. And that number was the common rate of a Legion until Hannibal came into Italy, and then it was augmented to 5000: but that proportion continued only for that time. And again, when Scipio went into Africk, the Legions were increased to 6200 Footmen, and 300 Horse. And shortly after the Macedonian War, the Legions that continued in Macedonia to keep the Province from Rebellion, confifted of 6000 Footmen and 200 Horse. Out of Cafar it cannot be gathered that a Legion in his time did exceed the number of 5000 Men, but oftentimes it was short of that number: for he himself saith, that in this War in Gallia his Souldiers were fo wasted, that he had scarce 7000 Men in two Legions. And if we examine that place out of the 3. Book of the Civil War, where he faith, that in Pompey's Army were 110 Cohorts, which amounted to the number of 55000 Men; and it being manifest as well by this number of Cohorts, as by the teftimony of divers Authors, that Pompey's Army configed of 11 Legions; if we divide 55000 into 11 parts, we shall find a Legion to consist of 5000 Men. Which number or thereabout being generally. rally known to be the usual rate of a Legion, the Romans always expressed the strength of their Army by the number of Legions that were therein : as in this War it is faid that Cafar had eight Legions; which by this account might arise to 40000 Men, befides Affociates, and fuch as neceffarily attended the Army. Further we are to understand that every Legion had its peculiar name, by which it was known and diftinguished from the reft: and that it sook either from their

the fecond Legion, and so consequently of the rest; and so we read in this History, the seventh, the eighth, the ninth, the tenth, the eleventh and twelfth Legion; or otherwise from the place of their warfare, and so we read of Legiones Germanica, Pannonica, Britannica, and fuch others: and fometime of their General, as Augusta, Claudia, Vitelliana legiones, and so forth: Tacitus 2. or to conclude, from fome accident of quality, Hist. as Rapax, Victrix, Fulminifera, Plundring, Victorious, Thundring, and fuch like. And thus much of the name and number of a Legion: which I must necessarily distinguish into divers kinds of Souldiers, according to the first institution of the old Romans, and the continual observation thereof unto the decay of the Empire, before I come to the description of those smaller parts whereof a Legion was compounded.

COMMENTARIES.

First therefore we are to understand, that after the Confuls had made a general choice and fworn the Souldiers, the Tribunes chose out the youngeft and pooreft of all the reft, and called them by the name of Velites. Their place in regard of Velites. the other Souldiers was both base and dishonourable: not only because they fought afar off, and were lightly armed; but also in regard they were commonly exposed to the Enemy, as our forlorn hopes are. Having chosen out a competent number for this kind, they proceeded to the choice of them which they called Hastati, Hastati. a degree above the Velites both in Age and Wealth, and termed them by the name of Hastari, forasmuch as at their first institution they fought with a kind of Javelin, which the Romans called Hasta: but before Polybius his time they used Piles; notwithstanding their ancient name continued unto the later times of the Empire. The third choice which they made, was of the ftrongest and lustiest bodied Men, who for the prime of their Age were called Principes: the Principes reft that remain'd were named Triarii, as Var- Triarii. ro faith, Quod tertio ordine extremis subsidio deponuntur: These were always the eldest and best experienced Men, and were placed in the third division of the Battel, as the last help and refuge in all extremity. Polybius faith, that in Lib. 6. his time the Velites, Hastati, and Principes did confift of 1200 Men apiece, and the Triarii never exceeded the number of 600, although the general number of a Legion were aug-lib.t.de mented: whereof Lipsius alledgeth thele Rea mil Rom. fons; First, because these Triarii consisted of the best of the Souldiers, and so might countervail a greater number in worth and Valour. Secondly, they feldom came to buckle with the Enemy, but when the Controverse grew very doubtful. Lastly, we may well conjecture that the Volunteers and extraordinary followers ranged themselves amongst these Triarii, and so made the third Battel equal to either of the former: but howsoever they never exceeded the number of 600. And by this it appeareth that in Polybius his time the common rate of a Legion Was 4200.

In this division of their Men, consisted the ground of that well-ordered Discipline; for in The weed that they diffinguished them according to their this division: Years and Ability, they reduced their whole ftrength into several Classes; and so disposed of these different parts, that in the general com-position of their whole body, every part might be fitted with place and Office, according as his worth was answerable to the same: and so they order of Muster, or Enrollment; as that Legion made not only a number in groß, but a number

Cæfar.

diftinct by parts and properties; that from every accident which met with any part of the Army, the judgment might determine how much or how little it imported the whole Body: Befides the great use which they made of this distinction in their degrees of Honour and Preferment, a matter of no small consequence, in the excellency Tie diffination of their Government.

To alimeter the Soldiers at their enrollment being thus di-panier. vided according to their Years and Ability, they then reduced them into fmaller Companies, to make them fitter for command and fight: and fo they divided the Hastati, Principes, and Triarii, each of them into 10 Companies, making of those three forts of Soldiers 30 small Regiments, which they called Manipuli: And again they subdivided every Maniple into two equal parts, and called them Ordines, which was the least Company in a Legion, and according to the rate fet down by Polybius, contained 60 Soldiers In every Ordo there was a Centurion or Captain, and a Lieutenant, whom they named Opio or Tergiductor. The Maniples of the Triarii were much leffer than the Maniples of either the Hastati or the Principes; forafmuch as their whole Band confifted but of 600 Men. The Velites were put into no fuch Companies, but were equally distributed amongst the other Maniples ; and therefore the Hastati, Principes and Triarii were called subsignani Milites, to make a difference between them and the Velites, which were not divided into Bands, and fo confequently had no Enfign of their own, but were distributed amongst the other Companies: So that every Maniple had 40 Velites attending upon it. And now I come to the description of a Cohort, which the Hiftory here mentioneth.

The word Cohors in Latin doth fignifie that part of Ground which is commonly enclosed befor the Gate of a House, which from the same

Lib. 3. de Re word we call a Court: And Varro giveth this rea for of the Marsh transfer. fon of the Metaphor. As in a Farm-house. Saith be, many Out-buildings joyned together make one In-closure, so a Cohort consistent of several Maniples joyned together in one Body. This Cohort consisted of three Maniples; for every Legion had ten Cohorts, which must necessarily comprehend those thirty Maniples: But these three Maniples were not all of one and the same kind of Soldiers, as three Maniples of the Hastati, three of the Prinpes, and three of the Triarii, as Patricius in his Paralleli seemeth to affirm; for so there would have remained an odd Maniple in every kind, that could not have been brought into any Cohort: But a Cohort contained a Maniple of the Hastati, a Maniple of the Principes, and a Maniple of the Triarii; and fo all the thirty Maniples were included in ten Cohorts, and every Cohort was as a little Legion, foralmuch as it confifted of all those forts of Soldiers that were in a Legion. So that making a Legion to contain five thousand Men, a Cohort had Five Hundred; and so these fix Cohorts which he encamped on the other fide of the River under the command of Titurius Sabinus, contained three thousand Soldiers: But if you make a Legion to confift but of Four Thoufand Two Hundred, which was the more usual rate, there were two thousand five hundred and twenty Soldiers in these fix Cohorts.

By this therefore it may appear that a Legion confifted of four forts of Soldiers which were reduced into ten Cohorts, and every Cohort contained three Maniples, and every Maniple two Orders, and every Order had his Centurion marching in the head of the Troop, and every Centurion had his Optionem, or Lieutenant, that stood in the Rere of the Troop.

When a Legion ftood ranged in Battel ready to confront the Enemy, the leaft Body or Squadron of Legion that it contained was a Maniple; wherein the two of the Orders were joyned together, making joyntly ten in front and twelve in file : And so every five Files had their Centurion in front, and Lieutenant in the rere, to direct them in all adventures. In the time of the Emperours, their Battallions confifted of a Cohort, and never exceeded that number how great foever the Army were.

Polybius diftinguishing a Maniple in two Centuries or Orders, faith, that the Centurion first chosen by the Tribunes, commanded the right Order, which was that Order which flood on the right $m_e \not= 0$ hand, known by the name of primus Ordo; and der the Centurion elected in the second course, commanded the left Order; and in the absence of either of them, he that was prefent of them two commanded the whole Maniple. And so we find that the Centurion of the first place was called Prior Centurio: In which sence Cafar is to be understood, where he saith that all the Centurions Could. of the first Cohort were slain, pracer Principem pri-orem. From whence we gather two things obser-vable: First the priority between the Centurions of the same Maniple; for a Cohort confisting of three Maniples, whereof the first Maniple were Triarii, the second Principes, and the third Hastati, and every Maniple containing two Orders, and every Order a Centurion. he faith that all the Centurions of this Cohort were flain, faving the first or upper Centurion of the Principes. The Prima Color fecond thing which I observe, is the Title of the first Cohort: For these ten Cohorts whereof a Legion confifted, were diftinguished by degrees of Merit: and that which was held the most meritorious in the censure of the Electors, took the priority both of place and name, and was called the first Cohort; the next, the second Cohort; and so confequently unto the tenth and laft.

Neither did the Legions want their degrees of Preheminence, both in embattelling and in encamping, according either to the feniority of rheir Inrollment, or the favour of their General, or their own Vertue: And so we read that in these Wars in Gallia the tenth Legion had the first place in Cafar's Army. And thus much concerning the Divisions and several Companies of a Legion, and the degrees of Honour which they held in

Upon this description it will not be amis briefly to lay open the most apparent Conveniences artifing from this Discipline; the excellency Tea benefit whereof more plainly appeareth, being compared this Discipline to that order which Nature hath observed in the frame of her nobleft Creatures: For it is evident that fuch Works of Nature come nearest to perfect Excellency, whose material substance is most particularly diftinguished into parts, and hath every part indued with that property which beft agreeth to his peculiar fervice. For being thus furnished with diversity of Instruments, and these directed with fuitable Abilities, the Creature muft needs express many admirable effects, and difcover the worth of an excellent nature: whereas those other Bodies that are but flenderly laboured, and find less favour in Natures Forge, being as Abortives, or barbaroufly composed, wanting the diversity both of parts and faculties, are no way capable of fuch excellent uses, not fit for fuch diffinct Services, as the former that are directed with so many Properties, and enabled with the power of fo well-diftinguisht Faculties. Which better works of Nature the Romans imitated in the Composure of their Army, dividing it into fuch necessary and serviceable parts as were

Lib. II.

COMMENTARIES.

best fitting all Uses and Imployments; as first fit thereby, besides the honour of reviving the Ro-Legions, and Legions into Cohorts, and Cohorts man Discipline. into Maniples, and Maniples into Centuries or Orders, and these into Files; wherein every Man knew his place, and kept the same without exchange or confusion: And thus the universal Multirude was by order disposed into parts, until it came unto a Unity. For it cannot be denied but that these Centuries were in themselves so senfibly diftinguished that every Soldier carried in his Mind the particular Map of his whole Century: For in embattelling, every Century was difposed into five Files, containing twelve in a File; whereof the Leaders were always certain, and never changed but by Death, or some other speci-2) Occasion; and every Leader knew his Follower, and every second knew the third Man, and io on unto the laft.

Upon these particularities it plainly appeareth how easie a matter it was to reduce their Troops into any order of a March or a Battel, to make the Front the Flank, or Flank Front, when they were broken and difrankt to rally them into any Form, when every Man knew both his own and his Fellows Station. If any Companies were to be employed upon fudden Service, the General Idea of the Army being so deeply imprinted in the Mind of the Commanders, would not fuffer them to err in taking out fuch convenient Troops, both for number and quality, as might best agree with the fafety of the Army, or nature of the Action. At all occasions and opportunities these principles of Advantage offered themselves as ready means to put in execution any Defign or Stratagem whatfoever: The Project was no fooner refolved on but every Man could readily point out the Companies that were fit to execute the intention. And which is more important in regard of the life and spirit of every such part, their society was fweetned or rather strengthened with the mutual acquaintance and friendship one of another; the Captain marching always in the head of the Troop, the Enfign in the midft, and the Lieutenant in the rere, and every Man accompanied with his Neighbour and his Friend: Which bred a true and unfeigned Courage, both in regard of themselves and of their followers. Besides these particulars, the places of Title and Dignity depending upon this Order were no small means to cut off all matter of civil discord, and intestine disfension: For here every Man knew his place in the File, and every File knew his place in the Century, and every Century in the Maniple, and every Maniple in the Cohort, and every Cohort in the Legion, and every Legion in the Army; and so every Soldier had his place according to his Virtue, and every place gave honour to the Man according as their Discipline had determined

The want of this Discipline hath dishonoured the Martial Government of this Age with bloodshed and Murthers; whereof France is too true a Witness, as well in regatd of the French themfelves, as of our English Forces that have been fent thinher to appeale their Tumults: For through defect of this Order, which allotteth to every Man his due place, the Controversie grew between Sir William Drurie and Sir John Burrowes, the Iffue whereof is too well known to the World: wherein as our Commanders in France have been negligent, so I may not forget to give due commenda-tion to the care which is had of this Point amongst the English Troops in the service of the States in the United Provinces, where they are very curi-man Discipline.

To conclude this point, I will only touch in a The benefit of word the benefit which the Romans found in their final Bastalions, and the disadvantage which we laws, and the making great Squadrons. And first it grows again cannot be denied but that such Troops stand best dwarf and the standard of the appointed for disposition and array of Battel; which flanding ftrong to receive a shock, bring which itanding itrong to receive a mock, oring moft Men to fight with the Enemy: For the prin-cipal things which are required in fetting of a Battel, are so to order the Troops, that the Depth in Flank may ferve conveniently to withftand the affault, taking up no more Men than may well ferve for that purpose, and giving opportunity to the rest to fight with the Enemy: And in these two points were both their defensive and offensive confiderations comprehended. But fmaller Troops and Battalions afford this conveniency better than great Squadrons, which hide many able Men in the Depth of their Flanks, and never suffer them to appear, but when the breaking of the Squadron doth present them to the Butchery of the Enemy. The Macedonian Phalanx, as I have noted in the first Book, never carried above fixteen in Flank, and brought Five Hundred to fight in Front. And these little Battalions (considering them as they ftood embattelled) made as great a Front or greater than that of the Phalanx, keeping a Depth answerable to the same; besides the second and third Battel, which always were to fuccour them, which the Phalanx wanted: Neither would their thick and close embattelling admit any fuch fuccour behind them. Now if we compare the advantages and inconveniences which by place and accident were incident to either of these, we shall find great odds between them. These great Squadrons are not feafible but in plain and open places, where they may either ftand immoveable, or make easie and flow Marches without shaking or disordering their Body: But the leffer are a scantling for all places, champaign or woody, level or uneven, or of what fire or quality foever. And to conclude, if two or three Ranks of these great Battalions chance to be broken and disordered, the whole Body is as much interessed in the disorder as the said Ranks are, and hath less means to rally it felf than any other leffer Company: But if any violence chance to rout a Maniple, it proceedeth no further in the Army than that part which it taketh: Neither can the disranking of any one Part betray the fafety of the Army to Disorder and Confusion, foralmuch as their diflinction ferved to cut off fuch inconveniences, and yet no way hindered the general uniting of their strength into one Body. More may be said concerning this matter; but I only point as it, and leave the due confideration thereof to the judg-ment of our Commanders, and return to our Hi-

CHAP. IV.

The Belge attempt the surprize of *Bibrax: Cafar . Bray is fendeth fuccour unto it.

Here was a Town called Bibrax, belonging to the State of Rheims, about eight miles from Cæsar's Camp, which the Belgæ thought to have surprized as they came a-long to meet with Casar; and suddenly assured is with such fury that the Townsmen could hardly hold the United Frovinces, where they are very cunous in appointing every Man his Place in the File, and every File in the Troop, and find much benebefet the whole compals of the Wall with Ranks of out the first day. The Celtæ and Belgæ use one and they find the Wall naked of Defendants; and then the Gate and undermine the Walls. Which thing was easily effected here; for so great was the number of them that threw Stones and Darts, that it was impossible for the Defendants to abide upon the Walls. As foon as the Night had made an end of the Assault Iccius of Rheims, a man of great birth and authority in his Country, who at that time was Governour of the Town, and had been before with Cæsar. to treat and conclude a Peace, Sent him word by Mesfengers, that if there came not prefent succour, he was not able to hold out any lenger. The same night a-bout midnight (using the same Messengers for Guides) he sent both Numidian and Cretian Archers and Slingers of the Isles of Baleares to relieve the Town; by means whereof the Townsmen were put in good hope to make their Party strong, and the Enemy made hopeless of winning the Town: And therefore after a small stay having depopulated their Fields, and burned their Villages and Out-buildings, they marched with all their Power towards Cælar's Camp, and within less than two Miles of the Army they encamped their whole Host; which, as was gathered by the smoke and fire, took up more ground than eight Miles in Breadth.

Chare

The First OBSERVATION.

IN the Description of their affault, we are to ob-ferve two circumstances. The first is the manner they used in a sudden surprize: The second To take a town is, the form and quality of a Testudo. Although Cafar seemeth to attribute this manner of affaulting a Town as peculiar to the Gauls, yet we may not think but that the Romans used it as often as they had occasion to surprize any City: But because the Gauls knew no other means to take a Town but this, therefore he fetteth it down as peculiar unto them. The Romans called this manner of affault Corona; and so we read oftentimes this Phrase Cingere Urbem Corona, forasmuch as the Soldiers enclosed the Town with a Circle, and fo refembled a Crown or Garland. Ammianus fpeaketh of a triple Crown of Soldiers which encompaffed a Town: And Josephus telleth of Josephus telleth of Josephus, which the Romans befieged duplici peditum Corona, with a double Circle of Footmen: And befides these there was a third Circle of Horsemen outmost of all. There is no further matter to be observed but this, that in surprizing a Town, they encircled it round about with thick continued Ranks of Men, and where they found the wall weakest, there they entred as they could.

The Second OBSERVATION.

THe Testudo requireth a larger discourse, and is lively described in Livy after this manner. In the Amphitheatre, where the People did often affemble to fee ftrange fights and publick Shews, were brought in (faith he) fixty lufty young Men, who after fome Motion and feemly March, cast themselves into a square Troop, and roofing their heads close with their Targets, the first Rank which made the Front of the Testudo, stood upright on their Feet; the second Rank bowed it felf fomewhat lower; the third and fourth Ranks did more incline themselves, and so on to the last Rank which kneeled on the ground: And fo they made a Body refembling half the fide of an house, which they called Testudo. Unto this Squadron fo ftrongly combined together, came two Soldiers running some an hundred and fifty foot off, and Souldiers, they never cease slinging of Stones until nimbly up the side of the Roof; and sometimes making as though they would defend it against an Enemy that would have entred upon it, formetimes again encountering each other in the midft of it, leaned up and down as fleadily as if they had been upon firm ground. And which is more strange, the Front of a Testudo being applied to the side of a Wall, there ascended many armed Men upon the faid Testudo, and fought in an equal height with other Soldiers that stood upon the said Wall to defend it. The diffimilitude in the composition was this, that the Soldiers that were in Front, and in the fides of the Square, carried not their Targets over their heads as the other did, but covered their bodies with them; and so no Weapons ei-ther cast from the Wall, or otherwise thrown against it, could any way hurt them; and whatfoever weight fell upon the Testudo, it quickly glided down by the declivity of the Roof without any hurt or annoiance at all.

Thus far Livy. Neither do I know what to fay further of it: The chiefest use thereof was in a furprize or fudden attempt against a Town, before the Townsmen were throughly prepared to defend the fame. This invention ferved them to approach the Wall with fafety, and so either to undermine it, or to climb up: And to that end they oftentimes erected one Testudo upon another. Tacitus faith that the Soldiers climbed upon the Wall super iteratam Testudinem, by one Testudo made upon another. And this was the ancient form and use of a Testudo in a sudden assault or Dio Caffius in the Acts of Antony faith, that be- Lib. 49 ing galled with the Parthian Archers, he commanded his whole Army to put it felf into a Tefludo: Which was fo strange a fight to the Par-thians, that they thought the Romans had funk down for weariness and faintness; and so forsaking their Horses, drew their swords to have made execution: And then the Romans at a Watchword given, rose again with such a fury, that they put them all to fword and flight. Die describeth the fame Testudo after this manner: They placed, faith he their Baggage, their light-armed Men and their Horsemen in the midst; and those heavy-armed Footmen that carried long guttertiled Targets, were in the utmost Circles next unto the Enemy: The reft (which bare large oval Targets) were thronged together throughout the whole Troop, and so covered with their Targets both themselves and their Fellows, that there was nothing difcerned by the Enemy but a Roof of Targets, which were fo tiled together, that Men might fafely go upon them.

Further, we oftentimes read that the Romans cast themselves into a Testudo, to break through an Enemy, or to rout and difrank a Troop. And this use the Romans had of a Testudo in field services, and only by the benefit of their Target. It was called a Testudo in regard of the strength, for that it covered and sheltred as a shell covereth a Fish. And let this suffice concerning a Testu-

The Third OBSERVATION.

THirdly, we may observe how carefully Casar The necessity provided for the fasety of such Succours as he good distinct. fent unto Bibrax: For he commanded the same Messengers that came from the Town to direct them, as the best and surest guides in that Journey; left peradventure through ignorance of the Way, they might fall into inconveniences or dangers. A matter of no small consequence in mathreatning each other with their Weapons, ran naging a War; but deserveth an extraordinary imLib. II. portunity to perfuade the necessity of this diligence: for a General that hath perfectly discovered the nature of the Countrey through which he is to march, and knoweth the true diffances of Places, the quality of the Ways, the compendioulnels of Turnings, the nature of the Hills, and the course of the Rivers, hath all these particularities as main advantages, to give means of fo many several attempts upon an Energy. And in this point Hannibal had a fingular dexterity, and excelled all the Commanders of his time, in making use of the way by which he was to pass. But he that leadeth an Army by an unknown and undiscovered way, and marcheth-blindfold upon uncertain adventures, is subject to as many casualties and difadvantages as the other hath opportunities of good fortune. Let every Man there-fore perfuade himself that good Scouts are as the Eyes of an Army, and ferve for lights in the darkness of Ignorance, to direct the resolutions of good Providence, and make the Path of fafety so manifest, that we need not stumble upon casualties. Cafar in his Journey to Arioviftus, used the help of Divitiacus the Heduan, in whom amongst all the Gauls he reposed greatest confidence, to discover the way, and acquaint him with the paffages: and New Eng- before he would undertake his Voyage unto * Britain, he well informed himself by Merchants and Travellers of the quantity of the Island, the quality of the People, their use of War, and the opfied with their Relations, but he fent Caius Volufenus in a Ship of War, to fee what he could further discover concerning these points. Suetonius addeth moreover, that he never carried his Army per insidiosa itinera, through places where they were subject to be way-laid, unless he had first

The order which it is to discovered the places.

Concerning the order which skilful Bleaders to discove in discoveries, we are to know that discover, this Point confifters of weareness. this Point confifteth of two parts; the one, in understanding the perfect description of the Countrey; the fecond, in observing the motions of the Enemy. Fouching the first, we find as well by this or other Histories, that the Romans used the Inhabitants of the Countrey for Guides, as beft acquainted with their native places, that they might not err in fo important a matter; provided always that their own Scouts were ever abroad to understand what they could of themfelves, that they might not altogether rely upon a strangers direction. The motions of the Enemy a strangers currection. File motions of the Electric were observed by the Horsemen: and these for the most part were Veterani, well experienced in as a Man may sling over. Which Vegetius interprete matter of War, and so the General received pretent to be six hundred Foot. Their violence good Intelligence: and yet they were not too forward upon any new motion, unless they found it confirmed by divers ways; for some Spies may err, either through passion or affection, as it happened in the Helvetian War. If therefore the use and benefit which prudent and wise Commanders made of this diligence, or the misfortune which the want of this knowledge brought upon the ignorant, have any Authority to persuade a circumspect care herein, this little that hath been spoken may be sufficient for this point.

The Fourth OBSERVATION.

Singer with THE Souldiers which C.sfar fent to relieve Bi-ther Art and brax, were Archers of Creta and Numidia, and Slingers of the Isles Baleares, which are now called Majorca and Minorca: which kind of Weapon because it seemeth ridiculous to the Souldiers of these times, whose conceits are held up with the fary of these fiery Engines, I will therefore in brief discover the nature and use thereof.

The Latins (faith Isidore) called this Weapon of it Stones are cast. Pliny attributeth the invention thereof to the Islanders called Baleares. Floris in his 3. Book and 8. Chap. faith, that thefe Baleares used three forts of Slings, and no other Weapon befides; and that a Boy had never any meat given him before he had first struck ir with a Sling. Strabo diftinguisheth these three sorts of Slings which the Baleares used, and faith, that they had one Sling with long Reines, which they used when they would cast affar off; and another with short Reines, which they used near ar hand; and the third with Reines of a mean fize, to cast a reasonable distance. Lipsius saith, that in Cohumna Antonina at Rome, he observed that the Balearean was made with one Sling about his Head, another about his Belly, and the third in his Hand; which might be their ordinary manner of carrying them. The matter whereof they were made was threefold: The first was Hemp or Cotton, the fecond Hair, and the third Sinews; for of any of these Stuffs they commonly made them. The form and fashion of a Sling resembled a platted Rope, fomewhat broad in the middest, with an Oval Compass, and so by little and little decreasing into two Thongs or Reines. Their manner of flinging was to whirle it twice or thrice about their Head, and fo to cast out the Bullet. Virgil speaking of Mezentius, faith, Ipfe ter adducta circum caput egit habena. He fetcht the Rein three times about his head.

But Vegetius preferreth that skill which cast the Buller with once turning ir about the head. In Suidas we find that these Baleares did commonly east a Stone of a pound weight: which agreent to these names in C.efar, fundas librales. The Leaden Bullets are mentioned by Salist, in the War with Jugurth, and by Livy, where he faith, that the Conful provided great flore of Arrows, of Bullets, and of small Stones to be cast with Slings. This Weapon was in request amongst divers Nations, as well in regard of the readiness and easy reiterating of the blow, as also for that the Bullet flew very far, with great violence. The diftance which they could eafily reach with their Sling, is expressed in this Verse, was fuch, as the same Author affirmeth in his first Book and fixteenth Chapter, that neither Helmer, Gaberdine nor Croflet could bear out the blow; but he that was hit with a Sling, was flain fine invidia sanguinis, as he faith in the same place. Lucrerise, Ovid, and Lucan, three of the Latin Poets say, that a Bullet skilfully cast out of a Sling went with fuch violence, that it melted as it flew: whereof Scheca giveth this reason, Motion, faith Lib. 2: nahe, doth extenuate the Air, and that extenuation is suff. or fubrilty dorh inflame; and fo a Bullet cast our of a Sling melteth as it flieth. Notwithstanding Diodorus Siculus affirmeth that these Balearean Slingers brake both Target, Head-piece, or any other Armour whatfoever.

Fundum Varro vocat, quem possis mittere funda. Lib. 2.

There are also two other forts of Slings, the one mentioned by Livy, and the other by Vegetius. That in Livy is called Ceft uplende, which caft a fhort Arrow with a long thick head: the other in Vegetius is called Fuftibalus, which was a Sling made of a Cord and a Staff. But let this suffice 1 .

for Slings and Slingers, which were reckoned amongst their light-armed Souldiers, and used chiefly in affaulting, and defending Towns and Fortreffes, where the heavy-armed Souldiers could not come to buckle; and represent the place of our Harquebusiers, which in their proper nature are levis armatura milites, light-armed Souldiers. although more terrible than those of ancient times.

CHAP. V.

Cafar confronteth the Belga in form of Battel, but without any blow given: The Belga attempt the paffing of the River Axona, but in vain, and to their loss: The Consult of breaking up the War.

Esar at the first resolved not to give them Battel, as well in regard of their multitude, as the general fame and opinion conceived of their Valour : notwithstanding he daily made trial by light skirmishes with his Horsemen, what the Enemy could do, and what his own Men durst do. And when he found that his own Men were nothing inferiour to the Belgæ, he chose a convenient place before his Camp, and put his Army in Battel: the Bank where he was encamped rising somewhat from a plain level, was no larger than would suffice the front of the Battel; the two sides were steep, and the front rose assope by little and little, until it came again to a plain, where the Legions were imbattelled. And left the Enemy athe Legions were imparence. Anne est the externs a bounding in multitude, flould circumvent his Men and Charge them in the Flank at they were fighting, (which they might easily do with their number) he drew an overthwart Ditch behind his Army from one side of the Hill to the other, six hundred paces in length; the ends whereof he fortified with Bulwarks, and placed therein store of Engines. And leaving in his Camp the two Legions which he had last enrolled in Lombardy, that they might be ready to be drawn forth when there should need any succour. he imbattelled his other fix Legions in the front of the Hill, before his Camp. The Belgæ also bring-ing forth their Power, confronted the Romans in or-der of Battel. There lay between both the Armies a Small Marish: over which the Enemy expected that Cæsar should have passed, and Cæsar on the other side attended to see if the Belgæ would come over, that his Men might have Charged them in that troublesome Passage. In the mean time the Cavalry on both sides incountered between the two Battels: and after long expectation on either side, neither Party adventuring to pass over, Cæsar having got the better in the skirmish between the Horsemen, thought it sufficient for that time, both for the encouraging of his own Men, and the contesting of so great an Army, and therefore he conveighed all his Men again into their Camp. From that place the Enemy immediately took his way to the River Axona, which lay behind the Romans Camp: and there finding Foords, they attempted to pass over part of their Forces, to the end they might either take the Fortrefs which Q. Titurius kept, or break down the Bridge, or fpoil the Territories of the State of Rheims, and cut off the Romans from provision of Corn. Cæsar having advertisement thereof from Titurius, pasid over the River by the Bridge all his Horsemen, and light-armed Numidians, with his Slingers and Archers, and marched with them himfelf. The conflict was hot in that place: the Romans Charging their Enemies as thy were troubled in the Water, flew a great number of them; the rest like desperate Persons, adventuring to pass over upon force of Weapons: and the Horsemen incompassed fuch as had first got over the Water, and slew every Man of them.

When the Belgæ perceived themselves frustrated of their hopes of winning Bibrax, of passing the River, and of drawing the Romans into places of disadvantage, and that their own Provisions began to fail them; they called a Council of War, wherein they resolved that it was best for the State in general, and for every Man in particular, to break up their Camp, and to return home unto their own Houses : and into whose Confines or Territories soever the Romans should first enter, to depopulate and waste them in Hostile manner, that thither they should hasten from all parts, and there give them Battel : to the end they might rather try the matter in their own Countrey, then abroad in a strange and unknown place, and have their own Houshold Provision always at hand to maintain them. And this the rather was concluded, for a much as they had intelligence, that Divitiacus with a great Power of the Hedui approached near to the borders of the Bellovaci; who in that regard made hafte homeward to defend their

The First OBSERVATION.

First we may observe the Art which he used to countervail the strength of fo great a multitude, by chufing out so convenient a place, which was no broader in Front than would suffice the Front of this Battel: and having both the fides of the Hill so steep, that the Enemy could not ascend nor climb up, but to their own overthrow; he made the back-part of the Hill ftrong by Art, and fo placed his Souldiers as it were in the Gate of a Fortress, where they might either iffue out or retire at their pleafure. Whereby it appeareth how much he preferred fecurity and fafery before the vain opinion of fool-hardy resolution, which fa-voureth of Barbarifin rather than of true Wifdom; for he ever thought it great gain to loose nothing; and the day brought always good Fortune, that delivered up the Army fafe unto the Evening; attending until advantage had laid fure Principles of Victory: and yet Casar was never thought a Coward.

And now it appeareth what use he made by paffing his Army over the River, and attending the Enemy on the further fide, rather than on the fide of the state of Rheims: for by that means he brought to pass, that whatsoever the Enemy should attempt in any part or quarter of the Land, his Forces were ready to trouble their Proceedings; as it happened in their attempt on Bibrax: and yet notwithstanding he lost not the opportunity of making flaughter of them as they paffed over the River. For by the benefit of the Bridge which he had fortified, he transported what Forces he would, to make head against them as they passed over; and so he took what advantage either side of the River could afford him.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Nd here the Reader may not marvel, if when the Hills are in labour, they bring forth but a Mouse; for how soon is the Courage of this huge Army abated? or what did it attempt worthy fuch a multitude? or answerable to the report which was bruited of their Valour? but being haftily carried together by the violence of paffion, were as quickly dispersed upon the fight of an Enemy: which is no strange effect of a sudden humour. For as in Nature all violent motions the dead Carkases of their Fellows, were beaten back by are of short continuance, and the durability or lasting quality of all actions proceedeth from a and to be first at home : in such a turbulent manner, flow and temperate progression; so the resolutions of the mind that are carried with an untemperate violence, and favour fo much of heat and paffion, do vanish away even with the smoak thereof, and bring forth nothing but leafurable repentance. And therefore it were no ill Counsel for Men of such natures, to qualifie their hafty resolutions with a

But that which most bewrayeth their indiscreet intemperance in the hot pursuit of this enterprize is, that before they had scarce seen the Enemy, or had opportunity to contest him in open Field, their Victuals began to fail them: for their minds were so carried away with the conceit of War, that they had no leifure to provide fuch necessaries as are the ftrength and finews of the War. It was sufficient for every particular Man to be known for a Souldier in fo honourable an action, referring other matters to the care of the State. The States in like manner thought it enough to furnish out forty or fifty thousand Men apiece, to discharge their Oath, and to save their Hostages, committing other requifites to the general care of the Confederacy: which being directed by as unskilful Governours, never looked further than the present multitude, which seemed sufficient to overthrow the Roman Empire. And thus each Man relied upon anothers care, and fatisfied himfelf with the present State of Affairs. So many Men of all forts and qualities, fo many Helmets and Plumed Crefts, fuch ftrife and emulation what State should seem in greatest forwardness, were Motives sufficient to induce every Man to go, without further inquiry how they should go. And herein the care of a General ought especially to be seen, considering the weakness of particular judgements, that having the Lives of fo many Men depending altogether upon his Providence, and engaged in the defence of their State and Countrey, he do not fail in these main Points of Discipline, which are the Pillars of all Warlike defigns. To conclude this Point, let us learn by their error fo to carry a matter (especially of that confequence) that we make it not much worse by ill handling it, than it was before we first took it to our charge; as it here happened to the Belga: For their tumultuous Arms tended to no other end, than to give Cefar just occasion to make War upon them, with fuch affurance of Victory, that he made small account of that which was to follow, in regard of that which had already happened: confidering that he should not in all likelihood meet with the like strength again, in the continuance of that War. And this was not only gravius bellum successori tradere, to leave a more considerable War unto his Successor, as it often falleth out in the course of a long-continued War; but to draw a dangerous War upon their heads that otherwise might have lived in peace.

CHAP. VI.

The Belge break up their Camp, and as they return home, are chased and slaughter'd by the Romans.

His general refolution being entertained by the confent of the whole Council of War, in the second Watch they departed out of their Camp with a great noise and tumult, without any Order (as it seemed) or Government, every Man pressing to be foremost on his Journey, that they seemed all to run away. Whereof Casar having notice by his Spies, and mistrusting some practice, not as yet perceiving the reason of their departure, he kept his Army within his Camp. In the dawning of the day, upon certain intelligence of their departure, he sent first his Horsemen under Q. Pedius and L. Aurunculeius Cotta, two Legates, to natures, to qualine their nairy resolutions with a miffrufful lingering; that when their Judgement flay the Rereward, commanding Labienus to follow is well informed of the cause, they may proceed after with three Legions: these overtaking the Belgæ, and chasing them many miles, slew a great number of them. And while the Rereward stayed, and valiantly received the charge of the Romans, the Vanguard being out of danger, and under no Government, as soon as they heard the Alarm behind them, brake out of their Ranks and betook themselves to flight: and so the Romans slew them as long as the Sun gave them light to pursue them; and then sounding a Retreat, they returned to their Camp.

Cæſar.

OBSERVATION

T hath been an old Rule amongst Souldiers, That a great and negligent error committed by an Enemy, is to be fulpected as a pretence to Treachery. We read of Fulvius, a Legate in the Roman Army lying in Tuscamy; The Conful being gone to Rome to perform some publick dury, the Tufcans took occasion by his absence, to try whether they could draw the Romans into any inconvenience; and placing an Ambuscado near unto their Camp, fent certain Souldiers attired like Shepherds, with droves of Cattel to pas in view of the Roman Army: who handled the matter so, that they came even to the Rampier of the Camp. Whereat the Legate wondering as at a thing void of reason, kept himself quiet until he had discovered their Treachery, and so made frustrate their intent. In like manner Cafar not persuaded that Men should be so heedless, to carry a Retreat in that disorderly and tumultuous manner, would not discamp his Men to take the opportunity of that advantage, until he had found that to be true. which in all reason was unlikely. And thus 308000 Belgæ were put to flight and slaughtered by three Legions of the Romans, for want of Government and Order in their departure.

CHAP. VII.

afar followeth after the Belga into the Gountrey of the Sueffones; and there befiegeth * Novio- Novon!

He next day after their departure, before Cafar, they could recover themselves of their fear and flight, or had time to put themselves again in breath, Cæsar, as it were continuing still the Chase and Victory, led his Army into the Countrey of the * Suessiones, the next bor- . Soyssones derers unto the Men of Rheims: and after a long Journey came unto Noviodunum, a Town of good importance, which he attempted to take by surprize, as he passed along by it. For he understood that it was allogether unfurnified of defensive Provision, having no Forces within to defend it: hut in regard of the breadth of the Ditch and beight of the Wall, he was for that time disappointed of his purpose: and therefor that time anjapponnea of the party of the fore having fortified his Camp, he began to make preparation for a Siege. The night following the whole multitude of the Suessiones, that had escaped by flight, were received into the Town: howbest when the Vineze were with great expedition brought unto the Wall, the Mount railed, and the Turrets built, the Gauls being amazed at the highness of the Works, such as they had never seen nor heard of before, and the speed of two forts, either great or little: The leffer which was made in the dispatch thereof, sent Emfort are described by Virtuoius to be fixty Cubits; baffadors to Cæfar, to treat of giving up the Town; and by the mediation of the Men of Rhemes obtained their fuit.

Observations upon CESAR'S

The First OBSERVATION.

IN this relation we may observe the industrious Art which the Romans used in affaulting and ta-king Holds and Towns; wherein we find three forts of Engines described, Vinea, Agger and Turres. Vinea is thus described by Vegetius: A little Lib. 4. A Vinea or ftrong-built House or Hovel, made of light Wood, Vine describ that it might be removed with greatest ease; the Roof was supported with divers Pillars of a Foot fquare, whereof the foremost were eight Foot high, and the hindmost six, and between every one of these Pillars there was five Foot distance. It was always made with a double Roof, the first or lower Roof was of thick Planks, and the upper Roof of Hurdles, to break the force of a Weight without further shaking or disjoyning the Building: The fides were likewise walled with Hurdles. the better to defend the Soldiers that were under it: The whole length was about fixteen Foot, and the breadth feven, the upper Roof was commonly covered with green or raw Hides, to keep it from burning. Many of these Hoyels were joyned together in rank, when they went about to undermine a Wall: The higher end was put next unto the Wall, that all the Weights which were thrown upon it might eafily tumble down, without any great hurt to the Engine: The four fides and Groundfile had in every corner a Wheel, and by them they were driven to any place as occasion ferved. The thiefest use of them was to cover and defend the Soldiers as they undermined or overthrew a Wall This Engine was called Vinea, which fignifieth a Vine, for it sheltered such as were under the Roof thereof, as a Vine covereth the place where it

> Agger, which we call a Mount, is described in divers Histories to be a Hill or Elevation made of Earth and other Substance, which by little and little was raised forward, until it approached near unto the place against which it was built; that upon this Mount they might creck Fortreffes and Turrets, and so fight with an advantage of Height. The matter of this Mount was Earth and Stones, Faggots and Timber. Josephus faith that at the Siege of Jerufalem the Romans cut down all the Trees within 11 Miles compais, for matter and fluff to make a Mount. The lides of this Ag-ger were of Timber, to keep in the loose matter: the Forepart which was towards the place of fervice, was open without any Timber-work; for on that part they still raised it, and brought it nearer the Walls. That which was built at Maffilia, was 80 Foot high, and that at Avaricum 80 Foot high and 30 Foot broad. Jefephus and Ege-Sippus write that there was a Fortress in Judea 300 Cubits high: Which Sulla purposing to win by affault, raifed a Mount 200 Cubits high; and upon it he built a Castle of Stone 50 Cubits high, and sifty Cubits broad; and upon the said Castle he erected a Turret of 60 Cubits in height, and fo took the Fortress. The Romans oftentimes raised these Mounts in the mouth of a Haven, and commonly to over-top a Town, that so they might fight with much advantage.

Amongst other Engines in use amongst the Ro-For they were built in some safe place out of danger, and with Wheels put under them were driven made them believe that the Hedui were brought in high, and the fquare Side feventeen Cubits; the breadth at the Topp was a fifth part of the breadth at the Bafe, and io they ftood fure without any danger of falling. The corner Pillars were at the Base nine Inches square, and six Inches at the Top: There were commonly 10 Stories in these little Turrets, and Windows in every Story. The greater fort of Towers were 120 Cubits high, and the square side was 24 Cubits, the breadth at the Top was a fifth part of the Base; and in every one of these were commonly 200 Stories. There was not one and the same distance kept between the Stories; for the lowest commonly was 7 Cubits and 12 Inches high, the highest Story 5 Cubits, and the rest 4 Cubits and a third part of a Cu-In every one of these Stories were Soldiers and Engines, Ladders and cafting Bridges, by which they got upon the Wall and entred the Town.

The forepart of these Turrets was covered with Iron and wet Coverings to fave them from Fire. The Soldiers that removed the Tower to and fro were always within the Square thereof, and fo they ftood out of danger. The new Water-Work by Broken-Warfe in London much resembleth one of these Towers.

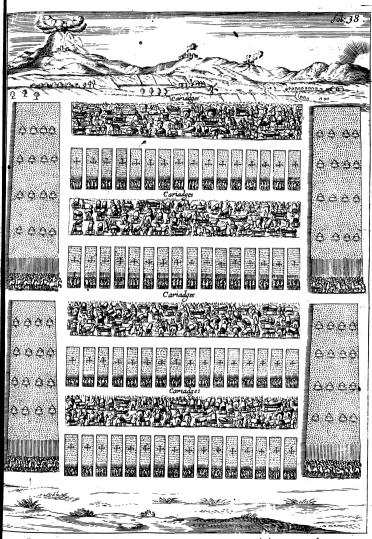

The Second OBSERVATION.

Pon the building of these mighty Engines, it was no marvel if the Suessones submitted themselves to such powerful industry. For whatfoever is strange and unusual doth much affright the spirits of an Enemy, and breed a motion of diftruft and diffidency, when as they find them-felves ignorant of such warlike practices: For novelry always breedeth wonder; in as much as the true reasons and causes being unknown, we apprehend it as diverse from the usual course of things, and fo fland gazing at the ftrangeness thereof: And wonder, as it addeth worth to the novelty, so it inferreth diffidency, and so consequently Fear, the utter Enemy of Martial Valour.

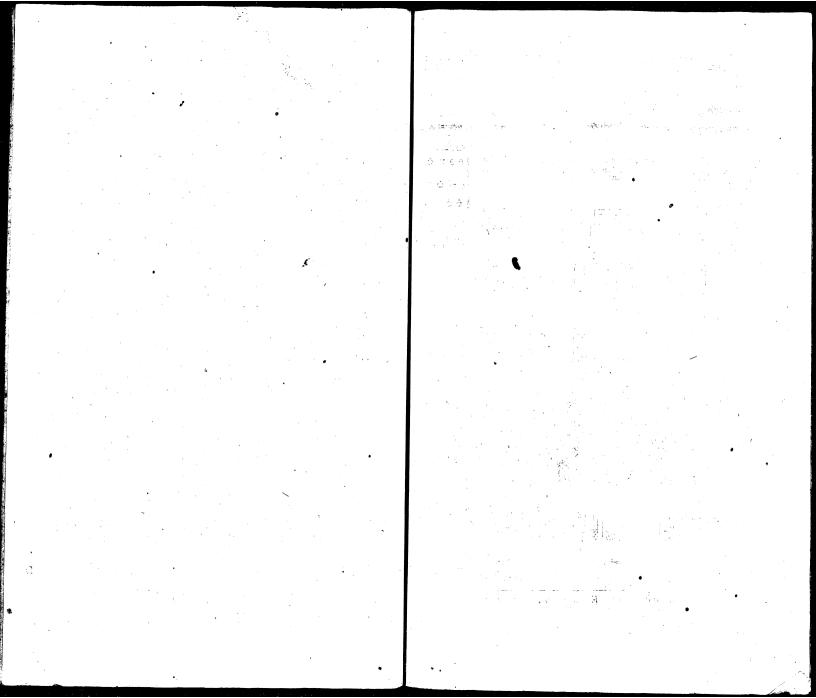

CHAP. VIII.

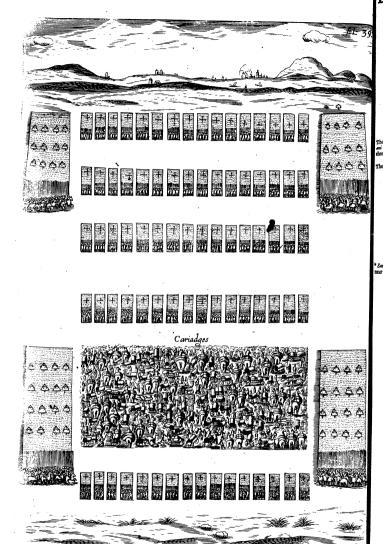

Cafar carrieth his Army to the Territories of the Bellovaci, Ambiani and the Nervii.

Ælar taking for Pledges the chiefest of their Casar. City, and amongst the rest King Galba's own two Sens, upon the delivery of all their The Bellevs received the Suesiones to mercy taken to And from thence led his Army against the Bellovaci; mercy. who having conveyed both themselves and their goods into the Town called Bratuspantium, and under-standing that Casar was come within five Miles of the place, all the Elder fort came forth to meet him, signifying by the stretching forth of their hands, and by their suppliant words, that they yielded themselves up to Carlar's disposal, and would no longer bear Arms against the People of Rome. And so again when he was come near the Town, and had there fet down his Army, the very Boys and Women appearing upon the Walls with extended hands (as their Chflom is) befough peace of the Romans. For these Divitiacus became a Mediator, who after the Belgæ had broken up their Camp, had dismissed his Heduan Forces, and was returned to Cafar. The Hedui, faith he, have always found in the Bellovaci a faithmans, their moveable Turrets were very famous: ful and friendly disposition to their State: And if they had not been betrayed by their Nobility (who to the Walls of the Town. These Turrets were Bondage by the Romans, and suffered all Villany

CASARS march where in every. Legion had

march where the

and Despite at their hands) they had never with-drawn themselves from the Hedui, nor consented to the like level on the other side rese another Hill diconspire against the Romans. The Authors of this Caufel preceiving into what great Mifery they had brought their Country, were sted into Britany: Wherefore not only the Bellovaci, but the Hedui Wherefore not only the Bellovaci, but the Hedui also in their behass besought him to use his clemency towards them. Which thing if he did, it would very much greaten the Esteem and Authority of the Hedui amongst the Belgæ, who formerly in their Wars had recourse to them for supplies and assistance. Cassar in regard of the Hedui and Divitiacus, promitted to reconstruct them. A March, but Gordonsch. Calar in regard of the Hedul and Divitiacus, promifed to receive them to Mercy; but forafmuch as the State was very great, and more populous and powerful than other Towns of the Belgaz, he demanded fire hundred Hoffages. Which being delivered and their Armoun brought out of the Town, he may like them. thed from thence into the Coast of the Ambiani : Who without further lingering, gave both themselves and all that they had into his power. Upon these bordered the Nervii; of whom Cæsar found thus much by enquiry, That there was no recourse of Mer-chants unto them, neither did they suffer any Wine, coams this teem, netwer and vory luyer any reme, or what thing elfe might tend to riot, to be brought into their Country: For they were perfeaded that by fuch things their courage was much abated, and their Vertue weakened. Further, he learned that thefe Nervii were a fauge People, and of great Valour; often accusing the reft of the Belgæ for yielding their Neckt to the Roman Toke, openly affirming that they would neither fend Embassadours, nor take peace upon any condition any condition.

Catat baving marched three days Journey in their Country, underflood that the River * Sabis was not paft ten Miles from his Camp; and that on the further fide of this River all the Nervil were affembled together, and there attended the coming of the Romans. With them were joyned the Atrebates and Veromandui, whom they had perfivaded to abid the first part of the War with them. Befides they expetted a Power from the Aduatic. The Women and fluch at were unnest for the Field shee he. men and fuch as were unmeet for the Field, they bemen and fuch as were unmeet for the Eield, they beflowed in a place unaccefible for any Army, by reason of Fens and Bogs and Marishes. Upon this intelligence, Cæstar sen his Spies and Centurions before to chiqe out a fit place to encamp in.
Now whereas many of the surrendred Belgæ and other Gauls were continually in the Roman Army, other Gaus were continually in the Kolliali army, certain of these (as it was afterward known by the Captives) observing the Order which the Romans used in marchine, came by Night to the Nervii, and told them that between every Legion went a great told them that between every Legion went a great fort of Carriaget; and that it was no matter of difficulty at foon at the fift Legion was come into the Camp, and the other Legions et a great way off, to fer upon them upon a fidden before they were dif-burdened of their Carriaget, and fo to overthrow them: Woich Legion being cut off and their fuff taken, the rest would have small courage to stand a-cainst them. It much surveyed this advice, that taken, the rest would bave small courage to stand against them. It much furthered this advice, that forasmuch as the Nervis were not able to make any power of Hosfe, but what they did they were wome to do with Foot; that they might the better rossist the Cavalry of their Borderers, whensoever they made any invoad into their Territories, their manner was to cut young Trees balf assured, and busing the Tops down to the ground, plassed the Boughs in breadth, and with Thorn and Briars planted between them, they made them so that was to cutter or pass through them. So that when by this occusion the valthrough them: So that when by this occasion the pas-Sage of the Roman Army must needs be bindered, the Nervii thought the foresaid Counsel not to be

The place which the Romans chose to encamp in ree the even on the other has roje another that ar-rethly against this, to the quantity of two hundard Paces; the Bostom whereof was plain and open, and the upper part so thick with Wood, that it could not easily be looked into. Within these Woods the Neervians kept themselves close: And in the open ground, by the River side, were only seen a sew Troops of Horse, and the River in that place was about three Foot

Cælar sending his Horsemen before, followed after with all his power. But the manner of his march differed from the Report which was brought to the Nervii: For inasmuch as the Enemy was at hand Nervii: For inajmich as the enemy was as name, Caelar (as his Custom was) led fix Legions always in a readines, without burthen or Carriage of any thing but their Arms: After them he placed the Baggage of the whole Army. And the two Legions which were last enrolled, were a Rereward to the Army and guarded the stuff.

OBSERVATION.

THis treacherous practice of the furrendred

Belgie hath fortunately discovered the manner

The manner of Belge hath fortunately discovered the manner of Cafar's March, as well in fafe passages, as in the Roman dangerous and suspected places: Which is a point March, of no small consequence in Martial discipline, being subject to so many inconveniences, and capable of the greatest art that may be shewed in managing a War. Concerning the discrete ordering of a March, by this circumstance it may be gathered that Cafar principally respected safety. The same and secondly conveniency. If the place afforded Casar hat in a secure passage, and gave no suspicion of Hostilli-adming a ty, he was content in regard of conveniency, to March. I suffer every Legion to have the oversight of their 50-fts. fuffer every Legion to have the overfight of their sefery. particular Carriages, and to infert them among the Troops, that every Man might have at hand the 1700%, trar every Man might have at hand fuch necessaries as were requisite, either for their private use or publick discipline. But if he were in danger of any sudden attempt, or stood in hazzard to be hemd in by an Enemy, he then omitted convenient disposition in regard of particular the set of determinent at the set of the particular than the set of the ted convenient auponition in regard on particular use, as disadvantageous to their safety; and car-ried his Legions in that readiness, that if they chanced to be engaged by an Enemy, they might without any alteration of their March or incumbrance of their Carriages, receive the charge in that form of Battel as was best approved by their military rules, and the ancient practice of their fortunate Progenitors.

The old Romans observed likewise the same Rules; for in unsafe and suspected places they carried their Troops Agmine Quadrato, in a square drawn March, which as Livie seemeth to note, was free Match, which as Livie jeeneeth to note, was iree from all carriage and impediments which might hinder them in any fudden Alarm. Neither doth that of * Hirtim any way contradict this inter-* Lik 8. de 18. d pretation, where he faith that Cafar fo disposed his Bd. Gall. Troops against the Bellovaci, that three Legions marched in Front, and after them came all the marched in Front, and after them came all the Carriages, to which the tenth Legion ferved as a rereward; and to they marched pene Agmine Quadrate, almost in a square March. *Seneca in *6.5 Epit. like manner noteth the slatey of Agmen Quadratin *6.5 Epit. like manner noteth the slatey of Agmen Quadratin, where he saith that where an Enemy is expected, we ought to march Agmine Quadrator ready to sight. The most material consequence of these places alledeed is rhat are off as they subshed ngnt. The most material consequence of these places alledged is, that as off as they suffected any onset or charge, their order in a March little or nothing differed from their usual manner of embattelling; and therefore it was called Agmen Quadratum or a square March, inasmuch as it kept the fame disposition of parts as were observed in was a Hill of like level from the Top to the Bostom, Quadrata Acie, in a square Battel; for that triple

Form of embattelling which the Romans generally observed in their fights, having respect to the diflances between each Battel, contained almost an equal dimension of Front and File: And so it made Aciem Quadratam a square Body; and when it marched, Agmen Quadratum a square March.

Polybius expresseth the same in effect, as often as the place required circumspection; but altereth it fomewhat in regard of the carriages: For he faith that in time of danger, especially where the Country was plain and champaign, and gave space and free scope to clear themselves, upon any accident the Romans marched in a triple Battel of equal diftance one behind another, every Battel having his several Carriages in front. And if they were by chance attacked by an Enemy, they turned themselves according to the opportunity of the place either to the right or left hand; and io placing their Carriages on the one fide of their Army, they flood embattelled ready to receive the charge. The contrary Form of marching, where the place afforded more fecurity and gave fcope to conveniency, they named Agmen longum a long March or Train; when almost every Maniple or Order had their feveral Carriages attending upon them, and strove to keep that way which they found most easie both for themselves and their Baggage. Which Order of march as it was more commodious than the former in regard of particularity, so was it unsafe and dangerous where the Enemy was expected: And therefore Cafar much blamed Sabinus and Cotta, for marching, when they were deluded by Ambiorix, Longissimo Agmine in a very long Train; as though they had received their advertisements, from a friend, and not from an enemy.

And albeit our modern Wars are far different The use that in quality from them of ancient times, yet in this may be made of this, in our point of discipline they cannot have a more per-medern Wars. feet direction than that which the Romans observed as the two poles of their motions, Safety and Conveniency: Whereof the first dependent chiefly upon the provident disposition of the Leaders; and the other will eafily follow on, as the com-modity of every particular shall give occasion.

Concerning fafety in place of danger, what better course can be taken than that manner of embattelling, which shall be thought most convenient if an Enemy were present to confront them? For a well-ordered March must either carry the perfect form of a Battel, or contain the diffinct principles and elements thereof, that with little alteration it may receive that perfection of strength which the fittest disposition can afford it. First therefore a prudent and circumspect Leader, that defireth to frame a strong and orderly March, is diligently to observe the nature and use of each Weapon in his Army, how they may be placed for greatest use and advantage, both in respect of their different and concurring Qualities, as also in regard of the place wherein they are managed: And this knowledge will confequently inferr the But if this exactness of embattelling will not admit convenient carriage of fuch necessary adjuncts as pertain to an Army, the inconvenience is to be relieved with as little alteration from that rule, as in a wary judgment shall be found expedient; that albeit the form be fomewhat changed, yet the principles and ground, wherein their strength and fie the practices of many great and experienced Commanders, what fort of Weapon marched in front, and what in the Rere, in what part of the Army the Munition marched, and where the rest of the carriage was bestowed, according as their feveral judgments thought most expedient in the particular nature of their occurrences. But the Issue of all will fall out thus; that he that observed this rule before prescribed, did seldom miscarry through an unsafe March. Let a good Martialist well know the proper use of diversity of Weapons in his Army, how they are serviceable or disadvantageous, in this or that place, against such or such an Enemy; and he will fpeedily order his Barrel, dispose of his March, and bestow his carriages, as shall best suit both with his safety and conveni-

Calar's custom was to fend his Cavalry and light-armed Footmen before the body of his Army, both to discover and straiten an Enemy; for these Troops were nimble in motion and fit for fuch fervices: but if the danger were greater in the Rere than in the Front, the Horsemen marched in the Rere of the Army, and gave fecurity where there was most cause of fear. But if it happened that they were found unfit to make good the fervice in that place, as oftentimes it fell out, and especially in Africa against the Numidians; he then removed them as he found it most conveni-ent, and brought his Legionary Soldiers, which were the finews and strength of his Forces, to march continually in the body of the Army and to make good that which his Horsemen could not perform. And thus he altered the ancient prescription and uniformity of Cuftom, according as he found himself best able to annoy an Enemy, or make way to victory.

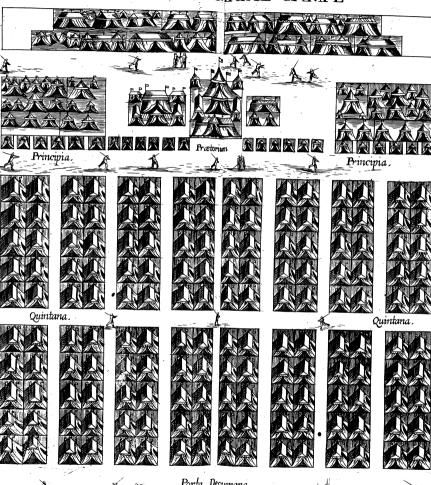

CHAP. IX.

The Romans begin to fortifie their Camp: But are interrupted by the Nervii. Cafar maketh hafte to prepare his Forces to Battel.

He Roman Horsemen, with the slingers Casar. and Archers, passed over the River, and encountred the Cavalry of the Enemy: Who at first retired back to their Companies in the Wood, and from thence sallied out again upon them; but the Romans durft not purfue them further than the Plain and open ground. In the mean time the fix Legions that were in front, having their work measured out unto them, began to fortifie their Camp. But as soon as the Nervii perceived their former carriages to be come in fight, which was the time appointed amongs them to give the charge, as they slood embattelled within the thicket, so they rusped out with all their Forces, and assumed the Roman Horsemen: Which being easily beaten back, the Nervii ran down to the River with such an incredible swiftness, that they seemed at the same instant of time to be in the Woods, at the River, and best and exactest disposition of embattelling, that charging the Legions on the other side: For with the the faid Forces are capable of; which if it may fame violence having paffed the River, they ran up be observed in a March, is no way to be altered. the bill to the Roman Camp, where the Soldiers were the hill to the Roman Camp, where the Soldiers were busied in their Intrenchment. Casar had all parts to play at one instant: The Flag to be hung out, by which they gave the Soldiers warning to take Arms, the Battel to be proclaimed by found of Trumpet, the Soldiers to be recalled from their work, and such as were gone far off to get turf and matter for the rampier, to be fent for, the Battel to be ordered, his Men Principles and ground, wherein that iterages and facilities and the fign of Battel to be encouraged, and the fign of Battel to be encouraged and the fign of Battel to be encouraged, and the fign of which were cut off by flower for the English and the figure for the Eng

Porta Prætoria

THE ROMAINE CAMPE

The First OBSERVATION.

As the Romans excelled all other Nations in many good Cultoms, so especially in their Camp-Discipline they strove to be singular: For it seemed rather an Academy, or a City of Civil Government, than a Camp of Soldiers; so careful were they both for the safety, and skilful experience of their Men at Arms. For touching the lirth, they never suffered their Soldiers to lodge as Nich without a Camp when they one Night without a Camp, wherein they were Inclosed with Ditch and Rampier, as in a walled Town: Neither was it any new Invention or late found out Custom in their State, but in use amongft the ancient Romans, and in the time of their Kings. Their manner of Encamping was on this wife.

The Centurions that went before to chuse our a convenient place, having found a fit fituation a convenient page, javing joint a in intation for their Camp, first affigned the standing for the Emperors Pavillion, which was commonly in the most eminent place of the Camp; from whence he might easily over-look all the other Parts, or any Alarm or fignum pugna might from thence be discovered to all Quarters. This Pavillion was The Pratorium known by the name of Pratorium, for a fmuch as amongst the ancient Romans the General of their amongst the attention formation and contact and a final army was called Prestor. In this place where the Prestorium was to be erected, they fluck up a white Enfign, and from it they measured every way a hundred Foot, and to they made a figure containing two hundred Foot in every fide; the Area or content whereof was almost an Acre of Ground: The form of the Pratorium was round and high, being as eminent among the other Tents, as a Temple is amongst the private Buildings of a City; and therefore 30fephus compareth it to a Church. In this Pravosum was angs of a Cury; and therefore yellows the The Ditch and the Rampier were made by the The Ditch their Tribunal or Chair of the Effate, and the Legions, every Maniple having his part measured pier. place of Divination, which they called Augurale, with other Appendices of Majesty and Authority.

The Generals Tent being thus placed, they confidered which fide of the Pavillion lay most commodious for Forage and Water, and on that fide they lodged the Legions, every Legion divided one from another by a Street or Lane of fifty Foot in breadth; and according to the degree of Ho-nour that every Legion had in the Army, fo were they lodged in the Camp, either in the midft which was counted most Honourable, or towards the fides, which was of meaner Reputation. And again, according to the place of every Cohort in his Legion, fo was it lodged nearer the Pavillion of the Emperor, towards the Heart of the Camp; and so consequently every Maniple took place in the Cohort, diftinguishing their pre-eminence by lodging them either toward the middle or to the outsideward, according as they diffinguished the place of their Legions, There went a Street of fifty in breadth overthwart the midft of all the Legions, which was called Quintana, for that it divided the fifth Cohort of every Legion from the

Between the Tents of the first Maniples in every Legion and the Presorium, there went a way of an hundred Foot in breadth throughout the whole Camp, which was called Principia; in this place the Tribunes fat to hear matters of Justice, the Soldiers exercised themselves at their Weapons, and the Leaders and chief Commanders frequented it as a publick place of Meeting; and it was held for a Religious and Sacred Place, and fo kept with a correspondent decency. On either side the Emperor's Pavillion, in a direct Line to cipia, the Tribunes had their Tents pitched, every the Tent of Tribune confronting the Head of the Legion whereof he was Tribune: Above them, towards the Head of the Camp, were the Legates and Treafurer: The upper part of the Camp was ftrengthned with fone felect Cohorts and Troops of Horfe, according to the number of Legions that were in the Army.

Polybius describing the manner of Encamping which the Romans used in his time, when as they had commonly but two Legions in their Army, with as many Affociates, placeth the Abletti and Extraordinarii, which were felect Bands and Companies, in the upper part of the Camp, and the Affociates on the outfide of the Legions.

The Ditch and the Rampier that compassed the whole Camp about, was two hundred Foot di- The fpace bei Hant from any Tent: Whereof Polybius giveth issees the these Readons; First, That the Soldiers marching Tent and the into the Camp in Battel-Array, might there different chemselves into Maniples, Centuries, and Decuries, without Turnult or Confusion; for Order was the thing which they principally respected, as the Life and Strength of their Martial Body; And again, if occasion were offered to Sally our and again, in occasion were onered to sally our upon an Enemy, they might very conveniently in that fpacious room put themselves into Companies and Troops: And if they were affaulted in the Night, the Darts and Fire-works which the Enemy my should cast into their Camp, would little en-damage them, by reason of the distance between the Rampier and the Tents.

Their Tents were all of Skins and Hides, held up with Props, and fastned with Ropes: There were eleven Soldiers; as Vegetius saith, in every Tent, and that Society was called Contubernium, Combenion of whom the chiefest was named Decanus, or un.

Caput Contubernii.

out, and every Centurion overfeeing his Century; the approbation of the whole Work belonged to the Tribunes. Their manner of intrenching was this: The Soldiers being girt with their Swords and Daggers, digged the Ditch about the Camp, which was always eight Foot in breadth at the least, and as much in depth, casting the Earth thereof inward; but if the Enemy were not far off, the Ditch was always eleven, or fifteen, or eighteen Foot in Latitude and Altitude, according to the discretion of the General: But what scantling foever was kept, the Ditch was made directis lateribus, that is, as broad in the bottom as at the top. The Rampier from the brink of the Dirch was three Foot in heighth, and fometimes four, made after the manner of a Wall, with green Turfs cut all to one measure, half a Foot in thickness, a Foot in breadth, and a Foot and an half in length. But if the place wherein they were Encamped would afford no such Turf, they then ftrengthned the loose Earth which was cast out of the Dirch with Boughs and Faggors, that it might be fitrog and well-fattened. The Rampier they properly called Agger: The outflow whereof Agger, which hung over the Dirch, they used to frick with thick and sharp Stakes, fastened deep in the Mound, that they might be firm; and these for the most part were forked Stakes; which made the Rampier very ftrong, and not to be affaulted but with great difficulty. Varro faith, That the Front of the Rampier thus stuck with Stakes, was called vailum à varicando, for that no Man Vallum could ftride or get over it.

The Camp had four Gates: The first was called Pratoria Porta, which was always behind the Pra make even and straight the upper side of the Prin- Emperor's Tent; and this Gate did usually look Ports.

either toward the East, or to the Enemy, or that way that the Army was to March. The Gate on the other fide of the Camp opposite to this, was called Porta Decumana, a decimis cohortibus; For the tenth or last Cohort of every Legion was lodged to confront this Gate: By this Gate the Soldiers went out to fetch their Wood, their Water, and their Forage, and this way their Offenders were carried to Execution. The other two Gates were called Portæ Principales, forasmuch as they stood opposite to either end of that so much Læva. Dextra.

respected Place which they called Principia, only diffinguished by these Titles, Lava Principalis and Dextra, the Left and the Right-hand principal Gate. All these Gates were shut with doors, and in flanding Camps fortified with Turrets, upon which were planted Engines of Defence, as Balifta, Catapulta, Tolenones, and fuch like.

The Romans had their Summer Camps, which they termed Æftiva, and their Winter Camps, Castra Æstiwhich they called Hiberna, or Hibernacula. Their Summer Camps were in like manner differenced, according to the time which they continued in them. For if they remained in a place but a Night or two, they called them Castra or Mansiones; but if they continued in them any long time, they called them Æstivas or Sedes: And these were more absolute, as well in regard of their Tents, as of their Fortification, than the former wherein they flayed but one Night. The other which they called Hiberna had great Labour and Cost beflowed upon them, that they might the better de-fend them from the Winter Season. Of these we read, that the Tents were either thatched with Straw, or roofed with Boards, and that they had their Armory, Hospital, and other publick Houses. These Camps have been the beginning of many famous Towns, especially when they continued long in a place, as oftentimes they did, upon the Banks of Euphrates, Danow, and the Rhine. The Order which they always observed in marking out their Camp was fo uniform, and well known to the Romans, that when the Centurions had limited every part, and marked it with different Signs and Colours, the Soldiers entred into it as into a known and familiar City; wherein every Society or finall Fellowship knew the place of its lodging: And which is more, every particular Man could affign the proper flation of every Company throughout the whole Army.

The use and commodity of this Encamping I to of this Es- briefly touched in my First Book: But if I were worthy any way to commend the excellency thereof to our modern Soldiers, or able by perswasion to re-establish the use of Encamping in our Wars, I would spare no pains to atchieve so great a good, and glory more in the Conquest of Negligence, than if my felf had made some notable Discovery: And yet reason would deem it a matter of small difficulty, to gain a point of fuch worth in the opinion of our Men, especially when my discourse shall present Security to our Forces, and Honour to our Leaders, Majesty to our Armies, and terror to our Enemies, Wonderment to Strangers, and Victory to our Nation. But Sloth hath fuch interest in this Age, that it commendeth Vain-glory and Fool-hardiness, contempt of Vertue, and derifion of good Discipline, to repugn the defigns of Honour, and so far to overmaster Reason, that it fuffereth not former harms to bear witness against Error, nor correct the ill atchievements of ill directions: And therefore ceafing to urge this point any further, I will leave it to the careful respect of the Wife.

The Second OBSERVATION.

The Fury of the Enemy, and their fudden Af- to Coronic fault fo diffurbed the Ceremonies which the nits missis from an Discipline observed, to make the Soldiers their rounds their rounds. truly apprehend the weight and importance of that tim to Batel Action, which might cast upon their State either Sovereignty or Bondage, that they were all, for the most part omitted: notwithstanding they are here noted under these Titles; The first was Vexillum proponendum, quod erat infigne cum ad Arma concurri oporteret, the hanging out the Flag, which was the fign for betaking themselves to their Arms: For when the General had determined to Fight, he caused a skarlet Coat or red Flag to be hung out upon the top of his Tent, that by it the Soldiers might be warned to prepare themfelves for the Battel; and this was the first warning they had; which, by a filent aspect, presented Blood and Execution to their Eyes, as the only means to work out their own fafety, and purchase eternal Honour. The second was Signum tuba dandum, the proclaiming the Battel by found of Trumpet: This warning was a noise of many Trumpets, which they termed by the name of Classicum à Calando, which fignifieth Calling; for after the Eye was fitted with Objects suitable to the matter intended, they then hafted to poffels the Ear, and by the fense of Hearing to stir up Warlike Motions, and fill them with resolute Thoughts, that no diffident or base Conceits might take hold of their Minds. The third was milites cobortandi, the encouraging of the Soldiers: For it was thought convenient to confirm this Valour with Motives of Reason, which is the strength and perfection of all fuch motions. The use and benefit whereof I somewhat inlarged on in the Helvetian War, and could afford much more labour to demonstrate the commodity of this part, if my Speech might carry credit in the opinion of our Soldiers, or be thought worthy regard to Men for much addicted to their own Fashions. The last was Signum dandum, giving the fign; which, as fome think, was nothing but a word, by which they might diftinguish and know themselves from their Enemies. Hirtius in the War of Africk faith, that Cafar gave the word Felicity: Brutus and Cassius gave Liberty; others have given Virtus, Deus nobiscum, Triumphus Imperatoris, and such like words, as might be ominous of good Success.

Besides these particulars, the manner of their Delivery gave a great Grace to the matter. And that was diftinguished by Times and Seasons whereof Casar now complaineth, that all these were to be done at one instant of Time: For without all controversie, there is no matter of such consequence in it self, but may be much graced with Ceremonies and Complements, which like Officers or Attendants add much respect and Majesty to the Action; which otherwise being but barely presented, appeareth far meaner and of less

CHAP. X.

The Battel between Cafar and the Nervii.

N these difficulties two things were a help to the Romans: The one was the Knowledge and Experience of the Soldiers; for by reason of their practice in former Battels, they could as well prescribe unto themselves what was to be done, as any other Commander could teach them. The other was, That notwithstanding Casar had given Com- Numidians to be dispersed and sed, that without an perfected, yet when they saw extremity of Danger, they attended no countermand from Carlar, but or-dered all things as it seemed best to their own Disdiers, and by fortune came to the tenth Legion; where he used no further Speech, than that they should remember their ancient Valour, have courageous states take Hearts, and valiantly withstand the brunt of their Enemies. And for a fmuch as the Enemy was no furthing election ther off, than a Weapon might be cast to encounter them, he gave them the sign of Battel: and hasten-ing from thence to another Quarter, he found them already elosed and at the encounter. For the time was fo foort and the Enemy so violent, that they wanted leisure to put on their Head-Pieces, or to uncase their Targets: So that what part they lighted into from their Work, or what Ensign they first met withal, there they flaged; left in feeking out their own Companies, they should lose that time that was to be spent in Fighting. The Army being embattelled rather according to the nature of the Place, the declivity of the Hill, and the brevity of Time, than according to the Rules of Art; as the Legions encountred the Enemy in divers Places at once, the perfect view of the Battel being hindred by those thick Hedges before Spoken of, there could no Succours of Fortune. The Soldiers of the ninth and tenth Legion, as they stood in the left part of the Army, casting their Piles with the advantage of the Hill, did drive the Atrebates, breathlefs with running and wounded in the Encounter, down into the River; and as they paffed over the Water, slew many of them with their Swords. Neither did they slick to follow after them over the River, and adventure into a place of disadvantage, where the Battel being renewed again by the Enemy, they put them to Flight the second time. In like manner two other Legions, the eleventh and the eighth having forced the Veromandui from the upper Ground, fought with them upon the Banks of the River; and so the Front, and the Left part of the Camp was well-near left naked. For in the right Wing were the twelfth and seventh Legions, whereas all the Nervii, under the Conduct of Boduognatus, were placed together; and some of them began to assault the Legions on the open side, and other some to possess themselves of the highest part of the Camp.

be placed any where; neither could any Man see what certainty of things, there happened divers Casualties

At the same time the Roman Horsemen, and the light-armed Footmen that were intermingled amongst them, and were at first all put to slight by the Enemy, as they were entring into the Camp, met with their Enemies in the face, and so were forced to sty another way. In like manner the Pages, and Soldiers Boys, that from the Decumane Port and top of the Hill had seen the tenth Legion follow their Enemies in pursuit over the River, and were gone out to Pillage, when they looked behind them, and saw the Finage, when very source version worm, and just we Enemy in their Camp, betook them to their Hecks as fast as they could. At the same time rose a great hubbub and outery of those that came along with the Carriages, who being extreamly troubled and dif-mayed at the business, ran some one way and some another. Which accident so terrified the Horsemen of the Treviri (who, for their Prowess, were reputed singular amongst the Gauls, and were sent thither by their State to aid the Romans) first when they perceived the Roman Camp to be possess d by a great multitude of the Enemy, the Legions to be overcharged mandment to every Legate, not to leave the Work further expectation they took their way bomeward, and or forsake the Legions until the Fortifications were reported to their State that the Romans were utterly overthrown, and that the Enemy had taken their cretion. Cæfat having Commanded such things as Wing, finding his Men exceedingly overcharged, the he thought necessary, ran hastily to encourage his Sol-Calar departing from the tenth Legion to the right ers of the twelfth Legion put into such close Order, that they hindred one another; all the Centurions of the fourth Cohort being Slain, the Ensign-bearer kill d and the Enfign taken, and the Centurions of the other Cohorts either Slain or fore Wounded; amongst whom Pub. Sexrus Baculus, the Primipile of that Legion, a Valiant Man, so grievously Wounded that he could scarce stand upon his Feet; the rest not very forward, but many of the hindmost turning Tail and forsaking ous many of one onsummer summer state analysismon the Field; the Enemy on the other fide giving no refpite in Front, although he fought against the Hill, nor yet sparing the open fide, and the matter brought to that issue, that there was no bope of Succour or Relief for them: He took a Target from one of the bindmost Soldiers, (for he himself was come thither without one) and pressing to the Front of the Batel, called the Centurions by name, and encouraging the rest, Commanded the Ensigns to be advanced toward the Enemy, and the Maniples to be enlarged that they might with greater facility and readiness use their Swords.

The First OBSERVATION.

was needful to be done: And therefore in fo great un-THis Publius Sextus Baculus was the chief Cen- The Place and turion of the twelfth Legion, being the art office of a Centurion of that Maniple of the Triarii that was of the first Cohort in that Legion: For that place was the greatest Dignity that could happen to a Centurion; and therefore he was called by the name of Centurio Primipili, or fimply Primipilus, and fometimes Primopilus, or Primus Centurio. By him were commonly published the Mandates and Edicts of the Emperor and Tribunes: And therefore the rest of the Centurions at all Times had an Eye unto him; and the rather for that the Eagle, which was the peculiar Enfign of every Legion, was committed to his Charge, and carried in his Maniple. Neither was this Dignity with-out a special Profit, as may be gathered out of divers Authors. We read farther, That it was no disparagement for a Tribune, after his Tribuneship was expired, to be a Primipile in a Legion; notwithstanding there was a Law made, I know not upon what occasion, that no Tribune should afterward be Primipile. But let this fuffice concerning the Office and Title of P.S. Baculus.

The Second OBSERVATION.

A Nd here I may not omit to give the Target The Torget any Honour I may. And therefore I will take defended, occasion to describe it in Cassar's hand, as in the place of greatest Dignity, and much honouring the excellency thereof. Polybius maketh the Target to contain two Foot and an half in breadth, overthwart the convex furface thereof, and the length four Foot, of what form or fashion soever they were: For the Romans had two forts of Targets amongst their Legionaries; The first carried the proportion of that Figure which the Geometricians call Oval, a Figure of an unequal proportion, broadest in the mid'ft, and narrow at both the ends like unto an Egg, described in Plano: The other fort was of an equal proportion and refembled the fashion of a Gutter-Tile, and thereupon was called Scutum imbricatum. The matter whereof a Target was made, was a double and almost enclosed about, the Horsemen, Slingers, and Poard, one fattened upon another with Lint and dice this mine opinion. But notwithflanding I will haften to my purposed comparison. Now touching the Phalanx, if it have the disposition of the Phalanx of the property of the Phalanx of the Phalanx of the property of the Phalanx of the Ph of Iron, to keep it from cleaving; and in the midst there was a boss of Iron or Brass, which they called Umbo. Romulus brought them in first among the Romans, taking the use of them from the Sabines. The Wood whereof they were made was for the most part either Sallow, Alder, or Fig-tree: whereof Pliny giveth this reason; forasmuch as these Trees are cold and waterish, and therefore any blow or thrust that was made upon the Wood, was presently contracted and sour up again. But forasmuch as the Target was of such reputation among the Roman Arms, and challenged fuch interest in the greatness of their Empire, let us enter a little into the confideration of the use and conveniency thereof; which cannot be better understood than by that comparison which Polybius hath made between the Weapons of the Romans and the Macedonians: and therefore I have thought good to infert it in these discourses. And thus it followerh.

Bulls Glue, and covered with an Oxe Hide, or fome other fitiff Leather; the upper and lower part of the Target were bound about with a Plate

Of the difference of the Roman and Macedonian Weapons.

T Promised in my Sixth Book that I would make a comparison between the Weapons of the Romans and Macedonians : and that I would likewife write of the disposition of either of their Armies, how they do differ one from another: and in what regard the one or the other were either inferiour or superiour : which promise I will now with diligence endeavour to perform. And forafmuch as the Armies of the Macedonians have given so good testimonies of themselves by their Romans have Conquered as well those of Africa. as all the Eastern Countries of Europe; it shall not be amifs, but very profitable, to fearch out the difference of either; especially seeing that these our times have not once, but many times feen trial both of their Battels and Forces: that knowing the reason why the Romans do overcome, and in their Battel carry away the better, we do not as vain Men were wont to do, attribute the same to Fortune, and efteem them without reason, happy Victors; but rather looking into the true causes, we give them their due praises, according to the direction of Reason and sound Judgment. Concerning the Battels between Hannibal and the Romans, and concerning the Romans loffes, there is no need that I speak much. For their losses are neither to be imputed to the defect of their Arms, or disposition of their Armies; but to the dexterity and industry of Hannibal. But we have treated thereof when we made mention of the Battels themselves; and the end it self of that War doth especially confirm this our opinion : for when they had gotten a Captain that was able to cope with Hannibal, he and his Victories quickly ceased. And he had no sooner overcome the Romans, but presently rejecting his own Weapons, he trained his Army to theirs: and fo taking them up in the beginning, he continued them on unto the end .

· And Pyrrhus in his War against the Romans, did use both their Weapons and Order, and made as it were a Medly both of the Cohort and Phalanx: but notwithstanding it served him not to get the Victory, but always the event by fome means or other made the fame doubtful: concerning whom it were not unfit that I should say something, least in being altogether filent, it might feem to prejufition and forces proper to it, nothing is able to oppose it self against it, or to sustain the violence thereof; as may eafily by many inftances be proved. For when an Armed Man doth stand firm in the space of three Foot in so thick an Array of Battel, and the length of their Pikes being according to the first basis or scantling sixteen Foot, but according to the true and right conveniency of them fourteen Cubits, out of which are taken four allowed for the space between the left hand which supporteth the same, and the butt-end thereof, whilft he ftands in a readiness to attend the encounter; being thus ordered, I fay, it is manifest that the length of ten Cubits doth extend it felf before the body of every Armed Man, where with both his hands he doth advance it ready to charge the Enemy. By which means it followeth, that some of the Pikes do not only extend themselves before the fecond, the third, and fourth Rank, but fome before the foremost, if the Phalanx have his proper and due thickness, according to his natural disposition, both on the sides and behind : as Homer maketh mention when he faith, that one Target doth enclose and fortifie another; one Head-piece is joyned to another, that they may ftand united and close together.

These circumstances being rightly and truly set down, it must follow, that the Pikes of every former Rank in the Phalanx do extend themselves two Cubits before each other, which proportion of difference they have between themselves: by which may evidently be feen the affault and impression of the whole Phalanx, what it is, and what force it hath, confifting of fixteen Ranks in depth or thickness. The excess of which number actions, by overcoming the Armies as well of depth or thicknefs. The excess of which number affia as of Greece, and that the Battels of the of Ranks above five, forafunch as they cannot commodiously couch their Pikes without the difturbance of the former, the points of them not being long enough to enlarge themselves beyond the foremost Ranks, they grow utterly unprofita-ble, and cannot Man by Man make any impression or affault: but serve only by laying their Pikes upon the Shoulders of those which stand before them, to fuftain and hold up the fways and giving back of the former Ranks which fland before them, to this end, that the Front may stand firm and fure; and with the thickness of their Pikes they do repell all those Darts, which paffing over the heads of those that stand before, would annoy those Ranks which are more backward.

And farther, by moving forward with the force of their bodies, they do so press upon the former, that they do make a most violent impression. For it is impossible that the foremost Ranks should give back.

This therefore being the general and particular disposition of the Phalanx, we must now speak on the contrary part touching the properties and on the contrary part touching the properties and differences, as well of the Arms, as of the whole disposition of the Roman Battel. For every Roman Souldier for himself and his Weapon, is allowed three Foot to fland in, and in the Encounter are moved Man by Man, every one covering himfelf with his Target, and mutually moving whenfoever there is occasion offered. But those which use their Swords, do fight in a more open and diffinct order; so that it is manifest that they have three Foot more allowed them to fland in both from Shoulder to Shoulder, and from Back to Belly, that they may use their Weapons to better Advantage. And hence it cometh to pass that one Roman Souldier taketh up as much Ground, as two of those which are to encounter him of the Micedonian Phalanx: So that one Romin is as it were to oppose himself against ten Pikes, which Pikes the said one Soldier can neither by any Agility come to offend, or else at close Fight otherwise annoy: And those which are behind him are not only unable to repel their Force, hind nim are not only unable to repet their rorte, but also with conveniency to use their own Weapons. Whereby it may easily be gathered, that is impossible that any Battel being affaulted by it is impossible that any Battel being assaulted by the Front of a Phalanx, should be able to sustain the violence thereof, if it have its due and proper

Lib. II.

What then is the cause that the Romans do overcome, and that those that do use the Phalanx are void of the hope of Victory? Even from hence, that the Roman Armies have infinite Advantages, both of Places and of Times to Fight in. But the Phalanx hath only one Time, one Place, and one Kind whereto it may profitably apply it felf: So that if it were of necessity that their Enemy should encounter them at that Inftant, especially with their whole Forces, it were questionless not only not without Danger but in all probability likely that the Phalanx should ever carry away the better. But if that may be avoided, which is eafily done, thall not that disposition then be utterly unprofitable, and free from all Terror? And it is farther evident, That the Phalanx must necessarily have plain and champaign Places, without any hinderances or impediments, as Ditches, uneven Places, Vallies, little Hills and Rivers; For all these may hinder and disjoin it. And it is almost impossible to have a Plain of the capacity of twenty Stadia, much less more, where there shall be found none of these Impediments. But suppose there be found fuch Places as are proper for the Phalanx: If the Enemy refuse to come unto them, and in the mean time Spoil and Sack the Cities and Country round about, what Advantage or Profit shall arise by any Army so ordered ? For if it remain in such Places as hath been before spoken of, it can neither relieve their Friends, nor preserve themselves. For the Convoys which they expect from their Friends are easily cut off by the Enemy, whiles they remain in those open places.

And if it happen at any time that they leave them upon any enterprise, they are then exposed them upon any emergence, they are then exponent to the Enemy. But suppose that the Roman Army should find the Phalanx in such places, yet would it not adventure it self in gross at one Instant, but would by little and little retire it felf; as doth plainly appear by their usual Practice. For there must not be a conjecture of these things by my words only, but especially by that which they do. For they do not to equally frame their Battel, that they do affault the Enemy altogether, making as it were but one Front: But part make a stand, and part Charge the Enemy, that if at any time the Phalanx do press them that come to assault them and be repelled, the Force of their Order is diffolved. For whether they purfue those that Retire, or fly from those that do Assault them, these do disjoyn themselves from part of their Army; by which means there is a gap opened to their Enemies, standing and attending their opportunity: So that now they need not any more to Charge them in the Front, where the force of the Phalanx confifteth, but to affault where the breach is made, both behind and upon the fides. But if at any time the Roman Army may keep his due Propriety and Disposition, the Phalanx by the difadvantage of the Place being not able to do the like, doth it not then manifeftly demonstrate the difference to be great between the goodnels of their disposition, and the disposition of the Phalanx?

To this may be added the necessities imposed upon an Army: Which is, to march through places of all Natures, to Encamp themselves, to possess Places of Advantage, to Besiege, and to be Besieged; and also contrary to expectation sometimes to come in view of the Enemy. For all convenient; forafmuch as neither in their general Order, nor in their particular disposition, without a convenient place, they are able to effect any thing of moment: But the Roman Army is apt for all these Purposes. For every Soldier amongst them being once Armed and ready to Fight, refuseth no Place, Time, nor Occasion; keeping always the same Order, whether he Fight together with the whole Body of the Army, or particularly by himself Man to Man.

And hence it happeneth, That as the commo-diousness of their Disposition is advantageous, so the end doth answer the Expectation.

These things I thought to speak of at large, because many of the Gracians are of an opinion that the Macedonians are not to be overcome. And again, many wondered how the Macedonian Phalanx should be put to the worse by the Roman Army, confidering the nature of their Weapons.

Thus far goeth Polybius in comparing the Weapons and Embattelling of the Romans, with the use of Arms amongst the Macedonians: Wherein we see the Pike truly and exactly ordered, according as the wise Gracians could best proportion it with that form of Battel, which might give most advantage to the use thereof: So that if our Squadrons of Pikes jump not with the perfect manner of a Phalanx, (as we fee they do not) they fall so much short of that strength, which the Wisdom of the Gracians, and the experience of other Nations imputed unto it. But suppose we could allow it that disposition in the course of our Wars, which the nature of the Weapon doth require; yet forasmuch as by the authority of Polybius, the faid manner of Embattelling is tied to fuch dangerous circumftances of one Time, one Place, and one kind of Fight, I hold it not fo profitable a Weapon as the practice of our Times doth feem to make it, especially in Woody Countries, such as Ireland is, where the afe is cut off by fuch Inconveniencies as are noted to hinder the managing thereof. And doubtless, if our Commanders did but consider of the Incongruity of the Pike and Ireland, they would not proportion fo great a number of them in every Company as there is; for commonly half the Company are Pikes, which is as much as to fay in the practice of our Wars, That half the Army hath neither offensive nor defensive Weapons, but only against a Troop of Horse. For they seldom or never come to the push of Pike with the Foot Companies, where they may Charge and Offend the Enemy: And for defence, if the Enemy think it not fafe to buckle with them at hand, bur . maketh more advantage to play upon them afar off with Shot, it affordeth imall fafety to shake a long Pike at them, and ftand fair in the mean time to entertain a Volley of Shot with the Body of their Battalion. As I make no question but the Pike in some Services is profitable, as behind a Rampier, or at a Breach; so I affure my self there are Weapons, if they were put to Trial, that would countervail the Pike, even in those Services wherein it is thought most profitable.

Concerning the Targer, we see it take the upper hand, in the judgment of Polybius, of all other Weapons whatfoever, as well in regard of the divers and fundry forts of Embattelling, as the quality of the place wherefoever: For their thronged Testudines.

Neither could the nature of the Place make them unferviceable; for whether it were plain or covert, level or unequal, narrow or large, if there were any conveniency to Fight, the Target was as necessary to Defend, as the Sword to Offend: Befides the conveniency which accompanieth the Target in any necessity imposed upon an Army, whether it be to march through places of all Natures, to make a quick March, or a speedy Retreat, to Encamp themselves, to possess Places of Advantage, to Besiege, and to be Befieged, as Polybius faith, with many other occafions which necessarily accompany an Army. The use of this Weapon hath been too much neglected in these later Ages, but may be happily renewed The Battel continueth, and in the end Casar again in our Nation, if the industry of such as have laboured to prefent it unto these Times in the best fashion. shall find any favour in the Opinion of our Commanders. Concerning which Target I must needs say thus much, That the light Target will prove the Target of Service, whenfoever they shall happen to be put in execuqualified with fuch helps as are annexed to the use thereof) that they overcharge a Man with an unsupportable burthen, and hinder his agility and execution in Fight with a weight disproportionaproof of their Targets further than was thought fit for the ready use of them in time of Battel as it appeareth in many places both in the Civil Wars, and in these Commentaries: For a Roman Pile hath oftentimes darted through the Target, and the Body of the Man that bare it, and fastened them both to the Ground; which is more than a Musket can well do, for the Bullet commonly resteth in the Body. And although it may be faid that this was not common, but rather the effect of an extraordinary Arm; yet it ferveth to prove. That their Targets were not proof to their offenfive Weapons, when they were well delivered, and with good direction. For I make no doubt but in their Battels there were oftentimes fome hinderances, which would not fuffer so violent an effect as this which I speak of: For in a Volley of Shot we must not think that all the Bullets fly with the fame force, and fall with the like hurt; but as Armour of good proof will hardly hold out some of them; so slender Arms, and of no proof, will make good refiftance against others. And to conclude, in a close Battel or Encounter a Man shall meet with more occasions suiting the nature and commodity of this light Target, than fuch as will advantage the heavy Target of proof, or countervail the furplus of weight which it carrieth with it.

Some Men will urge, That there is use of this Target of proof in some Places, and in some Services: Which I deny not to those that defire to Services; and hindereth not but that the univerfal benefit of this Weapon confifteth in the multimost important Affairs of a War.

Thus much I am further to note concerning the Sword of the Targetiers, that according to the practice of the Romans, it must always hang use was as effectual in small Bodies and Centu- on the right side; for carrying the Target upon tries, as in gross Troops and great Companies; the left Arm, it cannot be that the Sword should in thin and spacious Embattelling, as in thick-hang on the left fide, but with great trouble and hang on the left fide, but with great trouble and inconvenience. And if any Man fay, That if it hang on the right fide it must be very short, otherwife it will never be readily drawn out: I fay, That the Sword of the Targetiers, in regard of the use of that Weapon, ought to be of a very fhort feantling, when as the Targetier is to command the point of his Sword within the compass of his Target, as fuch as look into the true use of this Weapon will eafily discover. But let this fuffice concerning the use of the Pike and the

CHAP. XI.

Overcometh.

T the presence of their General the Soldiers . Cafar. conceived some better hopes; and gathering Strength and Courage again, when as every Man bestirred himself in the sight of the Emperour, the brunt of the Enemy was a little tion: For those which are made proof are so stayed. Casar perceiving likewise the seventh Leheavy and unweildy (although they be somewhat gion, which stood next unto him, to be somewhat gion, which stood next unto him, to be fore over-laid by the Enemy, commanded the Tribunes by little and little to join the two Legions together, and fo by joining back to back, to make two contrary Fronts: and being thus secured one by another from fear of ble to his Strength. For our offensive Weapons, being circumvented, they began to make refluence as namely, the Harquebusses and Muskers are with greater Courage. In the mean time the two stronger in the offensive part than any Arins of Legions that were in the Rereward to guard the Carbeston, which may be made manageable and fit riages, bearing of the Battel, double their pace, for Service. Neither did the Romans regard the Hill. Titus Labienus, having won the Camp of the Nervii, and beholding from the higher Ground what was done on the other fide of the River, fent the tenth Legion to help their Fellows: who, under-Standing by the Horsemen and Lacqueys that fled, in what case the matter stood, and in what danger the Camp, the Legions, and the General was, made all the haste they possibly could. At whose coming there happened such an alteration and change of things, that even such as were funk down through extream Grief of their Wounds, or leaned upon their Targets, began again to Fight afresh; and the Pages and the Boys perceiving the Enemy amazed, ran upon them unarmed, not fearing their Weapons.

The Horsemen also striving with extraordinary Valour to wipe away the dishonour of their former flight, thrust themselves in all places before the Legionary Soldiers. Howbeit the Enemy in the utmost peril of their Lives shewed such Manhood, that as fast as the foremost of them were overthrown, the next in place bestrid their Carcasses, and fought upon their Bodies : And these being likewise overthrown, and their Bodies heaped one upon another. they that remained possest themselves of that Mount of dead Carcasses, as a place of advantage, and from thence threw their Weapons, and intercepting the Piles returned them again to the Romans.

By which it may be gathered, That there was great reason to deem them Men of haughty Courage, that durst pass over so broad a River, climb up such high Rocks, and adventure to Fight in a place of fuch inbe secured from the extremity of Peril. But this equality; all which their Magnanimity made casis to falleth out in some places, and in some particular them. The Battel being thus ended, and the Nation and name of the Nervii being well near swallowed up with Destruction, the Elder fort with the tude of light Targetiers, who are to manage the Women and Children, that before the Battel were conveyed into Islands and Bogs, when they heard might do, how unlikely soever it might seem unthereof. and faw now that there was nothing to binder the Conqueror, nor any hope of safety to the Conquered, by the consent of all that remained alive sent querea, of the conjent of au tour remained ative jent Embassadors to Casar, and yielded themselves to bis Mercy; and in laying open the Misery of their State assumed, that of six hundred Senators they had now left but three, and of fixty Thousand Fighting Men, there was scarce Five hundred that were able to bear Arms. Cæsar, that his Clemency mighs to bear Arms. Canar, some on cuemens migra appear to a diffressed People, preserved them with great Care, granting unto them the free possession their Towns and Country, and straitly Commanding their Borderers not to offer them any Wrong or

OBSERVATION.

Lis. de Mili- A Nd thus endeth the Relation of that great and dangerous Battel, which Ramus complaineth of as a confused Narration, much differing from the direct and methodical File of his other Commentaries. But if that rule hold good which learned Rhetoricians have observed in their Oratory, That an unperfect thing ought not to be told in a perfect manner; then by Ramus's leave, if any fuch confusion do appear, it both favoureth of Eloquence, and well fuiteth the turbulent Carriage of the Action, wherein Order and Skill gave place to Fortune, and Providence was swallowed up by chance. For that which Hirrius saith of the overthrow he gave to Pharnaces, may as well be said of this, that he got the Victory, Plurimum adjuvante deorum benignitate, qui cum omnibus belli calibus interfuent, turn pracipue iis quibus ni-bil ratione potuit administrari; by the very great favour and affittance of the Gods; who, as they give aid in all cases of War, so especially in those where Reason and good Skill are at a loss. For fo it fell out in this Battel, and the danger proceeded from the same cause that brought him to that push in the Battel with Pharnaces: For he well understood that the Nervii attended his coming on the other fide the River Sabis: Neither was he ignorant how to fortifie his Camp in the was ne agnorm now to not the normal and a face of an Enemy without fear or danger, as we have feen in his War with Arivoiftus; when he marched to the place where he purpoted to Encamp himself with three Battels, and caused two of them to fland ready in Arms to receive any Charge which the Enemy should offer to give, that the third Battel in the mean time might fortifie the Camp. Which courfe would eafily have frustrated this Stratagem of the Nervii, and made the hazard less dangerous: But he little expected any fuch Resolution, so contrary to the Rules of Military Discipline, that an Enemy should not stick to pass over so broad a River, to climb up fuch steep and high Rocks, to adventure Battel in a place fo disadvantageous, and to hazard their Fortune upon fuch inequalities. And therefore rottine upon that inequalities and interests the little miftruited any fuch unlikely attempt, wherein the Enemy had plotted his own Overthrow, if the Legions had been ready to receive

Which may teach a General that which Casar had not yet learned, that a Leader cannot be too fecure in his most affured courses, nor too careful in his beft advised directions; confidering, that the greatest means may easily be prevented, and the safest course weakened with an unrespected circumftance: So powerful are weak Occurrences in the main course of the weightiest Actions, and so infinite are the ways whereby either Wisdom or Fortune may work. Neither did this migni do, now uninkey loves it migni teen un-to him; as appeareth by that accident in the Battel with Pharmaces. Which practice of ar-tempting a thing againft Reason and the Art of War, hath found good Success in our modern Wars, as appeareth by the French Histories: notwithstanding it is to be cautiously made use of, as no way favouring of Circumfpect and good direction, forasmuch as Temerisas non semper felix, Rashness does not always speed well, as Fabius the Great answered Scipio.

The chiefest helps which the Romans found, were first the advantage of the place; whereof I spake in the Helvetian War. Secondly, The experience which the Soldiers had got in the former Battels, which much directed them in this turbulent affault; wherein they carried themselves as Men acquainted with such Casualties. Lastly, The Valour and undaunted Judgment of the General, which overfwayed the Peril of the Battel, and brought it to fo fortunate an end. Wherein we may observe. That as in a remperate Course, when the issue of the Battel rested upon his directions, he wholly intended wariness and circumfpection: So in the hazard and peril of good hap, he confronted extremity of Danger with extremity of Valour, and over-topt Fury with a higher resolution.

CHAP. XII.

The Aduatici betake themselves to a strong hold, and are taken by Cafar.

He * Aduatici before-mentioned, coming Cx with all their Power to aid the Nervii, Ethic with all their Power to aid the Nervii, "Either and underflanding by the way of their Down or Overshrow, returned home again; and Budue in forfaking all the ref of their Towns and Caffles, conveyed themselves and their Wealth into one strong and well-fortified Town, which was compassed about with mighty Rock; and steep Precipiest, saving in one place of two hundred Foot in breadth, where there was an entry by a count and essential themselves. there was an entry by a gentle and easie ascent: Which passage they had Fortised with a double Wall of a great heighth, and had placed mighty large Stones and sharp Beams upon the Walls, ready for an Assault. This People descended from the Cimbri and Teutoni, who, in their Journey into Italy, left fuch Carriages on this side of the Rhine, as they could not conveniently take along with them, and 6000 Men to look to them : who, after the Death of their Fellows, being many Years disquieted by their Neighbours, sometimes invading other States, and sometimes defending themselves, at length procured a Peace, and chose this place to settle themselves

At the first coming of the Roman Army, they Sallied out of the Town, and made many light Skirmishes with them : But after that Cafar had drawn a Rampier about the Town of twelve Foot in heighth, fifteen Miles in compass, and had Fortified it with Castles very thick about the Town, they kept themselves within the Wall. And as they beheld the Vines framed, the Mount raised, and a Tower in building afar off; at first, they began to laugh at it, and with Scoffing Speeches from the Wall, began to ask with what hands, and with what strength, especially by Men of that Stature (for the Romans were but little Men in respect of the Gauls) a Tower of that huge massie weight should be brought unto the Walls. But when they saw it removed, and approaching near unto the Town (as Men aftonished at the strange and unaccustomed sight thereof) they warn him to provide for that which an Enemy fent Embaffadors to Catar to entreat a Peace, with this Message; They believed that the Romans did or other Stratagems which the Townsmen might not make War without the special assistance of the practise against them. And this manner of Siege Gods, that could with such facility transport Engines of that height, and bring them to close Fight, against the strongest part of their Town: And there-fore they submitted both themselves and all that they had to Cæsar's Mercy, defiring one thing of him earnestly, which was, that if his Goodness and Clemency (which they had heard so high praises of) had determined to fave their Lives, he would not take away their Arms from them; forasmuch as all their Neighbours were Enemies unto them, and envied at their Valour; neither were they able to de-fend themselves, if they should deliver up their Armour : So that they had rather suffer any inconvenience by the People of Rome, than to be butcherly Murchered by them, whom, in former time, they had held subject to their Command.

To this Casar answered; that he would save the City rather of his own Custom, than for any desert of theirs, so that they yielded before the Ram touched the Wall; but no condition of Remedy should be accepted without present delivery of their Arms : For he would do by them as he had done by the Nervii. and give commandment to their Neighbours, that they [hould offer no wrong to such as had commended their safety to the People of Rome. This answer being returned to the City, they seemed contented to do whatsoever he commanded them: And thereupon casting a great part of their Armour over the Wall into the Ditch, insomuch that they fill d it almost to the top of the Rampier, and yet (as afterward was known) concealing the third part, they fee open the Gates, and for that day carried themselves peaceably. Towards Night Cæsar commanded the Gates to be skut, and the Soldiers to be drawn out of Gates to be four, and the southers we warm me of the Tom, leaft in the Night the Tom/fine he field be any way injured by them. But the Aduatici, having confluided together before (forasmuch as they believed that upon their submission the Roman's would either fet no Watch at all, or at the leaft keep it very carelesty) partly with such Armour as they had retained, and partly with Targets made of Bark, or wrought of Wicker, which upon the suddain they had covered over with Leather, about the third Watch, where the ascent to our Fortifications was easiest, they issued suddainly out of the Town with all their Power: But signification thereof being presently given by Fires, as Casar had Commanded, the Romans hasted speedily to that place. The Enemy fought very desperately, as Men in the last hope of their welfare, encountring the Romans in a place of disadvantage, all their hopes now lying upon their Valour: At length, with the slaughter of Four thou-sand, the rest were driven back into the Town. The next day, when Cafar came to break open the Gates, and found no Man at defence, he fent in the Soldiers, and fold all the People and Spoil of the Town: The number of Persons in the Town amounted to Fifty three thousand Bondslaves.

The First OBSERVATION.

IN the furprise attempted by the Belgae upon Bi-I bract, I fet down the manner which both the Gauls and the Romans used in their sudden surprizing of a Town: Whereof if they failed (the place importing any advantage in the course of War) they then prepared for the Siege in that manner as C.efar hath described in this place. They environed the Town about with a Ditch and a Rampier, and Fortified the faid Rampier with many Caftles and Fortreffes, erected in a convenient diffance one from another; and so they amicus guisguan teget, quent propria arma non kept the Town from any Foreign Succour or Retexore, Neither Walls nor Friends will save him, practife against them. And this manner of Siege practice against curin. First one manner of orag-was called Circinvallatio; the particular de-feription whereof I referr unto the History of in the fivent, Alefia, where I will handle it according to the Communiary. particulars there fet down by Cafar.

The Second OBSERVATION.

THe Ram, which Cafar here mentioneth, was Aries, or the of greatest Note amongst all the Roman En-Ra gines, and held that place which the Canon hath in our Wars. Vitruvius doth attribute the Invention thereof to the Carthaginians, who at the taking of Cadia, wanting a fit infirument to raze Cales. and overthrow a Caftle, they took a long Beam or Timber-Tree, and bearing it upon their Arms and Shoulders, with the one end thereof they first brake down the uppermost rank of Stones; and fo descending by degrees they overthrew the whole Tower. The Romans had two forts of Rains; the one was rude and plain, the other artificial and compound: The first is that which the Car-Aric simthaginians used at Cadiz, and is pourtrayed in the plex. Column of Trajan at Rome.

The compound Ram is thus described by Fo- Aries comphus; 'A Ram, faith he, is a mighty great Beam, pofita. like unto the Mast of a Ship, and is strengthned 'at one end with a head of Iron fashioned like unto a Ram, and thence it took the name. This Ram is hanged by the midft with Ropes unto another Beam, which lieth crofs a couple of Pillars: And hanging thus equally balanced, it is by force of Men thrust forward and recoiled backward, and so beateth upon the Wall with his Iron head: Neither is there any Tower so ftrong or Wall fo broad, that is able to ftand

The length of this Ram was of a large scantling; for Plutarch affirmeth, That Anthony in the Parthian War had a Ram fourfcore Foot long. And Vitruvius faith, 'That the length of a Ram was usually one hundred and fix, and sometimes one hundred and twenty; and this length gave great strength and force to the Engine. It was managed at one time with a whole Century or Order of Soldiers; and their Forces being spent, they were feconded with another Century; and fo the Ram played continually upon the Wall without intermission. Follows faith, That Tieus, at the Siege of Ferufalem, had a Ram for every Legion. It was oftentimes covered with a Vine, that the Men that managed it might be in more fafety. It appeareth by this place, that if a Town had continued out until the Ram had touched the Wall, they could not prefume of any acceptation of Surrender; forafmuch as by their obstinacy they had brought in Peril the Lives of their Enemies, and were subdued by force of Arms, which affordeth such Mercy as the Victor pleaseth.

The Third OBSERVATION.

The Aduatici, as it feemeth, were not ignorant of the small fecurity which one State can give unto another, that commendeth their fafery to be protected by it : For as Architas the Pythagorean faith, 'A Body, a Family, and an Army are then well governed, when they contain with-'in themselves the causes of their safety; so we must not look for any security in a State, when their fafety dependeth upon a Foreign Protection. For the old faying is, that Neque murus, neque lief : And withal secured themselves from Saffies, whom his own Weapons do not defend. Although in this case the matter was well qualified by the Majesty of the Roman Empire, and the late for ill performance be Sold Crowned. And Gellion is the Continent of Gallia; whereof the line affirmeth the same thing, but addeth also a-Hedui with their Affociates were very gainful Witnesses: But amongst Kingdoms that are better fuited with equality of Strength and Authority, there is small hope of safety to be looked for, unless the happy Government of both do mutually depend upon the fafety of either Nation. For that which Polybius observed in Antigonus, King of Macedonia, taketh place for the most part amongst all Princes; that Kings by nature efteem no Man either as a Friend or an Enemy, but as the Calculation of Profit shall find them anfwerable to their Projects. And contrariwise it cutteth off many occasions of Practices and Attempts, when it is known that a State is of it self able and ready to refift the Defigns of Foreign Enemies, according to that of Manlius; Oftendite modo bellum, pacem habebitis: Videant vos paratos ad vim, jus ipsi remittent; Do but shew them War, and you shall have Peace: Let them see you are provided to repel Force, and they will do you nothing but right.

The Fourth OBSERVATION.

The manner of fignifying any Motion or Attempt by Fire, was of great use in the Night feason, where the Fortification was of so large an extension: For Fire in the Night doth appear far greater than indeed it is; Forasmuch as that part of the Air which is next unto the Fire, as it is illuminated with the light thereof, in a reasonable distance cannot be discerned from the Fire it self, and so it seemeth much greater than it is in subfrance. And contrariwife in the day time it sheweth less than it is; For the clear brightness of the Air doth much obscure that Light which proceedeth from a more gross and material Body: And therefore their Cultom was to use Fire in the Night, and Smoak in the Day, fuiting the clear Light with a contrary Quality, that so it might more manifestly appear to the beholder.

The Fifth OBSERVATION.

ANd albeit after the Victory, the Romans in-flicted divers degrees of Punishment, according to the Malice which they found in an Enemy; yer, as Flavius Lucanus faith in Livy, there was no Nation more exorable, nor readier to shew Mercy than the Romans were. The Punishments which we find them to have used towards a Conquered Nation were thefe; either they punified them by Death, or Sold them for Bond-flaves fub Corona, or difmissed them fub Jugum, or merced them in taking away their Territories, or made them Tributary States.

overthrown the Veneti by Sea, inasmuch as they the Sword, and fold the rest fub Corona.

fub Corona, inafmuch as the Captives flood Crowned in the Market-place, where they were fet out to Sale : As Cato faith in his Book, De re militari, nother Reason, forasmuch as the Soldiers that kept them while they were in felling, incircled them round about to keep them together; and this standing round about was called Corona. Festus saith, That oftentimes they used a Spear, and therefore they were faid to be fold fub hafta: Forafmuch as amongst the Greeks, by the Spear or Pike was fignified the Power of Arms, and Majesty of Empires.

When they dismissed them sub Jugum, their Order was to erect three Trees like a pair of Gallows, under which they caused all the Captives to pass, as a fign of Bondage: For they had so Conquered them by force of Arms, that they laid upon their Neck the Yoke of Thraldom.

Livy faith, That Quintius the Dictator difmiffed the Æquos sub jugum; And this Jugum was made of three Spears, whereof two were fluck upright in the Ground, and the third was tied overthwart them. The Soldiers that paffed Jub Jugum were ungirt, and their Weapons taken from them. as Festus faith.

Sometimes again they took away their Lands and Territories, and either fold it for Money, and brought it into the Treasury, or divided the Land amongst the Roman People, or let it out to Farm: Of all which Livy hath many pregnant Examples.

Of the fecond fort the felling of the Voji in his Fifth Book, and of 7000 Samutes in his Ninth Book. Of the third, that remarkable example of paffing the two Confuls T. Veturius Calvinus, and Spurius Postumius, with the Legates, Tribunes, and whole Roman Army sub Jugum, by Caius Pontius, Leader of the Samnites, in his Ninth Book. Of the fourth, in all kinds thereof frequently through his History.

CHAP. XIII.

Craffus taketh in all the Maritime Cities that lie to the Ocean: The Legions carried into their Winter-Quarters.

He same time Pub. Crassus, whom he had Casas, fent with one Legion to the Veneti, Unelli, Ofilmi, Curiololitæ, Sefuvii, Aulerci, and Rhedones, being the Maritime Cities that lay to the Ocean, advertised him that all those States had yielded themselves to the People of Rome. The Wars being thus ended, and all Gallia being settled in Peace, there went such a Fame of this War among other barbarous People, that from Nations beyond the Rhine there came Embassadors to Casar, fering both Hostages and Obedience to whatsoever Of the first we find a manifest Example in the be commanded them. But Casar, forasmuch as he third of these Commentaries, where Casar having then hasted into Lombardy, after he had placed his Legions in their Winter-Quarters, willed them had retained his Embaffadors by Force, contrary to repair unto him again in the beginning of the to the Law of Nations, he put all the Senate to next Summer. He himself therefore, after he had ne Sword, and fold the rest jub corona.

Fifth faith That an Enemy was faid to be fold the Carnutes, Andes, and Turones, Cities next to the Carnutes, Andes, and Turones, Cities next to the Carnutes, Indees, and Turones, Cities next to the Carnutes, Indees, and Turones, Cities next to the Carnutes, Indees, and Turones, Cities next to the Carnutes, Indees and Ind off disposed his Army into Winter-Quarters amongst to Sale: As Cato saith in his Book, De re militari; the sign of Cestar's Letters, a general Supplication Bission I variously sport points of the mean supplication because the sign of Cestar's Letters, a general Supplication Bission I variously supplication early squam re male gesta Coronatus supplication early squam re male gesta Coronatus supplication early squam re male gesta Coronatus variet; That the People may rather, for Man.

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

Æfar's Judgment is observable in this Place, who, by his diligence secured those of Rheims, kept them from Revolting by his Industry and Mildness, and by his Prudence prepard a Division against those of Beaucusis, a most Potent People, which provid of great use to him.

In the next place we must observe, That an Army of Thirty or Forty Thouland Warlike, well Disciplind Men, may with Patience, retrenching and lodging themselves carefully, diffipate the most numerous Armies, which for want of Provision destroy themselves; and when they engage (provided care be taken to avoid being surrounded by them) are ruind by Disorder and Confusion. This is sufficiently justified by the Wars of the Remans, who never routed their Enemies but with an inferior number, nor were ever forced to come out of their Retrenchments to Fight against their Wills: And particularly in the present War, in which Cessar found more work against one Province of the Belge, than against all the Belge together, he having given us a very particular description of the Battel he Fought against those of Tunnay, as of one of the most dangerous that ever he was engagd in, in which there are may things worthy of our confideration.

The First, That those of Tournay being inform'd that Cofar caus'd his Baggage to march after every Legion, they refol'd to put themselves in Ambush to Fight him, confidering very prudently, That the Baggage separating the Legions, in a very close Country, it would be impossible for them to succour one another, and that consequently they might with all their Forces destroy every Legion apart.

The Second, That they were mistaken in their presupposition, by reason that tho' Cessar made his Army March thus for his own convenience in Countries where he had no Enemies to Encounter, yet, when he came among his Enemies, he caus'd Six Legions to march together, all the Baggage after them, and two new Legions in the Rear, in which Order they Attack'd him in his Omarters.

The Third, Cefar's own Confession, who ae-knowledges freely, That he was Attack'd 6 unexpectedly, and with so much Vigour, and in so close a Country, that it was neither his usual Order that sav'd him, (for they did nor allow him time to put his Army in Battalia) nor his Exhortations, nor yet his presence in every place, (because he was forc'd to Fight where he chanc'd to be:) but he wholly impures his Deliverance to the long Discipline of his Soldiers, who knew of their own accord how to place themselves, and to his exactness in causing all the Officers to remain in their Posts, while the Retrenchments of the Camp were making, so that no place wanted Men to Command, and others to Obey: which caus'd the Refishance, and hinder'd the Surprise.

The Fourth, That a rash Resolution proves often dangerous, and that to avoid it, a General ought never to omit any thing relating to Military Discipline.

And the Fifth, That confidering the Conspiracy of the People of Bois le Duc (whom he Befieged in one of their strongest Holds) against him, after their Capitulation, we must learn to be always dissident of an Enemy, and to keep most upon our Guard, when we are upon the point of subduing him.

The Third COMMENTARY of the Wars in GALLIA.

The Argument.

This Commentary beginneth with an Accident which happened in the latter end of the former Summer, wherein the Belge had so thin a Harvest: And then it proceedeth to the War between Cesar and the Veneti; Crassia and the Aquitani; Titurius Sabinus and the Curiosolite; and Titus Labienus with the Treujri.

CHAP. I.

Sergius Galba being sent to clear the passage of the Alpes, is Besieged by the Seduni and Veragri.

East taking his Journey into Italy, sent Sergius Galba with the twelfth Legion and part of the Horsemen unto the Nantuates, Veragri and Seduni, whose Territories are extended from the River Rhone and the Lake Lemanus, unto the tops of the highest Alpes. The end of this Voyage was chiefly to clear the Alpes of Thieves and Robbers, that lived by the spoil of Passengers that Travelled between Italy and Gallia, Galba having Order, if he found it expedient, to Winter in those Parts, after some Fortunate Encounters, and the Taking of some Castles and Holds, Emballadurs coming to him from round about, and giving Hossage for their Fidelity, he concluded a Rease, and resolved to place two Coburts of his Le-Peace, and resolved to place two Cohorts of his Legion amongst the Nantuates, and himself to Winter gen anomest the Nantuates, and bringely to Winter with the other Cohorts in a Town of the Veragii named Octodurus. This Town being feated in a narrow Valley, and encircled about with mighty high Hills, was divided by a River into two parts; whereof he gave one part to the Gaults, and the other he chief for his Winter Quarters, and Fortified it about with a Valley of the chief his winter that the chief he was the chief of the winter of the chief he had to the chief the chief the chief that we want to be the chief the chief the chief that we will be the chief the chief the chief that we will be the chief that the chief the chief that we will be the chief the chief that we will be the chief that the chief the chief that the chief th with a list and u Runpier. After he had fpent many days in his Winter-Quarters, and given Order that Corn fronted be brought thisher for Provision; he had intelligence upon a sudden, That the Gauls in the Night-time had all left that part of the Town that was allotted unto them; and that the Hills which bung over the Valley wherein the Town flood, were possess of the great multitudes of the Seduni und Veragri: The reasons of this sadden Communion were chiefly the small number of the Roman Forces, not making a compleat Legion, for frontinuch as two Coborts Wintered anongst the Nantuates; befides many particular Soldiers that were wanting, some being gone to feech in Provisions, and others, upon other necessary Occasions. And besides their being Thus contemptible in regard of themselves, the place roms contemption in regard of themperer; the place afforded fucts advantage, that they were perfended, by reason of the sleep descent of the Hill, that the Romans would not endure the brant of the first Asfault. Besides this, it grieved them exceedingly to base their Children taken from them under the Title of Hoftages; and the Alpes, which Nature had exempted from Habitation, and placed as bounds between two large Kingdoms, to be feized upon by the Roman Legions, not for their Passage so much, as for their perpetual Possession, and to be united to their Province.

Opon these advertisements, Galba, not having as yet sinised the Fortification of his Camp, no sufficiently made from and Forage for the Kingter Foroistion of Corn and Forage for the Kingter Scasson, in that he little feared any motion of War, being secured of their Annity and Obelence, both by Hostages and Surrender, presently called a Council of War, to determine what course was best to be taken. In which Council the Minds of many were so amazed with the terror of so unazzed with the terror of so unazzed with Armad Soldiers, the Passages taken and intercepted by the Enemy, and no hope left of any Succour or Relief, that they could think of mo other way for their Sassey, than leaving behind them their Bazzega and other Incumbrances to Sally aut of their Camp, and so to save themselves by the same way they came thinker. Norwithstanding the greater part concluded to referr that resolution to the last pulls, and in the mean time to attend the spring of the Event, and definat her Camp.

OBSERVATION.

WHich advice, although at this time it tended to small effect, yet it better fuited the Valour of the Romans, and favoured more of tem-pered Magnaminity than that former Hazard, which argued the weakness of their Minds, by their over-hafty and too forward Refolution. For as it imported greater Danger, and discovered a thore desperate Spirit, to break through the thick-eft. Troops of their Enemies, and 10 by strong hand to fave themselves by the help of some other Fortune; so it manifelted a greater apprehention of Terror, and a ffronger impression of Fear, which can afford nothing but desperate Remedies: For desperate and inconsiderate Rashness rifeth fooner from Fear, than from any other passion of the Mind. But such as beheld the danger with a less troubled Eye, and qualified the Terror of Death with the Life of their Spirit, referving extremity of help to extremity of Peril, and in the mean time attended what Chances of Advantage might happen unto them upon any enterprise the Enemy should attempt; they, I say, gave greater scope to Fortune, and enlarged the bounds of changing Accidents

CHAP.

The

CHAP. II.

Galba overthroweth them.

He Council being difmiffed, they had fcarce time to put in execution such things as were agreed upon for their defence, but the Enemy at a watch-word given, assaulted the Camp on all fides with stones and darts, and other casting Weapons. The Romans at first when their strength was fresh, valiantly resisted the brunt of the Charge; neither did they spend in vain any Weapon which they cast from the rampier; but what part soever of their Camp seemed to be in greatest danger, and want of help, thither they came with fuccour and relief. But herein they were overmatched : for the Enemy being Spent and wearied with fight. whensoever any of them gave place and forsook the Battel, there were always fresh Combatants to supply it. But the Romans, by reason of their small number, had no such help: For their extremity in that oet, dan no juen vely. Let voest extremity in tonat CHAR. III.
point was fuch, that no Man was permitted neither for weariness nor wounds to for ake his Station, or Galba returneth into the Province,: the Unelli dandon his charge. And having thus fought con-tinually the space of six hours, when both strength and Weapons wanted, the Enemy persisting with greater fury, to fill the Ditch, and break down the rampier. and their hopes relying upon the last expectation, P. S. Bacu. The Principles of that Legion whom we Said to be so sore wounded in the Nervian Battel, and Caius Volusenus Tribune of the Soldiers, a Man of fingular Courage and Wisdom, ran speedily to Galba and told him, that the only way of Safety was to break out upon the Enemy and to try the last refuge in that extremity. Whereupon they called the Centurions, and by them admonished the Soldiers to cease a while from fighting, and only to receive such Weapons as from Ingating, and only to receive Just weapons as were calf into the Camp; and fo to reft themselves a little and recover their strength: and then as a Watch-mord to sally out of their Camp, and lay their safety upon their valour. Which the Soldiers executed with such alacrity and courage of spirit, that breaking out at all the Avenues of the Camp, they gave no leifure to the Enemy to confider what was done, nor to satisfie his judgment touching so unexpetted an enterprize. And thus Fortune being suddenpettea an enterprize. Antition virtual voting those who came with full expectation of spoiling their Camp, slew more than the third part of thirty thousand, and put the rest to flight, not Suffering them to stay upon the Hills near about them. Having thus overthrown the Enemies whole strength and taken their Arms, they returned again into their Quarters.

OBSERVATION.

The force of Novelty, surner by Hich strange alteration lively describeth the force of Novelty, and the effectual of a Battal. power of unexpected adventures: For in the first power of unexpected adventures: For in the first course of their proceeding, wherein the Romans defended the Camp, and the Gauls charged it by affault, the Victory held constant with the Gauls, and threatned Death and Mortality to the Romans. Neither had they any means to recover hope of better success, but by trying another way; which fo much the more amazed the Gauls, in that had they vehemently apprehended an opinion of Victory, by a let fight continuing the space of fix hours, without any likelyhood of contrariety or alteration. Which practice of frustrating a de-ry we shall afterward read, how Titurius Sabinus defeated the Unelli with the same stratagem, and overthrew them by a fuddain fallying out, when The Enemy setteth upon their winter-quarters: they expected nothing but a desensive resistance from the Rampier. From whence a Commander may learn to avoid two contrary inconveniences, according as the quality of the War shall offer ocasion: First (if other things be answerable, which a judicious Eye will easily discover) that a fally made out at divers Ports of a Hold, will much mitigate the heat of a Charge, and controll the fury of an Enemy. And on the other fide, he that beliegeth any place, what advantage foever he hath of the defendant, may much better affure himself of good fortune, if he appoint certain Troops in readiness to receive the charge of any Salley, that the rest that are busily imployed in the assault may provide to answer it without disorder or confusion. Which order if the Gauls had taken, they had not in likelyhood fo often been give occasion of a new War.

CHAP. III.

Fter this Battel, Galba, unwilling to try Fortune any further, and considering that he had met with businesses which he never dreamed of when first he came thither to quarter, especially finding himself in want both of Corn and Forrage, having first burned the Town, the next day he returned towards the Province, and without lett or resistance brought the Legion safe into the Nantuates, and from thence to the * Allobroges, and there he · Savoyari

After these things were dispatched, Calar sup-posing for many reasons that all Gallia was now in page, and that there was no further fear of any new War, the Belgaz being overthrown, the Germans thrust out, and the Seduni amongst the Alps subdued and vanquished, in the beginning of the Winter was gone into Illyricum, having a great desire to see those Nations. But there grew a suddain tumult and dissension in Gallia upon this occasion: Pub. Crassus wintering with the seventh Legion in Anjou near unto the Ocean, and finding scarcity of Corn in those parts, he sent out the Prefetts of the Horsemen and Tribunes into the next Cities to demand Corn, and other Provisions for his Legion: Of whom Corn, and other Provipions for all Legions: Of whom Titus Terrafidius was fent unto the * Unelli, Marcus Trebius to the * Curiofolitze, Q. Velanius in Rectaigue and Titus Silius to the * Veneti. These Veneti * Nature. were of greatest Authority amongst all the maritime Nations in that Coast, by reason of their great store of shipping, with which they did traffick in Britany, and exceeded all their neighbour States in skill and experience of Sea-faring Matters; having command of as many Ports as lay to those Seas, and the most part of such as used those Seas Tributaries to their State. These Veneti first adventured to retain Silius and Velanius hoping thereby to recover their Hostages which they had given to Crassius. The adjacent Cities induced by their Authority and Example, (as indeed the resolutions of the Gauls are fudden and hasty) for the same reason laid hold upon Trebius and Terrasidius; and sending speedy ambassages one unto another, conjured by their princes and chiefest Magistrates to do nothing but by common consent, and to attend all the same event of Fortune; soliciting also other Cities and States, rather to fign intended by an indirect and cross Answer, maintain that liberty which they had received of served the Romans oftentimes to great advantage; their Ancestors, than to indure the servile Bondage as besides this present example, in this Commenta- of a Stranger.

The First OBSERVATION.

the westings THe circumftance in this History which noteth the fudden breaking out of Wars, when the out is rered first course of things made promise of Peace, sheweth amidge of first, what small affurance our reason hath of her faure times discourse in calculating the nativity of After-chances: Which fo feldom answer the judgment we give upon their beginnings, that when we speak of happiness, we find nothing but misery; and contrariwife, it goeth often well with that part which our Art hath condemned to ill fortune. And therefore I do not marvel, if when almost all Nations are at odds, and in our best conceits threaten destruction one to another, there happen a sudden motion of peace: or if peace be in speech, soothing the World with pleasing tranquility, and through the uncertainty of our weak probabilities, promife much reft after many troubles; there follow greater Wars in the end than the former time can truly speak of. Which being well understood, may humble the spirits of our haughty Politicians, that think to comprehend the conclusions of future times, under the premisses of their weak projects, and predeftinate succeeding Ages according to the course of the present motion: When an accident so little thought of shall break the main stream of our judgment, and falsifie the Oracles which our understanding hath uttered. And it may learn them withal, how much it importeth a wife Commander to prevent an evil that may crofs his defign, (how unlikely fo-ever it be to happen) by handling it in such manner as though it were necessary to confront the same. For then a thing is well done, when it hath in it felf both the causes of his being, and the direct means to refift the repugnancy of a contrary nature: And so hap what will, it hath great possibility to continue the same.

The Second OBSERVATION.

THis practice of the Veneti may instruct a circumspect Prince in cases of this nature, to have a more watchful eye over that Province or City which shall be found most potent and, mighty amongst the rest, than of any other inferiour State of the same nature and condition: For as the authority example of it felf, is of great authority, making improbabilities feem full of reason, especially when the intention shall sympathize with our will; so when it shall happen to be strengthened with powerful means, and graced with the Act of superiour personages, it must needs be very effectual to stir periodeges, it must neces be very encetage of using Mens minds to approve that with a firong affection, which their own fingle judgment did no way allow of. And therefore equality bringeth this advantage to a Prince, which differency cannot afford, that albeit example do fet on foot any rebellious motion, yet no supereminency shall authorize the fame.

CHAP. IV.

C.cfar having advertisement of these new troubles, hafteth into Gallia, and prepareth for the War.

LL the maritime States being by this means drawn into the same conspiracy, they sent an embassage unto Crassius in the name of them all, that if he would have his Men again, he must deliver up the Hostages which he had taken from them. Whereof Oxfar being certified by Crassus, inasmuch as he was then a great way distant from his Army, he commanded Gallies and Ships of War to be built upon the River * Loire, Ligeria which runneth into the Ocean, and that Gally-Men, Mariners, and Ship-Masters should be musticeed in the Province: Which being speedily dispatched, as soon as the time of the year would permit him, he came into Gallia. The Veneti and the rest of the confederacy understanding of Cæsar's arrival and consider-ing how beinous a Fast they had committed, in detaining the Embassadors and casting them into Irons, whose name is held sacred and inviolable amongst all Nations; prepared accordingly to answer so eminent. a danger, and especially such necessaries as pertained to shipping and Sea-sights.

The OBSERVATION.

Rom hence I may take occasion briefly to touch the printed the reverent opinion which all Nations, how the revergence barbarous foever, have generally conceived of the whole is held quality and condition of Embassadors: And what the Embassadors is the condition of the property of the p the grounds are of this univerfally received custom, which in all Ages and times hath held authentick. And first we are to understand that all Mankind (as indued with the same nature and properties) are so linked together in the strict alliance of human fociety, that albeit their turbulent and difagreeing paffions (which in themselves are unnatural, as proceeding from corruption and defect) drive them into extream discord and disunion of fpirit, and break the bonds of civil conversation, which otherwise we do naturally affect; yet without a necessary entercourse and traffick of fociety, we are not able to keep on foot the very discord it self in terms of reason and orderly proceeding, but all parts will be blended with difordered confino and go to wrack, for want of these mutual offices performed by messengers: So straight are the bonds of Nature, and so powerful are the Laws which the enacteth. And therefore if it were for no other end which might fort to the benefit of either party, (as there are many good uses thereof) yet to hold up the quarrel and keep it from falling, making War according to the grounds of reason, the entercourse of Messen gers is not to be interrupted, nor their Persons to be touched with hateful violence: But that which the common reason of Nations hath made a Law, ought as religiously to be observed as an Oracle of our own belief. Secondly, foraffunch as the end of War is, or at the least should be, peace, which by treary of mutual Messengers is principally to be confirmed, to the end that no People may feem fo barbarous as to maintain a War, which only intendeth Blood, and propoferh as the chiefest object the death and mortality of Mankind, no way respecting peace and civil govern-ment; such as resule the entercourse of Messengers, as the means of amity and concord, are juftly condemned in the judgment of all Nations as unworrhy of human lociety. Last of all it is an injury of great dishonour, and deserveth the reward of extreme infamy, to revenge the Mafter's quarrel upon a Servant, and punish Embassadors for the faults of their State: Considering that their chiefest duty consisteth in the faithful relation of such Mandares as they have received; which may as well tend to the advancement and honour of that City to which they are sent, as to the dishonour and ruin of the same, whereof the Mesfengers take no notice. And therefore whether we defire War or Peace, the free liberty and holy order of Embaffadors is reverently to be respected. and defended from brutish and unnatural violence. rani di a

- 19 36) - 134 - 35

The

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

The Proceedings of either Parry in the entrance of this War.

He Veneti conceived great hope of their enterprize, by reason of the strength of their Situation : Forafmuch as all the paffages by land were broken and cut off with arms and creeks of the Sea; and on the other fide navigation and entrance by Sea was so troublesome and dangerous, in that the Romans were altogether unacquainted with the Channels and Shelves of the Coast, and there were so few Ports. Neither did they think that the Roman Army could long continue there without Corn, which was not to be had in those parts. And if it happened that the course of things were carried contrary to this probable expectation, yet they themselves were strong in shipping, whereas the Romans had none at all: Neither had they knowledge of the flats and shallows, Ports and Islands of that Coast where they were to fight. And to con-clude, they should find the use of Navigation in that narrow Sea, to be far different from that which they were accustomed unto in the wast and open Ocean. In this resolution they fortified their Towns, stored them with Provision, and brought all their shipping to Vannes, against whom Castar (as it was reported) Amenche. would begin to make War, taking the Ofifmi, Lexo-Cities in lit-vii. Nametes. Ambialites, Morini, Menapli, Diatle Bretaigne blintres, as Conforts and Partakers in this quarrel. Notwithstanding these difficulties, many motives stirred up Caesar to undertake this War: as namely the violent detaining of the Roman Knights; their rebellion after they had yielded themselves by surrender, and had given hostages of their Loyalty; the con-fpiracy of so many Cities, which being now negletted might afterward incite other Nations and States to the like insolency. And therefore understanding that almost all the Gauls were inclining to novelty and alteration, and of their own nature were quick and ready to undertake a War; and further confidering that all Men by nature defired liberty, and hated the servile condition of bondage, he prevented all further insure-Hions of the other States with the presence of the Romait Forces in several places at once; and sent Titus Labienus with the Cavatry unto the * Treviri, that bordered upon the Rhine: To him he gave in charge to vifit the Men of Rheims and the reft of the Belga, to cipi the Men of Kneims and the rel of the beige, to keep them in obediente; and to hinder fich forces as might periadventure be transported over the River by the Germans, to further the rebellious humour of the Gauls. He commanded likewife Pub. Craffus with twelve legionary Cohorts and a great part of the Horfe, to go into Aquitain, left there might come any aid from those Nations, and fuch considerable Forces join together. He sent also Q. Titurius Sabinus with three Legions unto the Lexivii, Curiosolite, and Unelli, so disappoint any fraction which rebellions: Minds might intend. And making D. Bruus their Admiral of the Newy, and of those French Step which be had got together from the Pictones, Santones, and other Provinces which continued quiet and obedient, be gave him in charge to make towards Vannes with what fpeed he could: And he himfelf murched this therward with the Foot Forces.

The OBSERVATION.

IN the first Book I observed the authority which the Roman Leaders had to undertake a War, without further acquainting the Senate with the consequence thereof: In this place let us observe the care and circumspection which the Generals the violence of the Winds.

had, who did not undertake a troublesome and dangerous War upon a humour, or any other flender motion; but diligently weighing the circumstances thereof, and measuring the peril and hazard of the War, with the good confequence of the effect, informed their judgments of the importance of that action and fo tried whether the benefit would answer their labour. And thus we find the reasons particularly delivered that moved Cafar first to undertake the Helvetian War; and then the causes which drew him on to the quarrel with Ariovistus; then followeth the necessity of that War with the Belgæ; and now the motives which induced him to this with the maritime Cities of Bretaigne; and so consequently of his passage into Germany, or what other enterprize he attempted: which he layeth down as the grounds and occasions of those Wars, and could not be avoided but with the lofs and difference of the Roman Empire.

Further let us observe the means he used to prevent the inclination of the Gauls, and to keep them in fubjection and peaceable obedience, by fending his Men into divers Quarters of that Continent, and fo fetling the wavering disposition of the further skirts with the weight of his Army, and the presence of his legionary Soldiers, which he fent ready to stifle all motions of rebellion in the beginning that they might not break out to the prejudice and diminution of the Roman Empire, and the good fuccels of his proceedings: Befides the advantage which he gained in the opinion of the Enemy; whom he fo little feared concerning the upthot of that quarrel, that he had dispersed the greatest part of his Army upon other services, the rest being sufficient to end that War.

CHAP. VI.

The manner of their shipping, and their Sea-fight.

He fituation of almost all these Cities was Casar. fuch, that being built in points and promoniories, they could not at full Sea, which happened always twice in 12 hours, be approached by Foot-forces, nor yet with shipping ; for again in the Ebb the velfels were laid on the ground, and so left as a prey to the Enemy. And if the Romans went about to some one the Sea with Mounts mans went avour, to from on the sea with Album, which they raiffed equal to the Walls of the Town, and wele at the point of entering and taking it; see the Townshim having fash flore of flripping, would easily concept both themselves and their Carriage sing eafly concep both themfelves and their Carriages into the next Tomis, and there help themfelves with the life advantage of place. And thus they deluded Caelar the greatest pare of the Science: For the Roman Flee! by reason of continual Winds and faul Whather, thus a decentage to put out of the Root Loice into so was a Sea wheter the Hadron of the Root Loice into so was to sea wheter the factors and Realt were few and far distant one from another, and the Hilles print. The pipping by the Gauls was thus built and rigged: The Root with somewhat flatter than the Romans shipping, the better to bear the Ebbs and Shallows of that Coast: The Fore-deck was altogether ered and perpendicular; the Poup was made to bear the roughness of the Sea and the force of the Tempest. And in a word they were alsogether built for strength. For the Ribs and Seats were made of Beams of a Foot Square, fastemed with Iron Pins of an Inch clark, Instead of Cables they afed Chains of Iron; and way righten of choice that flet white of the factor of Elineth, or ignorant of the tife thereof, or become Sails of tinen would hardly ferve to carry Ships of that hurthen, or endure the tempelinosinely of those Seas, and

The meeting and conflict of the Roman Navy with cording as the Sun and Moon are carried in the vis kind of Ships was fuch, that they only excelled other Ebbing Quarter from the Night Meridian in celerity and speedy nimbleness with force of to the West Horizon. this kind of Ships was such, that they only excelled them in celerity and speedy nimbleness with force of Oars; but in all other things, either concerning the nature of the Place, or the dangers of the foul Weather, were far inferiour unto them: for the strength of them was such, that they could neither hurt them with their Beak-heads, nor cast a Weapon to any purpose into them by reason of their great heighth. And if any guft chanced in the mean time to rife. that forced them to commit themselves to the mercy of the Weather, their Shipping would better bear the rage of the Sea, and with greater lafety seeler it self amongst Flats and Shallows, without fear of Rocks or any such hazard: of all which chances the Roman Navy stood continually in danger.

OBSERVATION.

The coufe of A Nd here let it not seem impertinent to the the ching and A Argument which we handle, considering the survey of the general use which we Islanders have of Navigation, briefly to fet down the most eminent causes of the flowing and ebbing of the Sea, as far forth as shall seem necessary to the knowledge of a Soldier: which albeit they may fall short of the true reasons of this great secret : yet forasmuch as they fland for true principles of Regularity, and well-approved Rules in our Art of Navigation, let us take them for no less than they effect, and give them that credit in our imagination, which tract of time hath gained to those imaginary Circles in the Heavens: that albeit their chiefeft effence confifteth in Conceit and Supposal; yet forasmuch as they serve to direct our knowledge to a certainty in that variety and feeming inconstancy of motion, we efteem of them as they effect, and not as they are.

Considering then the Globe of the World, as it maketh a right Sphear (for in that position the Naturalists chiefly understand Celestial influence to have operation in this liquid Element of the Water) it is divided by the Horizon and Meridian into four quarters: the first quarter is that between the East Horizon and the Noon Meridian, which they call a Flowing Quarter; the fecond from the Noon Meridian to the West Horizon, which they make an Ebbing Quarter; the third from the West Horizon to the Midnight Meridian, which they likewise call a Flowing Quarter; and again from the Midnight Meridian to the East Horizon, the fecond Ebbing Quarter: And fo they make two Flowing Quarters, and two Ebbing Quarters of the whole Circuit of Heaven.
The Infruments of these fensible qualities and contrary effects, are the Sun and Moon, as they are The true cause carried through these distinct parts of the Heaven. fite Ebb and And although experience hath noted the Moon to the subservean be of greatest power in watry motions; yet we Vapor that a may not omit to acknowledge the force which the Earth: The Sun yieldeth in this Miracle of Nature.

Maning of the the Moon or the Sun begin to appear above the Mon, and for right Horizon, and enter into that part of the Heawe wrought that then the Sea beginneth to swell: and as they mount up to their Meridian altitude, fo it encreafeth until it come to a high Flood. And again, as those Lights passing the Meridian decline to the West, and run the Circuit of the Ebbing Quarter, fo the Water decreaseth and returneth again from whence it came. Again, as they fet under the West Horizon, and enter into the second Flowing Quarter, so the Sea beginneth again to flow, and still encreaseth until they come to the point of the Night Meridian: and then again it ebbeth, ac-

And hence it happeneth that in Conjunction or Spring sides. New of the Moon, when the Sun and the Moon are carried both together in the same flowing and ebbing quarters, that then the Floods and Ebbs are very great: and likewise in opposition or Full of the Moon, when these Lights are carried in opposite Quarters, which we have described to be of the fame nature, either Ebbing or Flowing, that then in like manner the Tides are great : forasmuch as both these Planets, through the symbolizing quarters wherein they are carried, do joyn their forces to make perfect this work of Nature in the ebbing and flowing of the Sea. And contrariwise in a Quadrate Aspect (as the Astronomers call it) or quarter age of the Moon, when as the Moon is carried in a flowing quarter, and at the fame inftant the Sun doth happen to be in an ebbing or decreasing quarter, as the course of Nature doth necessarily require, then are the Tides leffened, as daily experience doth witness.

And forasmuch as both the right Horizon and the Meridian also divide every diurnal Circle, which either the Sun or the Moon make in their revolutions, into equal parts; it followeth that every Tide is continually measured with the quantity of fix hours: and therefore that which C.sfar here faith, must needs be true, that in the space of twelve hours there are always two high Tides. And left any Man should imagine that every Inland City ftanding upon an ebbing and flowing River, may take the computation of the Tide according to this rule; let him understand that this which I have delivered is to be conceived principally of the Sea it felf, and fecondarily of fuch Ports and Havens as frand either near or upon the Sea: but where a River shall run many Miles from the Sea, and make many winding Meanders before it come to the place of calculation, it must needs lose much of this time before mentioned. And thus much I thought convenient to infert in these discourses touching the ebbing and flowing of the Sea, as not impertinent to Martial knowledge.

Concerning the Shipping of the Romans, where The manner of of Posterity hath only received the bare Names, their shipping. and some few circumstances touching the manner of their Equipage, the Criticks of these times have laboured to let forth a Fleet answerable to that which the terms and Title mentioned in History feem to report: but yet the gain of their Voyage doth not answer their charge. For Many Men rest unsatisfied, first touching the Names themfelves, whereof we find these kinds:

Longas. Names Onerarias. Actuarias.

Triremes. Quadriremes. Quinqueremes.

The first we may understand to be Gallies or Ships of fervice; the fecond Ships of burthen; the third Ships that were driven forward with force of Oars; and the reft founding according to their Names, for I dare not intitle them with a more particular description. Now whether these Names Longas and Astuarias, were a feveral fort of Shipping by themselves, or the general Names of the Quadriremes, Triremes and Quinqueremes, forasmuch as every kind of these might be called both Longas and Actuarias; as it yet remaineth in controversie, so it is not much material to that which we feek after. But that which most troubleth our Sea-Criticks is, in what fense they may understand these Vocabularies, Triremes, Quadriremes, and Quinqueremes: whether they were fo termed in regard of the number of Rowers or Water-men Target. Neither did the legionary Soldier find a Trireme had three orders of Oars on either fide, a Quadrireme four, and a Quinquereme five, whereof they took their diftinction of Names.

Lib. III.

Such as hold that a Trireme had on each fide three ranks of Oars, and fo confequently of a Quadrireme and Quinquereme, alledge this place of Livy to make good their opinion. In the Wars between Rome and Carthage, Lalius meeting with Afdrubal in the streights of Gibraltar, each of them had a Quinquereme and seven or eight Triremes a piece: the Current in that place was fo great, that it gave no place to Art, but carried the Veffels according to the fall of the Billow: in which uncertainty the Triremes of the Carthaginian closed with the Quinquereme of Lelius; which either because she was pondere tenacior, as Livy faith, or otherwise for that pluribus remorum ordinibus scindentibus vertices, facilius regeretur, in regard of the plurality of Banks of Oars which refifted the Billows and ftemmed the Current, the funk two of the Triremes, and so got the Victory. From hence they prove that a Quinquereme had plures remoit took the name from the plurality of Banks of Oars, and not from the number of Men that rowed at an Oar.

But the contrary opinion doth interpret Ordo remorum to be a couple of Oars one answering another on each fide the Veffel, which we call a pair of Oars: So that a Quinquereme being far greater and longer than a Trireme, had more pairs of Oars than a Trireme had, and those Oars were handled with five Men at one Oar, according to the use of our Gallies at this day.

Sea-fights: we must understand that the Romans wanting the use of Artillery, and managing their Ships of War with force of Oars, failed not to make use of their Art in their conflicts and encounters by Sea: for all their Ships of fervice, which we term Men of War, carried a ftrong Beak-head of Iron, which they called Rostrum, with which they ran one against another, with as great violence and fury as their Oars could carry them. And herein Art gave great advantage; for he that could best skill to turn his Ship with greatest celerity, and so frustrate an offer, or with ipeedy and ftrong agitation follow an advantage, commonly got the Victory.

In the Battel which D. Brutus had with the Maffilians, we read that two Triremes charging the Admiral wherein Brutus was, one at the one fide and the other at the other, Brutus and his Mariners so cunningly handled the matter, that when they should come to the hurt, they speedily in a trice of time wound themselves from between them, and the two Triremes met with fuch a carreer one against another, that one brake her Beak-head, and the other split with the blow.

For this skill and fortune withal Euphranor the Rhodian was of great fame in Cafar's time, although his end found too true the faying of the Historian, that whom Fortune honoureth with many good haps, the oftentimes referveth to a harder deftiny; as other Sea-men befides Eu-use: for they erected Turrets upon their Decks, and from them they fought with Engines and Cast-that rowed continually at an Oar, as the custom any difference when he came to the point between of the Gallies is at this day; or otherwise, because their Fight at Sea and that at Land; saving that they could not be martialled in Troops and Bands, in regard whereof the Sea-fervice was counted more base and dishonourable; and the rather, inafmuch as it decided the Controverse by Slings and Casting-weapons, which kind of Fight was of less honour than buckling at handy-blows.

CHAP. VII.

The Battel continueth; and Cafar overcometh.

He Romans having taken Town after another, the Enemies still conveyed them-Town after Can Selves to the next; so that Casar deeming it but lost labour, whilft he could neither hinder their escape, nor do them any mischief, resolved to wait the coming of his Navy. Which was no fooner arrived, but the Enemy descrying it, presently made out 220 Sail of Ships well-appointed and furnished in all respects to oppose them. Neither did Brutus the Admiral, nor any Tribune or Centurum ordines than a Trireme had; and therefore rion in his Navy know what to do, or what course of Fight to take: for the Shipping of the Gauls was so strong, that the Beak-head of their Quinqueremes could perform no service upon them; and al-though they should raise Turrets according to their use, yet these would not equal in height the Poup of the Enemies Shipping; so that therein also the Gauls had advantage. For as the Romans could not much annoy them with their Weapons, in regard they lay so low under them; so on the contrary their were handled with five Men at one Oar, according to the use of our Gallies at this day.

But to leave this, and come to their manner of sea-fights: we must understand that the Romans revoiling which flood them in great stead: for the Romans had provided great sharp Hook or Sickles, which this day to the Comman shad provided great sharp Hook or Sickles, which this day. Notified to the Tackling which help of Sickles, which they put upon great and long Poles; they faltened to the Tackling which held the Main-yard to the Maff; and then haling away their Ship with force of Oars, they cut the faid Tackling, and the Main-yard fell down. Whereby the Gauls, whole such has the statement of the Main was the Main was the second to the second to the Main was the second to the secon whose only hope for their Navy consisted in the Sails wong only hope for their Navy conflited in the Sails and Tacking, lof at one inflant both their Sails and the ufe of their shipping: And then the Controver-fie fell within the compass of Valour, wherein the Romans exceeded the Gauls; and the rather, imafmuch as they supple in the slight of Cælar and the whole Army, no valiant All could be smoothered in Secret; for all the Hills and Clifts which afforded near prospect into the Sea, were covered with the Roman Army.

fury to board them, failed not to take many of their Ships: which the Gauls perceiving, and finding no remedy nor hope of resssance, began all to sty, and turning their Ships before the Wind, were upon a sudden so becalmed, that they were able to make no way at all. Which fell out very fitly for the Romans, who now fighting Ship to Ship, eafily took them, insomuch that of so great a Navy very few (through the help of the Evening) escaped to Land, after they had fought the space of eight hours: with which Battel ended the War with the Veneti, ranner can truly witness.

This first brunt being ended, when they came forts of People both young and old, in whom there was an about the rest of People both young and old, in whom there to grapple and boarding one another, then the was either Courage, Counfel, or Dignity, were pre-Art and Practices of their Land-fervices came in fent at this Battel, and all the Shipping they could possibly make was here ingaged, taken and lost; so that such as remained knew not whither to go, ing-weapons, as Slings, Arrows, and Piles; and nor how to defend their Towns any longer; and therefore yielded themselves to Casar: towards whom Soldiers. The opinion of his being fearful thus be used the greater severity, that he might thereby settled in the minds of the Enemy, he used all means Law of Nations by injuring Embassadours: for he slew all the Senate with the Sword, and fold the People for Bond-flaves.

OBSERVATION.

IN this Battel I chiefly observe the good fortune which usally attendeth upon Industry: for amongst other provisions which the diligence of the Romans had furnished out to the use of this War, they had made ready these Hooks, not for this intent wherein they were imployed, but at all occasions and chances that might happen, as ferviceable implements rather than principal inftruments: and yet it so fell out, that they proved the only means to overthrow the Gauls. Which proveth true the faying of Cafar, That Industry commandeth Fortune, and buyeth good fuccels with extraordinary labour: for Industry in Action is as Importunity in Speech, which forceth an af-fent beyond the strength of Reason, and striveth through continual pursuit, to make good the motives by often inculcations; and at length findeth that disposition which will easily admit whatfoever is required. In like manner, diligence and laborious industry, by circumspect and heedful carriage, seldom fail either by hap or cunning to make good that part whereon the main point of the matter dependeth. For every action is entangled with many infinite Adherents, which are fo interessed in the matter, that it succeedeth according as it is carried answerable to their natures. Of these Adherents, some of them are by Wisdom foreseen, and directed to that course which may fortunate the action; the rest being unknown, continue without either direction or prevention, and are all under the Regiment of Fortune; forasmuch as they are beyond the compass of our wifeft reach, and in the way either to affift or disadvantage. Of these Industry hath greatest Authority, inasmuch as she armeth her self for all chances, whereby the is faid to command

CHAP. VIII.

La Perche. Sabinus overthroweth the * Unelli, with the manner thereof.

Hile these things happened in the state of Vannes, L. Titurius Sabinus entreth with his Forces into the confines of the Unelli. Over these Viridovix ruled, who was at present made Commander in chief of all the revolted Cities, which furnished him with a great and potent Army. Bessels this, the * Aulerci, † Eburonices, and Lexovii having slain their Senate, because they would not countenance the War, shut their Gates, and joyned with Viridovix. Also there came great multitudes to them out of Gallia, Men of broken fortunes, Thieves and Robbers, whom the hope of prey and spoil had made to preferr the Wars before Husbandry nad and any-labour. Sabinus encamping himself in a convenient place, kept his Soldiers within the Rempier. But Viridovik heing lodged within less than two Miles of Sabinus his Camp, brought out his Forces daily, and putting them in Battel, gave him opportunity to fight if he would: which Sabinus refused in such fort, that he began not only teach all other barbarous People not to violate the to increase it, and carried it so well, that the Enemy durst approach the very Rampier of the Camp. The colour that he pretended was, that he thought it not the part of a Legate, in the absence of the General, to fight with an Enemy of that strength, General, to Igur with an extent of toat strength, but upon some good opportunity, or in a place of advantage. In this general persuassim of fear, Sabinus chose out a subtle-witted Gaul, an Auxiliance. ary in his Army, whom he persuaded with great rewards and further promises to fly to the Enemy, and there to carry himself according to the instructions which he should give him. This Gaul coming as a revolter to the Enemy, laid open unto them the fear of the Romans; the extremity that Cæsar was driven into by the Veneti; and that the night following Sabinus was about to withdraw his Forces secretly out of his Camp, and to make all the hafte he could to relieve Cæfar. Upon which advertisement, they all cryed out with one consent, that this opportunity was not to be omitted; but setting apart all other devises, they would go and assault the Roman Camp. Many circumstances per-fuaded the Gauls to this resolution: as first the lingring and doubt which Sabinus had made, when he was offered Battel; secondly, the intelligence which this Fuzitive had brought; thirdly, the want of Victuals, wherein they had been negligent and unadvisedly careless; fourthly, the hope they conceived of the War of Vannes; and lastly, for that Men willingly believe that which they would have come to pass. The force of these motives was so strong, that they would not suffer Viridovix nor the rest of the Captains to dismiss the Council, until they had yielded that they should take Arms, and go to the Roman Camp. Which being granted, they gathered Rubbish and Faggots to fill up the Ditch; and with chearful hearts, as though the Victory were already gotten, they marched to the place where Sabinus was gosten, they marched to the place where Sathitus was encamped; which was the top of a Hill, rifing gently from a level, the quantity of one thouland Paces. Hither the Gauls hafted with all expedition: and to the intent the Romans might not have so much time as to put on their Armour, the Gauls for haste ran themselves out of breath.

Sabinus encouraging his Soldiers, gave the fign of Battel; and fallying out at two feveral Inlets of his Camp upon the Enemy, who were hindred with their loads of Rubbish, it fell out that through the opportunity of the place, the weariness and unexperience of the Enemy, the valour of the Roman Soldier, and their exercise in former Battels, that the Gauls could tooir exercise in former Batteis, that the Gauls could not endune the brunn of the first Encounter, but presently betook themselves to slight. Ours being fresh and lusty pursued after and slew great numbers of them: then colassing their Horse, suffered very sew of them to save themselves by slight. And so it happened, that at one time Sabinus had News of the overthrow at Sea, and Casat of Sabinus's Victory by Land. Upon these Victories all the Cities and States yielded themselves to Titurius: for as the Gauls are forward to undertake a War, so are they weak in Suffering, and impatient of the consequents and calamities thereof.

OBSERVATION.

This practice of a counterfeit fear was often The use which put in use by the Roman Leaders, as well to the Romans made of a life proper the expectation of an Engage of the counterfactors of the Engage of the Eng disappoint the expectation of an Enemy, as to counterfeit draw them into an inconvenience, and so to de fear. feat them of their greatest helps in time of Battel. C.efar coming to fuccour the Camp of Cicero, made Diffus refused in Juen jors, man we way as now only e.e.far coming to income me camp of erero, mane to be fulpfelted by the Enemy of Cowardice, but to fuch use of this Art, that he put to rout a great be taunted with the reproachful speeches of his own Army of the Gauls with a handful of Men:

Tib. 2. de

Lib. 7. de Bello Gal.

which I will referr unto the place where it is par- parts where L. Valerius Præconius the Legate was ticularly fet down by Cafar.

The chiefest thing in this place which brought them to their overthrow was disappointment: for it is a thing hardly to be digested in business of fmall consequence, to be frustrated of a setled expectation, when the mind shall dispose her self to one only intent, and in the upfhor meet with a contrary matter to cross her purposes, and so de-feat her of that hope which the strength of her in a course of Victory, and humour our conceits with that we wish and would have to happen, and in the end meet either with bondage or death, must our best Wits be appalled, having neither re-spite nor means to think how the evil may be best prevented? Which the wife Romans well underflood, and counted it no dishonour to be reproached with shameful Cowardice, by such as knew not the fecrets of Wisdom; while they in the mean time forefaw their good fortunes, shrowded under the Cloak of a pretended diffruft.

the opportunity of any fuch fortune, that in the execution he omit not the chiefest points of Order of his Army. For Order is as the finews and cular Members into the firm composition of a how able or infinite foever.

I might here alledge infinite Examples to connot a foot; but in unexampled patience kept his them to rescue their General that was taken, until the Regiment of the Prince of Conde was likewife dispersed and broken: and then perceiving no difference of order between the victor Protestant, and the vanquished Catholick, he dissolved that terrible Cloud that had hung fo long in suspence, and fo changed the fortune of the day, that he took the chiefeft of their Princes prisoners, with little or no loss of his own Men: So powerful is Order in the deeds of Arms, and of fuch confequence in obtaining Victory. And thus we have first feen the inconveniences which a counterfeir fear, well diffembled, may cast upon a credulous and unadvised Enemy, when pretence and ap-pearance hath brought them into an errour, which their own credulity doth afterward avouch: and fecondly, what ftrength and fafety confifteth in Order; and how powerful it is to throw down, and to fet up.

CHAP. IX.

The Proceedings of Crassus in Aquitain.

T the same instant of time it happened also, that Pub. Craffus coming into Aquitania (which both in regard of the large extent of the Countrey, as also for the multitude of the Inhabitants, was named the third part of Gallia) and considering that he was to make War in these flain, and the Army overthrown, and where Lucius Manilius was fain to fly, with the less of his Carriages; be thought that his Affairs required no mean diligence: and therefore having made provision of Corn, and mustered many Auxiliary Forces, and * fent for many valiant and prudent Men by name • Evocati. from Tolouse, Carcasone, and Narbone, Cities bordering upon the Province, he carried his Army into the confines of the Sontiates. Which was no reason hath entertained: how much more then in some known, but they levied great Forces both of things of such importance, when we shall proceed Herse and Foot, and with their Horse, in which their principal strength consisted, charged upon the Romans in their march: which being easily repelled, as ours followed the retreat, suddenly the Infantry of the Gauls shewed it self in a Valley as it lay in ambush. These setting upon the Romans renewed the Battel, and there the Fight continued hot a long time. The Sontiates being animated with the for-mer Victories, saw all the hope of Aquitain rely up-on their virtue; and the Romans on the other side defired to seem what they were able to do of themnder the Cloak of a pretended diffrust.

felves, without their grand Captain, and under the Let these Examples instruct a Leader so to take condust of a young Soldier. At length the Enemy
te opportunity of any such sortune, that in the overpowered with Promess, and wearied with Wounds, execution he omit not the chiefest points of Order betook themselves to slight; of whom the Romans and Discipline, as well for the better effecting of slew a great number, and then marched directly to the defign as for his own fafety, and the fecurity the Town of the Sontiates, and laid fiege unto it: the of his Army. For Order is as the finews and fiege grew hot, the Romans approaching the Walls strength of Martial Discipline, uniting the parti-with Vines, Turrets, and Mounts. The Townsmen defended themselves sometimes by fallying out, somewell-proportioned Body: and so it maketh it times by undermining the Mounts and Fortifications, more powerful than any number of disunited parts, wherein the Aquitani are very skilfull. But when they perceived the industry of the Romans to exceed I might here alledge infinite Examples to confirm this truth: but let the Battel of Dreux ferve for all that they were able to do, they intracted Craffus for all; wherein the Protefants, overcharging the Catholick Army, followed the retreat fo hard, the Catholick Army, followed the retreat fo hard, the the they quickly became Mafters of the Field; and then neglecting Martial Discipline, fell in confisedly with the keep resulting that they quickly became Mafters of the Field; and then neglecting Martial Discipline, fell in confisedly with the keep resulting the confised of the confise that they quickly became Mafters of the riest; mean immunity and then neglecting Martial Discipline, fell in hundred devoted Companions, whom they caute a surface confusedly with the broken multitude, to make durii; whose manner is, to enjoy all good things in common with those whom they have chefen for their common with those whom they have chefen for their common with those whom they have chefen for their common with those whom they have chefen for their common with those whom they have chefen for their common with those whom they have chefen for their common with those whom they have chefen for their Friends; and if any misfortune befall them, either to die with them, or presently kill themselves : nei-Regiment close together, and would not suffer ther was it ever known in the memory of Man, that any of them refused to die when his Friend was flain. But as they attempted to escape, the Soldiers that kept that part of the Fortification, as they fignified his evasion by a clamour and shout, the rest betook themselves to Arms, and so after a sharp conflict. repelled him again into the Town; where he defired to be taken in the number of the submissive multi-tude; which was granted. Crassius, having taken Hostages of them, went into the confines of the Vocates and Tarusates.

The First OBSERVATION.

These skilfull and experienced Mcn which Craffus fent for out of all the Cities in Aquitain, were those whom the Romans called Evocati, fuch as were free from warfare, and exempted by their Laws from giving their names in Musters, either by reason of their years, or the Magistracy which they had born, or for some other causes which gave them that privilege: and in that regard were fent for by Letters, intreating their affiftance in the carriage of that War, as Men well acquainted with the nature of fuch business. Their places were nothing inferiour to the Centurions for advise and direction, although they had no part in Command or Authority.

The Second OBSERVATION.

CHAP. X.

TN this fight we may further observe their manner of defence against Mounts and Cavaliero's; which we find chiefly to be Mines. Josephus in the Jewish War saith, that the Romans having raifed an exceeding high Mount, the Jews undermined the same with such Art, that as they digged underneath, they supported the Mount with huge Props and Planks that it might not shrink: And watching a time of greatest advantage, they set all the timber-work which underpropped the Mount, on fire; which taking fire with the help of Brimstone and Pitch, the Mount fell upon a fudden, to the great terror and amazement of the Romans.

At the Siege of Avaricum, we find how the Gauls by undermining did take the Earth from the Mount, as fast as it was carried unto it by the Romans; and fo kept it from rifing, and made it uneffectual. But if it were for the most part made of Wood, or other combustible matter, they fought then by all means to burn it; as it happened at the Siege of Massilia: And oftentimes when both burning and undermining failed, they confronted it with another Mount within the Walls, to disappoint the disadvantage by equal contesting of it, and so made it unprofitable.

Concerning Mines, thus much may I fay without prejudice to that Art, that the chiefest points to be respected, are these: First, the true distance to a defigned place; which is best got by instruto a defigned piace; which is one got of marks of certainty are wanting. Secondly, the direction of the Mine, that we may not err in our course which the Compass affordeth. Thirdly, the ftrengthening of the Mine with timber-work, if need require. Laftly, the countermining and cross-meeting. All which parts have very many Circumstances, and require a larger discourse than may be thought pertinent for this place.

The Third OBSERVATION.

The strange contract between these Soldurii and their Chiestain may well deserve a place amongst these observations, especially considering the obligatory conditions which either party flood bound to observe: For the Captain was to make his Soldurii partakers of all his happiness in this life, in regard whereof they were to take part of whatsoever ill chance or disafter should happen to befall him. If death which, is the last end of all fensual misery, took hold of their head, these devoted were tied voluntarily to follow him the felffame way: Neither in any memory was there (faith he) ever Man found that refused to die, if he to whom he was devoted chanced to be flain. Which bloody league of amity as it was repugnant to the course of Nature, multipyling particular deftiny to a general calamity; fo was it dangerous in a well-ordered State, if the Ring-leader were either ambitious, or fought to practife any thing contrary to good government: For he himfelf would prefume much upon the affiftance of his Soldurii; and they on the other fide must needs wish well to his attempts, that were so intereffed in his Life and Death.

The Gauls raise new Forces against Crassus,

He barbarous Gauls were much troubled, Calas. that a Town of that strength both by nature and art should so soon be taken; and therefore they fent Embassadors into all quarters, conjured one with another, confirmed their Covenants with mutual Hostages, and levied what Power they were able to make; sending for aid out of Spain, and from other States that bordered upon Aquitain. At the coming of thefe Forces they began to make War with a great power, and with many Soldiers of great Fame: For they appointed such Leaders as had seen the experience of Sertorius his Wars, and were great in the opinion of Mon for their skill and knowledge in the Art Military. These ac-cording to the custom of the People of Rome, began to take places of advantage, to fortifie their Camp, and to intercept the Romans from free passage of Convoys, and necessary intercourses. Which when Craffus perceived, and confidering withall that his. own Forces were so few that he could not well dismember them upon any service or advantage and that the Enemy went out at his pleasure, kept the passages, and left notwithstanding a sufficient Garrison in his Camp, by which means Corn and Provision would in time grow scarce with him, whilst the Enemy waxed every day stronger; he thought it his best course not to linger any longer, but presently to give them battel.

The matter being referred to a Council of War, when he understood that all Men were of the same opinion, he appointed the next day to give them battel: And in the damning putting his Men in a dou-ble Battel, and placing the Auxiliary Forces in the midst, he attended to see what the Enemy would do. The Gauls, although they were perswaded that they might adventure battel, both in regard of their multitude and ancient prowess of War, as also in respect of the small number of the Romans; yet they thought of the munimum of the Kollians; yet roe products it better to block up the passages, and so cut off all Carriages and Convoys of Corn, and so the Vistory would sollow without Bloodsbed: And if the Romans for want of Corn should offer to make a retreat, they would then fet upon them as they marched, wearied with travel, heavy laden with their burthens, and dejected in their spirits. This resolution being approved by the whole Council of the Gauls, when the Romans embattelled their Forces, they kept their Men within their Camp.

The First OBSERVATION.

This Sertorius had followed the faction of Ma-sertorius: rius and Cinna, and when Sylla had overthrown both the elder and younger Marius, he fled into Spain, and there maintained the quarrel on foot against Pompey and Metellus, and over-threw them in many Battels: but in the end was treacherously slain by Perpanna at a Panquet. He was a Man of great spirit, and of admiral dispatch; and under him were these Captains brought up which C.cfar commendeth for their Skill in Arms.

The Second OBSERVATION.

IN Histories propounding to our consideration the Deeds and Monuments of former Ages, we Two means to may observe two especial means which the great access of the World have entertained to commanders of the World atchieve Victory and over-mafter their Enemies: est Enemies the first by cunning and wife carriage of a matter before it come to tryal by blows; the fecond M 2 the Soul; and the other depending upon the the Gauls had brought him. ftrength and ability of the Body.

The

Concerning the first, it hath ever been held more honourable, as better fuiting the worth of the Spirit and the divine effence of our nature, so to direct the course of an action, that the adverse part may be weakened by wit, and prevented in the projects of their better fortunes by anticipation of means exigent which may determine of the controversie before they come to blows, and conclude the matter by terms of Art taken from the directions of good providence. For to speak a truth, the action of Battel, as it is the last part in that faculty, so it is the worst in regard of Christian duty, and better fitteth the progeny of Lamech his second Wife (which the Divines do note to be born to the ruin and destruction of Mankind) than the Children of grace, whose joy confistent in peace and love.

C. of ar in the first of the civil Wars respected the fame thing, but from other grounds: For having thut up Afranius and Petreius in a place of difadvantage, fo as he might have cut them off without further trouble; yet forafmuch as he forefaw the Victory coming towards him without blow or wound, he thus answered his Captains that were carnest upon the Enemy; Cur etiam secundo Pralio, aliquos ex suis amitteret? Cur vulnerari pateretur optime de se meritos Milites? Cur denique fortunam pericliearetur? Why should he lose any of his Soldiers in Battel, though he got the day? Why should he suffer those to be wounded who had deferved fo highly at his hands? Or why should he hazard his good fortune? And this course did these Gauls take, which under Sertorius had learned the Roman Art, and the Roman induftry: And were now become so expert, that they had almost beaten the Romans at their own

Weapon.
This first means is principally to be embraced, as the fafeft way in these uncertain and casual which sesses to uncertain and casual as the fastest way in these uncertains and casual as the fastest way. events: For that which resteth upon corporal strength, and maketh execution the means to a Conclusion, is very terrible even to the better party, full of hazard, and of little certainty. For it were a miracle of Fortune never heard of yet, fo to carry a Battel upon what advantage or means foever, that the victor Army should buy so great a Fortune without bloodshed or loss of Men; and erect a Trophy to Honour at the fole cost of the Enemy,, without loss or expence of his own trea-

And for the uncertainty in a Battel, who knoweth not what infinite chances and changes may happen in every fmall Moment of time, to turn the fortune of the day to this or that Party, and make both fides unconftant in their affections, by prefenting them interchangeably with hope and fear, joy and forrow? And therefore Cafar thought it not best to tempt the way wardness of Fortune, when by other means he might obtain his defires.

This, I say, is chiefly to be embraced, if our means will afford us that happiness: But howsoever I hold it wildom fo to entertain this course of Victory, that we omit not the chiefest helps of furtherance when it cometh to blows; but to think of this Conquest by Art and Wit, as necessary if our means will serve us to compass it; and of the other, as necessary whether we will or no : For the History maketh it plain, that when Brutus found himfelf destitute of means to undertake that course of Victory which proceedeth from providence and di-fereet carriage, he then betook himself necessarily by forceable means and waging of Battel: The one to the latter, and by the help of Battel fought to

The Third OBSERVATION.

I Observe further out of this place, that what course soever be taken, a discreet Leader will not easily forego an advantage without great af an advan-furance of a better fortune, nor change the certainand occasions, and so through advantages taken ty of a benefit upon probabilities of other hopes, from their own proceedings, to be driven to that until it have paid him the interest of his expectation, and wrought that effect which it promifed to perform. For so he might forego his Fortune, by preluming too much upon the favour of future Chances, which are often feen to crofs our purposes, rather than to further the way which is

The Fourth OBSERVATION.

Urther I observe this double Battel to be anfwerable to the fmall number of the Roman Forces: For their usual manner was to make a triple Battel, that the first might have a second and a third help; but where their number would not afford that commodity, they then made two Battels, that there might be the fuccour of a fecond supply. But they never fought with one fingle Battel, for ought that may be gathered by their Histories.

The Fifth OBSERVATION.

THe last thing which I observe is the place The place where Crassus bestowed the Auxiliary Forces, where splitted the forces of the place of the pla in the disposition of his Troops to Battel, which is best bestowed here said to be in Mediam Aciem; for as their Ar- in Batid. mies were divided into three Battels, fo every Battel was divided into three parts, the two Wings and the body, wherein these Auxiliary Forces were in this fervice bestowed: Of these he afterward saith, that inafmuch as he durft not put any confidence in them, he commanded them to ferve the Romans in time of Battel with Stones and Weapons, and to carry Earth and Turf to the Mount. The reason why suffected Troops are placed in the body, ra-ther than in either of the Wings, is, for that the Battel hath not such scope to fling out, or take advantage of place to do mischief, as the Wings have: For wherefoever there have been fet Battels fought, the strength of their Army confisted always in the Wings, as the two principal inftruments of the Battel; and as long as these stood found, the Victory went always certain on that part; for the Wings both kept the Enemy from encompassing about the body of their Army, and had the advantage also of charging upon the open fide of their adversary.

At the Battel of Canna, Hannibal put the weakoft of his Forces in the Battel, and advancing them towards the Enemy left the two Wings behind: So that when the Enemy came to charge upon the Battel, they eafily beat them back, and as they followed the retreat fell in between the two Wings. wherein the strength of the Army confisted; and being by them encompassed on each side, were defeated and overthrown. And thus we fee the advantage which a General hath when his two Wings stand firm, although the Battel shrink in the Encounter. Hannibal in the Battel he had with Scipio in Africk, placed the Strangers in the front and in the rere; according peradventure as he found their number, and the use of their Arms: Which are circumstances to be considered in this case, and depend rather upon the judgment of a General, than of any prescription that can be given in this matter.

CHAP. XI.

Lib. III.

Czúr.

Crassus taketh the Camp of the Gauls: And with their overthrow endeth that War.

Raffus understanding their drift, and finding his Men chearful and willing to fight, the whole Army crying out that they should stay no longer, but immediately fet upon the Enemies in their Camp, encouraged his Soldiers, and to the contentment of all Men went directly to the place where they were lodged: And as some began to fill up the ditch, and others with casting Weapons to beat the Gauls from the rampier, be commanded the Au-ziliary Forces, of whom he had no great affirance, to bring Stones and Weapons to the Soldiers that fought, and to carry Earth and Turf to the Monns, that so they might make a shew of fighting. And on the other side, as the Enemy began valiantly to make resi-stance, and to cast their Weapons from the higher ground to the great hurt of the Roman Soldier ; the Horsemen in the mean time riding about the Camp of the Gauls, brought word to Crassus, that the rampier at the Decumane Port was not fortified with such diligence as they found it in other places, but would admit an easie entrance. Crassus dealt earnestly with the Commanders of the Horse to encourage their Men with great Promises and Rewards, and instructed them what he would have done. They, according to their Instructions, took four Cohorts that were left in the Camp fresh and no way tired, and carrying them a further way about, that they might not be discovered by the Enemy, while all Mens Eyes and Minds were intent upon the fight; they speedily came to the place of the Fortifications which the Horsemen had found to be weak; which being easily broken down, they had entered the Camp before the Enemy either saw them or could tell what was done. And then a great clamour and shout being heard about that place, the Roman Legions renewing their force, as it falleth out always in hope of Victory, began to charge them afrejh with great Fury. The Gauls being circumvented on each fide, and despairing of their safety, casting themselves over the rampier, lought by flight to escape the danger. But forasmuch as the Country was open and champain, the Horsemen purfued them with that execution, that of fifty thousand which came out of Aquitain and Spain, there scarce remained the fourth part.

Upon the News of this Fight the most part of the Opin the News of this right the maje pair of the Aquitani yielded to Cafar, and of heir own accord gave him Hoftages: Amongh these were the Tarbelli, Bigerriones, Preciani, Vocates, Tarusates, Elusates, Garites, Austi, Garummi, Sibutzates, and Cocafates. Only some few that lived farther off, trusting to the coming on of the Winter, held off and did not submit themselves.

OBSERVATION.

Lit. 3. Asserting the dispute how an Enemy that is ftrongly encamped, and for some advantage will not remove, may be dislodged whether he will or no. A point of great consequence in matter of War, and therefore deserveth due confideration. Concerning which he layeth this down for a Maxim, that all Forts and Strong-Holds are taken by the Foot; and that Camps and Lodgings are taken by the Head. By which is meant, that he who purposeth to win a Fortress well manned and provided, must first get the Foot, and take hold of the Ditch; and then seize himself upon the rampier, and so get the place: For he faith that Mounts and eminent elevations are of little use against Fortresfes or Sconces, unless they over-top them; which may be eafily prevented, by raifing the parapet of the Fortress in front, and the Curtain in Flank, according as the Enemy shall carry his Mounts-aloft; and so they shall never come to over-top the holds. But all Camps and Lodgings are taken, by the the head; that is, by Mounts and Elevations, which by the advantage of their height command the champain: For he holdeth it impossible to raise a Mount within the Camp in so short a time, to contest that which the Enemy shall make withour.

This Foundation being laid, he proceedeth to discover a way how to raise a Mount, in despite of the Enemy, which shall dislodge them by force of Artillery, or murther them all within their Trenches. And this he taketh from Cufin at the Siege Lib. de Bello of Gergobia. The substance of the matter consifterh in a double Ditch, running like unto the line which the Geometricians call Helicali. By this double Ditch he maketh his approach to any place of most advantage, where he may in a night raise a Mount high enough for the ordinance to play upon any quarter of the Camp. The censure of this practice I referr to our judicious Soldiers, who may, if it please them, take a better view of the particularities of this Stratagem in Brancatio himfelf. Thus much I dare affirm in the behalf of these works, that they were of high esteem amongst the Romans, whom daily experience and exigents of hazard had taught to find out the readiest means both for fecurity and Victory. And if our Soldiers could be brought to tafte the commodity of these works, either by perswasion or impulsion, it were the best part of their warlike Practices: But our Men had rather fly upon desperate adventures, and feek Victory in the jaws of Death, than to clear all hazard with pains and diligence.

CHAP, XII.

C.cfar undertaketh the War with the Menapii and

T the same time also, although the Summer Calar. was almost at an end, yet forasmuch as all was almost at an end, yet fordymich as all Callia was in peace, and the * Morini * Irraeai, only with the * Menapii stood out in Arms, * can and had never either sent Embassiador or or otherwise Gueden.

The sent of Peace Casa thinking that War might guickly be ended, led his Army into their County of the sent of the At his coming he found them to carry their Wars far otherwise than the rest of the Gauls had done; for understanding that the greatest Nations of Gallia, which had waged Battel with the Romans; were beaten and overthrown; and having whole Continents of Woods and Boggs in their Terwhose continents of woods and noggs in their ler-ritories, they conveyed both themselves and their goods into those quarters. Caelar coming to the be-ginning of the Woods, began to fortishe his Camp, not discovering any Enemy near about him; but as his Men were dispersed in their charges, they suddenly sallied out of the Woods, and affaulted the Romans; but being speedily driven in again, with the loss of many of them, as the Romans followed them far into the Woods, they had some sew of their Men stain.

The time that remained Casar resolved to spend in cutting down the Woods : And left the Soldiers might be taken unawares while they were busied in that Work, he caused them to place all the Trees which they cut down on either side of the Army, that they might serve for a defence against sudden. assaults. A great quantity of ground was thus rid within a few days, so that their Goods and Cattel

Lib. III.

was taken by the Romans: But they themselves were sted into thicker Woods. At which time there happened such a continual Rain, as forced them to the Ehvrones, or the Men of Liege, had the like commodity of Woods and Boggs, and made the prevent such a continual Rain, as forced them to the such as the commodity of the commodity of the such as the commodity of the leave off the Work; and the Soldiers could no longer endure to lie in Tents of Skins : And therefore Calar, after he had wasted and spoiled their Country, burned their Towns and their Houses, carried back his Army, and placed them amongst the Aulerci, Lexovii, and in other Cities to Winter. in, which were fubdued in the late Wars.

OBSERVATION.

THe Irifo Rebels having the like commodity for Woods and Bogs, do entertain the like course of War as the Merini did with Casar. The means which he used to disappoint them of that practice was, to cut down the Woods; which if it be thought monstrous in this Age, or ridiculous to our Men of War, let them confider that the Remin Discipline wrought greater effects of Valour, than can be made credible by the use of these Times. For besides their exquisite Discipline, which of it felf was able to frame Patterns of unexampled Magnanimity, their Industry was admirable in the execution thereof, and carried it with fuch unceffant Travel, that the Soldiers thought it great happiness when they came to wage Battel with the Enemy; and could have means to quit their continual Travel with the hazard of their Lives.

Neither let it feem ftrange that the Romans undertook to cut down the Woods; but rather let us admire their facility in fo difficult a Task: For as the Hiftory witnesseth, Magno Spacio paucis diebus confecto, incredibili celeritate, a great quantity of Ground was rid in a few days, with incredible speed. And after the Woods were cut down, they took more pains in placing it on each fide of the Legions to hinder any suddain Affault. than they did in cutting it down: Which deserveth as great admiration as the former part. There is another place in the Sixth Book of these Commentaries, which expresseth more particularly the nature of fuch Wars, and may ferve to acquaint us with that which Cafar did in these diffi- ended the Third Commentary.

The matter, faith he, required great diligence, not so much in regard of the peril of the whole Army (for there could no danger come from an Enemy that was frighted and dispersed) as the fafety of every particular Soldier, which in part did pertain to the welfare of the whole Army. For the defire of a Booty carried many of the Soldiers far from the Body of the Army; and the Woods being full of unknown and fecret Paffages, would not fuffer them to go either thick to-gether, or close Embattelled. If he defired to have the War ended, and the Race of those Wicked Men to be rooted out, he must of force make many fmall Companies, and divide his Men into many Bodies: But if he would have the Maniples to keep at their Enfigns, as the difcipline and cuftom of the Roman Army required, then the place was a shelter and defence to the Enemy. Neither did they want Courage to lay Ambulhments, and to circumvent fuch as they found alone straggling from their Companies. In these difficulties there was as much done as diligence could do, providing rather to be wanting in the offensive part (although all Mens Minds were fet on Fire with Revenge) than to hurt the Enemy with the loss of the Roman Soldier. Cafar fent Messengers to the bordering States, to come out and Sack the Eburones, and they should have all the Prey for their Labour: That the Life of the Gauls, rather than his Legionary Soldiers, might be hazarded in those Woods; as also that with so great a multitude, both the Race and Name of that People might be quite extinguished.

There are many particulars in this Relation which concern the true motion of the Irifb Wars, which may be better observed by such as know those Wars by experience, than by my self that understand them only by Relation: And therefore to prevent fuch Exceptions as my Rule shall make of the Parallel in these two cases. I will leave it to be done by themselves. And thus place, we will observe the advantage of retrenching of Camps, which ferve to The Romans having thereby only maintain'd fo many Conquer'd Nations under their Obedience. For the Armies that are Quarter'd in divers Towns, may eafily, thus feparated, be defeated in the whole, or in part by a Conspiracy: Befides, the delights of Cities corrupt Military Discipline, and dastardizes the most generous Courages: And when there are more Fortresses than can well be kept, they must be difmantled, to the end that nothing may be able to refift the Army, which being always kept entire opposes the re- rather than to perish with you.

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

*Hus ended this War, in which, in the first newing of Conspiracies; it being most certain, That the best way, not only to prevent the Revolt of Conquer'd Provinces, but also to preserve bridle whole Countries, as Citadels do Cities: ones own Country, against a Potent Enemy (provided care be taken not to want Provisions) is to make ftrong Retrenchments: For those who put themselves absolutely upon the Defensive, shutting themselves up in Garrisons, must of necessity (unless they are reliev'd) perish at last: By reason that the Country being deftroy'd for the space of two or three Years, the Cities must be famish'd of course, and consequently will surrender, finding that you are no longer in a Condition to defend them: Chufing to fubmit to the Enemy,

Secondly,

Secondly, We will confider how much Craffus mies behave themselves sometimes as if they were was put to it, when he had to do with Captains afraid, the better to surprise us, we must never that had ferv'd under Sertorius, and who, according to the custom of the Romans made use of the advantage of Places, to Fortifie their Camps, and to cut off Provisions from their Enemies, for by this manner of making War, they reduc'd the faid Craffus to fuch Straits, that he was forc'd to Attack them within their Camp, and altho' he forc'd them, either because his Soldiers were better, or because he found out some desect in their Camp, it is most certain, that he undertook it more out of Despair than Reason, and only when he was reduc'd to the necessity of Starving.

We will also observe. That nothing surpriz'd Casar during all this War, whether he was Attack'd in the open Field, or in his Camp, or Surpriz'd, or whether his Enemies retir'd into inacceffible Places; he having all along pursu'd his Enemies every where, without omitting the least point of Military Discipline. For the our Enedespise them, since our Trade is such that Faults are irreparable, and that in one hours time we may lose the Reputation we have acquir'd in

To end this Discourse, I will add, That the Cruelty Casar practised on those of Vannes, ought not in the least to reflect on the Clemency he has shewn during the whole course of his Life, but that we ought to believe, that he forc'd his natural Inclination in that severe Action, to chaftise the violation of the Law of Nations, which they were guilty of, in detaining those as Prisoners who went to Trade with them as Friends: as also to strike a Terror into those People who were fo much inclin'd to Revolt, by using them with great mildness, when they kept within the bounds of their Alliance, and with great rigour when they broke it.

The

The Fourth COMMENTARY of the Wars in GALLIA.

The Argument.

THE Uspetes and Tenchtheri are driven to seek new Seats in Gallia; they drive the Menapii out of their Territories: But in the end are Overthrown by Cesar. That War being ended, he maketh a Bridge upon the Rhine, and carrieth his Army over into Germany. He taketh Revenge upon the Sicambri; and giveth liberty to the Uhii: Returneth into Gallia, and carrieth his Army over into Britain; with the occurrences of that War.

CHAP. I.

* Toole of The * Ulipetes and * Tenchtheri bring great mulnumben... itudes of People over the Rhine into Gallia. The nature of the Suevi.

Cæfat

HE Winter following, Pompey and Craffus being Confuls, the Ufipetes and Tenchtheri, two German Nations, passed over the Rhine with great multitudes of People, not far from the place where it falleth into the Sea. The reason of their moving was, the ill enthe sea. The reason of societ mounty was, the in entreasy which for many Years together they had received of the Suevi, the greatest and warlikest Nation amongst the Germans. For these Suevi had one bundred Cantons or Shires, which yearly furnished their Wars with a Thousand Men a piece; and kept as many at home to maintain both themselves and their Armies abroad: And these the Year following were in Arms, and the other stayed at home and performed the like Duty; and so by this means and performed the like Duy; and so by this means they all continued their Experience both of Tilage and matter of War. No Man had any ground proper to bimself, neither might they abide longer than a Vari none place. They lived chiefly upon Cattel and Milk, and used much Hunting; which was the cause (what through the quality of their Diet, their continual exercise and liberty of Life, being never brought up to any Caling, or tied to any Discipline, was usual to any thing arising their Disabstim. or urged to any thing against their Disposition, that they were strong, and of a large Stature: And they had light athered to be stored for any Cloathing in the coldest place they came in most then State 1812. in, more than Skins and Hides, which covered but part of their Body, the rest being Naked: And they wash their Bodies usually in the Rivers. They have Merchants that frequent their Ports, not so much to bring them any Commodities from abroad, as to buy the Prey and Spoil they take in War. And whereas the Gauls take much delight in Oxen and other Beasts, and stick not to give any Price for them, the Germans care not for the bringing of them amongst them, but rather use their own mishapen ugly Cattel, which, by daily inuring they bring to perform any Service. Their Horfemen oftentimes, in time of Battel, forfook their Horfe, and fought on Foot; their Horfes being taught to fland fill in one place, that when they would they might return anto them. Neither was there any shing accounted more bafe or yilelfs in the course of their Life, than to use Furniture for Horfes: And therefore they would adventure to Charge upon great Troops of Horfe that yield Equipage, with a few of their own Quality. They admitted no Vine to be brought in unto them, least it might esfiminate their Warlike Institution, or make them unapt for Labour. The greatest Honour in their Opinion was, to have their bordering Territories lie waste and desolate. For so it would be thought that many States together could not restit their Conquering Valour: And it was reported, That the Country lay waste from the Suevi one way, six hundred Miles together.

OBSERVATION.

BY this practice of the Suevi it appeareth, how little a naked resolution of Valour availeth, when it wanteth the ornaments of Moral Carriage and Civil Discretion, to make use of that Greatness which Prowess hath obtained: For notwithstanding that they were a Nation both Warlike, and of good Ability, they were so vainly carried on with a conceit of Manhood, that it tended to no other end than to maintain Barbarism at home, and Desolation abroad; whereas true Valour is always subordinate to the preservation of Commonweals, and is as the defensive Arms of Civil Society. Which I have the rather noted, inalmuch as it resembleth an Humour that aboundeth in this Age, especially in the particular behaviour of our young Gallants; whose naked Valour revealing it self only in the Lye and in the Stabb, for want of other affiftant Vertues to temper the heat of so brittle a Metal, leadeth them into fuch inconveniences and difordered Actions, that it changeth the Nature thereof into giddy-headed Rashness; and in lieu of Vertues Guerdon, is repaired with derifion.

CHAP. II.

Ext unto these Suevi inhabited the Ubii, a very ample and potent State: and through their entercourse and traffick with Merchants, being seasoned also with the of the Gauls their Neighbours, somewhat more civil than the rest of the Germans. With these the Suevi had often waged Battel: and albeit they could not expell them out of their Country, forasmuch as their State was very great and populous; yet by continual incursions they brought them under. and much weakened their State. In the fame cafe were the Usipetes and Tenchtheri before mentioned: for having made head against the Suevi for many years together, they were constrained in the end to forfake their possessions, and wandering the space of three years through the Continent of *Gueldres and Germany, at last they arrived where the * Menapir inhabited the banks on either fide the River Rhine: who being terrified with the arrival of such a mul-titude, forfook all their dwellings beyond the River, and planted themselves on this side of the Water, to binder the Germans from further paffage.

The Usipetes with their affociates having tried all means, and not finding themselves able to pass over by farce for want of Boats, nor by seath, by reason of the diligent Watch of the Menapii, sained a retreat to their old habitation: and after three days journey, their Horsemen in one night speedily returned again, and slew the Menapii both unquarded and unprovided. For they upon the departure of the Germans, feared not to return over the River into their Towns and Houfes. Thefe being slain and their Shipping taken, they got over the River before the rest of the Menapii had any notice of their coming: by which means they easily dispos-selfed them of their dwelling places, and lived that Winter upon the provision they found there. Castar understanding of these things, and fearing the weakness of the Gauls, inasmuch as they are sudden and quick in their resolutions, and withal defirous of novelty, he durft no way trust their unconstancy: for it was their practice and custom to Stay Travellers and Passengers, and enquire of them what they either heard or knew concerning any thing that had happened; and the common People would flock about Merchants in Fairs and Markets, and learn of them whence they came, and what News they brought from thence : and by thefe rumours and hearfays they directed the main course of their actions; whereof they could not but foon repent themselves, being grounded upon such weak intelligence as was usually coined to please the multitude. Which cusplom being known, Cæsar to prevent a greater War, hasted to his Army sooner than he was wont to do.

OBSERVATION.

SUch as have spent their time in the contempla-tion of Nature, and have made diligent search of the temperature and quality of Climates and Nations, have all with one confent made Choler the Regent of the French complexion; diftinguishing the People with fuch attributes as the faid humour usually breedeth. Neither have these Conditions which Cefar fo long ago observed in the ancient Gauls, any difresemblance from that which the Learned of this Age have delivered concerning the Nature of the faid Inhabitants; but that irresolute constitution, which breeds such novelties received, and possesset the apprehending faculty and contrarieties of actions, continueth the fame unto these times in the Inhabitants of that Coun-The Motives inducing the Usipetes to come over the Rhine into Gallia.

The Motives inducing the Usipetes to come over the Rhine into Gallia.

The Motives inducing the Usipetes to come over the Rhine into Gallia. Celeftial influence, establishing an uniformity of Nature, according as the Seat of the place lieth capable of their powerful aspect.

The reason of the diversity in the temperature of Nations which are differenced by North and South, is not without apparent cause attributed to their nearness or distance from the course of the Sun, which diftinguisheth by heat and cold the Northern and Southern Climates of the Earth, and separateth the Inhabitants thereof by the dominion of their active qualities. But the reason why two Nations which are both in the fame Climate, and under the fame parallel, receiving the vertue of the Celeftial Bodies by the fame downfal and rebound of their Beams, being differenced only by East and West, are so much difunited in Nature, and so unlike in disposition, is not fo apparent: whether it be, as fome have imagined, foralmuch as the all-inclofing Sphear, which remaineth quiet and immoveable above the circuit of the first Motor, hath his parts diversly diffinguished with variety of properties, which by continual reference and mutual aspect are imprinted in the correspondent quarters of the Earth, and fo keep a perpetual refidency of one and the fame quality in one and the fame place, and make also the variety of fashions in such parts as otherwise are equal favourites of the Heavens Majesty, by receiving an equal measure of light, heat and vertue; or whether the said quarters of the Earth are in themselves diversly noted with feveral qualities, which appropriate the felf-fame influence to their particular nature, and so alter it into many fashions; or whether there be some other unknown cause, I will leave every Man to satisfie himself with that which seemeth most probable unto him, and proceed to the discovery of this cholerick paffion. Wherein I will endeavour to fhew how impatiency, fudden refolution, and defire of novelty, are natural adjuncts of this humour. And if Cafar made use of this Philosophy in the managing of that War, let it not be thought impertinent to the knowledge of a General to enter into the confideration of this learning. Wherein first I must lay for a Maxim that which long experience hath made authentick. that the motions of the mind are either quick or flow, according as the complexion is tempered either with heat or cold: for as the phlegmatical humour is of a moift, cold and heavy nature, begetting weak and gross Spirits, and benumbing the inftruments with a liveless disability; fo is the motion of the internal faculties, proceeding likewise after a slow manner, according to the quality of the inftruments whereby it moveth: and therefore Men of this waterish conflitution are no way apt to receive an impression, nor to enterrain any fenfible apprehenfion, unless it be beaten into them with often and ftrong repetitions; and then also they proceed as flowly in discoursing of the consequence, and linger in the choice of their resolutions. On the contrary part, this flava bilis, being of a hot piercing nature, and refembling the active vertue of the fire, doth fo purify the inftruments of fense, and quicken the Spirits with the vivacity of motion, that they take the first impression as perfectly, as if it had been oftentimes presented unto them with many ftrong circumstances. And thence it happeneth, that inafmuch as the Species is fo readily with fach facility of entrance, that it moveth the many curious beholders, which applaud grave and other powers of the Soul with as great efficacy at the first conception, as if it had been brought in with troops of probabilities, and ftrengthened with manifest arguments of undoubted truth. It an action, how just foever otherwise it feemeth. followeth therefore (by reason of the subtile and fit disposition of the instruments, which proceedeth from heat, the chiefest quality in choler) that the object is at the first moment so strongly setled in the first receiving faculty, that the other powers of the mind with as great speed manifest their Offices concerning the apprehension, and deliver a Sentence answerable to the strength of the first conception: which maketh them fo impatient of delay, and fo fuddenly to alter their former refolutions, not fuffering the discoursive power to examine the substance thereof by conference of circumflances, nor to give judgment according to the course of our intellectual Court. It behoveth therefore every Man in that unfteady disposition, especially in matter of moment, to be suspicious of his own credulity, and not to give place to refolution, before his judgment be informed by discourse of the strength or weakness of the conceived

But to leave these speculative meditations to Philosophers of learned conceit; forasmuch as the right use of passions is either true Wisdom, or cometh nearest to the same; I will only touch in a word what degree of choler best besitteth a Soldier, or how it availeth or disadvantageth in matter of War. And first it cannot be denied, that there is almost no passion that doth more ecliple the light of reason, or sooner corrupteth the fincerity of a good judgment, than this of anger which we now speak of: Neither is there any motion that more pleaseth it self in his own actions, or followeth them with greater heat in the execution. And if the truth chance to shew it self, and convince a false pretended cause as the author of that paffion, it oftentimes redoubleth the rage even against Truth and Innocency. Pife condemned a Soldier for returning from foraging without his Companion, being perfuaded that he had flain him: but at the inftant of the execution the other that was miffing returned, and with great joy of the whole Army they were carried to the General, thinking to have much gratified him with the manifestation of the truth: but he through shame and despight, being yet in the torture of his wrath, redoubled his anger, and by a fubtilty which his paffion furnished him withal, he made three culpable for that he found one innocent; the first because the sentence of death was past against him, and was not to be recalled without the breach of Law: the fecond for that he was the cause of the death of his Companion: and thirdly the Executioner, for not obeying his

Concerning matter of War, as it confifteth of differenced parts, fo hath Choler divers effects. In case of discourse and consultation, when as the powers of the mind ought to be clear of all violent affections, it greatly darkeneth the underflanding, and troubleth the fincerity of a good judgment, as Casar noted in his Speech to the Senate concerning Catiline: and therefore a Commander must by all means endeavour to avoid even the least motions of so hurtful a passion, and feafon his affections with that gravity and conftancy of spirit, that no turbulent disposition may either hinder his understanding, or withhold his Will from following that course, which reason appointeth as the best means to a fortunate sucpatient motions, as the greatest proof of true Wif-dom, and disallow of passionate and head-strong affection, as derogating from the fincere carriage of Concerning execution and fury of Battel, I take Anger to be a necessary instrument to set Valout on foot, and to overwage the difficulties of terrour with a furious resolution: for considering that the nobleft actions of the mind stand in need of the impulsions of passions, I take Anger to be the fitteft means to advance the valiant carriage of a Battel; for as Fear is treacherous and unlafe, fo Anger is confident and of an unquenchable heat. And therefore a Commander ought by all means to fuggest matter of anger against an Enemy, that his Men may behold them with a wrathful regard, and thirst after the day of Battel, to satisfie their fury with the blood of their adversaries. If any urge that it hath been heretofore observed of the Gauls, that in the beginning of a Battel they were more than Men, and in the later end they were less than Women; and therefore a cholerick disposition is not so fit for service, as we feem to make it: I answer, that there is a difference between a disposition to choler, such as was observed in the Gauls, and the passion of Anger well kindled in the mind: for the first is Subject to alteration and contrariety of actions; but the other is furious, invincible, never fatisfied but with revenge. And so that of Aristotle is proved true, that Anger ferveth oftentimes as a weapon to vertue: whereunto fome answer very plealantly, faying, it is a weapon of a ftrange nature; for we do manage other weapons, and this doth manage us; our hand guideth not it, but it guideth our hand; it possesseth us, and not we it, as it happened in the reign of Tiberius Tain. amongst the mutinous Legions at Vetera: and 1. therefore a Commander ought to take great heed, whom he maketh the object of that Anger which kindleth in his Army. For as it is a paffion of terrible execution, and therefore needeth to be wisely directed; so is it dangerous in regard of Obedience, which was the only thing which Cafar required in his Soldiers.

But to leave this hasty matter, and fall nearer that which we feek after, I may not omit the Prognostication which Casar made of the confequence of this accident, by the natural disposition of the People; the event whereof proved the truth of his Predictions: which sheweth what advantage a learned General that hath been fomewhat inftructed in the School of Nature; hath gained of him whom only Experience hath taught the active rudiments of the War, and thinketh of no further Lesson in that Art, than that which the Office of a Serjeant or Lancepresado containerh.

CHAP. III.

Cafar cometh to his Army, marcheth towards the Germans, and by the way treateth of Conditions of Peace.

Elar being come to his Army, found that Calar. to have happened which he before suspected: for some of the States of Gallia had fent Messengers unto the Germans, to leave the Banks of the Rhine, and to come further into the Continent, where they should find ready appointed as the best means to a fortunate success; always remembring that all his actions are began to make further incursions, and to waste preferred upon a Stage, and pass the censure of the Land as far as the confines of the * Eburones • Liege.

Lib. IV.

together, Cæsar thought it best to dissemble what he had discovered concerning their revolt; and confirming their minds with an approbation of their Loyalty, be commanded certain Troops of Horse to be levied, and refolved to make War upon the he was on the way within a few days journey of the Army. their Camp, he received this meffage: The Germans as they were not willing to make War upon the Romans first, so they would not refuse to make rrial of their Manhood if they were justly provoked; for their ancient custom was to answer an Enemy by force, and not by treaty : yet thus much they would confess, that they came thither very unwillingly, being driven by violence out of their possessions. If the Roman People would acteer pojetjons. If the Koman People would ac-cept of their Friendliph, and either give them Territories to inhabit, or fuffer them to keep that which they had got by the Law of Arms, they might prove profitable Friends unto them. They only yielded to the Suevi, to whom the Gods in feats of Arms were inferiour; any other Nation they would eafily Conquer.

To this Cafar answered what he thought fit; but the purport of his Speech was, That he could not make any League with them if they continued in Gallia: neither was it probable that they that could not keep their own, would get possessions out of other Mens hands : Gallia had no vacant place to entertain so great a multitude: but if they would they might find a welcome amongst the * Ubii, whose agents were at that instant in his Camp, complaining of the injury of the Suevi, and defiring aid against them; thus much he himself would intreat of the Ubii. The Messengers went back with these Mandates, promising within three days to return again to Cafar: in the mean time they defined him not to bring his Army any nearer their Quarters. Which request Exlas denied. For understanding that a few days before a great part of their Cavalry were passed over the Mosa to the Ambivariti, there to pillage and get provisions, he suspected that this delay imported nothing more than the return of their Horfemen.

The River Mofa hath its rife from the Mount Vogelus in the Dominions of the Lingones, and having run far, it receives the River * Walis, which is a part of the Rhine: thefe two joyning, make the Island of the Batavi: fourfcore miles below which it falleth into the Sea. The Rhine arifeth amongst the Lepontii, a People inhabiting the Alpes; and after a tedious course through the Nantuates. Helverii, Sequani, Mediomatrices, Triboci and Treviri, drawing near the Sea, it divides into feveral Branches, and so makes many considerable Islands. most of which are inhabited by salvage and barbarous People, some whereof live only upon Fish and the Eggs of Birds : after this the River empties it felf at feveral Mouths into the Ocean.

When Casar was come within twelve miles of their Camp, their Ambassadours returned, and meeting him on the way, entreated him earnestly to march no further towards them. But being denied of their fuit, they befought him to fend to those Troops of Horse which marched before the Army, that they should not fight nor make any hostile Encounter; and that he would give them leave to fend Meffengers to the Ubii : of whose entertainment they would willingly accept, if the Princes and Senate would swear faith and safe continuance unto their People: neither would they require more than three days to negotiate this business. Casar conceived this entreaty to import nothing else than the return of their satisfaction. But being rejected, Claudius Pon-Horsemen that were absent in pillage, whom they tius General of their Forces, in an excellent O-and the Condruli, who were under the protection of expected within three days; notwirl standing be pro-the Trevini. The Princes of the Gauls being called mifed them to march but four miles further that day, to a convenient Watering-place, and bade that a considerable number of them should come thither to him next day, that he might know what they defired: in the mean time be fent to the Commanders of the Horse that were before, not to provoke Germans: and having made provision of Corn, he the Enemy to fight; and if they were fet upon, directed his march towards them. From whom, as to sustain the charge until he came nearer with

The First OBSERVATION.

First, we may observe his diffembling of the practice of the Gauls with the Germans; and the encouragement which he gave them in a faithful and loyal affection to the People of Rome, when he himself knew they had started from that dury which both their honour and a good respect of their Friends required: for he well understood that his presence did take away all scruple of any further motion in that kind; and therefore to have objected unto them their errours, had not been to heal, but to discover their Wound. Only he took the way to cut off their hopes of any practices which they might attempt against the Ro-man People; and held them in the mean time in the appearance of faithful Friends, that they might not be discouraged by the detection of their revolt.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Secondly, upon this resolution that there was no League to be made with the Germans if they continued on this fide the Rhine, we may observe how he entertained a treaty of Peace, with fuch consents and denials, as might manifest his readiness to further what he made shew of, and not weaken the means of his best advantage. For as he was content they should take a quiet farewell of Gallia, and plant themselves in the possessions of the Ubii; so was he loath to yield to any condition which might disadvantage his forcible conftraint, or weaken his command, if per-fuation failed: for he well knew that powerful means to effect that which he required, would further the course of a peaceable conclusion, and carry more authority in a Parlee, than any other morive how reasonable soever.

Moreover we may observe how careful he was Vineitsor has not to impose upon the Germans a necessity of fight-spain jag; but opened a passage (by propounding unto passage), but opened a passage (by propounding unto passage), them the Association of the Ubis) by which they might avoid the hazard of Battel. Which thing was always observed by Commanders of ancient times, who diligently fearthing into the nature of things, found that neither of those noble instruments whereby Man worketh fuch wonders (I mean the Hand and the Tongue) had ever brought fo many excellent works to that type of perfection, unless they had been forced thereunto by necessity: and therefore we are wifely to handle the course of our actions, left while we ftand too ftrict upon a violent guard, we give occasion to the Enemy, by the way of Antiperistasis, to redouble his strength, and so furnish him with that powerful engine, which Vetius Mescius calleth ultimum and maximum telum, the laft and greatest Weapon; the force whereof shall better appear by these Examples.

Some few of the Samnites, contrary to the Ar- Liv. 14.9 ticles of Peace between them and the Romans, having made incursions into the Territories of the Roman Confederates, the Senate of that State fent to Rome to excuse the Fact, and to make offer of ration which he made, shewed how the Romans would not hearken to peace, but chose rather to be revenged by War; and therefore necessity con-Rrained them to put on Arms : Justum est Bellum (faith he) quibus necessarium; & pia Arma quibus nulla nisi in Armis spee est. That War is Just which is necessary; and it is piety in those Men to take up Arms, who have no hope but in taking up Arms. The iffue thereof was, that the Samnites entrapped the Romans in a place of advantage, fo that they were forced upon dishonourable terms to fave their lives, as it is at large in the ninth Book of Livy.

Caius Manlius conducting the Roman Legions against the Veis, part of the Veian Army had entred the Roman Camp; which Manlius perceiving, he hasted with a Band of Men to keep the breach, and to that in the Veii: Which they no fooner perceived, but they fought with that rage and fury that they flew Menting; and had overthrown the whole Camp, had not a Tribune opened them a paffage by which they fled away.

In like manner Camillus, the wifeft of the Roman

Captains, being entered into the City of the Veii, that he might take it with greater facility, and difarm the Enemy of that terrible Weapon of necesfity, he caused it to be proclaimed, that no Veian should be hurt that was found unarmed. Whereupon every Man cast away his Weapon, and so the Town was taken without bloodshed

Let a Soldier therefore take fuch hold of occafions and opportunities as are offered unto him. that in time of Barrel he may feem to cast necessity upon his own cause, and retain it in his pay: Confidering how the power thereof altereth the works of Nature, and changeth their effects into contrary operations; being never fubject to any ordinance or law, and yet making that lawful which proceedeth from it.

CHAP. IV.

The Germans, contrary to their own request made to Cafar, fet upon the Roman Horsemen, and overthrow them.

Otwithstanding the Germans request concerning the truce, assoon as they saw the Roman Horsemen, which were in number five thousand (whereas the Germans had not above eight hundred Horse, those that went over the Mosa to forage not being yet returned) they charged upon the Romans not expecting any hostile Encounter, inasmuch as their Embassadors were newly departed from Cæsar, and bad obtained that day of truce: But being fet upon, they made what refistance they could. The Germans, according to their usual custom, for sook their Horse, and fighting on foot ran our Horses into the bellies, and overthrew many of our Men, so that they easily put the Romans so flight; who never looked back; until they came into the fight of the Legions. In that battel were fain 74 Roman Horfemen, and amongs the ref Pilo on Aquitain, a valiant Man, and born of noble Parentage, whose Grandfather was the chief Ruler in his City, and called friend by the Roman Senate. This Piso seeing his Brother compassed about by the Enemy, brake in upon them and rescued him: But having his Horse wounded under him in the Action, and being dismounted, he fought south on foot vill such time as the Enemy herm'd him in, and gave him several Wounds; then he fell down. Which his Brother seeing afar off (for he had left the Battel) he clapp'd spurs to his Horse, and rushing upon the the throng to rescue him, was there stain.

After this Battel Cafar thought it not fafe either to hearken to any conditions, or to receive any meffage from them that by fraud and deceit had fought for peace, and meant nothing but War: And to at-tend any longer until their Horsemen returned, was but to give them that advantage against him especially con-sidering the weakness of the Gauls amongst whom the Germans by this Battel had gained great reputation; and therefore he durft not give them space to think up-

OBSERVATION.

THis cunning of the Germans offereth occasion to fpeak fomewhat concerning that main controversie of policy, which is, whether the actions of Princes and great Commanders are always to be attended with integrity and faithful accomplishment thereof. Wherein I will only fet down fuch Arguments and grounds of Reason, which vertue and moral honesty on the one part, (for we will make it no question to a Christian Mind) and the daily practice of States-Men on the other fide alledge to make good their contrary affertions.

The great Politicians of the World, that commend Vertue in a shew, and not in essence and being, and fludy to maintain their States only with humane Reason, not regarding the Authority of divine ordinance, fet this down as a Maxim in their Art; That he that is to negotiate a matter, and meaneth to bring it to an end fuitable to his contentment, must in all respects be like qualified, both in judgment and disposition, as the party is with whom he dealeth: Otherwise he cannot be fufficiently prepared to hold himfelf ftrong in the matter which he undertaketh. For a wreftler that cometh with mere ftrength to encounter another that hath both ftrength and cunning, may blame his ftrength that brought him thither, to be cast by skill, and be laught at as an unworthy Champion for ferious sports: In like manner in this univerfal confusion of infidelity, wherein subtilty flyeth at fo high a pitch, he that thinketh with fimplicity of spirit to wind through the Labyrinths of Falshood and avoid the snares of deceit, shall find nimfelf too weak for fo difficult a task, and beshrew his honesty, if he regard his commodity. For it is the course that every Man taketh which must bring us to the place to which every Man goeth: And he that opposeth himself against the current of the World, may stand alone in his own conceit, and never attain that which the World feeketh after. Forafmuch therefore as craft and deceit are so general, it behoveth a Man of publick negotiations to carry a Mind apt and disposed to these qualities. This was fignified by that which ancient Writers report of Achilles, who was fent to Chiron the Centaur, half a Man and half a Beaft, to be inftructed in the rudiments of princely carriaage; that of the brutish part he might learn to ftrengthen himself with force and courage, and of the humane shape so to manage reason, that it might be a fit inftrument to answer or prevent whatsoever Mans wit might forge to overthrow it. Neither ought a private Man to wonder at the strangenels of these politions confidering that the government of Kingdoms and Empires is carrried with another Biass, than that which concerneth particular affairs in a well-ordered State: Wherein trucebreakers and faithless diffemblers are worthily condemned, inafmuch as they necessarily enforce the ruin thereof. But those that sit at the helm of government, and are to shape the course of a State' according to the variation of times and fortunes, derive their conclusions from other principles; whereof inferiour Subjects are no more capable, than Men are able to understand the Works of their fafety by flight. Which tumult and fear was no Imperii. Secrets of State, to be reverenced rather than lookt into.

• Colonia

To conclude, the affairs of particular Persons are of fo foort extension, and encircled in so small a compass, that a mean capacity may easily apprehend the advantages or inconveniences which may enfue upon the contract; and therefore it is requifite they should stand to the adventure, and their judgment is worthily taxed with the Lofs: But the bufineffes of the Commonweal are both subject to fo many cafualties of Fortune, and rely upon fuch unexpected Accidents, that it is impossible for any Spirit, how provident foever, to forfee the Iffue in that variety of chances. Befides that every particular subject is much interessed in the Fortune of the event, and may justly challenge an alteration of the intended course, rather than fuffer Shipwrack through the error of their Pilot: And fo the fafety of the State doth balance out the loss of credit in the Governour.

On the other fide fuch as zealoufly affect true honour, affirm vertue to be the fame both in Prince and People; neither doth condition of flate or calling, or the quality of publick or private busi-nesses alter the nature and effence of goodness: For to deprive the tongue of truth and fidelity were to break the bond of civil fociety, which is the basis and ground-plot of all States and Commonweals. They do not deny but that a wife Prince may fo carry a treaty, that he may feem to affect that most which he least intendeth; or anfwer doubtfully concerning the propositions; and that he may use with great honour the practices and stratagems of War, when the fortune of both parties confifteth upon their own industry: But to break any covenants agreed upon may well get a Kingdom, but never honourable reputation.

And thus they contend concerning the means whereby a State is continued in happy govern-ment: Whereof thus much I dare fay by the warrant of this Hiftory, that he who falfifieth his word upon advantage, howfoever he regardeth his honour, had need to pay them home in regard of his own fafety: For if they once recover the lofs, and get any advantage against those truce-breakers. they will find as little favour as the Germans did with Cafar.

CHAP. V:

C.efar marcheth directly to the Camp of the Germans, and cutterh them all in pieces, and so endeth that War.

Casfar.

Pon these considerations, Cæsar manifesting his resolution to the Legates and Questor, there happened a very fortunate Accident: came unto Cæsar into his Camp, to excuse their fraudulent Practice, and withal to continue their petition of truce. Whereof Calar was exceeding glad, and caused them to be kept in hold; and at the Same instant brought his Army out of the Camp, com-And making a triple Battel, marched speedily eight notice what had happened. Who being terrified their own Leaders, knew not whether it were Messengers to demand them to be sent unto him, the Gods: And therefore they are called Arcana former perceived by the Roman Soldiers, but calling to mind their perfidious treachery, they brake into the Camp and were at first a little resisted. In the mean time the Women and Children (for they had brought all they had over the Rhine) fled every one away : Which Cafar perceiving fent his Horsemen to pursue them. The Germans hearing the Clamour and screechings behind their Backs, and seeing their Friends pursued and slain, did cast away their Weapons, for sake their Ensigns, and fied out of the Camp: And coming to the conflu-ence of the Mase and the Rhine, such as had escaped cast themselves into the River, ; where what through fear, weariness, and the force of the water, they were all drowned. In this conflict the Romans lost not a Man. The number of the Enemy was 430000, with Women and Children. To them whom he had retained in his Camp, he gave leave to depart : But they fearing the cruelty of the Gauls for the mischief they had done them, defired that they might continue with the Romans: Which Cafar agreed unto.

OBSERVATION.

This relation affordeth little marter of War, but only a fevere revenge of hateful treachery: Notwithstanding I will hence take occasion to difcover the offices of the Quafter and the Legates; and shew what place they had in the Army. And first concerning the Quastor, we are to understand that he was elected by the common voice of the People, in the fame Court which was called to create the General. His Office was to take charge of the publick treasure, whether it came out of their Erarium for the pay of the Army, or otherwife was taken from the Enemy.

Of him the Soldiers received their Stipend. both in Corn and Money: And what other booties were taken from the Enemy, he either kept them or fold them for the use of the Commonweal.

The Legates were not chosen by the People, but appointed by the Senate, as Affiftants and Coadjutors to the Emperor for the publick service, and were altogether directed by the General, in whose absence they had the absolute command: And their number was for the most part uncertain, but proportioned according to the number of Legions in the Army.

CHAP. VI.

C.esar maketh a Bridge upon the Rhine, and carrieth his Army over into Germany.

He German War being thus ended, Cæsar Cæsar. thought it necessary to transport his Army over the Rhine into the Continent of For the next Day very early in the Mom-ing, most of the Princes and chiefest of the Germans this was not the least, that seing the Germans were so easily perswaded to bring their Colonies and their vagrant Multitudes into Gallia, he thought good to make known unto them, that the Roman People could at their pleasure carry their Forces over the Rhine into Germany. manding his Horsemen to follow the Legions, because Moreover, those Troops of Horse which were abthey had been daunted with so late an overthrow: sent at the late overthrow of the Germans, being gone, as I said before, for Spoil and Provision over Miles, and so came upon the Germans before they had the Mosa, after they saw their Friends overthrown, were fled into the Confines of the Sicambri, and with our sudden Arrival, and the departure of joyned with them. To whom when Caesar sens their best course to bring forth their Forces, they answered that the Roman Empire was or defend their Camp, or otherwise to seek limited by the Rhine: And if the Germans were interdicted Gallia, why should Casar challenge any ticular description of the Bridge may sufficiently durbority in their Quarters? Lastly the Ubii, who witness: besides the Fortistations at Alesia, and Autority in toen quarters: Lajoy for 0011, who among fi all the reft of the Germans, bad only accepted of Caclar's friendfing, and given pledges of their fidelity, had made earnest suit unto him to fend them aid against the Suevi; or at the least to transport his Army over the Rhine: that would serve their turns, that would be help and encouragement enough to them; for the name and opinion of the Roman Army was so great, and of such fame, what with Ariovistus's overthrow, and this last service, that it sounded honourable amongst the farthest Nations of Germany, so that it was the greatest safety to have them their Friends. For these reasons Casar resolved to pass the Rhine: but to carry his Army over by Boat was neither safe, nor for his own Honour, nor the Majesty of the People of Rome. And albeit it feemed a matter of great difficulty, by reason of the breadth, swiftness and depth of the River to make a Bridge: yet he refolved to try what he could do, otherwise he determined not to pass over at all. And so he built a Bridge after

At two foot distance he placed two Trees of a foot and half square, sharpened at the lower end, and cut them answerable to the depth of the River: these be let down into the Water with Engines, and drove them in with Commanders, not perpendiand arove even in wish commanders, not perpendi-cularly after the fashion of a Pile, but Gable-wise, and bending with the course of the Water: opposite unto these he placed two other Trees, join-ed together after the same sashion, being sorty ed together after the same sassion, being forty floot distant from the former, by the dimension between their lower parts in the bottom of the Water, and reclining against the counse of the River. These two pair of couples thus placed, he joined together with a Beam of two foot square, equal togetier with a pearn of two Jow Jourse, equator to the distance between the said emples, and fastened them at each end on either side of the couples with Braces and Pins: whereby the strength of the work and nature of the Frame was such, that the greater the violence of the fream was, and the faster it fell upon the Timber-work, the stronger the Bridge was united in the couplings and Joints. In like manner he proceeded with couples and Beams, until the work was brought unto the other fide of the River: and then he laid streight Planks from Beam to Beam, and covered them with Hurdles; and so he made a Floor to the Bridge. Moreover and 10 or mane a ricor or the Bridge he drove down on the lower fide of the Bridge he drove down Supporters, which being fastened to the Timber-work, did strengthen the Bridge against the force of the Water: and on the upper side of the Bridge, of the evaluer and on the upper fide of the Driage, at a reasonable distance, he placed Piles to hinder the force of Trees or Boats, or what eile the Enemy might cast down to trouble the Work or hurt the Bridge. Within ten days that the Timber began to be cut down and carried, the Work was ended, and the Army transported. Caefar leaving a strong Garison at either end of the Bridge, went into the confines of the Sicambri. In the mean time Embassadours came to him from many Cities desiring Peace and the friendship of the Romans: whom Cæsar answered courteously, and required Hostages of their sidelity.

OBSERVATION.

TT shall not be amiss to enter a little into the confideration of this Bridge, as well in regard of the ingenious Architecture thereof, as also that we may somewhat imitate Casar; whom we may observe to insift with as great plenty of Wit and Elequence, in presenting unto us the subtilty of his invention in fuch manner of handy-works, as the Intrenchments in Bretaigne, for the fafety of his Shipping, with many other works, which he might well record as the greatest designs of an Heroick Spirit, and the wonderful effects of magnanimous industry, that succeeding Ages might not boast either of Art or Prowess which his vertue had not expressed, or otherwise might wonder at that worth which they themselves could not attain un-And to that purpose he entertained Vitruvius the Father of Architecture, and as worthy to be imitated in that faculty, as his Master Casar is in feats of Arms. By whose example a great Commander may learn, how much it importeth the eternity of his Fame to beautifie his greatest defigns with Art, and to efteem of fuch as are able to intreat the Mathematical Muses to shew themfelves under the shape of a sensible form; which albeit, through the rudeness of the matter, fall far short of the truth of their intellectual nature, yet their beauty expresseth such a Majesty of Art, that no time will fuffer the memory thereof to perish.

The workmanship of this Bridge consisted chiefly in the oblique fituation of the double Pofts, whereof the first order bending with the Stream, and the lower rank against the Stream, when they came to be coupled together with overthward Beams, which were fastened in the couplings with Braces which he nameth Fibulas, the more violent the Stream fell upon the work, the fafter the Joints of the Building were united, as may better appear by a Model of that making, than can be expressed by any circumstance of words.

I might hence take occasion to speak of the diversity of Bridges, and of the practices which Antiquity hath devised to transport Armies over Rivers: But inafmuch as it is a common fubject for all that undertake this Military task, and hath Lib. de been handled by Lipfius upon the occasion of Machia-this Bridge, I will referr the Reader to that place; and only note the fingular disposition of this action, inalmuch as Cafar made the means correspondent to that end which he intended. For confidering that the chiefest end of his passage was, to let the Germans understand that the power of the Roman Empire was not bounded with the Rhine, and that a River could not fo separate their Territories, but that they were able to join both the Continents together, and make a common Roadway where it feemed most unpassable: he thought it best to pass over his Army by a Bridge, that fo the Germans might know the power of his Forces, and also conceit their Territories as united unto Gallia, or to be united at the pleasure of the Romans with a firm Isthmus, and plain passage by foot, which in times past had always been separated by a mighty River. Neither would a transportation by Boat have wrought that effect. forasmuch as the daily use thereof was so familiar to the Germans, that it nothing altered their imagination of an unacceffible paffage: but when they faw fo strange a thing attempted, and fo suddenly performed, they would easily understand that they were not fo far off, but that they might be overtaken, and so direct their demeanour accor-

Let this fuffice therefore to prove that a passage over a River by a Bridge is more honourable, fafe, and of greater terrour to the Enemy, than any other way that can be devised; especially if the River carry any depth, such as the Rhine is: otherwise, if it have either Shallows or Fords, whereby Men may wade over without any great upon any other part of his actions; as this par-incumbrance, it were but loft labour to frand about a Bridge, but rather to think of it as of a place incumbred with fuch hindrances as Men often meet with in a march.

Cæfar.

Lib. IV.

CHAP. VII.

Cafar taketh revenge upon the Sicambri: giveth liberty to the Ubii; and returneth again into

He Sicambri understanding that Cæsar was making a Bridge over the Rhine, prepared themselves to fly; and at the per-suasion of the Usipetes and Tenchtheri for fook their Country, and conveyed themselves and their possessions into Woods and solitary Defarts. Cæsar continuing a few days in their Quarters, having set on fire their Villages and Houses, and burned up their Corn and Provision, came to the Ubit, promising them aid against the Suevi: by whom he understood, that assount to make a Bridge, the superstance of the them. calling a Council, according to their manner, they fent unto all quarters of their State, that they should for sake their Towns, and carry their Wives and Children and all that they had into the Woods; and that all that were able to bear Arms should make head in one place, which they appointed to be the midst of their Country; and there they attended the coming of the Romans, and were re-folved in that place to give them Battel. Which when Cæsar understood, having ended all those things when Carlar understood, having ended all those trings in regard whereof be carne into Germany, which was chiefly to terrifix the Germans, to be revenged upon the Sicambri, to set the Ubii at liberty; having spent in all tighteen days beyond the Rhine, and some enough at well in regard of his own homes. nour, as the good of the Commonweal, he returned into Gallia, and brake up the Bridge.

CHAP. VIII.

Cafar thinketh of a Voyage into Britain: he enquireth of Merchants concerning the nature of that People.

Lthough the Summer was almost spent, and that in those parts the Winter haficund on apace, inasmuch as all Gallia inclineth to the North; notwithstanding be resolved to go over into Britain, forasmuch as he understood that in all the former Wars of Gallia, the Enemy had received most of their supply from thence. And although the time of the Year would not suffer him to finish that War; yet he thought it would be to good purpose, if he went only to view the Island, to understand the quality of the to ore the stant, to interpate the quairty of the Inbabitant, and to know their Coaff, their Ports, and their landing-places, whereof the Gauls were altogether ignorant; for feldom any but Merchants had commerce with them. Neither had they difcovered any thing but the Sea-coaft, and those Regions which were opposite unto Gallia. And therefore calling Merchants together from all quarters, he nei-ther could understand of what quantity the Island was; what Nations, or of what power they were that inhabited it; what use or experience of War they had; what Laws or Customs they used; nor what Havens they had to receive a Navy of great Shipping.

OBSERVATION.

A S the Germans had oftentimes stirred up motions of Rebellion amongst the Gauls, by fending their superfluous multitudes into their Kingdom; fo the Britains had upheld most of their Wars, by furnishing them with such supplies as from time to time they stood in need of. So that if Cafar or the Roman People would rest secure of their quiet and peaceable Government in Gallia, as they had chaftifed the infolency of the Germans, and fent them back again with greater loss than gain; so was it necessary to make the Britains know, that their affiftance in the War of Gallia would draw more bufinesses upon them than they were well able to manage. For as I have noted in my former discourses, the causes of an unpeaceable Government are as well external and foreign, as internal and bred in the Body; which need the help of a Physician to continue the Body in a perfect flate of health, and require as great a diligence to qualifie their malicious operations, as any internal fickness whatsoever.

In the fecond Commentary I briefly touched the commodity of good discovery: but because it is a matter of great consequence in the fortunate carriage of a War, I will once again by this Example of Cafar remember a General not to be negligent in this duty. Suetonius in the Life of our Cafar reporteth, that he never undertook any expedition, but he first received true intelligence of the particular fituation and nature of the Country, as also of the manners and quality of the People; and that he would not undertake the Voyage into Britain, until he had made perfect discovery by himself of the magnitude and fituation of the Island. Which Suetonius might understand by this first Voyage, which Casar would needs undertake in the latter end of a Summer, although it were, as he himself faith, but to dif-

It is recorded by ancient Writers, that those demi-gods that governed the World in their time. gave great honour to the exercise of Hunting, as the perfect image of War in the resemblance of all parts, and namely in the discovery and knowledge of a Country; without which all enterprizes, either of fport in Hunting, or earnest in Wars, were frivolous and of no effect. And therefore Xenophon in the Life of Cyrus sheweth, that his expedition against the King of Armenia was nothing but a repetition of such sports as he had used in Hunting. Howsoever, if the infinite Examples registred in History, how by the dexterity of some Leaders it hath gained great Victories, and through the negligence of others irrecoverable overthrows, are not fufficient motives to persuade them to this duty; let their own experience in matters of fmall moment manifeft the weakness of their proceedings, when they are ignorant of the chiefest circumstances of the matter they have in hand. But let this suffice in the fecond place to prove the necessity of good discovery, and let us learn of Casar what is principally to be enquired after in the discovery of an unknown Country: as first, the quantity of the Land; fecondly, what Nations inhabit it; thirdly, their use of War; fourthly, their Civil Government; and lastly, what Havens they have to receive a Navy of great Shipping. All which circumstances are such principal Arteries in the body of a State, that the discovery of any one of these demands would have given great light concerning the Motion of the whole Body.

i teri, irraena Kaid Tali irraena 1880 (1881)

CHAP. IX.

Elar fent out Caius Volusenus with a Galley to discover what he could concerning these things, with charge that having made perfect discovery, he should return again unto him as speedily as might be : he himself marching in the mean time with all his Forces unto the or * Morini; for a fruch as from thence lay the shortest cut into Britain. Thither he commanded that Ships should be brought from all the Maritime Cities of that quarter, and namely that Fleet which he had built the year before for the War at Vannes. In the mean time his resolution being known, and carried into Britain by Merchants and others, many private States of that Island sent Embassadours unto him, promising him Hostages of their Loyalty, and signifying their readiness to submit themselves to the Roman Empire. To these he made liberal promises, exhorting them to continue in that obedience; and fo fent them back again. And with them he fent Comius, whom he had made King of Arras, whose wisdom and vertue he held in good account, and whom he took to be faithful to him, and of great Authority in these Regions. To him he gave in charge to go to as many of the States as he could, and per-Juade them to accept of the friendskip of the Roman Empire, and acquaint them that Cæsar himself would presently follow after. Voluterus baving taken what view of the Country be could (for be durft not go on shore to commit bimself to the barbarism of the Enemy) after sive days returned to Cæsar, and related unto him all that he had discovered. Whilft Casar stayed in those parts for the furnishing of his Fleet, the Morini fent Messengers unto him, excusing themselves for their former faults; that being a rude and barbarous People, and altogether unacquainted with our Customs, they had made War against the People of Rome; and withal manfesting their readiness to obey bis Commands.

Cæsar not willing to leave any Enemy behind him, or to engage in a new War at this time of the Year, or to neglect his Voyage into Britain for such small matters, willingly accepted of their submission, having first received many Hostages of them : and having made ready eighty Ships of burthen, which he thought Sufficient to transport two Legions, he divided the Gallies to the Questor, the Legates, and the Commanders of the Horse. There were also eighteen Ships of burthen more, which lay Windbound at a Port eight miles off, and them he appointed for the Horsemen. The rest of the Army he committed to Q. Titurius Sabinus and Luc. Aurunculeius Cotta, commanding them to go to the confines of the Menapii, and into these parts of the Morini who had fent no Embassadours to him: and appointed P. Sulp. Rufus a Legate to keep the Port with a sufficient Garison.

CHAP. X.

Cafar faileth into Britain, and landeth his Men.

Hefe things being thus dispatched, having a good Wind, in the third Watch he put out to Sea, commanding his Horsemen to im-barque themselves at the further Port and sol-of the day, where he found all the Clifts possessed with the Forces of the Enemy. The nature of the place was CHAP. IX.

the Forces of the Enemy. The nature of the place was Cafar sendeth C. Volusenus to discover the Coast Voyage.

the Forces of the Enemy. The nature of the place was fuch, that the Hills lay so sleep over the Sea, that a Voyage in the lower store, and the higher ground upon the lower store; and the herefore he thought is no fit Landing-place; notwithstanding be cast show until the rest of the Navy were come up unto him.

In the mean time calling a Council of the Legates and Tribunes, he declared unto them what advertisements he had received by Volusenus, and told them what he would have done; and withal admonished them that the course of Military Affairs, and especially Sea matters, that had so sudden and unconstant a motion, required all things to be done at a beck, and in due time. The Council being dismissed, having both Wind and Tide with him, he weighed Anchor, and Sailed eight miles from that place, unto a plain and open shore.

The Britains perceiving the Romans determination, sent their Horse and Chariots (which they commonly use in War) before, and the rest of their Forces followed after to the place where the Romans intended to land. Cæsar found it exceeding difficult to land his Men, for these respects: the Ships were so great, that they could not be brought near unto the flore; the Soldiers in strange and unknown places, having their hands laden with great and heavy Weapons, were at one instant to go out of the Ship, to withstand the force of the Billow, and to fight with the Enemy; whereas the Britains either standing upon the shore, or making short sallies into the Water, did boldly cast their Weapons in known and frequented places, and managed their Horses accustomed to such services.

The Romans being terrified with these things, and altogether unskilful of this kind of fight, did not use the same Courage as they were wont to do in Land-services. Which when Casar perceived, he caused the Gallies, that were both strange to the Britains, and readier for use, to be removed from the Ships of burthen, and to be rowed up and down, and laid against the open side of the Enemy; that from thence with Slings, Engines, and Arrows, the Enemy might be beaten up from the Water-Joi the which flood the Romans in good flead. For the Britains being troubled with the firangeness of the Gallies, the motion of their Oars, and unusual kind of Engines, were somewhat dismayed, and began to retire back, and give way to the Romans. But the Soldiers still lingering, and especially for fear of the depth of the Sea, the Eagle-bearer of the tenth Legion desiring the Gods that it might fall out happily to the Legion, If you will, faith he, for ake your Eagle, O ye Soldiers, and betray it to the Enemy; for mine own part, I will do my duty both to the Commonweal and to my Superiour. And having Spoken this with a loud voice, he cast himself into the Sea, and carried the Eagle towards the Enemy. The Romans exhorting one another not to Suffer Such a dishonour to be committed, they all leaped out of the Ship: which when others that were near at hand perceived, they followed them with as great alacrity, and pressed towards the Enemy to encounter with

The fight on both parts was very eager: the Romans (nat being able to keep any order of Battel, nor to get any firm footing, nor to follow their Enfignt, forafmuch as every Man kept with those Ensigns which he first met withal) were wonderfully troubled. But the Enemy acquainted with the Flats and Shallows, as they beheld them from the flore to come fingle out of their Ships, put-ting Spurs to their Horses, would set upon them incumbred and unprepared, and many of them low him; which was but stowly performed. He would overlay a few: others would get the adhimself arrived upon the Coast about the fourth hour vantage of the open side, and cast their Weapons amongst the thickest Troops of them. Which when them, that no Man shall be able to endure the in-Casar perceived, he caused the Ship-Boats and convenience thereof. finaller Veffels to be manned with Soldiers; and where he saw need of help, he sent them to rescue such as were overcharged.

CHAP.

As soon as the Romans got footing on the firm Land, they made head together and charged the Enemy, and so put them to flight: but they were not able to follow them, nor take the Island at that time, for want of Horsemen, which thing was only wanting to Cælar's wonted fortune.

The First OBSERVATION.

UPon this circumstance of Landing, I may justly take occasion to handle that Controversie which hath been often debated by our English Captains; which is, whether it be better in queftion of an Invasion, and in the absence of our Shipping, to oppole an Enemy at his landing upon our Coaft, or quietly to fuffer him to fet his Men on shore, and retire our Forces into some Inland place, and there attend to give him Battel. It perience. feemeth that fuch as first fet this question on foot, and were of an opinion that we ought not by any means to encounter an Enemy at his landing, for fo we might much endanger our felves and our Country, did ground themselves upon the Authority of Monsieur de Langey not observing the dif-ference between an Island and a Continent. For where he fetteth down that position, he plainly aimeth at fuch Princes as border one upon another in the fame Continent: but where their Territories are disjoyned by fo great a Bar as the Ocean, and they have not fuch means to furprife one another, it were mere folly to hold good that rule, as shall better appear by the sequel of this discourse. Wherein I will first lay down the reafons that may be urged to prove it unsafe to op-pose an Enemy at his landing, not as being urged by that party (for I never heard any probable motive from them which might induce any fuch opinion) but fet down by fuch as have looked into the Controversies, both with experience and good judgment.

And first it may be objected, that it is a hard matter to refift an Enemy at his landing, as well in regard of the uncertainty of place, as of time: For being ignorant in what place he will attempt a landing, we must either defend all places of access, or our intentions will prove mere frivolous : and to perform that, it is requisite that our defenfive Forces be fufficient, according to the particular quality of every place subject to danger: which, confidering the large extension of our Maritime parts, and the many Landing-places on our Coaft, will require a greater number of Men than this Island can afford. And although it could furnish fuch a competent number as might feem in some fort sufficient, yet the uncertainty of the time of the Enemies arrival would require that they should be lodged either upon, or near the places of danger many days at leaft, if not many Weeks, before the instant of their attempt; which would exhauft a greater mass of Treasure, than could be well afforded by the State. Secondly, it may be objected, that all our Landing-places are of such disadvantage for the defendants, that it were no fafety at all to make head against him at the landing: For inasmuch as such places are open and plain, they yield no Conveniency to shelter the defendants from the fury of the Artillery, wherewith the Enemy will plentifully furnish their long Boats and landing Vessels; which bearing upon the Beach (for most of our Landing-places are of that quality) will fo fcatter whole Forces.

The third Objection may arise from the disparity both of numbers, and condition of the Forces of either party. For the first, it must needs be granted that the defendants, being to guard fo many places at once, cannot furnish such numbers to every particular place for defence, as the affailants may for offence.

Concerning the quality of the Forces, it is without question, that a great and potent Prince (for fuch a one it must be that undertaketh to invade the Territories of fo absolute and well-obeyed a Princess as her Majesty is) would draw our the flour of his Soldiery wherefoever; besides the gallant Troops of Volunteers, which do commonly attend fuch fervices. Now these being thus qualified and drawn into one head, and being to make as it were but one body, how can it be reasonably imagined (the time and place of their attempt being uncertain) that the defendants should equal them with Forces of like vertue and ex-

These are the reasons which may be drawn from the disadvantage which they have that go about to oppose an Enemy at his landing: The rest that have been urged by such as maintain this opinion, are either impertinent to the question, or taken altogether from false grounds. But before I proceed to the answer of these Reasons, I will lay this down for a Principle, That it is impossible for any foreign Prince, how puissant soever, to make fuch a preparation as shall be fitting to Invade a State so populous, and respective of their Sovereign (notwithstanding the pretences devised to dissemble the same) but it must of neceffity be discovered before it can be made able to put any thing in execution: Which I might enlarge by particularizing the infinite equipage which is required for so great a Fleet. But I will rest my self in the example of the Year Eighty-eight, which proveth the discovery of the pretended Invasion before it could come to execution.

Concerning therefore the first Objection, it can-Answer in not indeed be denied but the place of the Ene-the first obmies landing will be doubtful, and therefore our jettien. care must generally extend it self to all places of access: But that our defensive Forces are not sufficient in a competent manner to guard all fuch places, according as the necessity of them shall require, that is the point in question. To prove that our Forces are fufficient, we must necessarily enter into particularities, wherein I will take Kent for a prefident, as not altogether unacquainted with the state thereof; which, if I deceive not my felf, is a shore of as large extension upon the Martime parts as any other within this Kingdom. For the breadth thereof enlarging it felf from the point of Neffe by Lyd, which is the uttermost skirt upon the Coast of Suffex, unto Margate upon the Coast of Essex, is by computation about twenty-four miles: But notwithstanding this large circuit, who knoweth not that the fixth part thereof is not subject to the landing of such an Enemy as we speak of; partly in regard of the hugeness of the Cliffs, which do inclose a great part of that skirt, and partly in regard that much of that quantity which may be landed upon, hath fuch eminent and difficult places near adjoyning, as an Army that should put it felf there on shore, should find it self, being opposed but by a small Force, fo streightned, as they would not easily find a way out, without apparent ruine of their

Fur-

Further, it cannot be denied but that generally ong the Coaft of Kent there are fo many Rocks, ing made subject to a Stranger. along the Coast of Kent there are so many Rocks, Shelves, Flats, and other impediments, that a Navy of great Ships can have no Conveniency to anchor near the Shore; and for the most part the Coast lieth so open to the Weather, that the least Gale of Wind will put them from their Anchors: All which particulars duly confidered, it will appear that this large Skirt of Kent will afford a far leffer part fit for the landing of an Army, than was thought of at the first. And were it that fo publick a treatife as this is would admit with good discretion such an exact relation as falleth within my Knowledge concerning this Point, I would undertake to make it so evident, by the particular description both of the number, quantity, and quality of the places themselves, as no Man of an indifferent judgment would imagine our Forces to be infufficient to afford every of them fuch a fafe and fure guard, as shall be thought requisite for the same. But for smuch as it is unfitting to give fuch particular fatisfaction in this publick discourse, give me leave, submitting my lelf always to better judgments, to give a general tafte of that means as would fecure all places with a competent number of Men.

Having shewed you before the circuit of the Maritime parts of Kent, I would observe this order: first, to make a triple division of all such Forces as shall be appointed for this service; as for example, I will suppose the number to be twelve thousand, of which I would lodge three thousand about the point of Nesse, and three thousand about Margate, and fix thousand about Foulkiton, which I take to be as it were the centre; and use no Art to qualifie the disadvantages therefor my greatest care should be so to dispose of them, as they might not only fuccour one another in the same Shire, but as every Shire bordereth one upon another, so they should mutually give help one unto another, as occasion should be give neip one timo anomer, as occasion mound be offered: as if the Enemy should attempt a landing about Nesse, not only the fix thousand lodged as before should march to their succours, but such alfo of the Suffex Forces as were near unto that part, and so likewise of the rest. By which you may fee, how great a Force would in few hours be affembled for the strengthening of any of these outskirts; and the rather, forasmuch as the one half of the whole Forces are thus lodged in the centre of the Shire, which is nearer to all parts than any other place whatfoever. There would also in the quartering of them an especial care be had to the places of danger, as might be answerable to the importance thereof: For my meaning is not to lodge them close together, but to stretch them out along the Coast by Regiments and Compa-

Now concerning the latter part of this objection which urgeth the uncertainty of time when the Enemy shall make his approaches, I hold it most requifite that our defensive Forces should be drawn into a head, before the Enemy should be discovered near our coast, ready to put himself on shore: For it were a gross absurdity to imagine that Companies could upon fuch a sudden be affembled, without confusion; and make so long a March, with fuch expedition as the necessity of the occasion would require. Now for that huf-banding respect of her Majesties Cossers, which is urged to fuch extremity, as it would be unfupportable for this State to bear, as I doubt not but good intelligence would much qualifie that suppofed immoderate expence; so I affure my felf, that Men of found judgment will deem it much out of fomeness of their Arms, the Soldiers were so nies, as the Country might afford best opportunity to entertain them.

Ut jugulent homines surgunt de nocte Latrones : Non expergifceris, ut teipfum ferves? Thieves rife by night to cut the throats of Men. Wilt not thou then arise to save thy self?

The Enemy (peradventure) hath kept thirty the enemy (peracventure) nath kept inner thoufand Men in pay two Months before, to make Havock of our Country, and to bring us into perperual Thraldom; shall we think it much, to maintain sufficient Forces upon our Coaft to affure our felves that no fuch Enemy shall enter into our Country? The extremity of this charge would be qualified by our good fuccess, which would proportion our attendence with the necessity which is imposed upon us to be careful in businesses of this nature. Let this suffice therefore to prove that our Forces are sufficient to keep the Sea-Coast, and that the uncertainty of time when the Enemy will make his attempts, ought not to hinder us from performing that duty which the care and respect of our Prince and Country imposeth upon every good Subject; which is the substance of the first reason which I set down in the beginning of this discourse.

Now concerning the second reason, which urg. The Answer eth the disadvantage of the place in regard of the ressault. fury of the Enemies Artillery; true it is, that fuch places as yield the Enemy Convenience of landing, are for the most part plain and open, and afford naturally no covert at all. What then? shall a Soldier take every place as he findeth it, of? Or shall a Man forego the benefit of a place of advantage, rather than he will relieve with industry the inconveniences of some particular circumftance? I make no question but an ingenious Commander, being in feasonable time lodged with convenient Forces upon any of those places, yea upon the Beach it felf, which is as unapt for defence as any place whatfoever, would use such industry as might give sufficient security to his Forces and over-weigh the Enemy with advantage of place; especially considering that this Age hath afforded such plentiful examples of admirable inventions in that behalf. But this cannot be done, if our Forces do not make head before the instant of the Enemies Attempt, that our Commanders may have fome time to make ready Store of Gabions, and Hand-baskets, with fuch moveable matter as shall be thought fit for that Neither let this trouble any Man; for I dare avouch it, that if our Forces, are not drawn into a head before the Enemy be discovered upon the Coast, although we never mean to oppose their landing, but attend them in fome in-land place to give them battel, our Commanders will be far to feek of many important circumstances, which are requisite in a matter of that consequence. And therefore let us have but a reasonable time to bethink our felves of these necessaries, and we will eafily overcome all these difficulties, and use the benefit of the firm Land to repel an Enemy, weakened with the Sea, toffed with the Billow, troubled with his Weapons, with many other hindrances and difcouragements, which are presented unto him both from the Land and the Sea. He that faw the landing of our Forces in the Island of Fial in the year ninety seven, can somewhat judge of the difficulty of that matter: For what with the working of the Sea, the steepness of the Cliffs, and the troublefeason to dispute about unnecessary thrift, when incumbred, that had not the Enemy been more than a Coward, he might well with two hundred flain. Appian in his fecond Book faith, that in old to the third

Cafar.

Concerning the third Objection, this briefly shall be sufficient, that we are not so much to regard that our Forces do equal them in number, as to fee that they be sufficient for the nature of the place, to make it good against the Enemies landing: For we know that in places of advantage and difficult access, a small number is able to oppose a great; and we doubt not but all circumftances duly confidered, we shall proportionably equal the Enemy both in number and quality of their Forces: Always presupposed, that our State shall never be destitute of sufficient Forces trained and exercised in a competent manner, to defend their Country from foreign Enemies. For the neglect thereof were to draw on such as of themselves are but too forward to make a prey of us, and to make us unapt not only to oppose an Enemies landing, but to defend our selves from being over-run, as other Nations living infecurity without due regard thereof have been.

And thus much concerning the answer to those three reasons, which seem to prove that an Enemy is not to be refifted at his landing. Now if we do but look a little into the inconveniences which follow upon the landing of an Enemy, we shall casily discover the dangerousness of this opinion: As first we give him leave to live upon the fpoil of our Country; which cannot be prevented by any wasting, spoiling, or retiring of our pro-visions, in so plentiful a Country as this is, especially confidering, that we have no ftrong Towns at all to repose our selves upon. Whereof we need no further testimony than is delivered unto us out of the seventh Book of these Commentaries, in that War which Cafar had with Vercingeto-

Secondly, obedience, which at other times is willingly given to Princes, is greatly weakened at fuch times; whereby all necessary means to maintain a War is hardly drawn from the subject. Thirdly, opportunity is given to malecontents and ill-dispoted Persons either to make head themfelves or to fly to the Enemy. Fourthly, 'tis madness to adventure a Kingdom upon one stroke having it in our disposition to do otherwise: With many other disadvantages which the opportunity of any fuch occasion would discover.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Of the name

THe Word Imperator, which the Eagle-Bearer attributeth to Cafar, was the greatest Title that could be given to a Roman Leader: And as Zonaras in his fecond Tome faith, was never given but upon some great exploit, and after a just Victory obtained; and then in the place where the Battel was fought, and the Enemy overthrown, the General was faluted by the name of Imperator with the triumphant shout of the whole Army; by which acclamation the Soldiers gave testimony of his Worth, and made it equivalent with the most fortunate Commanders.

This Ceremony was of great antiquity in the Roman Empire, as appeareth by many Histories, and namely by Tacitus, where he faith that Tiberius gave that honour to Blefus, that he should be faluted Imperator by the Legions; which he sheweth to be an ancient dignity belonging to unserviceable. Whereat the whole Army was exceedgreat Captains, after they had foiled the Enemy with an eminent overthrow. For every Victory was not sufficient whereby they might challenge so ries to new furnish the old; and every Man knew great an honour, but there was required (as it that they must needs winter in Gallia, forasmuch as Men have kept us from entring any part of that time the name of Imperator was never taken but upon great and admirable exploits: But in his time ten thousand of the Enemy being stain in one Battel was a fufficient ground of that honour. Cicero faith that two thousand slain in the place, e- Phil. 14. specially of Thracians, Spaniards or Gauls, did worthily merit the name of Imperator. Howfoe- Lib. 2. ver, it feemeth by the fame Author that there was Epid. a a certain number of the Enemy required to be flain, where he faith, Se justa Victoria Imperatorem appellatum, that he was called Imperator upon a due and full Victory.

CHAP. XI.

The Britains make peace with Cafar, but break it again upon the loss of the Roman shipping.

He Britains being overthrown in this Rattel, as foon as they had recovered their fafety by Flight, they presently dispatched Mes-sengers to Cæsar to intreat for Peace, promising Hostages, and obedience in whatsoever he commanded. And with these Embassadors returned Comius of Arras; whom Cafar had sent before into Britain, and whom the Britains at his first landing with Cæsar's Mandates, had seized upon and thrown into Prison; but after the Battel they released him, and becoming now fuiters for Peace, threw all the blame thereof upon the Multitude, excusing themselves as ignorant of it, and so desiring to be pardoned. Casar complained that whereas, they fent unto him into Gallia to ed one whereas, they jew who wim the Gaina to defire Peace, notwithflanding at his coming they made War againfl him without any caufe or reafon at all; but excusing it by their ignorance, he commanded Hostages to be delivered unto him: Which they prefently performed in part, and the reft being to be fetch of further off, they promifed frould likewife be rendred within a short time. In the mean time while they commanded their People to return to their Possessions, and their Rulers and Princes came out of all Quarters to commend themselves and their States to Casar. The Peace being thus concluded, four days after that Cæsar came into Britain, the eighteen Ships which were appointed for the Horsemen, put out to Sea with a gentle Wind: And approaching fo near the Coast of Britain, that they were within View of the Roman Camp, there arose fuch a sudden Tempest, that none of them were able to hold their course; but some of them returned to the Port from whence they came, other some were cast upon the lower part of the Island, which lieth to the West-ward, and there casting Anchor took in so much Water, that they were forced commit themselves again to the Sea, and direct their course to the Coast of Gallia. The same Night it happened that the Moon being in the full, the Tides were very high in those Seas; whereof the Romans being altogether ignorant, both the Gallies that transported the Army which were drawn up upon the Shore were filled with the Tide, and the Ships of burthen that lay at Anchor were shaken with the Tempest. Neither was there any help to be given unto them; so that many of them were rent and split in pieces, and the rest lost both their Anchors, Cables and other Tackling, and by that means became altogether ingly troubled; for there was no other shipping to recarry them back again, neither had they any necessafeemeth) a certain number of the Enemies to be there was no provision of Corn in those places where they were. Which thing being known to the Princes of Britain, that were affembled to conferr of fuch things ciery: And therefore in the Government of a fubas Casar had commanded them to perform, when they understood that the Romans wanted both their Horsemen, Shipping and Provision of Corn, and quesfing at the small number of their Forces by the small Circuit of their Camp. (that which made it of less compass than usual being, that Casar had transported his Soldiers without such necessary Carriages as they used to take with them;) they thought it their best course to rebel, and to keep the Romans from Corn and Convoys of Provision, and so prolong the matter until Winter came on. For they thought that if these were once overthrown and cut off from returning into Gallia, never any Man would after adventure to bring an Army into Britain. There-fore they conspired again the second time, and conveyed themselves by stealth out of the Camp, and got their Men privily out of the Fields, to make Head in some convenient place against the Romans.

The First OBSERVATION.

Concerning the Ebbing and Flowing of the Sea, and the causes thereof, it hath already been handled in the Second Book: To which I will add thus much, as may ferve to flew how the Romans became so ignorant of the Spring-Tides, which happen in the full and new of the Moon. It is observed by Experience, that the motion of this Watery Element is altogether directed by the course of the Moon; wherein she exerciseth her regency according as the finderhthe Matter qualified for her influence. And forafmuch as all Mediterranean Seas, and fuch Gulfs as are inclofed in Sinus's and Bosoms of the Earth, are both abridged of the liberty of their course, and through the smallness of their quantity, are not fo capable of Celeftial power as the Ocean it felf; it consequently followeth that the Tuscan Seas, wherewith the Romans were chiefly acquainted, were not so answerable in effect to the operation of the Moon as the Main Sea, whose bounds are ranged in a more spacious Circuit, and through the plenteous abundance of his parts, better anfwereth the vertue of the Moon. The Ocean therefore being thus obedient to the course of the Celeftial Bodies, taking her course of flowing from the North, falleth with fuch a Current between the Oreades and the Main of Norvegia, that the filleth our Channel between England and France with great Swelling Tides, and maketh her motion more eminent in these quarters than Enemy, and scarce able to suffain the Assault, the in any other parts of the World. And hence it happeneth that our River of Thames, lying with her Mouth fo ready to receive the Tide as it cometh, and having withall a plain level Bottom, and a very small fresh Current, taketh the Tide as far into the Land as any other known River of Europe. And for this cause the Ramans were ignorant of the Spring-Tides in the full of the

The Second OBSERVATION.

SUch as either by their own Experience, or otherwise by Observation of that which History recordeth, are acquainted with the Government of Commonweals, are not ignorant with what difficulty a Nation that either hath long lived in liberty, or been governed by Commanders of their own choosing, is made subject to the Yoak of Bondage, or reduced under the Obedience of a Stranger. For as we are apt by a natural inclination to civil Society; so by the fame nature we defire a free disposition of our selves formed in all their Fights both the nimble motion dued State, what loss or disadvantage happeneth to the Victor, or how indirectly foever it concerneth the Bond of their Thraldom, the Captive People behold it as a part of their Adversaries overthrow; and conceive thereupon fuch Spirits as answer the greatness of their hope, and condition with the strength of their Will, which always maketh that feem eafie to be affected which it defireth. And this was the reason that the Britains altered their refolution of Peace, upon the loss which the Romans had received in their Shipping.

CHAP. XII.

Cæsar new trimmeth his late shaken Navy: The Britains fet upon the Romans as they foraged; but were put off by Cafar.

Æsar, although he had not discovered their Cafar. determination, yet conjecturing of the Event by the lofs of his Shipping, and by their delay of giving up Hostages, provided against all Chances: For he brought Corn daily out of the Fields into his Camp; and took the Hulls of such Ships as were most dismembred, and with the Timber and Brass thereof he mended the rest that mere beaten with the Tempest. causing other necessaries to be brought out of Gallia. Which being handled with the great industry and travail of the Soldiers, he lest only twelve Ships, and made the other able to abide the Sea.

While thefe things were in Action, the Seventh Legion being fent out by course to fetch in Corn, and little suspecting any motion of War, as part of the Soldiers continued in the Field, and the rest went and came between them and the Camp, the Station that watched before the Gate of the Camp gave advertisement to Cæsar, that the same which the Legion went, there appeared a greater dust than was usually seen. Cæsar suspecting that which indeed was true, that the Britains were entred into some new resolution, he took those two Cohorts which were in station before the Port, commanding other two to take their place, and the rest to arm themselves, and presently to follow him, and went that way where the dust was descried. And when he had marched some distance from the Camp, he saw his Men over-charged with the Legion thronged together on a heap, and Weapons cast from all parts amongst them. For when they had foraged all other Quarters, there remained one piece of Corn, whither the Enemy suspected the Romans would at last come, and in the Night time conveighed themselves secretly into the Woods, where they continued until the Romans were come into the Field: And as they faw them disarmed, dispersed, and occupied in reaping, they suddenly set upon them, and flaying some few of them, routed the rest, and incompassed them about with their Horsemen and Chariots. Their manner of fight with Chariots was, first to ride up and down, and cast their Weapons as they saw advantage; and with the terror of their Horses and ratling of their Wheels to disorder their Companies; and when they had wound themselves between any Troops of Horse, they forfook their Chariots, and fought on foot: In the mean time the guiders of their Chariots would drive a little aside, and so place themselves, that if their Misters needed any help, they might have of Horsemen, and the firm stability of Footmen; means whereby it may be obtained) had directed and were so ready with daily practice, that they the course of their proceedings, they might with could ftay in the descent of a steep Hill, and turn Short, and moderate their going as it seemed best unto them, and run along the Beam of the Coach, and rest upon the Yoak, or Harness of their Horses, and return as speedily again at their pleasure. The Romans being thus troubled, Cæsar came to rescue them in very good time: For at his coming the Enemy food still, and the Soldiers gathered their Spirits unto them, and began to renew their Courage that was almost spent. Casar taking it an unfit time either to provoke the Enemy or to give him Battel, continued a while in the same place, and then returned with the Legions into the Camp. While these things were a doing, and the Romans thus bufied, the Britains that were in the Field conveighed themselves all away.

The First OBSERVATION.

 $B^{\scriptscriptstyle Y}$ this we plainly find that there were usually two Cohorts (which according to the rate of One hundred and twenty in a Maniple, amounted to the number of 720 Men) which kept the day-watch before the Gate of the Camp, and were always in readiness upon any fervice. The commodity whereof appeareth by this accident: For confidering that the Advertisement required haft and speedy recourse, it greatly furthered their rescue, to have so many Men ready to march forward at the first motion, that they might give what help they could until the reft of their Fellows came in.

The Second OBSERVATION.

THeir manner of fighting with Chariots is very particularly described by C.C. as a peculiar Fight unto the Eastern Countries, as fuitable to the plain and level fituation of the place, whereof we find often mention in the Scripture. Which may ferve for an Argument to Geoffrey of Monmouth, to prove the Britains defcent from Troy in Afia, where we likewise find mention of fuch Chariots.

The Third OBSERVATION.

THirdly, we may observe the discreet and moderate temper of his valour, and the means he used to make his Soldiers confident in his directions: For notwithstanding the Britains had exceedingly urged him to make hazard of a present revenge; yet finding it an unfit time, (inasmuch as his Men had been somewhat troubled with the fury of the Britains) he thought it best to expect fome other opportunity. And a-gain, to avoid the inconveniences of a fearful Retreat, he continued a while in the same place, to embolden his Men with the fight of the Enemy. And this manner of proceeding wrought a full perswasion in his Soldiers that his Actions were directed with knowledge, and with a careful respect of their safety: Which gave his Men resolution when they were carried upon Service, fell by the Horsemen. being affured that what service soever they were imployed upon was most diligently to be performed, as a matter much importing the fortunate iffue of that War: Whereas if they had perceived that reason have drawn back from such imployments, and valued their fafety above the iffue of fuch an enterprize. And hence ariseth that confident opinion which the Soldiers have of a good General; which is a matter of great importance in the course of War.

CHAP. XIII.

The Britains make head with their Forces; and are beaten by Cafar: his return into Gallia.

Fter this for many days together there followed such Tempests and foul Weather, that both the Romans were constrained to keep their Camp, and the Britains were kept from attempting any thing against them. But in the mean time they sent Mesengers into all Quar-ters, publishing the small number of the Roman Forces, and amplifying the greatness of the Booty, and the easie Means offered unto them of perpetual Liberty, if they could take the Roman Camp. Shortby upon this, having gathered a great company both of Horse and Foot, they came to the place where the Romans were encamped. Cæsax (although he forelaw the Event by that which before had happened, that if the Enemy were beaten back, he would avoid the danger by flight) yet having some thirty Horle, which Comius of Arras had carried with him at his coming into Britain, he embattelled his Legions before his Camp, and so gave them Battel. The Enemy not being able to bear the Assault of the Roman Soldiers, turned their Backs and fied: The Romans followed them as far as they could by In ry particularly described by Casar, and needeth not to be stood upon any longer: Only I turned to sheir Camp. The same day the Britains observe that neither in Gallia, nor any other Country of Europe, the use of Chariots is ever whom he commanded to double their number of T. Gallia. And forasmuch as the Equinoctium was at hand, he thought it not safe to put himself to the Sea in Winter with such weak Shipping: And therefore having got a convenient time he hoifed Sail a little after Midnight, and brought all his Ships fafe unto the Continent. Two of thefe Ships of burthen, not being able to reach the Jame Haven, put in somewhat lower into the Land: The Soldiers that were in them, which were about three hundred being set on Shore, and marching towards their Camp, the Morini, with whom Cæsar at his going into Britain had made Peace, in hope of a Booty, first with a few of their Men stood about them, commanding them upon pain of death to lay down their Weapons: And as the Romans by casting themselves into an Orb began to make defence, at the noise and clamour amongst them there were fuddenly gathered together about fix thousand of the Enemy. Which being known, Cæsar sent out all the Horsemen to relieve them. In the mean time the Romans sustained the Force of the Enemy, and fought valiantly about the space of four Hours; and receiving themselves only some few Wounds, they flew many of the Enemy. As foon as the Roman Horsemen came in fight, the Enemy cast away their Weapons and fled, and and a great number of them

OBSERVATION.

OF all the Figures which the Tractici have chofen to make use of in military Affairs, the headstrong fury (which carrieth Men on with a *Circle hath ever been taken for the fittest to be apdefire of Victory, and never looketh into the plyed in the defensive part, as enclosing with an equal Circuit on all parts whatloever is contein-cd within the circumference of that Area: And in thick Woods) returned to Cae.at. These things Which property as it provet ha uniformity of for the space of twenty days. faid that this is the beginning or this is the end, this is Front or this is Flank: So doth that which Euclide doth demonstrate in the third of his Elements, concerning the small Affinity between a right Line and a Circle (which being drawn to touch the circumference, doth touch it but in a point only) shew the greatness of this strength in regard of any other Line, by which it may be broken. Which howsoever they seem as speculative qualities conceived rather by intellectual difcourse than manifested to sensible apprehension; yet forasmuch as experience hath proved the strength of this Figure in a defensive part, above any other manner of embattelling, let us not neglect the knowledge of these natural properries, which discover the causes of this effect: Neither let us neglect this part of military knowledge, being so strong a means to maintain Valour, and the finew of all our Ability: For order correspondent to circumstances is the whole ftrength and power of an Army. Neither ought there any action in a well-ordered Discipline to be irregular, or void of Order. And therefore the Romans did neither eat nor fleep without the direction of the Conful, or chief Commander; otherwise their Valour might rather have been termed Fury than Vertue: But when their Courage was ranged with order, and disposed according to the occurrences of the time, it never failed as long as the faid Order continued perfect.

It appeareth therefore how important it is for a Commander to look into the diversity of Orders for imbattelling, and to weigh the nature thereof, that he may with knowledge apply them to the quality of any occasion. The Romans termed this figure Orbis, which fignifieth a round body both with a concave and a convex furface: in resemblance whereof I understand this Orb of Men imbattelled to be so named; which might peradventure confift of five, or more, or fewer Ranks, inclosing one another after the nature of fo many Circles described about one Centre; fo that either the midst thereof remained void, or otherwife contained fuch carriages and impediments, as they had with them in their march. This form of imbattelling was never used but in great extremity: for as it was the fafeft of all other, fo it gave suspicion to the Soldiers of exceeding danger, which abated much of their heat it Battel; as will hereafter appear by the teftimony of Cafar himself in the fifth Commentary, upon the occasion which happened unto Sabizus and Cotta.

CHAP. XIV.

He next day Cæsar sent Titus Labienus a Legate, with those Legions which he had brought out of Britain, against the revolted Motin; who having no place of refuge because their Bogs and Fens were dryed up, where they had sheltred themselves the Tear before, they all fell under the power of bis mercy. Q. Tirurius and A. Cotta the Legater, who had led the Legions against the Menapii, after they had wasted their Fields, cut up their Corn, therefore Geometry termeth a circumference a firmple Line, forasmuch as if you alter the Situation of ters of all his Legions amongst the Belgæ; to the parts, and transport one Arch into the place which place two only of all the Cities in Britain of another, the Figure notwithstanding will re- sent Hostages unto itm, the rest neglecting it. main the same, because of the equal bending of These Wars being thus ended, upon the relation the Line throughout the whole circumference. of Cæsar's Letters, the Senate decreed a supplication

OBSERVATION.

N the end of the fecond Commentary we read 1 of a Supplication granted by the Senate for fifteen days; which was never granted to any Man before that time fince the first building of the City: But forasmuch as in this fourth Year of the Wars in Gallia it was augmented from fifteen unto twenty days, I thought it fit to refer the handling thereof unto this place. We are therefore to understand, that whensoever a Roman General had carried himself well in the Wars, by gaining a Victory, or enlarging the bounds of their Empire, that then the Senate did decree Supplication to the Gods in the name of that Captain. And this dignity was much fought after: Not only because it was a matter of great honour, that in their names the Temples of their Gods should be opened, and their Victories acknowledged with the concourse and gratulation of the Roman People; but also because a Supplication was commonly the forerunner of a Triumph, which was the greatest honour in the Ro-Lib. 15.
man Government: And therefore Cato nameth fam. Curr. it the prerogative of a Triumple. And Livy in the 26. Book faith, that it was long disputed on in the Senate, how they could deny one that was there present to triumph, whose absence they had honoured with Supplication and Thanksgiving to the Gods for things happily effected. The manner of the Ceremony was, That after the Magistrate had publickly proclaimed it with this form or file, quod bene & feliciter rempublican admini-firasset, that he had happily and successfully ad-ministred the Affairs of the Commonweal, the Keman People clothed in white Garments and crowned with Garlands, went to all the Temples of the Gods, and there offered Sacrifices, to gratulate the Victory in the name of the General. In which time they were forbidden all other bufineffes but that which pertained to this Solemnity. It feemeth that this time of Supplication was at first included within one or two days at the most, as appeareth by Livy in his Third Book, where he faith, That the Victory gained by two feveral Battels was spitefully shut up by the Senate in one days Supplication; the People of their own accord keeping the next day holy, and celebrating it with greater devotion than the former.

Upon the Victory which Camillus had against the Veii there were granted four days of Supplication; to which there was afterward a day added, which was the usual time of Supplication unto the time that Pompey ended the War which they called Mithridaticum, when the usual time of five days was doubled and made ten, and in the fecond of these Commentaries made fifteen, and now brought to twenty days. Which ferteth forth the incirements and rewards of well doing, which the Romans propounded both at home and abroad to fuch as endeavoured to enlarge their Empire, or manage a charge to the benefit of their Commonwealths. And thus endeth

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

7E must observe Cosa's Conduct in which he holds no Intelligence, being oblig'd to this Place, who by his quick and unexpected March diffipated the Nemans and the Gauls: By his diffirmulation to-wards the Gauls feigning himself Ignorant of their Practices, and expressing a great deal of from precipitating themselves into a League with the Germans: By his Industry amuses them to Treat, while he still advanc'd towards them and when a favourable occasion offers it felf he improves it to take them in diforder, defti-

In the next place we must consider, that taking the advantage of the Renown of fo formuch that he conftrain'd them to defire a Peace. great a defeat, he refolv'd to show the Roman Eagles on the other fide of the Rhine, to frighten the Germans, in order to keep them in awe for the future. That he did not venture to pass the Rhine upon Boats, looking upon it to be too dangerous; and therefore made a Bridge which he causd to be fortifyd and guarded at both ends: That he remaind no longer in that Country than it was neceffary to Establish the Reputation of his Arms, and that upon his return he broke his Bridge, to hinder the Germans from making use of ir. I add moreover, that the defeat of 5000 Roman Horse by 800 German Horse, and the following day the defeat of 400000 Germans by 30 or 40000 Romans, is a clear demonstration that it is not the Natural bravery of a Nation over another, nor yet the greater Number over a smaller which occasions the gain of Battels; but the exact observation of Military Discipline, and the continual exercise of Arms, which not only teaches how to Fight well, but also how to improve advantages, and to know when it is fit to Fight or not.

To begin a War in Autumn, without any visible advantage, in an unknown Country, in Inimitable.

cross the Ocean; is an Enterprize, in my opinion, worthy of the Invincible Courage of Cafar, but gotiations that were on foot between the Ger- not of his usual Prudence. Nevertheless, that Sally must be excused, upon the account of his good Fortune, which he had subjected to his Will; for in this undertaking in which Men and Confidence in them, retains and hinders them the Elements feem'd to have conspir'd against him. the Earth refusing him Provisions, the Sea disa-bling his Ships, the Air producing Storms, and the Country on which he Landed endeavouring his Ruin: Yet his Conftancy overcame it all, oppofing to hunger, his Prudence in providing Victutute of their Chiefs, making them believe als for his Army; to the Ruins of the Sea, his that they had first broken the Treaty. diligence in refiting of his Ships; to the Affaults of his Enemies, his Arms to overcome them: inand thus he Gloriously atchieved an Enterprize in which another would have met his Ruin.

Let us observe, how, before his departure from France, he took care of all things that were necesfary to keep them within the Bounds of their Duty, and to fecure his Return.

Let us moreover observe that Cafar abounded in Inventions, to take his time advantageously in all prefent Exigencies: For observing that his Soldiers not being us'd to Sea Ingagements, were at a loss how to Land; he chang'd his first Order, even during the Action, and drawing closer to the Coast with his Gallies, he Landed in spight of his Coat with his values, he Langer in ingut of his Enemies, who not being accufford to fee fuch kind of Ships, being aftonified thereat, betook themselves to flight. And indeed we must admire two Excellencies in Cesar which he possessed in perfection, which are very Effential in a great Captain, viz. That he consider'd and took care of all things that might forward or prejudice his defign, before he undertook it : And that in the Execution he never fail'd to take his Time, when ever occasion offer'd it self, and to apply an immediate remedy to whatever unexpected accidents might befall him. In which he has been

The Fifth COMMENTARY of the Wars in GALLIA.

The Argument.

RESAR causeth a great Navy to be built in Gallia: He carrieth five Legions into Britain, where he maketh War with the Britains on both fides the River Thames. At his return into Gallia most of the Gauls Revolt: and first the Eburones, under the Conduct of Ambiorix, set upon the Camp of Q. Titurius the Legate, whom they circumvent by subtilty, and then besiege the Camp of Cicero; but are put by, and their Army overthrown by Cafar.

CHAP. I.

Cafar returneth into Gallia: findeth there great ftore of Shipping made by the Soldiers, and commandeth them to be brought to the Haven

Ucius Domitius and Appius Claudius being Confuls, Cæsar at his going into Italy from his Winter quarters (which he yearly many ship gave order to the Legates to build as many ships shar Winter as possibly they could, and to repair the old; commanding them to be built of a lower pitch than those which are used in the Mediterranean Sea, for the speedier lading and unlading of them, and because the Tides in these Seas were very great: And forasmuch as he was to transport great store of Horse, he commanded them to he made flatter in the bottom than such as were usual in other places, and all of them to be made for the use of Oars, to which purpose their low building served very conveniently. Other necessaries and surniture for Rigging, he gave order to have brought out of Spain. Calar, after an affembly of the States in Lombardy, went prefently into Illyricum, where he heard that the Pirustae infested the Province by their incursions. As soon as he came thither he levied Soldiers, and appointed them a Rendezvous. Which the Pirustae hearing of, they sent Embassadors presently to him, excusing the business as not done by publick consent, and expressing a readiness to make any satisfaction that should be demanded. Cæsar any justient on promise to amenica. Oction having heard their message, appointed them to give Hostages, and to bring them by such a day, or esse they must expect nothing but War and ruine to their City. Hostages were brought by the appointed time; whereupon Cæsar deputed certain to arbitrate diffewhereupon Catas appared certain so avoirtate aige-rences between the Cities, and to punish as they saw cause for it. These things being over, he returned forthwith into Lombardy, and thence to his Army in Gallia.

OBSEQVATION.

His Itius Portus Lloyde thinketh to be Callis : others take it to be Saint Omar: Partly in regard of the fituation of the place, which being in it felf very low, hath notwithstanding very high Banks, which incompass the Town about, and in times past was a very large Haven. To this may be added the distance from this Town to the next Continent of the Island of Britain, which Strabo maketh to contain 320 Stadia; which agreeth to the French computation of 13 Leagues: Cafar maketh it thirty Miles. This is the Haven which Pliny calleth Britannicum portum Morinorum.

CHAP. II.

Cafar preventeth new Motions amongst the Treviri, and goeth to his Navy. Dumnorix refuseth to accompany him into Britain: His flight and death.

Elar leaving Soldiers enough to do that business, himself marched with four Legions and eight hundred Horse into the Country of the Treviri, in regard they neither came to the affembly of States, nor were obedient to his commands, and were farther reported to sollicite the Germans beyond the Rhine to new Commothe Gentains veyons the Rolling to new Commu-tions. This City was the most powerful of all Gallia for matter of Horse, having likewise a great force of Foot, and lying so conveniently upon the Rhine for assistance: Wherein there was at this time a contention betwixt Induciomarus and Cingetorix who should be chief Ruler. Cingetorix, as foon as he heard of the coming of Calar with his Army, came in to him, affuring him of the fidelity of his Party, and their con-fiancy to the friendship of the People of Rome; discovering withal unto him the present Proceedings amongst the Treviri. On the contrary, Induciomarus gathered together what Horse and Foot he could, refolving upon nothing else than War: featuring all the old and young Folk not fit to bear Arms in the Wood Arduenna, which is a very large Wood, beginning at the Rhine, and running through the middle of the Treviri, to the borders of the People of Rheims. While things were thus preparing, divers of the chief of the City, some through the favour they bare to Cingetorix, others affrighted at the coming of our Army, came forth to Cæsar; and since they could not do it for the whole City, they endeavoured to make every Man bis own peace. Inductionarus feeing this, and fearing to be left at last alone, sent Embassiadors to Cæsar, excussing what he had done in not coming to him, which he said was done only to keep the City the better in obedience; for if all the Nobility should have left it, the common People would have been apt to have made new Troubles; that the City was now at his command, and if Cæsar would give leave, he was ready to wait upon him in his Camp, and to lay the Lives and Fortunes of himself and the whole City at his feet. Cæsar, albeit he well knew why all this was spoken, as also what had put him besides his former resolution, yet rather than fpend the Summer in those parts, having all things in readiness for his British War, he commanded Inducionarus to come to him, and bring two hundred Hoftages with him. Induciomarus did as Cæsar commanded, and withal brought along with him his Son and all that had any near relation unto him: whom all that had any near relation unto him: whom the rest of the Heduan Hossemen, inwom to exact bade be of good chear, and exhorted to had less the Camp, and were marching home-continue sirm in his duty and sidelity. After wards. Which when Cæsar heard, be stope his this, calling to him the chief of the Treviti Voyage, and letting every thing eld hone, sent a Man by Man, he reconciled them to Cingetoris, great part of his Cavalty to attach him, and as well looking at the desert of the Man himself, bring him back, with command that if he stood as at his own interest and advantage, to have fuch a Man bear the chief sway in his City, should dispatch him. For he could not believe who had expressed so notable affection and good will towards him in this business. It troubled Induciomarus not a little to find his respect and authority thus impaired; insomuch that he who before was no friend to us, being vexed at this became a bitter Enemy.

P

Legions back to the Port called Itius: Where he understood that forty Ships which were built amongst the Meldæ were hindred by Tempests that they returning every Man to Cæsar. could not keep their course, but were forced back from whence they came; the rest were provided and ready to set sail. Hither also were gathered all the Cavalry in France, to the number of four thousand, and the chief Men of every City: Some few of which, whose fidelity Casar had had come yew of the intended to leave at home; and Cafar faileth into Britain: Landeth his Forces, to take the rest along with him for Hostages, lest and seeketh the Enemy. in his absence they should begin any new stirs in

Amongst the rest was Dumnorix the Heduan formerly mentioned. Him of all the rest Casar intended to take with him, knowing him to be a Man desirous of change, greedy of rule, a Man of Courage and Resolution, and one of greatest Authority amongst the Gauls. Besides this, Dumnorix had given out at a meeting of the Hedui, that Cæsar had conferred upon him the Government of the City: Which much troubled the Hedui, yet they durst not send any Man to Cæsar to hinder or revoke it. This Cafar came to hear he was afraid of the Sea, having as yet never been used to Sailing, another while that he had

Man, and perfuading them to continue in their own Country; telling them that it was not without ground Casar went about to despoil Gallia thus of its Nobility, his drift being to carry them over into Britain and there murther them, whom he was afraid to put to death amongst their Friends at home. He went farther, to engage them to Fidelity, and to tye them by Oath to proceed upon joint consultation to the acting of what Sould be thought of most concernment and behoof for the good of Gallia. These things were by di-vers Persons related to Cæsar: Who as soon as he knew thereof, in regard of the great respect he bare to the Heduan State, he refolved by all means possible to curb and deterr Dumnorix from those courses: And in regard that he saw him thus to increase in his madness, he thought it seasonable to prevent his endamaging either the Common-wealth or himself. So staying in the place where he was about twenty-five days, the North-west Wind (a Wind that usually blows in those parts) all that while hindering his putting to Sea; he made it much of his business to keep Dumnovix quiet, and yet at the same time to spy out the whole drift of his designs. At last the Wind and Weather ferving, he commanded his Suldiers and Horsemen on Shipboard. And whilst every Man's mind was taken up about this, Dumnorix with the rest of the Heduan Horsemen, unkown to Casar, upon his defence and did not readily obey, they that this Man could mean any good to him if that this Man could mean any good to tim if be once got bome, fince he made fo light of his commands when prefent with him. The Horfe having overtaken him, he slood upon his guard and made refslance, imploring also the aid of those that were with him; still crying out, that he Things thus setled here, Casar came with his was a Free-born Man and of a Free City. Whereupon they, as they were commanded, hemm'd him in, and so killed him; the Heduan Horsemen

CHAP. III.

Estar having prepared all things in readiness, he left Labienus in the Continent with three Legions, and two thoufand Horse, both to keep the Haven and make provision of Corn, and also to observe the motion of the Gauls, and to do according as he Saw time and occasion, and with five Legions, and the like number of Horse as he left in the Continent, about Sun-fetting he put out to Sea with a foft South Wind, which continued until Midnight; and then ceasing, he was carried with the of. When he saw he must go with the rest, first Tide until the Morning; when he perceived that he besought with all the entreaties he could that the Island lay on his lest hand: And again as he might flay in Gallia; alledging one while that the Tide changed, he ladeured by rowing to reach he was afraid of the Sea, having as yet never that part of the Island where he had found good landing the Year before. Werein the Soldiers defome religious accounts that kept him here. When ferved great commendation; for by strength and be perceived this would not serve his turn, but force of Oars, they made their great Ships of burgo, he must, be began to deal with the rest of the then to keep way with the Gallies. About high chief Men of the Gauls, taking them Man by Noon they arrived in Britain with all their Ships:

Neither was there any Enemy seen in that place : But as afterward Cæfar understood by the Captives, the Britains had been there with a great Power, but being terrified with the infinite number of Shipping which they discovered from the Shore (for with the Ships of Provision, and private Vessels which several Persons had for their own convenience, there were in set joins that for their own convenience, insere were in all above eight hundred) they forfook the Shore, and bid themselves in the upland Country. Cælat having Landed his Men, and chosen a convenient place to Encamp, as soon as he understood by the Captives where the Enemy lay, in the third Watch of the stance, and came to have the Rereward of the Enemy Night he marched towards them; leaving Ten Cohorts and Three hundred Horse under Quintus Atrius for a Garrison to his Shipping: Which he the less feared, because it lay at Anchor in a soft and open Shore. He marched that Night about Twelve Mile before he found the Enemy. The Britains sending out their Horse and Chariots to a River that ran between them and the Romans, and having the advantage of the upper Ground, began to hinder the Romans, and to give them Battel: But being beaten back with our Horsemen, they conveyed themselves into a Wood. The place was strongly Fortified both by Art and Nature, and made for a defence (as it feemeth) in their Civil Wars: For all the Entrances he had heard, and that about forty Ships were loft, were shut up with great Trees laid overthwart the Passages. And the Britains shewed themselves out of the Wood but here and there, not suffering the Romans to enter the Fortification. But the Soldiers of the Seventh Legion, with a Testudo which they made, and a Mount which they raifed, took the place, and drave them all out of the Woods, without any loss at all, saving some few Wounds which they received. But Casar forbade his Men to follow after them with any long pursuit, because he was both ig-ing pent, he would employ the rest thereof in the Fortification of his Camp.

Lib. V.

OBSERVATION.

C Afar having taken what affurance of Peace he could with the Gauls, both by carrying the chiefest of their Princes with him, and by leaving Three Legions in the Continent to keep the vulgar People in Obedience; he embarked all his Men at one place, that they might be all partakers of the same Casualties, and take the benefit of the fame Adventures; which being neglected the Year before, drew him into many inconveniencies for want of Horfe, which being Embarked at another Haven, met with other Chances and faw other Fortunes, and never came to him into Britain. The place of Landing in this fecond Voyage was the same where he Landed the Year before; and by the circumstances of this History, may agree with that which Tradition hath delivered of Deale in Kent, where it is faid that Cafar Landed. In the first Year we find that he never removed his Camp from the Sea-shore, where he first seated himself; although his Men went out to bring in Corn, as far as they might well return again at Night: But now he entred further into the Island, and within twelve Miles March came unto a River, which must needs be that of Canterbury, which falleth into the Sea at Sandwich.

In that he faith, That the Garrison of his Shipping confished of Ten Cohorts, which I have said to be a Legion: We must understand that Casar left not an entire Legion in that Garrison; but he took Ten Cohorts out of his whole Forces, peradventure Two out of every Legion, and appointed them to take the charge of his Shipping.

CHAP. IV.

Cafar returneth to his Navies, to take Order for fuch loffes as had happened by Tempest the Night before.

He next day, early in the Morning he di- Casar. vided his Forces into Three Companies, and fent them out to pursue the Enemy: But before they had marched any far diin view, there came news from Q. Atrius, with whom he left the Ten Cohorts, and the Charge of the Shipping, that the Night before there was such a Tempest at Sea, that the whole Navy was either fore beaten, or cast on Shore; and that neither Anchor nor Cable could hold them, nor yet the Sailors endure the force of the Weather: And that there was great loss in the Shipping, by running against one another on the violence of the Tempest.

Upon these news Cæsar caused the Legions to be called back again, and to cease for that time from following the Enemy any further. He himself returned to the Navy; where he found that to be true which and the rest not to be repaired but with great Industry and Pains. First therefore he chose Ship-Wrights and Carpenters out of the Legions, and caused others to be sent for out of Gallia, and wrote to Labienus to make ready what Shipping he could. And although it seemed a matter of great difficulty and much la-bour, yet he thought it best to hale up all the Ships on Shore, and to enclose them within the Fortification of his Camp. In this business he spent Ten days, without intermission, either of Night or day, until he had drawn up the Ships, and frongly Fortified the Camp; leaving the same Garrison which was there before, to defend it.

OBSERVATION.

WHerein we may behold the true Image of undaunted Valour, and the horrible Induftry (as Tully termeth it) which he used to prevent Fortune of her stroke in his business, and comprehend cafualties and future contingents within the compass of Order, and the bounds of his own Power: being able in ten days space to set almost eight hundred Ships from the hazard of Wind and Weather, and to make his Camp the Road for his Navy, that so he might rest secure of a means to return at his pleasure.

CHAP. V.

The Britains make Cassivellaunus General in this War. The Island, and the Manners of the People described.

Esar returning to the place from whence he Casat came, found far greater Forces of the Britains there affembled, than he left when he went to the Navy: And that by publick confent of the Britains, the whole Government of that War was given to Caffivellaunus, whose Kingdom lay divided from the Maritime States, with the River Thames, beginning at the Sea, and extending it felf fourscore Miles into the Island. This Cassivel-launus made continual War with his Neighbour States: But upon the coming of the Romans they all forgot their homebred Quarrels, and cast the whole Government upon his Shoulders, as the fittest to direst in that War.

The inner part of Britain is inhabited by fuch as were bred of the Earth where they dwelled. And Memory recordeth to be born in the Island; and the Maritime Coast by such as came out of Belgia, either to make Incursions or Invasions; and after the War was ended they continued in the possessions they had gained, and were called by the name of the Cities from whence they came. The Country is very populous, whence they came. The Country is very populous, and well inhabited with Houfe, much like unto them in Gallia. They have great flore of Cattel; and use Brofs for Money, or Iron Rings weighed at a certain rate. In the immermost parts there is found great quantity of Tin, and in the Maritime Parts, Iron; but they have but little of that: Their Brass is brought in by other Nations. They have all forts of Trees that they have in Gallia, excepting the Fig and the Beach. Their Religion will not fuffer them to eat either Hare, Hen, or Goose, notwithstanding they have of all forts, as well for novelty as variety, The Country is more Temperate, and not so cold as Gallia. The Island lieth Triangle-wise; whereof one side confronteth Gallia, of which side that Angle wherein Kent is, the usual place of Landing from Gallia, pointeth to the East, and the other Angle to In the mid-way between England and Ireland lieth an Island called Mona, besides many other smaller Islands; of which some write, That in Winter-time, for thirty days together they have continual Night:
Whereof we learned nothing by inquiry; only we found by certain measures of Water, that the Nights in England were shorter than in the Continent. The length of this fide, according to the opinion of the Inhabitants, containeth seven hundred Miles. The third side lieth to the North, and the open Sea, faving that this Angle doth somewhat point towards Germany. This side is thought to contain eight bundred Miles. And so the whole Island containeth in Circuit 2000 Miles. Of all the Inhabitants they of Kent are the most Courteous and Civil; all their Country bordering upon the Sea, and little differing from the fashion of Gallia. Most of the Inland People for no Corn, but live with Milk and Flesh, clothed with Skins, and having their Faces painted with a blue Colour, to the end they may feem more terrible in Fight: They have the Hair of their Head long, having all other parts of their Body shaven, saving their upper Lip. Their Wives are common to Ten or Twelve, especially Brethren with Brethren, and Parents with Children; but the Children that are born, are put unto them unto whom the Mother was first given in Marriage.

OBSERVATION.

IN the descriptions of the ancient Britains we may first observe their Pedigree, according to the Heraldry of that time: Wherein we must understand, that in those Ages the Nations of the World thought it no small Honour to derive their descent from a certain beginning, and to make either some of their Gods, or some Man of famous Memory the Father of that Progeny, and Founder of their State; that so they might promife a fortunate continuance to their Government, being first laid and established by so powerful a means. But it this failed, they then bragged of Antiquity, and cast all their Glory upon the Fertility of their Soil, being so strong and fruitful that it yielded of it self such a People as they were. And so we read how the Athenians, forasmuch as they were ignorant from whence they hereupon also grew the Controversie between the Egyptians and the Scythians concerning Antiquity. Wherein the Egyptians seemed to have great advantage, because of the Fertility and Heat of their Country; whereas the Scythians Inhabited a cold Climate, unfruitful, and an Enemy to Generation. Of this fort were the Britains that Inhabited the middle part of the Island: Who, not knowing from whence they came, nor who first brought them thither, fatisfied themselves with that common received opinion, That they were born and bred of the Earth. The Sea-Coast was possess'd by such as came out of the Continent, and retained the Names of the Cities from whence they came, as a Memorial of their Progenitors.

The form of the Island is very well described. and measured out according to the Scale of our modern Geographers. For concerning the difference of Longitude between the Eastern Angle of Kent, and the farthest point of Cornwall, they make it eight degrees; which in a manner jump-Ve South. This fide containeth about 500 Miles. eth with Cefar's dimensions. The other sides are Another fide lieth toward Spain and the West, that somewhat longer: And therefore Tactine, in the way where Ireland lieth, being an Island half as big. Life of Agricola, compareth it to a Carpenter's as Hingland, and as far distant from it as Gallia. Axe, making that side which bordereth upon Axe, making that fide which bordereth upon France to refemble the Edge, and the other two fides to incline by little and little one towards another, and so make the Island narrower at the top, according to the form of that Instrument. He setteth down the whole compass of the Island, according to the manner of the ancient Geographers; who, by the quantity of the Circuit did usually judge of the Content: Not confidering that the Area of every Figure dependeth as well on the quantity of the Angle, as the length of the Concerning the Temperature of Britain in regard of the cold Winters in France, we must understand that Britain hath ever been found of a more Temperate Constitution in regard of sharp and cold Winters, than any other Country lying under the fame Parallel: Whether the cause thereof may be imputed to the continual motion of the Sea about the Island, which begetteth Heat, as some have imagined; or to the situation there-of in regard of other Continents from whence the Wind always rifeth, and carrieth with it the nature of the Country by which it paffeth; (and fo the Island having no other Continent lying North to it, from whence the Wind may rife, but all for the most part upon the South, hath no fuch cold Winds to diffemper it, as other parts of Germany, which are under the same parallel: But the Southern Wind, which is fo frequent in Britain, tempereth the Air with a mild disposition, and so keepeth it warm; or whether it be some other unknown Cause, our Philosophers reft unfatisfied. But as touching Gallia it may be faid, that foralmuch as it beareth more to the South than this Island doth, the Air thereof (by reason of the continual Heat) is of a far purer disposition; and fo pierceth more than this groffer Air of Britain, and carrieth the cold further into the Pores; and so seemeth sharper, and of a far colder dispo-

This Island which Cefar nameth Mona, is known at this time by the name of Man, and lieth between Cumberland and Ireland. Protective calleth it Monada. Tacitus calleth Anglesey by the name of Mona, peradventure from the nomination of the Britains, who called it Typeon, the Land of

Concerning those places where the Night came, wore an Oaken Leaf, in token that they continueth in the midft of Winter for thirty days

together, they must be seated fix degrees beyond their Chariets and encounter them with that advanthe Circle Artick, and have a day in Summer of like continuance, according to the Rules of Aftronomy. In that he found the Nights in Britain fhorter than in the Continent, we must understand it to be only in Summer: For the more oblique the Horizon is, the more uneven are the Portions of the diurnal Circles which it cutteth; and the nearer it cometh to a right Horizon, the nearer it cometh to an equality of Day and Night: And hence it happeneth that in Summer time, the Nights in France are longer than here in England; and in Winter, shorter. The like we must underfland of all Southern and Northern Coun-

To conclude, I may not omit the Civility of the Kentish-Men, and their Courteous Disposition above the rest of the Britains, which must be imputed to that ordinary course which brought Civility unto all other Nations: of whom such as were first seated in their Possessions and entertained Society, were the first that brought in Civil Conversation, and by little and little were purified, and so attained to the perfection of Civil Government. So we find that first the Assyrians and Babylonians (as nearest to the Mountains of Armenia where the Ark refted, and People first Inhabited) reduced their States into Commonweals or Monarchies of exquifite Government, flou-rishing with all manner of Learning and Knowledge; when as yet other Countries lay either waste, or overwhelmed with Barbarism. From thence it flowed into Egypt; out of Egypt into Greece; out of Greece into Italy; out of Italy into Gallia; and from thence into England: Where our Kentisk-Men first entertained it, as bordering upon France, and frequented with Merchants of those Countries.

CHAP. VI.

Divers Skirmithes between the Romans and the Britains.

He Cavalry of the Enemy and their Chariots gave a sharp conflict to the Roman Horse-men in their March: But so that the Rothem with great Slaughter to the Woods and Hills, and losing also some of their own Men, being too venturous in the pursuit. The Britains, after some intermission of time, when the Romans little thought of them, and were busied in Fortifying their Camp, came suddainly out of the Woods, and charged upon those that kept station before the Camp. Casar sent out two of the chiefest Cohorts of two Legions to second their Fellows. These two Cohorts standing with a small Alley between them, the other that were surficed with that strange kind of Fight, boldly brake through the thickest of the Enemy, and so retired in safety to their Fellows. That day Quintus Laberius Durus, a Tribune of the Soldiers was Slain. The Britains were repelled with more Cohorts, which Cafar fent to second the former. And for a much as the Fight happened in the view of all the Camp, is was plainly perceived that the Legionary Soldiers, being neither able, for the weight of their Armour to follow the Enemy as he retired, nor yet daring to go far from their several Ensigns, was not a fit adversary to contest this kind of Enemy: And that the Horsemen likewise Fought with no less danger, inasmuch as the Enemy would retire back of purpose, and when they had drawn them a little from the Legions, they would then light from tage which is between a Footman and a Horsemen. Furthermore, they never fought thick and close together, but thin, and at great distances, having stations of Men to succour one another, to receive the weary, and to fend out fresh supplies.

OBSERVATION.

Pon this occasion of their heavy Armour, I will describe a Legionary Soldier in his compleat Furniture, that we may better judge of their manner of Warfare, and understand wherein their greatest strength consisted. And first we are to learn, That their Legionary Soldiers were called, Milites gravis Armatura, Soldiers wearing heavy Armour, to diffinguish them from the Velites, the Archers, Slingers, and other lightarmed Men. Their offensive Arms were a couple of Piles, or as some will but one Pile, and a Spanish Sword, short and strong, to strike rather with the point than with the edge. Their defenfive Arms were a Helmet, a Corslet, and Boots of Brafs, with a large Target; which, in some fort was offensive, in regard of that umbo which fluck out in the midst thereof. The Pile is defcribed at large in the first Book, and the Target in the second. The Sword, as Polybius witnesseth, was fhort, two-edged, very fharp, and of a ftrong point. And therefore Livy, in his twenty fecond Book faith, That the Gauls used very long Swords without Points; but the Romans had short Swords, readier for use. These they called Spanish Swords, because they borrowed that fashion from the Spaniard. The old Romans were so Girt with their Swords, as appeareth by Polybius, and their Monuments in Marble, that from their left Shoulder it hung upon their right Thigh, con-trary to the use of these Times; which, as I have noted before, was in regard of their Target, which they carried on their left Arm. This Sword was hung with a Belt of Leather, befer with Studs, as Varro noteth. And these were their of- Lib. 4. fensive Weapons.

Their Helmet was of Brass, adorned with Plin. 114. 120 three Oftrich Feathers of a Cubit in length; by three Offich Peathers of a Cubit in length; by which the Soldier appeared of a larger Stature, and more terrible to the Enemy, as Pobbius faith in his fixth Book. Their Breaft-plate was either of Brafs or Iron, jointed together after the manner of Scales, or platted with little Rings of Iron: Their Boots were made of Bars of Brass, from the Foot up to the Knee. And thus were the Legionary Soldiers Armed, to stand firm, rather than to use any nimble Motion, and to combine themfelves into a Body of that Strength, which might not eafily recoil at the opposition of any Confrontment: For Agility standeth indifferent to help either a Retreat or a Pursuit; and nimblefooted Soldiers are as ready to fly back, as to March forward; but a weighty Body keepeth a more regular Motion, and is not hindered with a common Counterbuff. So that whenfoever they came to firm Buckling, and felt the Enemy stand ftiff before them, fuch was their practice and exercise in continual Works, that they never fainted under any fuch Task, but the Victory went always clear on their fide. But if the Enemy gave way to their Violence, and came not in but for advantage, and then as speedily retired before the Counterbuff were well discharged, then did their nimbleness much help their Weakness, and frustrate the greatest part of the Roman Discipline. This is also proved in the Overthrow of Sabinus and Cotta, where Ambiorix finding the inconvenience of buckling at At his coming he found a great Power of the Enemy handy-blows, commanded his Men to fight a far to be embattelled on the other fide, and the Bank upon any occasion, when their Armour was such that it kept them from all starting motions, and made them suitable to the staied and well affured rules of their discipline, which were as certain principles in the execution of a flanding Battel; and therefore not so fit either for a Pursuit or a Flight.

Lib. V.

Concerning the unequal Combat between a Horseman and a Footman, it may be thought ftrange that a Footman should have such an advantage against a Horseman, being overmatched at least with a Sextuple Proportion both of ftrength and agility: But we must understand that as the Horse is much swifter in a long Career, fo in speedy and nimble turning at hand, where-in the substance of the Combat consisteth, the Footman far exceedeth the Horseman in advantage, having a larger mark to hit by the Horse, gageth both his Valour and his Fortune in the good speed of his Horse, his Wounds and his death do consequently pull the Rider after, his fear or fury maketh his Master either desperate or flow of performance, and what defect foever arifeth from the Horse, must be answered out of the honour of the Rider. And furely it feemeth reafonable, that what thing foever draweth us into the fociety of fo great a hazard, should as much as is possible be contained in the compals of our own power.

The Sword which we manage with our own hand affordeth greater affurance than the harquebuse, wherein there are many parts belonging to the action, as the Powder, the Stone, the his part, we likewise fail of our fortune. But how probable foever this feemeth, this is certain that in the course of the Roman Wars the Horse were ever defeated by the Foot, as is manifestly proved in the first of these Books.

CHAP. VII.

Cafar giveth the Britains two feveral overthrows.

He next day the Enemy made a stand upon the Hills afar off from the Camp, and shewed themselves not so often; neither were they so busie with our Horsemen as they were the day before. But about Noon when The conclusion of the British War. Cafar re-Cæfar had fent out three Legions and all his Calvary to get Forage, under the conduct of Caius Trebonius a Legate, they made a sudden Assault upon the Foragers, and fell in close with the Efigns and the Legions. The Romans charged very fiercely upon them, and beat them back: Neither did they make an end of following them, until the Horsemen trusting to them, put them all to flight, with the Slaughter of a great number of them; neither did they give them respite either to make Head, to make a Stand, or to forfake their Chariots.

After this overthrow all their Auxiliary Forces contend with the Romans with any great Power. Cæsar understanding their determination, carried his Army to the River Thames, and fo to the Confines of Cassivellaunus; which River was passable the greatest State of all those Countries (from whom by foot but in one place only, and that very hardly.

off; and if they were affaulted to give back, and fortified with many sharp Stakes, and many other one on again as they saw occasion: Which so also were planted coverely under the Water. These wearied out the Romans that they all fell under things being discovered to the Romans by the Capthe execution of the Gauls. Let this suffice there-fore to shew how unapt the Romans were to sly caused the Legions to follow suddenly after: Who notwithstanding they had but their heads clear above the Water, went with that violence, that the Enemy was not able to endure the charge, but left the Bank, and betook themselves to flight.

OBSERVATION.

This attempt of Cafar feemeth fo ftrange to Brancatio, that he runneth into ftrange conclusions concerning this matter: As first, that he that imitateth Cafar may doubt of his good fortunes; for his proceeding in this point was not directed by any order of War: and that a great Commander hath nothing common with other Leaders: But especially he crieth out at the baseness of the Britains, that would suffer themselves fo cowardly to be beaten. But if we look into the circumstances of the action, we shall find both Art and good direction therein: For being affured by the Fugitives that the River was passable in that place, and in that place only, he knew that he must either adventure over there, or leave Cassivellaunus for another Summer, which was a very firong inducement to urge him to that Enterprize. The difficulty whereof was much relieved by good direction, which confifted of two points; First by sending over the Horsemen in the Front of the Legions, who might better en-dure the charge of the Enemy than the Footmen could, that were up to the neck in water; and withal to shelter the Footmen from the Fury of the Enemy.

Secondly he fent them over with fuch speed, Spring, and fuch like; whereof if the least fail of that they were on the other fide of the water before the Enemy could tell what they attempted : For if he had lingered in the Service, and given the Enemy leave to find the advantage which he had by experience, his Men had never been able to have endured the hazard of fo dangerous a fervice. It is hard to conjecture at the place where this fervice was performed; for fince the building of London Bridge, many Foords have been fcoured with the Current and fall of the Water, which before that time carried not fuch a depth as now they do.

CHAP. VIII.

turneth into Gallia.

Affivellaunus having no courage to contend case, any longer, difmissed his greatest Forces, and retaining only four thousand Chariots. observed our Journeys, keeping the Wood-Countries, and driving Men and Cattel out of the Fields into the Woods, where he knew the Romans would come: And as their Horse strayed out either for Forage or Booty, he sent his Chariots out of the Woods by unknown ways, and put their Horsemen to great peril: In regard whereof the Horsemen durst never adventure further than the Legions, departed from them; neither did they afterward neither was there any more spoil done in the Country, than that which the Legionary Soldiers did of them-

In the mean time, the Trinobantes, being almost Mandubratius bad fled to Cæfar into Gallia, for that his Father Imanuentius holding the Kingdom, was fl.tin by Caffivellaunus) sent Embassadors to Cæsar, to offer their submission, and to intreat that Mandubratius might be defended from the oppression of Cassivellaunus, and fent unto them to take the Kingdom. Cæsar having received from them forty Pledges, and Corn for his Army, sent Mandubratius unto them. The Trinobantes being thus kept from the violence of the Soldiers, the Cenimagni, Seguntiaci, Ancalites, Bibroci and Cassi yielded themselves to Cæsar. By these he understood that Cassivellaunus bis Town was not far off, fortified with Woods and Bogs, and well stored with Men and Cattel. The Britains call a Town, a thick Wood enclosed about with a Ditch and a Rampier, made for a place of retreat, when they stood in fear of incursions from the borderers. Thether marched Cæsar with his Army, and found it well fortified both by Art and Nature: and as he affaulted it in two several places, the Enemy unable to keep it, cast himself out of the Town by a back way : And so he took it. Where he found great store of Cattel, and slew many of the Britains.

While these things were a doing, Cassivellaunus fent Messengers into Kent, which as was said lies upon the Sea, and wherein there were four several Kings, Cingetorix, Carvilius, Taximugulus and Segonax: Them he commanded with all the power they could make to set upon the Camp where the Navy was kept. The Kings coming to the place, were overthrown by a fally which the Komans made out upon them, many of them being flain, and Lugotorix, a great Commander taken prisoner. This Battel concurring with the former Losses, and especially moved thereunto with the revolt of the forenamed Cities, Caffivellaunus intreated peace of Cæsar by Comius of Arras. Cæsar being determined to winter in the Continent, for fear of Suddain Commotions in Gallia, and confidering that the Summer was now far spent, and might easily be ling-red out, he commanded Pledges to be brought unto him and fet down what yearly Tribute the Britains flould pay to the Romans; giving withal a strict charge to Cassivellaunus to do no injury either to Mandubratius or the Trinobantes. The Heftages being taken, he carried back his Army to the Sea, where he found his shipping repaired: Which as soon as he had caused to be set assoat, in regard partly of the great number of Prisoners he had, and that some of his Ships were cast away, he determined to carry his Army over at twice. And so it happened, that of so great a Fleet, at so many Voyages, neither this Year nor the Year before there was not any one Ship missing which carried over our Soldiers: Only of those which were to be sent back to him after they had landed the first half, and those which Labienus caused afterwards to be made, threescore innumber, few could make to the place, the rest were all kept back. Which Calar having for some time expected in vain, and fearing that the time of Year would not long serve for Sailing, for the Equinostial was at hand; was forced to dispose his Soldiers closer and in less room. So taking the opportunity of a calm Sea, he fet Sail about the beginning of the second Watch, and came to Land by break of day, his whole Fleet arriving in Safety.

The First OBSERVATION.

And thus ended the War in Britain: Which affordeth little matter of discourse, being indeed but a scambling War, as well in regard of the Britains themselves, who after they had felt the strength of the Roman Legions, would never adventure to buckle with them in any aftanding

Battel; as also in regard there were no fuch Towns in Britain as are recorded to have been in Gallia, which might have given great honour to the War, if there had been any fuch to have been befieged and taken by Cafar.

And although Tacitus faith that Britain was rather viewed than fubdued by C.esar, being defirous to draw that honour to his Father-in-law Agricola; yet we find here that the Trinobantes, which were more than either the Skirt or the Heart of Britain (for our Historians do understand them to have inhabited that part which lieth as far as York shire and Lancashire) were brought under the Roman Empire by Cafar: Who was the first that ever laid Tribute upon Britain in the behalf of the people of Rome; or cast upon them the heavy name of a subdued People.

The Second OBSERVATION.

BUt left I may feem negligent in these occurrences of Britain, as not deeming the alteration happening in this Island by the power of Rome worthy due memory; I will briefly fet down the State thereof from this Area, during the Lives of the twelve Emperors.

Julius C.esar's next Succeffors, first Augustus and then Tiberius, thought it Policy to restrain the infinite defire of enlarging the Roman Empire, and so left this Entrance into Britain unseconded. Caius is faid to have had a defign to invade it, but did nothing. Claudius transported Legions and Aids, and first sent Aulus Plautius Governour, and after him Oftorius, who overthrew King Caradocus in Battel, and shewed him at Rome to Claudius, to Agrippina, and the Lords Tacit. 12. of the Senate : Who affirmed the fight to be no some less honourable than when P. Scipio shewed Siphaces, or L. Paulus Perses. Him Didius Gallus fucceeded, who being old and full of honour, thought it sufficient to keep that which his Predecessors had gotten. Next unto Didius came Veranius, only memorable in dying the first Year of his Proprætorship: But Suetonius Paulinus following, got a great name, first by invading Anglesey, strong with Inhabitants, and a receptacle for Fugitives; fecondly by overthrowing Boadicea Queen of the Iveni, in a Battel comparable to the Victories of old times: Wherein fourfcore thousand Britains were flain, with the loss of four hundred Roman Soldiers. But being thought to be over-fevere, he left his charge to Petronius Turpilianus; who composing former troubles with a milder carriage, was succeeded by Trebellius Maximus; whose easie course of government taught the Britains good manners, and made the Soldiers first wanton with ease, and then mutinous: Which by his gentle intreaty being ended without Blood-shed, he left his place to Vectius Bolanus, of like looleness of Discipline, but inftead of obedience got much good will. The errors of these three soft Proprætors were holpen by Petilius Carealis, a great Commander, and worthy his place; he subdued the Brigantes, and left the place to Julius Frontinus, who with no less Happiness vanquished the Silures. The last was Agricola, fortunate in divers Battels against the Britains, and as unhappy in his reward; for Domitian maligning his honour, first discharged him of his place, and then, as it is thought, poisoned him. And this was the state of Britain under the twelve Emperors.

CHAP. IX.

Cafar disposeth his Legions into their Winter Quarters, and quieteth the Carnutes.

Fter he had put his Ships in Harbour, and held a Council of the Gauls at * Samarobrina; forafmuch as that Year, by reason of the Drought, there was some scarcity of Corn in Gallia, he was constrained to Garison his Army, and to disperse them into more Cities than Morini; another to Quintus Ciccro, to be carried to the Nervii : another to L. Roscius, to be conducted to the Effui ; a fourth he commanded to Winter amongst the Men of Rheims, in the marches of the Treviri, under T. Labienus; three he placed of the Iteviti, indeer I Ladienus; invee we placed in Belgium, with whom he sent Mar. Crassus his Questor, L. Munatius Plancus and C. Trebonius, Legates; he sent one Legion, that which he had last inrolled beyond the River Po in Italy, with five Cohorts, unto the Eburones, the greatest part of whose Country lieth between the Maes and the Rhine, and was under the command of Ambiorix and Cativulcus; with them he fent Q. Titurius Sabinus and Lucius Aurunculeius Cotta. By distributing his Legions in this manner, he thought to remedy the scarcity of Corn; and yet the Garrisons of all these Legions, excepting that which Roscius carried into a quiet and peaceable part, were contained within the space of one hundred Miles. And Quarters fortified, he determined to abide in Gallia.

There was amongst the Carnutes a Man of great birth called Tasgerius, whose Ancestors had born the chief Rule in their State. This Man, for his fingular Promess and Good-well towards him, for he had done him very good service in all his Wars, Cæsar restored to the Dignity of his forefathers. Before he had Reigned three Years, his Enemies, with the complotment of divers of his Citizens, kill'd him in the open Streets; which thing was com-plained of to Cæsar. Who fearing, in regard so many Men had a hand in it, lest that the City should by their instigation to revolt, commanded L. Plancus immediately to march with his Legion thither from bis Quarters in Religium, and there to Winter; and whomsever he could learn to be the Ring-leaders in the death of Tassetius, he should take hold of them, and send them to him. Mean while Cæsar had notice from all his Legates and Questors to whom be had delivered his Legions, that they were fetled in Winter Garrisons, and their Garrisons fortified.

The First OBSERVATION.

Have heard it fometimes contradicted by fome 1 that understand not the weight of a multitude, when it was faid, that an Army keeping head continually in one part of a Kingdom, was more burthensome to the Commonwealth in regard of the expence of Victuals, than when it was dispersed into particular Cities and Families, before the time of the Muster and Inrollment: For, fay they, in the general Account of the Publick Weal it different nothing, whether a multitude of 30000 Men be maintained with necessary Provisions in one intire body together, or dispersed particularly throughout every part of the Country; forafmuch as every Man hath but a competent quantity allotted unto him, which he cannot want in what fort or condition of life foever he be ranged: Neither doth the charge of a multitude grow, in regard they are united together, but in regard they amount to fuch a multitude wherefoever. But fuch as look into the difference with judgment, shall find a marvellous inequality, both in regard of the por-tion of Victuals which is fpent, and the means whereby it is provided: For first we must underftand, that an Army lying continually in one place, falleth so heavy upon that part that it quickly confumeth both the fat and the lean (as they fay) and leaveth nothing unspent, which that part can afford them; and without further supply of Provisions, would in a small time come he had done the Years before. And first he gave to utter destruction. This want then must be one Legion to Caius Fabius, to be led among the relieved by taking from the plenty of other bordering quarters, to furnish the wants of so great a multitude: wherein there cannot be observed that proportion of moderate taking to Victual the Army with a fufficient competency, but the partial respect which the Purveyors and Victuallers will have to their private Commodity, will quickly make an inconvenience either in the Country from whence it is taken, or in the Army for which it is provided, according as the errour may best advantage their particular. what Discipline soever be established in that behalf. Whereas on the contrary part, when every particular Man of that multitude shall be billetted in a feveral Family, throughout all parts of the Kingdom, the charge will be so insensible in regard of the expence of the faid Families, that the ountry will never feel any inconvenience. And every Housholder that had received into his tained within the space of one hundred Miles. And House one of the said Army, should give a true until his Legions were settled, and their Winter account of that which riseth above his ordinary expence by the addition of one Man, it would fall far short of that Treasure which is necessarily required to maintain the faid number of Men united together into one body. Neither doth the difference confift in the quantity of Victuals which every Man hath for his portion, whether they be dispersed or united; but in the manner of provision, and the means which is used to maintain them: wherein every Mafter or Steward of a Family endeavoureth to make his provisions at the best hand, and so to husband it that it may serve for competency, and not for superfluity; and by that means the general plenty of the Country is maintained, and the Commonwealth flourisheth by well-directed moderation. But in the victualling of an Army there is no such respect had which may any way advantage the publick good; for there the gain of the Purveyor rifeth by expence and fuper-fluous wafting, rather than by thrift and faving frugality: And fo the Commonwealth is weakened by the ill-husbanding of that great portion of Victuals which is allowed for fo great a multitude. And if they should have such variety of Victuals in an Army as they have when they are in feveral Families, it were unpossible it should continue any time together. And therefore the Romans, notwithstanding the exactness of their Discipline, could afford their Armies no other provision but Corn and Lard, as well in regard of the convenience which that kind of Diet afforded them in the course of their Wars, as also for the good of that Country wherein they were resident. And if it so fell out, that the extremity of the Season, or any other cause had brought a Dearth into the Land, there was no readier way to help that inconvenience, than by dispersing their Armies into divers quarters; which Casar disposed with that care, that they might be as near together as they could.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Lib. V.

Oncerning the choice of their Soldiers and their manner of Inrollment, I had rather referr the Reader to Polybius, than enter into the particular discourse of that action; which was carried with fuch Gravity and Religious Ceremonies, as might best serve to possess their minds But forafmuch as the largeness of their Empire and the necessity of their occasions would not thought it good before the next borderers perceived it. admit that the Inrollment should still be made to depart with their Soldiers out of their Winter at Rome amongst the Citizens, as it appeareth by this Legion which was inrolled beyond the River Po, it consequently followeth, that such Ceremonies which were annexed to the place, were altogether omitted: And therefore I cannot speak of that which the old Romans did in that part of their Discipline, as a thing continued unto Casar's time. But he that defireth to see the manner of their choice, with fuch Complements as might add both a reverent respect and a Majesty to the neius and Junius made report thereof to the Legates. work, let him read Polybius of that Argument.

Gauls, especially when it concerned their publick liberty. Now having fatisfied that duty which he owed to his Country, he had respect to Caesar and his benefits; in regard whereof he admanished them and prayed Titurius for the Hospitality that had been between them, that he would look to the safety of himself and his Soldiers. There was a great number of Germans that had already passed the of the weight and consequence of that business. Rhine, and would be here within two days: And therefore let them advise themselves, whether they Quarters either to Cicero or Labienus, of whom the one was not past fifty Mile off, and the other a little further. For his own part, he promifed them thus much, and confirmed it by Oath, that they should have safe passage through his Territories; for so he should both do a pleasure to his another. Gauls could not eafily deny the request of

CHAP. X.

Ambiorix attempteth to furprize the Camp of Sabinus and Cotta; and failing, plottern to take them by guile.

Ifteen days after the Legions were setled in their Winter Camps, there began a sudden Tumult and Rebellion by the means of Ambiorix and Cativulcus, who having received Sabinus and Cotta into their confines, and brought them in Corn to the place where they lay; at the inducement of Induciomarus of Triers, they stirred up their People to Rebellion: And Suddenly surnp their reopie to Keveuton: anu juuueni jurprising those that were gone abroad to get Wood, came with a great Power to assault their Camp. But when our Men had took Arms, and were got up upon the Rampier, and had overmatched them in a Skirmish of Horse, which made a sally out of the Camp upon the Gauls; Ambiorix despair-ing of good success, withdrew his Men from the affault: And then after their manner they cried unto us, that some of our company should come and Speak with them, for they had somewhat to discover touching the publick State, whereby they hoped all Controversies might be ended. Whereupon Caius Carpineius a Roman Horseman, and one of Ti-turius his familiar Friends, and one Q. Junius a Spaniard, who divers times before had been sent by Cæsar to Ambiorix, were fent out to Treat with them. Ambiorix first acknowledged himself much indebted to Cæsar for many courtesies; in that by his means he was freed from a pension which he payed to the Aduatici; and for that both his own Son and his Brothers Son, whom the Aduatici had Sold and this surveys son, whom the fattable held in Prison under the name of Hosfages; were by Caelar released and sone home again. And touching the Assault of the Camp, he had done nothing of himself, but by the impulsion of the State; among whom fuch was his condition, that the People had as great Authority over him, as he himself had in regard of the People; who were likewise inforced to this War, because they could not withstand the sudden Insurrection of the Gauls, whereof his small means might be a sufficient argument. For his experience was not so little, to think himself able with so small a Power to overthrow the People of Rome; but it and bring him to ruine, should advise him of any was a general appointment throughout all Gallia, upon this day to affault all Cæsar's Garrisons, to Speech being ended Ambiorix departed, and Carpi-OBSERVATION.

Country in disburthening it of Garrisons, and shew himself thankful to Castar for his benefits. This

I Eander his Counsel, to use the Foxes skin where the Lions faileth, doth shew that the discourse of our reason is sooner corrupted with errour, than the powers of our body are overcome with force. For oftentimes the mind is fo disquieted with the extremity of perturbation, that neither the apprehension can take found Instructions, nor the judgment determine of that which is most for our good; but according as any passion shall happen to reign in our disposition, so are we carried headlong to the ruine of our fortune, without fense of errour, or mistrust of well-succeeding: Whereas the body continueth firm in his own ftrength, and is subject only to a greater weight of power, by which it may be subdued and overthrown. It behoveth us therefore to take good heed, that our furest hold be not unfastned by the fubrilty of the Fox, when it hath continued firm against the force of the Lion: and that the treachery of the spirit do not disadvantage those means, which either our own power or opportunity hath gained in our actions. Wherein a Commander cannot have a better rule for his direction, than to beware that violence of paffion do not hinder the course of found deliberation: and withal to be jealous of whatfoever an Enemy shall, either by Speech or Action, feem to thrust upon him, how colourable foever the reasons may be which are alledged to induce him thereunto. For first, if the Mind be not confirmed by the vertue of her better faculties to refift the motion of fruitless apprehensions, it may easily be seduced (either by fear or vain imagination, diffident conceptions or over-easie credulity, with many other such disturbing powers) from that way which a good diferetion, and an understanding free from passion would have taken.

First therefore I hold it necessary to have the confiftory of our judgment well fetled with a firm resolution, and with the presence of the Mind, before we enter into deliberation of fuch things as are made happy unto us by good direction. And then this, amongft other circumftances, will give fome help to a good conclusion, when we confider how improbable it is that an Enemy, whose chiefest care is to weaken his Adversary, thing that may concern his good; unless the pro-fit which he himself shall thereby gather, do far the end that one Legion might not give relief unto exceed that which the contrary part may expect.

I grant. That in Civil Wars, where there are flood, his Council was fure and could bring no harm. many Friends on either Party, and have the adverse Cause as dear unto them as their own, there are oftentimes many Advertisements given, which proceed from a true and fincere Affection, and may advantage the Party whom it concerneth, as well in preventing any danger, as in the furtherance of their Cause; and therefore are not altogether to be neglected, but to be weighed by Circumftances, and accordingly to be respected: whereof we have many pregnant Examples in the Civil Wars of France, and particularly in Monsieur Armies, different in Nation, Language, and Humour, contending for that which peculiarly belongeth unto one of them, where care to keep that which is dearest unto them possesseth the one, and hope of Gain stirreth up the other, there is commonly fuch an universal Hatred between them, that they are to look for small advantage by Advertisements from the Enemy. Which, if the Romans had well confidered, this fubtle Gaul had not dispossest them of their Strength, nor brought them to ruine.

CHAP. XI.

to some other of the Legions.

He Romans being troubled at the fud-dairness of the Matter, albeit the things were Spoken by an Enemy, yet they thought them no way to be neglected; but especially it moved them, for that it was incredible that the Eburones, being base and of no Reputation, durft of themselves make War against the People of Rome. And therefore they propounded the Matter in a Council; wherein there grew a great Control and that the danger might be augmented by wearyversife among them. I. Aurunculeius, and most of ing the Soldiers with Watching. the Tribunes, and Centurions of the first Orders, thought it not good to conclude of any thing rashly, nor to depart out of their Winter-Quarters, without express Commandment from Cæsar; forasmuch as they were able to refift never so great a Power; yea, even of the Germans, having their Garrisons well Fortified: An Argument whereof was, that they had valiantly withfieod the first affault of the Enemy and given them many Wounds. Neither wanted they any Victuals; and before that Provision which they had was spent, there would come succour from other Garrisons and from Cafar. And to conclude, What was more diskonourable, or savoured of greater inconstancy, than to consult of their weightiest Affairs by the advertisement of an Enemy? Titurius urged vehemently to the contrary, that it then would be too venemently to the continut, that it when a greater late for them to feek a Remedy, when a greater Power of the Enemy, accompanied with the Germans, were affembled against them; or when any blow were given to any of the next Quarters. He took Casar to be gone into Italy; for otherwise the Carnutes would not have adventured to kill Talgetius, neither durst the Eburones, have come fo proudly to the Camp. Let them not respect the Author, but the thing it felf: The Rhine was not far off, and he knew well that the Overthrow of Ariothe Germans. The Gauls were vexed with the Contumelies they had received, being brought in Subjection to the Roman Empire, and having lost their former Reputation in Deeds of Arms.

And to conclude, Who would imagine that Ambiorix should enterprise such a matter without any

For if there were no worse thing intended, they should but go safely to the next Garrisons; or otherwise, if the Gauls conspired with the Germans, their only Safety consisted in Celerity. As for the Counsel of Cotta, and such as were of the contrary Opinion, what expectation could be had thereof? Wherein if there were not present danger, yet assuredly Famine was to be feared by long Siege. The Disputation being thus continued on either part, and Cotta with the Centurions of the first Orders earnestly repugning it; Do as pleases you, since you will needs have it fo, la Nou his Discourses: But where there are two saith Sabinus, (and that he spake with a loud voice, that a great part of the Soldiers might well hear him) for I am not he that most feareth Death among you: Let these be wise; and if any mischance happen unto them, they shall ask account thereof at thy hands, inasmuch as if thou wouldst let them, they might joyn themselves within two or three days to the next Garrisons, and with them sustain what chance soever their common destiny skould allot them, and not perish with Famine and Sword like a People cast off and abandoned from their Fellows. After these words they began to rise out of the Council: but hold was laid upon them both: Entreaty was made that they would not by their diffention and olftinacy bring all unto a desperate hazard; the matter was all one, whether they went or stayed. The Romans call a Council upon this Advertifement, and refolve to depart, and join themselves disagreeing there was no likelihood of well-doing. The Disputation was prolonged until Midnight; at length Cotta yielded, and the Sentence of Sabinus. took place. And thereupon it was proclaimed that they frould fet forth by the break of day. The rest of the Night was spent in watching. Every Soldier Sought out what he had to carry with him, and what he should be constrained to leave behind him of such Necessaries as he had prepared for Winter. All things were disposed in such fort, to make the Soldiers believe, That they could not ftay without danger,

OBSERVATION.

BY the refolution in this Disputation it appeareth how little a grave and wise Deliberation availeth, when it is impugned with the violence of Paffion, according to the truth of my former Observation: For the matter was well reasoned by Cotta, and his Positions were grounded upon things certain, and well known to the whole Council; and yet the fear of Sabinus was such. that it carried the conclusion by fuch supposed affertions as the quality of his Paffion had ratified for true Principles; being grounded altoge-ther upon that which the Enemy had fuggetted, and not upon any certain knowledge of the Truth. Neither is it often feen when a Council difputeth upon matters of fuch consequence, that their deliberations are altogether clear from fuch troublesome Motions, but that it will somewhat incline to the partiality of a strong affection; so powerful is Paffion in the Government of the Soul, and so interessed in the other Faculties. And this is one cause of the uncertainty of Man's Judgment, from whence all contrary and diffevistus, and their former Victories were grievous to rent Opinions do arise. Neither is this so strange a matter, That a Council of War should so much vary in case of deliberation, when as many special points of Military Discipline remain yet undecided, having the authority of the great Com-manders of all Ages to ratifie the Truth on either part; whereof I could alledge many Exground or certainty thereof? But howsoever things amples. But concerning the iffue and event of

Lib. V. COMMENTARIES. our Deliberations, what can be more truly faid Reason, that there is no possibility to execute that than that of the Poet?

Et male consultis pretium est prudentia fallax, Nec fortuna probat causas sequiturque merentes: Sed vaga per cunctos nullo discrimine fertur. Scilicet est aliud quod nos cogatque regatque Majus, & in proprias ducat mortalia leges.

Notwithstanding, forasmuch as our Wisdom is not fo subject to fortune, but that it may comprehend within it felf the good direction of most of the Occurrences which fall within the course of our business; or if we must needs miscarry, yet it somewhat helpeth our ill fortune to think that we went upon best probabilities; it shall not be amiss to set down some Rules for the better directing of a mature Confultation. Wherein we are to understand, that as all our Knowledge arifeth from some of our Senses, and our Senses comprehend only Particularities, which being carried unto the apprehension are disposed into Forms and Degrees, according as they either concurr or disagree in their several Properties; From whence there arise intellectual Notions, and rules of Art, wherein the Science of the faid particulars confifteth: So he that intendeth to debate a matter with found deliberation, must descend from confused Conceptions and a Knowledge in general, to the exact diftinction of particular Parts, which are the Occurrences to be directed, and the material fubftance of every Action. He therefore that can give best direction, either by Experience or judicious discourse, concerning such particulars as are incident to the matter propounded, can best advise which is the safest way to avoid the oppofition of contradicting Natures. But to make this fomewhat plainer, I will alledge two Examples: The one Modern, in case of Consultation; The other Ancient, and may feem not fo pertinent to this matter, in regard it is a meer Apology; yet forasmuch as it freely censureth the quality of particular Circumstances, it may give great light to that which we feek after.

The modern example is taken out of Guicciardin, from the Wars which Lewis the French King had with the Pope and the Venetians, concerning the State of Ferrara, and the Dutchy of Millain: Wherein there arose a Controversie among the French Captains, whether it were better to go directly to feek the Enemy, who albeit they were lodged in a ftrong and fecure place, yet there was hope, that with the vertue of Arms and force of Artillery they might be diflodged, and driven to Retreat; or otherwise to take the way either of Modena or Bolognia, that fo the Enemy for fear of losing either of those Towns might quit their hold, and by that means Ferrara should be freed from the War. Monsieur Chaumont, the General of the French inclined to the former advice : But Trivulce, a Man of great Authority and Experience, having been an Executioner in Eighteen Battels, reasoned thus in particulars to the contrary. We debate (faith he) to go feek the Enemy to fight with him; and I have always heard great Captains hold this as a firm principle, Not to attempt the fortune of a Battel, unless there be either an offer of an especial Advantage, or otherwise compulsion by necessity. The Rules of War give it to the Enemy that is the Invader, and hath undertaken the Conquest of Ferrara, to feek to affail and charge us; but to us, to whom it is fufficient to defend our felves, it cannot be but impertinent to undertake an Action and Julian Family, which by Alliance had encontrary to all direction and discipline of War.

Thy Son-in-law, C.efar, thy Compa-

Device but to our Harms and Disadvantage: For we cannot go to their Camp but by the fide of a Hill, a streight and narrow way, where all our Forces cannot be employed; and yet they with small numbers will make resistance, having the opportunity of the place favourable to their Vertues. We must march by the rising of a Hill, one Horse after another, neither have we any other way to draw our Artillery, our Baggage, our Carts and Bridges, but by the streight of the Hill: And who doubteth not but in a way so narrow and cumberfome, every Artillery, every Cart, or every Wheel that shall break will stay the Army a whole hour at the leaft? By which Impediments every contrary accident may put us to diforder. The Enemy is lodged in covert, provided of Victuals and Forage; and we must Encamp all bare and naked, not carrying with us that which should serve for our necessary Subsistence, but expect the things to come after, which in reason ought to go with us. To attempt new enterprises, whereof the Victory is less certain than the Peril, is contrary to the gravity and reputation of a Leader; and in actions of the War, those enterprises are put to adventure, that are done by Will, and not by Reafon. Many difficulties may compel us to make our abode there two or three days; yea, the Snows and Rains joined with the extremity of the Seafon, may fuffice to detain us: How shall we then do for Victuals and Forages? What shall we be able to do in the Wars, wanting the things that should give us strength and sustenance? What is he that confidereth not how dangerous it is to go feek the Enemy in a strong Camp, and to be driven at one time to Fight against them and against the difcommodity of the place? If we compel them not to abandon their Camp, we cannot but be enforced to retire; a matter of great difficulty in a Country fo wholly against us, and where every little miftake or overlight will turn to our great difadvantage, &c.

And thus proceeded that grave Discourse, in the discovery of the particular Occurrences incident to that enterprise; which being laid open to their confused Judgments, did manifestly point at the great disadvantages which were to be undergone by that attempt.

The other example is of more Antiquity, taken out of Tacitus, and concerneth the arraignment of certain Senators for the friendship that had past between Sejanus and them. Amongst whom M. Terentius thus answered for himself, according as it hath of late been published by tran-

It would be peradventure less behoveful for my Estate to acknowledge, than to deny the Crime I am charged with: But hap what hap may, I will confess that I have been Sejanus's Friend, and that I defired fo to be, and that after I had obtained his Friendship I was glad of it. I had seen him Joint-Officer with my Father in the Government of the Prætorian Cohort, and not long after in managing the City Affairs, and matters of War: His Kinsmen and Allies were advanced to Honour: As every Man was inward with Sejanus, so he was graced by Cafar: And contrariwife fuch as were not in his favour lived in fear, and diffressed with Poverty. Neither do I alledge any Man for an Example of this; all of us who were not privy to his last Attempts, with the danger of my only estate I will defend: Not Sejanus the Vulfiniensis, but a part of the Claudian I am of opinion, which is confirmed by evident nion in the Confulfhip, and him who took on him thy charge of adminstring the Commonerred from the truth, and betrayed good counwealth, we did reverence and honour. It is not fel to a course full of danger; which, as Casar our part to judge of him whom thou doft exalt above the reft, not for what confiderations: To thee the highest judgment of things the Gods have given, and to us the glory of obedience is left. We look into those things which we see before our eyes, whom thou doft enrich, whom thou doft advance to honours, who have greatdrift it is not lawful to found, and dangerous; neither shalt thou in the end reach unto them.

Cæfar.

Think not only, Lords of the Senate, of Sejanus last day; but of sixteen Years in which we did likewife fawn upon and court Satrius and Pemponius; and to be known unto his freed Men and Partners was reckoned for a high favour. What then? shall this defence be general, and not diftinguished, but a confusion made of times past and his later actions? No: But let it by just bounds and terms be divided : Let the Treafons against the Commonwealth, the intentions of murdering the Emperour, be punified; but as for the friendthips, duties, pleasures and good turns, the same end shall discharge and quit thee. O Cefar, and us.

The constancy of this Oration prevailed so fo much, that his Accusers were punished with Exile. And thus we fee how particulars decide the Controversie, and make the way plain to good direction.

CHAP. XII.

The Romans take their Journey towards the next Legion; and are fet upon by the Gauls.

S foon as the day-light appeared they set forth of their Camp (ilike Men persuaded that the Counsel had been given them not by an Enemy, but by Ambiotix an especial Friend) with a long tailed March, and as, much baggage as they were able to carry. The Gauls inderstanding of their Journey by their noise and watching in the Night, secretly in the Woods some two Miles off laid an Ambuscado in two several places of advantage, and there attended the coming of the Romans: And when the greatest part of the Troops were entered into a Valley, suddenly they seemed themselves on both sides of the Vale, pref-senge hard upon the Rere, and bindering the force Jing hard upon the Kere, and hindering the fore-most from going up the Hill, and so began to charge upon the Romans in a place of as great disadvan-tage for them at could be. Then at length Tim-rius, at one that had provided for nothing before. hand, began to remble, ran up and down, and dis-posed his Cohorts, but so fearfully and after such pojed to consolis, sun jo joint my man uject juice a falkion, as if all things had gone against him; as it happeneth for the most part to such as are forced to consult in the instant of execution.

OBSERATION.

IT now plainly appeareth by this negligent and ill-ordered March, and the unlooked for enprobability: Which fo much the more amazed Enemy on that part. Titurius, by how much his apprehension had noteth, must needs fall upon such, as are then to feek for direction when the bufiness requireth execution. I have handled already the inconveniences of disappointment, and therefore at this time will but bring it only into remembrance, that we may take the greater care to prevent an accident of that nature: Wherein as the best reeth power of hurting or helping; which Sejama medy for an evil is to forefee it, according to the to have had no Man will deny. The Princes faying, Pravifa preum mala, evils forefeen fall hidden thoughts, or if he go about any feert vil is when it cometh unthought of, and besides cur expectation, for then it talleth upon us with a supernatural weight, and affrighteth the Mind with a furerfliticus aftonis ment, as though the divine Powers had prevented our defignments with an irremediable Calamity, and cut off our appointment with a contrary Decree: Although peradventure the thing it felf carry no fuch importance, but might be remedied, if we were but prepared with an opinion that fuch a thing might happen.

It were no ill counfel therefore, what refolution scever be taken to make as full account of that which may fall out to cross our intentions, as that which is likely to happen from the dias that which is likely to happen from the de-rection of our chiefeft projects; and so we shall be sure to have a present mind in the midst of our occasions, and feel no surther danger than that which the nature of the thing enforceth.

CHAP. XIII.

The Romans cast themselves into an Orb, and are much discouraged.

Ut Cotta, who had before thought that Cufar. these things might happen by the way, and for that cause would not be the Author of for total cauje would not be the Autom of the Fourney, was not wanting in any thing that concerned their common fafety: For both in caling upon the Soldiers and encouraging them, he executed the place of a Commander; and in fighting, the duty of a Soldier. And when they found that by reason of the length of their Troop. they were not able in their own persons to see all things done, and to give direction in every place; they caused it to be proclaimed, that they should all forfake their Baggage, and cast themselves into an Orb. Which direction although in such a case it be not to be reproved, yet it fell out ill-favouredly: For it both abated the Courage of the Romans, and gave the Enemy greater encouragement, inasmuch as it seemed that that course was not taken but upon a great fear and in extremity of peril. More-over it happened, as it could not otherwise chuse, over it nappenea, as it could not otherwise constitute the Soldiers went from their Enfigns, to take from the Carriages such things as were most dear unto them: And there was nothing heard amongst them but Clamours and Weepings. But the Barbarous Gauls were not to learn how to carry themfelves. For their Commanders caused it to be proclaimed, that no Man skould stir out of his place; for the Prey was theirs, and all that the Romans had laid apart was reserved for them: And therefore I now planty appeared by this negrigent and not call apart was referred for them: And therefore ille-ordered March, and the unlooked for en- let them suppose that all things conssssed in the counter which the Gauls gave them, that sear Vision. The Romans were equal to the Gauls had ratisfied in the judgment of Sabinus the both in Number and Men of Valeur; and albeit smooth suggestion of Ambiorix, with an approbation of a certain truth; and laid that for a fortune, yet they respected in their Manhood all the use principle. Which a discourse free from profitor of their selection, and the Manhood all the use principle, which a discourse free from passion of their safety: And as often as any Cohort issued would have discerned to be but weak, and of no out, they failed not to make a great slaughter of the

The First OBSERVATION.

Have already handled the nature of an Orb, with fuch properties as are incident to a Circle; wherein I shewed the conveniency of this Figure, in regard of fafe and ftrong embattelling. I will now add thus much concerning the use thereof, that as it is the best manner of embattelling for a defensive strength, and therefore never used bur in extremity; fo we must be very careful that the fudden betaking of our felves to fuch a refuge do not more dismay the Soldiers, than the advantage of that embattelling can benefit them. For unless a Leader be careful to keep his Men in courage that their hearts may be free from despair and amazement, what profit can there arise which belongeth unto them? For order is nothing but an affiftance to Courage, giving means to manage our Valour with advantage. In the War of Africk we read, that Cafar's Legions being incircled about with great Multitudes of Enemies, were forced to make an Orb; but he quickly turned it to a better use, by advancing the two Cornets two contrary ways: and fo divided the Enemy into two parts, and then beat them back. to their great disadvantage.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Need not ftand upon this order which the Gauls here took concerning Pillage, that no Soldier should for sake his Station, or disrank himself in hope of spoil; which is a thing that from the very infancy of Wars hath often changed the fortune of the day, and fold the honour of a publick Victory for private lucre and petry Pilfering. Amongt other Examples, let that which Guicciardine reportert of the Battel of Taro suffice to warn a well-directed Army, as well by the good which Charles the eighth of that

THe infufficiency of these Commanders, whereof Cefar now complaineth as the only want which these Romans had to clear themselves of which there romain has to treat inclineres of the solution of Leaders, or the Valour of their Soldiers, that enlarged their Empire to that greatness, and made their People and Senate Lords of the World. Polybius weighing the causes of a Victory which the Carthaginians gained of the Romans, by the Counsel and good directions of one Zantippus a Gracian, having before that time received Counsel and good directions of one Zantippus fition of embattelling, and in firm standing, and a Gracian, having before that time received divers overthrows, during the time of those Wars circumstance, where Ambiorix forbiddeth his Men in Africk; concludeth that it was more in the to buckle with them, but to give back and follow worthiness of the Commanders, than in any extraordinary vertue of the Soldiers, that the Rotraordinary vertue of the Soldiers, that the Romans archieved fo many Conquests. And besides the Civil Wars, in the Battel between Cosar and the prefent example of Zantippus, he confirmed his opinion with the proceedings of Hannibal; who from the beginning of the second Punick War, ftill gained of the Roman Empire, enlarging the Territories of Carthage, and streightening the Jurisdiction of mighty Rome, untill it had got a Leader matchable to that subtle Carthagini- dishonour to retire and give back, as they had learn-

Hinnibal. To this may be added that famous Battel between the old Romans and the last Letines; wherein both Parties were equally balanced, both in number and quality of their Sollanced, both in number and quality of their Sol-diers, having both the fame Arms, the fame uf-of their Weapons, and the fame difcipline, as if it had been in a Civil War. Neither could For-tune tell by the prefence of their Armies where to beftow her favour, or where to shew her disdain; but that the worthiness of the Roman Leaders brought the odds in the trial, and made Rome great with the ruin of the Latines. Whereby it appeareth how much it importeth the whole fortune of the Army, to have a Leader worthy of the place which he holderh: Forafmuch as nothing doth make a greater difference of inequality between two equal Armies, than the Wisdom and part and anadement, what point can there are from any disposition or body soever, when the particular members shall be senseles of that duty ability of an unskillul Leader; which are so powerful in their several effects, that there is greater hope of a Herd of Harts led by a Lion, than of so many Lions conducted by a Hart.

CHAP. XIV.

Ambiorix directeth the Gauls how they might best fight with advantage, and frustrate the Wea-pons of the Roman Soldiers.

He which thing when Ambiorix perceived, he commanded his Men to throw their casting Weapons afar off, and keep themwhere the Romans charged them to give way, for that by reason of the lightness could do them no their daily exercise the Romans could do them no harm : And again as they faw them retire to their Enfigns, then to putfue them. Which command-ment was so diligently observed by the Gauls, that as of as any Cobort sallied out of the Orb to ro luthec to warn a well-directed Army, as well by the good which Charles the eighth of that Name King of France received at that time, as by the lofs which the Italians felt by that diforder, not to feek after Pillage until the Victory be obtained.

Some of the control of the Italians of the control of t give an affault, the Enemy gave back as fast as they went about to keep their ground, they could neither help themselves by their Manhood, nor standing thick to-gether avoid the darts that such a Multitude cast upgether avoid one darts that just a withtrouse cast up-on them. And yet notwithstanding these inconveni-ences, besides the wounds which they had received, honourable, or unworthy of themselves.

OBSERVATION.

Have spoken already of the manner of the Roman Fight, confifting altogether in good dispoon again, as the lightness of their Arms gave them Afranius, in a peareth hat Cefar's Soldiers were bound to keep their array, not to leave their Enfigns, nor without a weighty occasion to forfake their flations appointed them: Whereas the Afranius; fought thin and scattered here and there; and if they were hard laid unto, they thought it no an, and found a Scipio to confront their ed of the Poringals and other barbarous Nations.

CHAP. XV.

The Romans are overthrown.

Hen T. Baluentius, who the Year before had been primipile of that Legion, a valiant Man and of great Authority, had both his Thighs darted through with a Javelin; and Q. Lucanius, of the Jame order, valiantly fighting to fuccour his Son, was slain; and I. Cotta the Legate as he bufily encouraged all the Cohorts and Centuries, was wounded in the mouth with a Sling. Titurius moved with these things, as he beheld Ambiorix afar off encouraging his Men, sent Cn. Pompeius unto him, to intreat him that he would spare him and his Soldiers. Ambiorix answered, that if he were defireus to treat, he might : For he hoped to obtain so much of the People, to save the Soldiers; but for himself, he should have no harm at all: For the Assurance whereof he gave him his faith. Titurius imparted the matter to Cotta, and that if he liked that they two should go out of the Battel, and have conference with Ambiorix, he doubted not but to obtain of him the safety of themselves and their Soldiers. Cotta absolutely denied to go to an armed Enemy, and continued resolute in that opinion. Titurius commanded such Tribunes and Centurions as were present to follow him; and when he came near to Ambiorix, being commanded to cast away his Arms, he obeyed, and willed those that were with him to do the same. In the mean time while they treated of the conditions, and Ambiorix began a solemn protoflation of purpole, Titurius was by little and little encompassed about and slain. Then ac-cording to their Custom, they cried Victory; and taking up a houling, charged the Romans with a fresh affault, and routed their Troops. There L. Cotta fighting valiantly was slain, and the most part of the Soldiers with him. The Remnant retired into their Camp; amongst whom L. Petrofidius the Eagle-Bearer, when he faw himself overcharged with Enemies, threw the Eagle within the Rampier, and fighting with a great Courage before the Camp, was flain. The rest with much ado endured the affault until Night: And in the Night,

OBSERVATION.

A Nd thus have we heard of the greatest loss that ever fell at any one time upon Cafar's Army, from the time that he was fire Proconful in Gallia, unto the end of his Dictatorship. For in the two overthrows at Dyrrachium he loft not above 1000 Men, and in that at Gergovia not fo many: But here fifteen Cohorts were cut in pieces, which amounted to the number of 7000 Men or thereabout. Which ma-keth Cowardice and ill direction the more hate-

The resolution of such as returned to the Camp witneffeth the exceeding Valour of the Roman Soldier, if a valiant Leader had had the absolute Commander, there had been great hope eft defigns.

of better fortune in the Success. But here it happened as it commonly doth, that where there are many that are equal sharers in the chief authority, the direction for the most part followeth. him that is more violent in opinion than the reft: Which being a property rather of Paffion than of judicious Discourse, forceth a consent against the temperate opposition of a true discerning underftanding. And so consequently it falleth out, that one Coward having Place and Authority in the Council, doth either infect or annihilate the found deliberations of the reft of the Leaders: For his timorousness flieth always to extremities, making him raft in Confultation, peremptory in Opinion, and base in case of Peril; all which are enemies to good Direction, and the only instruments of

CHAP. XVI.

Ambiorix hafteth to befiege Cicero, and stirreth up the Aduatici, the Nervii, and so raiseth a great Mbiorix took fuch Spirits unto him upon Cafar. this Victory, that with his Horsemen he went immediately unto the Aduatici, being the next borderers upon his Kingdom, without intermission of Night or Day, commanding his Footmen to follow him. The Aduatici upon his opening the matter being ftirred up to commotion, the next day after he came to the Nervii, exhorting them not to let flip this occasion of recovering to themselves perpetual liberty, and re-verging them of the Romans for the wrongs they had received. He told them that two Legates were already flain, and a great part of the Army overthrown: It was now no great matter fuddenly to surprise the Legion that wintered with Ciccro? to the performance whereof he offered himself to be their affisant. These remossirances easily personaded the Nervii; and therefore they dispatched speedy Messengers to the Centrones, Grudii, Leuaci, Pleumonii and Gorduni, who were all under their dominion, and raifed very being in despair of all succour, slew themselves every great Forces; and with them they hasted to Man. A sew that scaped from the Battel, came by the Camp where Ciccto wintered, before any mhumon ways through the Woods to Labienus, and inkling of the death of Titurius was brought certified him how all things had fallen out.

OBSERVATION.

THe ambitious and working Spirit of Ambiorix, that could attempt to raise the baseness of a fmall and ignoble State to fo high a point of resolution, that they durst adventure upon the Roman Legions, being setled in the strength of their Empire by the memory of so many Victories in Gallia, wanted now no means to make an overture to an universal Commotion, propounding Liberty and Revenge to the Gauls (two the fweetest conditions that can happen to a subdured in the control and the con his example had proved fure and eafe. Which may ferveto flew, that he that will attempt upon doubtful and ansafe Principles, will take great man Soldier, if a valiant Leader had had the advantage from a probable Entrance, and make managing thereof; or if Cotta alone had been a small beginning a sufficient means for his great-

CHAP. XVII.

CHAP. XVIII.

Cicero defendeth his Camp from the surprize of the Nervii, and prepareth himself against a

Nervii propound the fame things to Cicero nich Ambiorix had done to Sabinus : but are

T happened to Cicero also (as it could not otherwise chuse) that many of the Soldiers that were gone into the Woods for Timber and Munition, were cut off by the sudden approach of the Enemies Horsemen. These being circumvented, the Eburones, Nervii, and Aduatici, with all their Confederates and Vassals began to affault the Camp. The Romans betook them Speedily to their Weapons, and got upon the Rampier. With much ado they held out that day : For the Gauls trusted much upon Celerity; hoping if they sped well in that action, to be Victors ever after.

Cicero dispatched Letters with all speed to Cæsar, promising great rewards to him that should carry them: but all the Ways were so fore-laid, that the Mesfengers were taken. In one Night there were built in the Camp one hundred and twenty Towers, of Such Timber as was brought in for Fortification; and what soever wanted of the rest of the work was perfected.

The Enemy the next day with a far greater Power assaulted the Camp, and filled up the Ditch. The Romans made the like defence as they had done the day before; the like was continued divers days after. The Romans made no intermission of their work at any part of the Night, nor gave any rest either to the Sick or the Wounded. Whatsoever was needful for the next days assault, was provided in readiness the Night before: A great number of Stakes hardened in the fire were prepared, and many mural Piles were made; the Towers were floored in their Stories; Pinacles and Parapets were fee up of Hurdles; and Cicero himself being sickly and of a weak constitution, took not so much leisure as to rest himself in the Night-time: So that the Soldiers of their own accord compelled him by entreaty to spare himself.

OBSERVATION.

THis Q. Cicero is faid to be the Brother of Marcus Cicero the famous Orator, and to him were the Letters fent which are found in his Epiftles directed Quinto fratri. In this action his carriage deserved as great reputation in the true censure of Honour, as ever his Brother did for his eloquence pro Rostris. And if it had been the others fortune to have performed the like service, he would have made it the greatest Exploit that ever Roman had atchieved by Arms. Wherein particularly may be commended the diligence and industry which was used, in raising so many Towers in fo fmall a time; for providing the night before fuch things as were necessary for the next days defence; for making so many Stakes hardened at one end with fire for the defence of the Rampier; and for the store of these mural Piles, which refembled the form of the ordinary Pile, but were far greater and weightier, in regard they were to be cast from the Rampier; which gave them fuch advantage by reason of the height, that being cast by a strong and well-practised Arm, they were very effectual and of great terrour.

Hen the Princes and chief Commanders of Casar. the Nervii, which had any former familiarity and acquaintance with Cicero; signified their desire to speak with him Which being granted, they propounded the fame things which Ambiorix had used to deceive Sabinus; all Gallia were in Arms; the Germans were come over the Rhine; Cæsar and the rest were besieved in their Winter Quarters; Sabinus and his Men were cut in pieces; and for the more credit to it, they shew him Ambiorix. They said, they were much deceived if they expected any help from those who were at present scarce able to help themselves. Notwithstanding they carried this mind to Cicero and the People of Rome, that they refused nothing but their Wintering among them, which they would not suffer to be made a common practice. they might depart in safety whither they would, without disturbance or fear of danger. Cicero only made this answer; That it was not the custom of the People of Rome to take any Article or Condition from an armed Enemy; but if they would lay their Arms afide, let them use his furtherance in the matter. and fend some to negotiate it with Cesar: There was great hope, in regard of his Justice and Equity, that they should not return unsatisfied.

OBSERVATION.

"He first attempt which Ambiorix made upon the Camp of Sabinus and Cotta was but fhort; but here, what with the pride of the former Victory, and the great multitude of the Affaitants, they continued it longer, in hope to carry it by Affault. For the first Affault of a place, especiely when it cometh by way of surprize, is of greater hope to the Affailant, and of greater danger to the Defendant, than such as afterward are made in the sequel of the War: For after the first brunt the heat of the Enemy is much abated, as well through the nature of a hot defire, which is most violent in the beginning, and afterward groweth cold and remis, as also with the harms and peril which they meet with in the Encounter; and on the contrary fide, the Defendants having withstood the first fury, wherein there is most terrour and diftrust, grow more confident and better affured of their Manhood, and in experience of their ftrength stand firm against any charge whatfoever.

CHAP. XIX.

The Nervii besiege Cicero with a Ditch and a Rampier, and work means to fet fire on their Tents.

HE Nervii disappointed of this hope, car- Castr. ried a Ditch and a Rampier round about the Camp: The Rampier was cleven foot high, and the Ditch fifteen foot deep: Woich they had learned of the Romans, partly by being conversant among them certain Years before, and partly by the Prisoners and Captives which they had taken. But they had no Iron Tools fit for that purpose, but were driven to cut up Turf with their Swords, and gather Earth with their hands, and carry it away with their Mantles and Gaberdines. Whereby may be gathered what a multitude of Men there were at the Siege; for in lefs than three jects of difficulty, as were very unfuitable in the bours they finished the furtification of fifteen Miles particular occurrences to that which their Soldiers in circuit. The days following the Enemies built Towers to the height of the Rampier, prepared great Hooks and strong Penthouses, or safeguards of Boards and Timber, according as the Captives had given them instruction. The seventh day of the Siege being a very Windy day, they cast hot Bullets of Clay out of Slings, and burning Darts upon the Cabins of the Romans, which after the manner of the Gauls were thatched with Straw. These Cabins were quickly fet on fire, which by the violence of the Wind was carried over all the Camp. The Enemy pressing forward with a great clamour, as though the Victory Soldiers, that albeit they were scorched on all fides with fire, and over-charged with multitude of Weapons, and faw all their Wealth burned before their face; yet no Man forsook the Rampier, or scarce looked back at that which had happened, but they all fought valiantly, and with an exceeding courage. This was the forest day the Romans had, and yet it had this iffue, that a very great number of the Enemies were flain and wounded; for they had for thronged themselves under the Rampier, that the hindmost hindred the foremost from retiring back. The flame at length abating, and the Enemies having brought on one of their Towers to the very Works, the Centurions of the third Cohort drew back themfelves and their Men from the place where they fevote and toet when from the place where every food, and with fight and voices called to the Eme-mics to enter if they thought good: but none of them duff approach. Then did they by cafting Stones from all parts, beat them from the Works, and fet their Tower on fire.

OBSERVATION.

This one Example may serve to shew the ex-cellency of the Roman Discipline, and the wisdom of the first founders of that Art. For they perceiving that the fortune of Wars confifted chiefly in the maftering of particular occurrences, trained their Soldiers in that form of Discipline as might ftruggle with inconveniences, and ftrong oppositions of contradicting accidents; and so overwage all difficulties and hinderances with a constant preservation and a Courage invincible. For the great attempting spirit of an ambitious Commander, that feeketh to overtop the Trophies of Honour with the memory of his Exploits. will quickly perish by his own direction, if the instruments of execution be weaker than the means which lead him to his defigns. For where the weight is greater than the ftrength, the Engine will sooner break than lift it up. Let a discreet Leader therefore fo level his thoughts, that his resolution may not exceed the ability of his particular means : But first let him be well assured what his Soldiers can do, before he refolve what he will do: Or otherwise let him so enable them by Discipline and Instructions, according to the example of the old Romans, that their worth may answer the height of his defires, and follow his aspiring mind with a resolution grounded upon Knowledge and Valour; and fo making their ability the ground of his defigns, he shall never fail of means to perform what he intendeth. The want of this confideration hath within these late years repayed our Commanders in many parts of they have measured the humour of their poor needy and undisciplined Soldier by the garb of were fit to execute.

CHAP. XX.

The emulation between two Centurions, Pullio and Varenus, with their fortunes in the En-

Here were in that Legion two valiant Men, Titus Pulfio and L. Varenus, Centurions, coming on apace to the dignity of the first Orders. These two were at continual dewere already gotten, began to bring their Turrets Orders. These two were at continual deand Iestudines to the Rampier, and to scale it with bate which of them should be preserved one before

Ladders. But such was the Valour of the Roman another, and every year contended for place of preferment with much strife and emulation. Pulfo. at a time that the fortification was very sharply assaulted, called to Varenus, and asked him why he now stood doubtful; or what other place he did look for to make trial of his Manhood. This is the day, saith he, that shall decide our Controver-fies. And when he had spoken these words, he went out of the fortification; and where he faw the Enemy thickest, he siercely set upon them. Then could not Varenus hold himself within the Rampier, but for his Credit sake followed after in a reasonable di-stance. Pulsio cast his Pile at the Enemy, and struck one of the multitude through that came running out against him. He being stain, the Enemies cover him with their Shields, and all cast their Meapons at Pulsio, giving him no respite or time of retreat. Pulsio had his Target struck through, and the Dart stuck fast in his Girdle. This chance turned aside his Scabbard, and hindered his right hand from pulling out his Sword; in which difadvantage the Enemy pressed hard upon him. Vare-nus came and rescued him. Immediately the whole multitude, thinking Pulfio to be flain with the Dart. multitude, tornging runns to be juin more to bis turned to Varenus; who speedily betook him to his Sword, and came to handy-froak; and having slain one, he put the rest somewhat back. But as he sollowed over-hastily upon them, he fell down. Him did Pulsio rescue being circumvented and in danger: And so both of them, having slain many of the Enemy, retired to their Camp in safety, to their great Honour. Thus Fortune carried as well the Contention, as the Encounter of them both, that being Enemies, they nevertheless gave help to save each others Life, in fuch fort as it was not to be judged which of them deserved greatest Honour.

OBSERVATION.

Æsar inserteth this accident of the two Centurions, as worthy to be related amongst the deeds of Arms contained in these Commentaries. Wherein we are first to observe the grounds of this Quarrel, which was their continual strife for place of preferment, which they fought after, by shewing their Valour in time of danger and approving their worth by the greatness of their desert: A Contention worthy the Roman Discipline, and may serve for a pattern of true Honour full of Courage, accomplished with Vertue. For these Simultates which defire of honour had cast between them, brought forth emulation, which is the spur of Vertue, far from enmity or hateful contention: For the difference between these two qualities is, that enmity hunteth after destruction, and only rejoiceth in that Christendom with loss and dishonour, when as which bringeth to our Adversary utter Ruin, dishonour, or ill Atchievement; but emulation contendeth only by well deserving to gain the their ambitious thoughts, and so laid such pro- Advantage of another Mans Fame, that useth

the same Means to attain to the like end; and dishonour (which by this Decree attended such is always mixed with Love, in regard of the as undertook private Combate) made the Soldiers Affinity of their Affections, and the Sympathy of their defires, not feeking the overthrow of their Competitour, but fuccouring him in time of Danger and defending him from foul and unfortunate Calamity, that he may still continue to shew the greatness of his worth, by the opposition of inferiour Actions, which are as a leffer scantling of desert to measure the estimation of the others honour. A vertue rare and unknown in these days, and would hardly find fubjects to be refident in, if the should offer her help in the course of our affairs, or fue to be entertained by the crooked dispositions of our times: For we can no sooner conceive the thoughts that breed emulation, but it turneth presently to hatred, which is followed to the uttermost of our malice, and restern better fatisfied with the miferable end of our oppofer, than with thousand of Trophies deservedly erected to our honour. Which maketh me wonder, when I look into the difference of these and those ages, whether it were the Discipline of that time which brought forth such honest effects of vertue, to their Glory and our Ignominy, having learned better rules than were known unto them; or whether the World weakened with Age, want ftrength in these times to bring forth her creatures in that perfection as it did in those days; or what other cause hath made our worst affections so violent, and our better faculties fo remiss and negligent, that Vertue hath no part in us but words of praise, our whole practice being consecrated to actions of reproach. The Injuries, Murthers, scandalous carriages of one towards another, which in these days are so readily offered and so impatiently digested, will admit no satisfaction but private Combate; which in the first Monarchies was granted only against Strangers and foreign Enemies, as the only objects of Arms and wrath. and capable of that Justice which the private Sword should execute; for they well perceived that these fingle Battels were as sparkles of civil discord, and intestine Wars; although not so apparent in the general view of their State, yet as odious in particular, and as dishonourable to good Government. And if there were a true record of fuch as have been either flain or wounded within these forty years, either in this Kingdom, or in France, or in Germany, by this licentious and brutish custom, I make no question but they would amount to a number capable of that fearful stile which is attributed to Civil Wars.

Lib. V.

Neither is there any Law, how rigorous or hard foever, that can give relief to this diforder, but the reftraint will draw on as great enormities, and as intolerable in a good Government. Rotarn King of the Lumbards, forbade his Subjects this manner of Combate: But shortly after he was constrained to recall the Edict for the avoiding of greater evils; although he protested the thing to be both inhumane and barbarous. The like Edict was published in France by Philip the Fair; but was within two years revoked again at the instant request of his Subjects, in regard of the Murthers and Affaffinates committed in that Kingdom.

The only remedy that I find to take effect in this case, was that of late time which the Prince of Melphe in Piemont, invented to prevent this evil: For perceiving how ordinary Quarrels and Blood-shed were in his Camp, he affigned a place between two Bridges for the performance of the Duelium, with this charge, That he that had the through which he was to psft. And wrote in like worst should always be slain, and cast from the manner to Labienus, that if it should with the as undertook private Combate) made the Soldiers wifer in their carriage, and put an end to their Sedition and civil Difcords. But that which is yet worst of all, is, that Custom hath now made it so familiar, that every trifle seemeth sufficient to call the matter to a private Combate: A cross look calleth another Man's Honour in question; but the word Lye is of as great consequence as any stab or villainy whatsoever. Whereat we may well wonder, how it happeneth that we feel our felves fo much exasperated at the reproach of that Vice which we so ordinarily commit: For in the custom of these times, to cast upon us the Lye is the greatest injury that words can do unto us; and yet there is nothing more frequent in our mouth. It may be a property in our nature, to stand chiefly in the defence of that corruption unto which we are most subject.

I speak not this to qualific the foulness of this Vice; for I hold a Lyer to be a monster in nature, one that contemneth God, and feareth Man, as an ancient Father faith: But to shew the crookedness of our disposition, in disdaining to acknowledge that fault which we fo commonly commit. But I would fain learn when Honour first came to be measured with words: for from the beginning it was not so. C.sfar was often called to his face Thief and Drunkard, without any further matter: And the liberty of Invectives which great Personages used one against another, as it began, so it ended with words. And so I think our Lye might too; for I take him that returneth the Lye, and so letteth it rest until further proof, to have as great advantage in the reputation of Honour as the former that first gave the difgace.

CHAP. XXI.

Cicero findeth means to advertise Casar of this Accident; who hafting, raifeth the Siege, and putteth the Enemy to a great flaughter.

S the Siege grew daily hotter and sharper, and especially for that a great part of the Soldiers were laid up with Wounds, and the matter brought into a few Mens hands that were able to make any defence; so they sent out Letters and Massengers the more often to Cæsar: of whom some were taken, and in the sight of our Soldiers tortured to death. There was one within the place befigeed of the Nation of the Nervii, called Vertico, of honost Parentage, who in the beginning of the Siege had fled to Cicero, and carried himself faithfully in that service. This Man did Cicero chuse, perswading him with hope of liberty, and other great rewards, to carry Letters to Cæsar: Which he took, and having tied them up in his Dart, travelled as a Gaul amongst the Gauls, without any suspicion, and so came to Cæsar. Of whom he understood how dangerously Cicero and the Legion was befet.

Cæsar having received those Letters about the eleventh hour of the day, dispatched presently a Messenger to M. Crassus the Treasurer in the Country of the Bellovaci, twenty-five miles off, commanding the Legion to fet out at Midnight and Speedily to come unto bim. Craffus set cut and came along with the Messenger. He sent another Pest to Caius Fabius the Legate, to bring that Legion to the confines of the Atrebates, Bridge into the Water. The danger joined with conveniency of the State, he foould bring his Legion to the Territories of the Nervii: For the rest of bear to make such haste; and thereupon sate down; runners) of Craffus's coming, he marched that day twenty miles.

He made Craffus Governour of Samarobrina, and gave him one Legion for the defence thereof; in regard that the Baggage of the whole Army, the Holtages of the Provinces, the publick Transactions and Letters, together with all the Corn which he had got for the Provision of the Winter, was left in that place. Fabius, according to his directions, without any delay met him with his Legion.

Labienus understanding of the death of Sabinus, and the slaughter of the Cohorts, and knowing alfo that the whole Forces of the Treviri were marching toward him, doubted that if his fetting forward out of his Winter station should seem as a stealing away, he should not be able to undergo the charge of the Enemy, whom a late Victory had made infolent : And therefore informed Casar by his Letters, what danger it would be to draw the Legion from their Winter Quarters; relating what had happened amongst the Eburones, and how that all the Forces of the Treviri , both Horse and Foot, lay but three miles distant from his Camp.

Cæsar allowing of these reasons, howsoever his hope of three Legions was fallen unto two, yet his stood by the Captives how matters passed with Cicero, and what danger he was in. At what time he persuaded a certain Horseman of the Gauls, by great rewards offered unto him, to carry a Letter unto Cicero; which he fent writ in Greek Charadlers, lest his purposes should be discovered, if the Letter had been intercepted: Advising, that if he could not come to his presence, he should tye it to the string of a Dart, and so cast it into the fortifications. He advertised them by his Letter that he was on the way with the Legions, and would be persevere in his wonted gallantry. The Gaul fearing Some danger, followed the directions, and cast it into the works by a Dart; which fell by chance upon a Turret, and there stuck two days before it was perceived: The third day a Soldier finding it, took it down and brought it to Cicero, who read it publickly in the affembly of the Soldiers, and put them all into exceeding great joy. And at the same time the smoak of their fires began afar off to be discovered; which put them cut of all doubt of the approach of the Legions.

The Gauls being advertised thereof by their Scouts, left the Siege, and made towards Cæsar with all their Power; which consisted of 60000 Men or in his passage: Signifying by those Letters that the Enemy had left the Siege, and turned all his Forces towards him. Which Letters being brought unto Cæsar about Midnight, he certified his party of the contents thereof, and prepared them by encouragement to fight. The next day as soon as it began to be light, he removed his Camp; and having marched about four miles, he discovered the multitude of the Enemy beyond a great Valley and a River. It was the Army that were further off he thought good and in as indifferent a place at he could chufe not to expect. He drew four hundred Hoyle or fortified his Camp. Which being of it self very thereabouts from the nearest Winter Quarters. And little, as not having scarce seven thousand Men, being advertised about the third hour (by the fore- and those without any Carriages; yet he lessened it as much as he could by narrowing the ufual Streets thereof, to the end be might the better defend it, if happily the Enemy might be drawn to ingage himself seriously in any attempt upon the same. In the mean time having sent out Discoverers into all parts, he informed himself which way he might most conveniently pass over the

The same day, after small encounters of the Cavalry at the Water, either party contained themselves within their fortifications: The Gauls, as expecting greater Forces, which were not yet come; and Casar, that by a counterfeit fear he might draw the Enemy to the place where he was lodged on this fide the Valley, and so strike the Battel before his Camp; and if he could not bring it so about, then upon discovery of the ways, to pass the Valley and the River with less danger. As it began to be day-light the Cavalry of the Enemy came near unto the Camp, and began to skirmish with our Horsemen. Casar of set purpose commanded the Horsemen to fall back, and to betake themselves into the Camp: and withal to fortific their Camp on all sides with a higher Rampier, to stop up the Passages; and in doing of these things all their saferies; and so by great journeys came show of great fear. With which inducements the confines of the Nervii; where he understructure that the confines of the Nervii; where he understructure that the confines of the Nervii; where he understructure that the confines of the Nervii; where he understructure that the confines the structure that the structure all his Forces, and imbattelled them in an unequal and disadvantageous place. Our Men being drawn from the Rampier (to make the matter more apparent) they were imboldened to come nearer, and to cast Weapons from all parts into our works: Sending Heralds round about with Proclamation, That if any Gaul or Roman would come over unto them before the third hour, he should be taken into their Safe protection; but after that time there was no hope of any such reception. And they did so contemn our party, that whereas the Ports were shut there instantly to raise the Siege, exhorting him to up for a stew with a single row of Turfs, to the end they might appear to be made up in such manner that they could not be broken open; some of them began to break down the Rampier with their hands, and others to fill up the Ditches.

Which Casar perceiving, sallied out at all the Ports at once; and sending out the Cavalry, put the Enemy fo suddenty of flight, that not one of them ressisted by way of sighting: Institute be slew a great number of them, and put them all besides their Arms. But because he feared to follow them far, in regard of the Woods and Bogs that lay in their passage, (being unwilling to hazard himself upon the least occasion danger) he returned with all his Forces in all their Power; which conflited of 60000 Men or of aanger) no resurred with all this course in thereabouts. Cicero finding himfelf at liberty, suggest fafety, and the felf-fame day came to Gicero out the Jame Vertico before mentioned, to carry Let-Where be admired the Towers, the Mantlets and ters to Caefar; advising him to be wary and diligent. Works which were begun and prepared by the Enemy: And drawing out the Legion, he found that the tenth Man had not escaped without wounds. By all which circumstances he understood, with what danger and Valour the business had been carried. He commended Cicero and the Legion according to their merit; calleth out by name such Centurions and Tribunes of the Soldiers, as by testimony of Cicero were found to have deserved extraordinarily in that service; informed him-Entiny opposed a great wasty annua account to the continuous of the certainty of Sabinus of matter of exceeding danger to give Battel to fell by the Captives of the certainty of Sabinus fo great a number in a place of disabourage: and Cotta's misfortune. The next day he spake And fordinuch as he know that Ciccot was freed publichly to the Soldiers, opened the particular of the Siege, he thought he might the better for-lars of that matter, and then scalend them with comfort and encouragement; shewing, Howbeit the Senones (a strong People, and of great
That the loss which happened through the Fault and authority amongst the Gauls) went about, by a pubtemerity of a Legate, was to be born with better patience: And the rather, for a smuch as by the affistance of the Immortal Gods, and by their own Vertue, the loss was redeemed in such a fashion, as neither the Enemy did long enjoy it, nor themselves were long afflicted with Grief for the same.

Lib. V.

OBSERVATION.

THe Passages in this Chapter are of great variety, and do give occasion of much discourse. But that which is most remarkable is, That to exceed in Forces and Troops of Men, may be a means to bring a Party to an Overthrow: For an extraordinary Power doth always beget an opinion agreeable to their own Defires, and can hardly think of any other end than that which fuiteth with Security and Victorious Success; which being croffed in any material Circumstance, and put besides the course of their Intentions, whereby they fail of what they expected, doth confequently draw all the other way, and changeth hope into misfortune: As it fared here with the

CHAP. XXII.

The Commotions of the States of Gallia. Induciomarus attempting great Matters, is Slain, and the Country quieted.

'N the mean time the report of Casar's Victory was carried to Labienus with incredible speed, through the Country of those of Rheims:
insomuch as being sifty Miles distant from that place where Cicero Wintered, and that the Overthrow was given about Three of the Clock in the Afternoon, there was a shout at the Camp-Gate before Midnight; whereby the Men of Rheims congratulated Labienus for that Victory. The Fame whereof being carried to the Treviri, Induciomarus, that purposed the next day to Besiege Labienus, sted in the Night-time, and carried all his Forces back to the Treviri. Cæfar remanded Fabius with his Legion into their Winter-Stations: He himself with Three Legions determined to Winter about Samarobrina. And forasmuch as there were such Commotions throughout all Gallia, himself resolved to abide with the Army all the Winter. For, upon the news of the Overthrow of Sabinus, almost all the States of Gallia did enter into a Consultation of War; sent Messengers and Embassadors into all Parts, to make Overtures for future Resolutions, and to understand in what place the War might best be set on foot; holding their Consultations by Night in secret and desert places: In such manner as there passed not a day, during all that Winter, which brought not some new care or trouble to Cælar, whilft he was daily advertised of new Meetings and Conspiracies amongst Amongst others, he had Intelligence from L. Roscius, the Legate, whom he had Jet over the thirteenth Legion, That great Forces of those States and Cities of the Gauls that are called Armoricæ, were assembled together to Fight against him, and were come within Eight Miles of his Camp: But understanding of Casar's Victory, they fell back in such a fashion as though they meant to fly away. But Caesar having called unto him the Princes and chief Men of every State, terrifying some, as seeming to in a Camp exceedingly Fortified, as well by Nature understand their Complorments, and perswading o- as by Art, did not fear any danger that might hapauthority amongst the Gauls) went about, by a publick Decres to kill Cavarinus, whom Cafar had fee to be King over them, (whose Brother Moritasgus, at Cæsar's coming into Gallia, and whose Ancestors formerly were possessed of that Kingdom) which he perceiving, sled away, and was prosecuted to the very borders, and so driven as well out of his private House as of his Kingdom. And having sent Embassadors to Cæsar to satisfie him herein ; whereas he commanded the whole Senate to come unto him, they refused to obey his Warrant. So much it prevailed amongst barbarous People, that there were Some found that durst avouch the undertaking of a War. Woich made such an alteration in the Minds of all Men, that besides the Hedui and the State of Rheims, whom Cafar had in great favour and re-Spect (the one, for their ancient and perpetual Fidelity to the People of Rome, and the other, for their late Services in the War of Gallia) there was almost no State free from suspicion. Insomuch as I know not well whether it may not be wondred at or no, as well for many other Reasons, as especially for that they greatly grieved, that they who excelled all other Nations in Deeds of Arms, had now lost their Re-Gauls upon Cesar's suddain sallying out of the putation so far, as they were forced to bear the Toke of the People of Rome.

The Treviri and Induciomarus lost no time of all that Winter, but Sent Commissioners beyond the Rhine, folliciting the Cities, and promifing Moneys, with confident assurance that the greatest part of our Army was already cut off, and that which was left was but a small remainder of the same: And yet for all that no People of the Germans could be perfwaded to pass the Rhine. For having twice made trial to their cost, in the War of Ariovistus, and in the passage of the * Tenchtheri, they would tempt * Franck fort. Fortune no further.

Induciomarus cast down from his hope, did, notwithstanding train and gather Forces, got Horses from the bordering States, and with great Rewards drew unto him Banish'd and Condemned Men from all parts of Gallia; and did thereby get such an opinion throughout all that Continent, that Embassadors came flocking unto him from all Quarters, and fought his favour both in publick and private. When he understood that Men made to him of their own accord, and that on the one side the Senones and Carnutes were instigated with a remembrance of their Offences, and on the other side the Nervii and Aduatici made Provision of War against the Romans, and that he should not want voluntary Forces, if he did but once go out of his Confines; he gave order to call a Council of War: Which, according to the manner of the Gauls, was always the beginning of a War, being such as constrained all the Men that were of Years, by the common Law of the Land, to affemble together in Arms: And he that came last, was, in the fight of all the rest put to Death with exquisite Torture. In that Council he took order to proclaim Cingetorix the Chief of the other Faction, and his Son-in-law, (who, as we have before declared, had followed Cæsar, and not left him in any of those Services) a Traytor to the State, and that his Goods should be Confiscated.

That being done, he published in the Council, that he was fent for by the Senones and the Carnutes, and many other States of Gallia: Whither he meant to go through the Territories of the Inhabitants of Rheims; and that he would harry and waste their Country. But first, his purpose was to take the Camp of Labienus, and accordingly gave Order what he would have done. Labienus being thers, kept a great part of Gallia in Obedience. pen to himself or the Legion; but rather studied not to let pass any occasion to carry the matter handfomely and to purpose. And therefore being adver-tised by Cingetorix and his Allies, what Speech Induciomarus had delivered in the Council, he sent Messengers to all the confining Cities, and Commanded Horsemen to be sent unto him by a certain day.

In the mean time Inducionarus rid up and down almost every day with all his Cavalry under his Camp, Sometimes to view the situation thereof, otherwhile to Parlee, or elfe to terrifie the Soldier : And his Horfemen for the most part would cast their Weapons within the Rampier. Labienus kept all his Men within the Fortifications, and did what he could to make the Enemy believe that he was fore afraid. And as Induciomarus came daily with greater Contempt to the Camp, one Night having taken in the Cavalry of the bordering Cities, which he had formerly sent for, he kept all his Party (by good Guarding) within his Camp, with fuch diligence, that their Reception could not possibly be bruited abroad, or carried to the Treviri. In the mean time Inducionarus, according to his wonted custom, approached near the Camp, and there Spent a great part of the day; The Horsemen cast their Weapons, and with words of high Reproach called out our Men to Fight; without any word given in answer by them. And a little before the Evening, as they dispersed themselves and departed, upon a Suddain Labienus let out all the Cavalry at two Ports, commanding them, that after the Enemy was put to flight (which he saw would necessarily happen) that every one should makelaster Inducionarus; and that no Man should so much as Wound any other Enemy, no Man flowing in much as Wound any other Enemy, before they faw him Salar, being very unwilling to give him time to escape, while the Soldiers were en-gaged with the rest. And propounded great Rewards to them that slew him. He sent out also several Cohorts to assist the Horse. Fortune made good that direction: For as all made after one, Induciomarus was surprised in the Foord of a River, and Slain, and his Head was brought back into the Camp. The Horsemen returning, slew as many of the rest as they could take. This thing being known, all the Forces of the Eburones and Nervii which were met together departed home ; and after that time Cæsar had Gallia better settled in quietness.

OBSERVATION.

AS the misfortune which befel Sabinus and Cotta put all Gallia into Troubles and Commotions; fo the Head of Induciomarus reduced all into Peace. According as it is faid of the Spaniard, that in some cases one Man is worth a Thousand.

And thus endeth the Fifth Commentary.

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

England, went over stronger and better prepar'd than before, having remedied all those things that had been wanting in the former; nevertheless, being oblig'd to cross the Sea to go over into a Country in which he held no manner of correspondence, going out of another that was newly Conquer'd, subject to Revolts and very unwilling to brook Subjection; he indulg'd his Ambition more than he profited the Romans. In which we will observe first his dexterity and Prudence, in prevailing with those that were most ftirring among the Gauls, to go along with him, to stand him instead of Hostages. But his natural Clemency feems to have made him commit an Error, by only leffening the Authority of Induciomarus, instead of destroying it absolutely, which he was like to have dearly paid for.

Secondly, That he is never daunted by unexpected Accidents, which he remedies as if he had forescen them. He shewed it sufficiently in the violent Storm that disabled all his Ships, which would have flung any other Man into absolute Despair.

Twirdly, That the' the World agrees that no General ever knew how to improve a Victory better than he did, or ever profecuted it with more Vigour; yet he forbore to do it on this occasion, by reason that he was in a strange Country, and that his Campwas not as yet well Fortified.

Let us also observe, That the scarcity of Corn oblig'd him contrary to his Custom to make his Army Winter in different Quarters, and not in one Body, to make it subsist the more easily: He did it so judiciously, that the Places in which he Quarter'd his Men, were neither so distant from each other, as to hinder them from being able to Succour one another, nor yet so near but that they kept divers People in Awe. Nevertheless, the Success of that way of Quartering shews evidently, That there is nothing like remaining in one Body, because a small Body is more liable to be attempted upon than a greater, which em-

Ltho' Cafar, in his fecond Expedition for bolden'd the Gauls to Revolt, and to Attack the Camp of Sabinus and Cotta, upon whom the fubtle Speech of Ambiorix, who, while he was Capitulating with them, told them, That the Revolt was fo general, that the other two Camps were Attack'd at the very fame time, in fuch a manner that they could not fuccour each other: made fuch an impression, and caus'd such a confusion of Advices, that out of fear they chose the worst, which was to abandon their Camp, and to retire. From whence we may gather, that it is always unfafe to follow the Advice of an Enemy, and that nothing is more dangerous than to Retreat within fight of the Enemy.

Cicero's Refistance in his Camp, who refus'd to receive the Council of his Enemy, and refolv'd to defend himself within his Retrenchments prov'd very succeesful and glorious to him, and afforded Cafar time to come to his Relief. In which there are two remarkable Circumstances: The first relating to Cafar, who, being inform'd, That the Gauls were coming up to him to Fight him, finding himself Weak, chose an advantageous Place, Fortifies it, takes a small Circumference for his Camp, to be the better able to defend it, and to make his Enemies believe that he was very Weak; who, after having challeng'd him divers times to Fight, began to despise him, which created a great carelessness in their Order, insomuch that they no longer Attack'd him without Confusion: Having thus lull'd them, he fell upon them so vigorously that he beat them without Refistance: And Labienus, one of his Lieutenants also defeated Induciomarus by the same Stratagem. The second relating to the Gauls, who not being able to force Cicero's Camp, which contain'd Ten Miles circumference, and yet was made in Three Hours time, by Perfons who had nothing but their Swords to dig the Ground with, and nothing but their Cloaths to carry the Earth: Which thows us, what vast number of Men they were, and what may be done in Armies well regulated, and well provided with all things necessary. The

The Sixth COMMENTARY of the Wars in GALLIA

The Argument.

His Summers Commentary setteth forth the Malice of an Enemy that refuseth open Encounter, but keeping himself in the fastness of his Holds, forceth the adverse Party either to leave him untouched, or to seek him out upon disadvantage: Together with such Casualties annexed to the matter, as the power of Fortune doth commonly intermingle with such Occurrences: As also the Manners and Fashions of Life then in use amongst the Germans and

CHAP. I.

Cafar fearing a greater Commotion in Gallia, Mustereth more Forces.

ESAR for many Reasons, expecting greater Troubles in Gallia, appointed M. Silanus, C. Antistius Reginus, and I. Sextius, Legates in his Army, to make a new choice, and muster up more Soldiers; and withal he entreated Cneius Pompeius Proconful, forafmuch as he continued at the City about Publick businesses, that he would recall to their Ensigns, and fend unto him such Soldiers as were before discharged of the Confuls Oath: For he thought it very material for the future time to the opinion of the Gauls, when they should see Italy so mighty, that if they had received any loss by the Casualties of War, they has received any logs by the caputatives of War, they could not only in a floor time make a fupply between, but augment their drmy with greater Forces. Which when Pompey had granted, both for the good of the Commonwealth and Cafair Friendship, the choice being speedily by his Ministers performed, before the Winter was ended Three Legions were involted and handle and the thing that when he Cahourt brought unto him, whereby the number of Cohorts were doubled, which were lost with Q. Titurius: And withal he made experience both by the speed and by the Forces, what the Wealth and Discipline of the People of Rome could do.

The First OBSERVATION.

Otwithstanding any former purpose, I will begin this Commentary with the manner of the choice which the Romans used when they Muftred Soldiers for an intended War: And will lay it first down as the Basis and Ground-work of all Military Architecture, and carried by them with fuch a Ceremonious and grave Respect, as might best express the seriousness of the action, and make the Soldiers understand what consequence the fequel imported. Polybius, who only remaineth of them that have written of the ancient fashion of the Roman War, amongst other parts of their Discipline hath left unto Posterity a compendious Relation of their Musters and Enrollments, which, with the help of other Histories, may be thus understood.

Upon the choice of their Confuls, in the be- polybian ginning of every Year, their Custom was to en- Lib. 6. roll four Legions, two for either Conful. At which enrollment they first chose fourteen Tribunes out of the Body of their Gentlemen, whom they called Equires. These fourteen were such as had served five Years in the Wars, whereby they became eligible of that Dignity. And again, they chose ten other Tribunes out of the Commonalty, being fuch as had feen Ten Years Service: Grounding this Custom upon another Law, which commanded the Equites to serve Ten, and the Pedites or Commons Twenty whole Years before they could be freed and discharged from the Wars. And therefore, according to the proportion of their ftipendary Time, as the Equites were admitted Tribunes at five Years, fo were the Legionary Footmen at Ten, as at half their complear time of ferving in the Wars. The general respect which the Romans had in the choice of every particular Man, from the highest to the lowest, was included in the circumstances of their Age, and of their Wealth. The Age which they deemed fit to endure the labours of War, was from Seventeen to Six and Forty; for so faith Tubero, concerning the first limit of Military Ability, that Servius did enroll Soldiers from the Age of Seventeen Years, adjudging such to be fit for the Service of the Common-weal. And Censorinus expressent the fecond with an Erymology of the Name, where he faith, That Men were called Juvenes unto the Age of Forty Six Years, Quod rempublicam in re militari possint juvare, because till then they were able to help and serve their Country in War. In this ability of Years we are to understand, that the Law required every Man to perfect the com-pleat number of Twenty Years stipend; if there were occasion of so many Wars in that space of Nine and Twenty Years, which is comprehended between Seventeen and Forty Six. The Wealth, which is the fecond circumstance that made

103 Pounds Ster-

Men capable of Military Dignity, was necessarily of War, which are oftentimes able to dull the required to amount to the value of Drachmas quadringentas, as Polybius faith, which, by the Latin Phrase was termed Quaterna millia aris: Such as were not worth to much, were neglected in this choice, and referved for Sea-Service: Neither was it lawful for any Man to attain to any Office or Magistracy within the City, until he had merited Ten Years Stipend. Upon a refolution to make an Inrolment, which was almost every Year, the Confuls did proclaim a day when all Men of Military Age were to present themfelves. Upon which day the Roman Youth being affembled in the City, and then in the Capitol, the fourteen Tribunes elected out of the Body of the Equites, divided themselves according as they were chosen by the People into four Parts: foralmuch as in former time the whole Forces of their Empire confifted of four Legions or Regiments, whercof I have discoursed at large in the former Book. And the four Tribunes first chosen were allotted to the first Legion, the three next to the fecond Legion, the four other to the third, and the three laft to the fourth. In like manner the Ten Tribunes which were taken out of the common Body of the People, divided themselves into four Parts: And the two first chosen were enrolled in the first Legion, the three next in the fecond Legion, the two following in the third Legion, and the three last in the fourth. By which ingenious and discreet allottment it came to pass that the Commonalty were intermingled in the Government of their Armies with the Gentlemen in fuch an excellent mixture, that the Equites were either superior or equal to the Plebeii; notfar carried, the Tribunes of every Legion fate them down by themselves: The People being divided first into their Tribes, and then into their Classes and Centuries, casting Lots which Tribe should be taken; and our of that Tribe whereon the Lot fell they drew four Men, as equal as they could, both in Age and Habitude, who being brought forth, the Tribunes of the first Legion made the first choice of one of those four; then the Tribunes of the fecond Legion had their choice, they of the third Legion took the next, and the fourth had the last Man. And again, out of the same Tribe were other four choien; and then the Tribunes of the fecond Legion began first to make their choice, and so consequently the first Legion had the last Man. Again, four other being chosen, the Tribunes of the third Legion had the first Election, and in that course the fecond Legion had the laft Man. And by this alternate and successive Election is came to pass, that every Legion was equally compounded, both in quality and in number. The Enrolment proceeding in this manner until their Numbers were that Action. full; The Tribunes of every Legion affembled their feveral Troops together, and took one out of every Regiment, and gave an Oath unto him that he should Execute and Obey, according to his Power, whatfoever was commanded him by his General: The rest being particularly called, were Sworn to keep the same Oath which their Foreman had taken. And thus we see both, who were the Electors, who were eligible, and the manner of their choice. Wherein we may obferve what means they used to engage every particular Man with an Interest in the general-Cause: For they thought it not fufficient to force Men out by publick Authority, and to bind them fimply to that Service by the Mandares of their Empire, confidering the Labours and Difficulties edge of the greatest Spirit, and to cause omissions of duty in the most honest and obedient Minds 2 but they tyed them likewife with fuch particular Respects, as did both concern the Postessions of their Fortune, and the Religion of their Soul. For it is observed concerning Man's Actions, that unless the Mind do faithfully affect the execution. it may be carried with fuch a perfunctory Service, as thall betray the true intent to no effect, and deceive the end of that which was promifed by defignment. And therefore they refused to enrol any Man that had not a convenient proportion of Wealth, to maintain a ftedfaft and well-refolved Courage, and to fettle the moti-ons of a flaggering Mind, when they bethought themselves that the publick Duties, wherein they were engaged, were the defensive Powers of their Empire, and the means whereby the publick Weal continued happy: And so by consequence their private Fortunes were affired from Violence, and preferved only by an effectual observance of their Military Discipline. I grant that it is not altogether Wealth that doth Grace and Formalize the Actions of Men; for in some Cases Penuty and Want makes Men more Valorous, according to the Auswer which a Soldier once made to Luculius :

Ibit eo quo vis, qui zonam perdidit, inquit.

Horace.

Whither you will, he'll go, who's loft his Purfe.

Notwithstanding, forasmuch as the publick cause is either misprized or well affected, accorwithstanding that every Legion had an equal ding as it doth concern every Man in particular; number of Tribunes. The Election being thus as who will doubt of the uttermost diligence of those Mariners, that have their Vessel fraught with their own Goods? Or contrariwise, who will blame a Mercenary Pilor for making Peace with Death, with the loss of other Mens Merchandize ? for Patria est ubicunque bene est, That's a Man's Country where he is well, as one truly faith; and the estimation we have of this Life is entertained only by the benefits we hold by our Life: Therefore it much importeth a State to have fuch Agents to negotiate the publick businesses, as are engaged in the same by the interest of their own particular. Neither was it sufficient in that Government to choose Men of Ability both in their Body and in their Substance, but they found it necessary to bind their Conscience with a Religious Consecration, and to Swear a faithful Obedience to their General, which, with the reverence of the place, being the Capitol, and other Ceremonies of Majesty attending the enrolment, doth manifestly shew how much the Romans imputed to this part of their Discipline, being the foundation of the sequel of

The Second OBSERVATION

SEcondly, I observe the benefit which an opumisfortune received by an Enemy: Which confifteth chiefly in the reinforcing, or, if it may be, in the redoubling of fuch Troops as the calualties of War have confumed. For it much abatetli the Spirit of a People, and turneth the Pride of a Victory into discouragement and faintness of Heart, when they see their best and most fortunate endeavours atchieve nothing but a reiteration of their Labours, and are driven to begin again that work which with much difficulty and hazard they had once Overcome. For it is the end that maketh any labour to be undertaken being otherwise nothing but a pain of the body and vexation of the spirit. And herefore when it shall be found either circular, or of many confrontments, before it can answer the designments of our Mind, we chuse rather to forego that contentment which the accomplishment of our defires would afford us, than to buy it with fuch a measure of trouble, as exceedeth that which the proportion of our means feemeth able to effect. In regard whereof the ancient Sages of the World made a task of this quality to be one of Hercules's labours, by feigning the Serpent Hydra to be of this nature, that when one head was fmitten off. two other heads grew out prefently from the same ftump: And fo his labour multiplied his travail. and his Valour encreased the difficulty of his Work. It was Cafar's custom in other cases, to have such a beginning of strength at his first en-trance into a War, as by continuance might be augmented, and rather encrease than decay upon the refistance of an Enemy. So he began the War in Gallia with fix Legions, continued it with eight, and ended it with ten: He began the civil War but with one Legion; he arrived at Brandu-fum with Six; he followed Pompey into Greece with fifteen thousand Foot and five thousand Horse; and ended that War with two and twenry thousand Foot and a thousand Horse. He began the War at Alexandria with three thousand two hundred Foot, and ended it with fix Legions. "He began the War in Africk with fix, and ended it with eight Legions. And thus he imitated natural motion, being stronger in the end than in the beginning, and made his Army as a plant like to grow great, and fprout out into many Branches, rather than to die or decay for want of ftrength or

CHAP. II.

The Treviri follicite the Germans and some of the States of Gallia. Cafar carrieth four Legions into the Territories of the Nervii.

Part of the Diocess of Glos.

Nduciomarus being flain, as is related in the former Book, the *Treviri gave the Go-wernment unto his Kinsfolk: Who inter-mitted no time to folicite their Borderers with the Germans, and to promise them Money with the Germans, and to promife them Money for the Wars. When they could not prevail with their Neighbours, they tryed those that were farther of; And baving foundsome that hearkened to their Designs, they confirmed their League, with a mutual Outh, giving pledges for assurance of Money, and withat they drew Ambiorix into their society and confederation. Which things being known, Cæsar perceiving the preparations which in every part were made for War, the † Nervii, * Aduatici, and the † Menapii, with all the Germans on the other fide of the Rhine to be in Arms, the Senones not to come being summoned, but to be in counsel with the * Carnutes and their bordering States, the Germans, to be folicited with often Embassages from the Treviri; he held it best to think of War sooner than heretofore he was accustomed. And therefore before the Winter was ended, with four Legions that lay next together, he entered fuddenly upon the Confines of the Nervii, and having taken a great number of Men and Cattel, before they could either make head or fly away, he distributed the booty to the Soldiers, wasted the Country, caused the People to come in, and to give Pledges unto him, That business being speedily ended, he brought the Legions back again into their winter Quarters.

The First OBSERVATION.

This exemplary course of proceeding in pu- Exemplary mining some one for the offences of many, Justice. hath ever been held the best means to repress rebellious and factious motions, as well amongst particular Subjects which do conspire against the common Policy of a State, as also of such inferiour Cities and States as shall entertain a Confederacy prejudicial to the Sovereignty of an Empire: For in all fuch Combinations the Undertakers are ever more confident in the affiftance and mutual encouragement of each others affent and forwardness, than in the strength of their own particular means. For the Mind propounding a course contrary to a vertuous direction, is always suspicious and mitrufful of the Iffue: For as honest motions and conceptions of the Heart are attended with and conceptions of the Freat are attended with affurance, fo doth diffidency wait upon indi-rect and perfidious defignments. And thence it happeneth that when the inward thoughts can afford no means of emboldening, they commonly rely upon each others example, and do make the action to appear honeft unto themfelves, forasmuch as so many Associates do approve it. For the prevention whereof in the Continent of Gallia, Casar first laid a heavy hand upon the Nervii, being well affured, that as rebellious motions are ftrengthened and drawn on by the mutual example of conspiring Members, fo they may be weakened and extinguished by the exemplary ruin and fubversion of some one or more of the said Members, which is as forcible to diffwade as the other to encourage: Suiting right with the tenour of Juffice, which ought to be carried in such fort against offenders, that by the punishment of some few the fear may touch all. According as the Poet describeth the nature and effect of Thunder;

Ipse Pater media Nimborum in Nocte corusca Fulmina molitur dextra, quo maxima Motu Terra tremit, fugêre Fera, & Mortalia Corda Per Gentes humilis statuit pavor ; ille flagranti Aut Athon, aut Rhodopea, aut alta Ceraunia dextra Dejicit. -The whole Earth trembled, but one Hill only fmoaked for it.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Secondly, I observe the respect which C.s.far had to the extraordinary labour of his Soldi- dinary forests: For whereas they were drawn out of vas. 1st St. their Winter Quarters before Winter was die errantended, and were carried unfeafonably upon marded. a Service, he rewarded them with the Booty and spoil of the Enemy: contrary to the ordinary course of the Roman Warfare, which referved either all or the most part thereof for the publick Treasury, and left the Soldier to his flipendiary entertainment. Which is a Point very observable in the carriage of a War: Wherein are required as well eminent and extraordinary Attempts, as common and usual duties, and in the judgment of a wife Com-mander are thought worthy their answerable rewards. At the Siege of Gergovia as it followeth in the feventh Commentary, L. Fabius a Centurion told his Companions, that the Booty and Pillage which he had got at the taking of Avaricum would not fuffer any Man to get up upon the Wall before himself. And so for the most part it falleth out, that honourable

Cæfar.

Lib. VI.

Attempts being honourably rewarded, do as Seed fown in good ground, multiply the increase of like vertuous actions. And this was one principal means which he used to give Courage and Valour part thereof, as it might thereby prove to his Soldiers; as when he went to get Spain from Pompey and that Faction, he borrowed Money of the Tribunes and Centurions, and gave it in largess to the Soldiers, whereby he gained (as he faith) two advantages, quod pignore animos Centurionum devinxit, & largitione redemit militum voluntates, for he engaged the Centurions to him whilft he had this pledge from them, and by his largefs purchased the good will of the Soldiers.

CHAP. III

Casar summoneth a general Council, and carrieth his Army against the Senones.

General Council or meeting of all the States of Gallia being summoned, according to his or Gauta verny, jummonea, accounting to the first refolution, in the beginning of the Spring, whereas all the rest, saving the Second Carnutes, and Treviri, made their appearance; he conceived of it as the beginning of War and defection, and thereupon fetting all other things afide, he transferred the Council to the City of Paris in the confines of the Senones, which in the time of their Fathers had united their State unto them, but were held clear of this Confederacy. This thing being published from the Tribunal, the same day he carried the Legions against the Senones, and by great journeys came into their Country. His coming being known, Acco the chiefest Author of that Rebellien, commanded the multitude to go into the Cities and Towns of defence: But as they endeavoured, before it could be accomplished, News was brought that the Romans were already come; whereby they necef-Sarily left off their purpose, and Sent Ambassadors to Cælar to intreat for favour. They used the mediation of the Hedui, whose State had of old time been in faith and league with the Romans. Cæsar at the suit of the Hedui, did willingly afford them pardon, and accepted their excuse, forasmuch as he judged the Summer time fitter to be spent in the ter of Question and Judgment: And having com-manded an hundred Pledges, he delivered them to be kept by the Hedui. The Carnutes likewise sent Messegers and Pledges, and by the intreaty of the Men of Rheims, whose Tributaries they were, received the same answers. Cæsar ended the Council, and commanded Horsemen to be sent him from all the States of Gallia.

The First OBSERVATION.

TT shall not feem impertinent to the Reader, that I take occasion here to fay formewhat touching the use and benefit of this Parliament or Councilgeneral, wherein all the States of Gallia, or at the least such as did acknowledge the Roman Soveraignty, presented their fealty, and were mutual witneffes of each others Allegiance. Concerning a fufficient argument to Cafar of their rebellion, which we are to understand, that as all natural and deferved the reward of open revolt. bodies have a transitory Being, depending upon motion and function of parts; fo specially States and Commonweals, as fympathizing with natural causes, have no certain continuance in one and the fame Being, but are subject to the alteration of Time and Fortune, and do pass the ages of a natural Life, from Infancy growing to better ftrength, until it come to the best persection which years can afford it, and then decaying again by like degrees, even to the period and death of that either dangerous or unprofitable, amongst other helps, these Councils and Meetings have been thought necessary; wherein every particular State and City had some of their Society present, as well to open their grievances, if any were, and to feek ease and relief by way of Treaty and Dispute, as also to receive such Directions and Mandates as the wifdom of the Prince should think meet for their Government. For as this Common-Council or General Affembly may well be termed the Pulse of a Politick Body, whereby the true state and temperature thereof is discerned: So is it also as a Treaty or Parlee, and a renewing of the Conditions of Peace between the Head and the Members; where Soveraignty and Obe-dience being mutually propounded, do concurr in the establishing of true and perfect Government. And this is that which the Politicians of later time do in their Writings call the reducing of a Commonweal to the first beginning: For the noisome and superfluous humours being by this means purged and abated, the body of the Publick weal is refined into fuch true and natural Elements, and fetled in that disposition of health as may give great hope of long continuance. Befides this use and benefit of these Assemblies, there were many necessary businesses concluded, and many things agreed unto, ferving to the maintainance of War against Parties and Factions; as namely the levies and supplies of Horse and Foot, granted by this Council as a fubfidy, which in the Roman Army received flipend and pay by the name of Auxiliary or Affociate Forces, whereof we ready in many places of these Commentaries, and particularly in this Book. But the Romans used specially the service of their Horsemen, as the flower of their ftrength, and far exceeding their Foot Companies in execution of Arms and use of War, wherein the Gauls have ever challenged a pre-eminence before other their neighbour Nations, and have continued The Fred the same reputation even unto this time. Whether The France better it be in regard of the nimble and quick motions Horfemen War which was coming on him, rather than in matfwift and speedy execution of Horse, than with men. any readiness which their own strength can afford them, or what other cause it hath, I know not: But this I am sure of, that as the World taketh notice of their hot Phantasies, so would the French be reckoned the best Horsemen of any other Nation. The laft faying which I observe concerning this Council is, the time wherein it was fummoned, which was the beginning of the Spring, rather than any other part of the year, whereof there is this reason; that if any State neglected the Summons, and refused to make their appearance according to cuftom, the Summer time coming on, gave good means to the Roman Legions to punish the infolency of such a contempt: As it happened in this place to the Senones, Carnutes and Treviri, whose absence from this meeting was

The Second OBSERVATION.

The fecond thing which I will briefly observe No 100 mile in this Chapter, is the pardon which Cafar frend the time willingly gave the Senones at the mediation of in manue for the Hedur; not so much for the respect he bare unto the Hedui, although they had of long time performed good fervice to the Roman Empire, and were found more faithful than all the States of

COMMENTARIES. Gallia; (howbeit I doubt not but that he was glad of that occasion to gratifie the Hedui;) but as a Mafter in that faculty, well knowing what best fuited with the publick profit in all times and feasons, he would not mispend the Summer in queftions and dispute concerning former errours, which might better be remembred upon other occasions, but rather in profecuting War against other special revolters, as a matter more behoveful to the advancement of the Empire, and best sitting the time of Summer. For in following a business, there is nothing more available to a fortunate iffue, than to be able to diftinguish of the validity of the parties, and to discern which hath most interest in the bulk of the matter, that so we may not be mistaken in our defigns, but follow that course as shall most advantage our purpose. And here a General is to take special care, that no humorous respect do hinder that resolution which true judgment ap-proveth: For oftentimes it falleth out, that either particular profit, delighting pleasures, defire of revenge, or some other unseasonable affection doth fo intangle them in their proceedings, as they never attain to the main drift of the action: And this is called flumbling by the way.

CHAP. IV.

Cafar intendeth the War of the Treviri.

His part of Gallia being quieted, he bent his whole mind to make War against the Treviri and Ambiorix, commanding Cavarinus with the Cavalry of the Senones to go along with him, left any Tumult should happen in his absence, either through his discontentment, or the malice of the State. These things being thus de-termined, for asmuch as he well knew that Ambiorix would not come to blows in open fight, he endeavoured by what means he could to understand his other purposes. The Menapii were borderers upon the con-fines of the Eburones, inclosed about with a defence of Bogs and Woods; and only they of all the States of Gallia had never fent to Cæsar touching any contract of Peace: Of them Ambiorix was received and had familiar entertainment. And further he understood that by the means of the Treviri the Germans were brought to a contract of friendship with him also. These belps he thought were fit to be taken from Ambiorix, before he fet upon him with open War; lest despairing of his safety, he should either hide himself amongst the Menapii, or he com-pelled to sty over the Rhine to the Germans. In this resolution he sent the Baggage of the whole Army with a convoy of two Legions to Labienus, who was then in the Territories of the Treviri, and he himfelf with five expedient and unburthened Legions made towards the Menapii. They having made no head, but trusting to the strength of the place, fled into the Woods and Bogs, and carried all they had with them. Cæfar dividing his Forces to C. Fabius a Legate, and M. Craffus the Treafirer, having made speedy provision of Bridges, did fet upon them in three parts, and burnt Houses and Villages, and took great numbers of Men and Cattel, whereby the Menapii were constrained to to their excellency in deeds of Arms, for want fend to Casar for Peace. He having taken Pledges of them, assured them that he would esteem them into their Country, or any Messengers from him.

The matter being thus compounded, be left among them Comits of Arras with certain Hosse, as a Garrison to that place, and he himself. faid that (notwithstanding the many Battels which Garrison to that place, and he himself made towards the Treviri.

OBSERVATION.

HEnce we may observe, that as it falleth out in other things for the most part, so especially in matter of War there is such a medley and interlacing of material circumstances with the body of the action, that commonly one business begets another. Cxfar's chief design at this time was the War against Ambiorix and the Treviri: But confidering the Contract and League between them and the Menapii, he would not profecute the War of the Treviri, until he had taken away that affiftance, and left them in the nakedness of their own strength. Wherein we may first observe what opinion Cofar held of Allies and Affociates, or any other that gave help Cafris and or affiftance to an Enemy. For bendes this par- and Affociates, we may read in the fourth Commenta- and Affociates. ry, that the chiefest cause that moved him to take the Voyage into Britain was, for that the Britains had underhand given fuccour and affiftance to the Gauls; a matter not to be neglected in his judgment, whether it were in regard of any friendship or good respect which they bare unto the Gauls, or otherwise to keep the Romans occupied there, that they in the mean time might live quietly at home, which I need not here dispute: But the matter proveth it self plainly by Casar's own confession, that the continual fupplies sent from Britain were a sufficient cause to move him to that War. And as it followeth in this Commentary concerning the felf fame matter, the only cause that drew him to pass the Rhine the second time into Germany, was the fuccours which the Germans had formerly fent to the Treviri; according to reason in cases of other natures, that he that will extinguish a Lamp, must not suffer an addition of Oil. nor admit the influence of leffer streams when he goeth about to dry up the greater River. But that which was the occasion of this business. and might have challenged the first place in this discourse, was, for that Cosar was almost affured that Ambiorix would not be brought to a tryal of Battel; and therefore he laboured to understand his other projects. From whence a Commander may receive direction what course to hold in a refufal of open Encounter: For as the Art and fleight of War is to subdue an Enemy, fo are there more ways and means to effect that purpose, than by waging Battel; as I have discoursed at large in the third Com- Chap. 10. mentary: Whereunto I may add thus much, which is generally observed in the carriage of great and eminent Commanders, that fuch as failed in matter of Negotiation, and wanted dexterity in managing the course of their business, (notwithstanding any fortune or fingularity in striking a Battel,) did never attain to firm and permanent Honour. If any Man be defirous to descend into particulars, let him look into the Lives of King Pyrrbus, Demetrius, Han-nibal, and Caius Marius, whose latter ends, or shutting up of their Lives, were not answerable of that judicial disposition of their business which

Cafar might boaft of, of whom it may be truly

CHAP. V.

Labienus overthroweth the Treviri by guile.

Hile Cæsar was about these things, the Treviri having raifed great Forces both of Horse and Foot, had a purpose confines with one Legion. And as they were within two days journey of him, they had intelligence of two Legions more which Cælar had fent unto him; whereupon they encamped themselves some fifteen miles distant from him, and resolved there to attend the German Forces. Labienus being advertised of their resolution, hoping through their raskness to find some good opportunity of Encounter, he left five Coborts for the Safety of the Carriages, and with five and twenty other Cohorts, besides great Forces of Horse, he marched towards the Enemy, and encamped himself within a mile of them. Between Labienus and the Enemy there ran a River, the paffage whereof by reason of the broken Banks, was very bard and difficult: This River he did not purpose to pass himself, and doubted the Enemy would not be drawn to do it. They had every day more hopes of fresh aid. In the Meetings and Councils of War he gave out, That forasmuch as the Germans were said to be at hand, he would neither hazard himfelf nor the fortunes of the Army, but he would rather remove his Camp the next day very early in the morning. This was quickly carried to the Ene-my, as amongst many of the Gauls that were with him, some of them did naturally favour the proceedings of their own Nation. Labienus having in the Night-time called unto him the Tribunes of the Soldiers, and the Centurions of the first Orders, acquainted them with his purpose; and to the end be might give greater suspicion of sear to the Ene-my, he caused the Camp to be dislodged with more Noise and Tumult than the Roman discipline had usually observed; and thereby made the retreat not unlike a flight or escape: Which before Day-light (the two Camps being so near one to the other) was by the discoverers brought to the Enemy. The last Traops of the Romans were scarce gone out of the Camp, but the Gauls encouraging one another not to lofe so hopeful a prey, thinking it long (especially the Romans being thus affrighted) to expect the German Forces, and that it flood not with their dignity, being fo able, and fo many in number, not to adventure upon a handful of Men, flying from them, and troubled besides with Baggage and Burden; and therefore they doubted not to pass the River, and to give them Battel in a place of difadvantage. Labienus fispeding that which now had bappened, to the end be might draw them all ever the River, he made as though he would go on forward. At length sending the Carriages a little forward. At tengen country the country a tittle before, and placing them upon a Hill, Ie have now, (faid he) fellow Soldiers, that opportunity which ye defired, the Enemy in a cumbersom and unequal place; only afford me your Leader at this time that Valour, which oftentimes heretofore you have showed to your General; imagine him to be present, and to see this service with his own eyes. And withal he commanded the Ensigns to be carried towards the Enemy, and the Army to be imbattelled: And leaving a few Troops of Horse with the Carriages, be disposed the rest in the Wings of the Army. The Romans taking up a Cry and a Shout, did speedily cast their Pikes at the Enemy: Who when they faw the Romans ready to affault them, whom they had thought had fled from them for fear, they were so discouraged that even in the first close they betook themselves to flight towards the next Woods.

Labienus pursuing them with his Horsemen, killed many of them, and took more Prisoners, and within a few days took in the whole State of the Treviri: For the Germans which came to their succour, understanding of their overthrow, returned home again; and with them went also the Kinsmen of Induciomarus, the Authors of that defection. The Soveraignty and Government was given to Cingetorix, who to affault Labienus Wintering in their from the beginning had ever been true and Loyal to the Romans.

The First OBSERVATION.

Have already handled this practice of a pre- Com. 3.000. tended fear, which the History doth so often recommend to our confideration, and have shewed the inconvenience of over-light credulity, leading fuch inconfiderate Persons to a disappointment of their hopes, and confequently to the hazard of their fortune. I will now proceed to that of their fortune. I will now proceed to that which is further implyed in this relation, and respecteth the chiefest duty of a chief Com- The day of mander: And that is, what specially is required Goods in of a General in the carriage and direction of a very Band. Battel. Concerning which point, as there is nothing more material to the effecting of any business than opportunity of time, conveniency of place, and an orderly disposition of the means according to time and place: So in question of Encounter or waging Battel, the duty of a Leader may be included in these three circumstances. Concerning the quality of the place, as the chiefeft and first respected in the choice of a judicial directour, the whole scope of the Roman discipline, from the time of their first Kings, even to the last of their Emperours, did always aim at the advantage of place, as a necessary help for the obtaining of Victory: which I have already noted in the Helvetian action. Yet forasmuch as the Lib. 1.006 wildom and experience of those times did deem it a circumstance of such importance, give me leave once again to inforce the use thereof by these examples. Habetis, milites, (faith Labienus in this place) quam petiistis facultatem, hostem iniquo atque impedito loco tenetis, prastate eandem nobis ducibus virtutem, quam sapenumero Imperatori prastitistis, Ye have, fellow-Soldiers, that opportunity which ye defired, &c. Whereby he cleareth himfelf of all imputation of ill direction, as having performed the uttermost duty of a Commander, and given such helps by the advantage of the place as are requisite to an easie Victory, leaving the rest to the execution of the Soldiers. Casar at the loss he received at Dyrrachium, cleared himself to his Soldiers in this fort : Qued effet acceptum detrimenti, cuivis potius quam sue culpa debere tribui, locum securum ad dimicandum dedisse, &c. the damage that was received was to be attributed to any body rather than him, he had chosen them a safe place of fighting, $\mathfrak{C}c$. And as it followeth in the feventh Commentary, being imbattelled upon the fide of a Hill right over-against the Army of the Gauls, which stood likewise in a readiness to entertain the Roman Valour, he would not fuffer his Men to hazard themselves in the passage of a Bogg of fifty foot in breadth lying between both the Armies, but rather perfuaded his Soldiers, difdaining the affronts of the Enemy, to endure their contumely, rather than to buy a Victory with the danger of fo many worthy Men, and patiently to attend some further opportunity. Which passage of Casar, even in the said terms as it is there related, was urged to good purpose by Sir Francis Vere in the year One thousand fix hundred, at a Consultation before the Battel of Newport. For the Battel of Army of the Netherlanders being poffest of the Newport

Downs, which are small swelling Hills rising unevenly along the Sea-shore upon the Coast of Flanthus before them, Sextus Tempanius, do you beders, and the Enemy making a ftand upon the Sands at the foot of thole Hills, and so cutting off the paffage to Oftend, it was disputed by the Commanders, whether they should leave the Downs, and go charge the Enemy where he ftood imbattelled upon the Sands, or attend him in the fastness of the Downs whereof they were possest. The whole Council of War were earneftly bent to forsake the Downs, and to hazard the fight on equal terms, as impatient that their passage and retreat to Oftend should be cut off. But Sir Francis Vere well knowing how much it imported the and advantage, perfuaded Count Maurice by many reasons, and specially by this of Casar which I last alledged, not to forgo the help of the Downs, but to expect the Enemy in that place, and fo make use of that benefit upon the first encounter rather than to adventure the success of the Battel in whose terms, in hope of clearing the passage: And shewing also many probable conjectures, that the Enemy would not continue long in that posture. Wherein as his opinion then prevailed, fo all that were present were eye-witnesses both of the truth of his conjecture, and the foundness of his judgment. For the Enemy within a while after coming on to charge the Troops of the States, was received with fuch an incounter from the Hills, and were violently beaten back in such such rude manner, as our Men had the execution of them for the space of a quarter of a mile or more, which was no small advantage to the fortune of that day. Touching the opportunity of time, which Pindarus calleth the Mother of worthy Exploits, and oftentimes dependeth upon the circumstance of place, a General ought carefully to advise that he neither precipitate nor hinder the occasion, which is well expressed in this particular service of Labienus. For where his purpose was to draw the Enemy over a River that had fleep and uneafie Banks, and thereby of a hard and difficult paffage, he would not hew his refolution until he had drawn them all over the River: For he was well affured that the Roman Legions would so charge the Enemy upon their first encounter with the unrefistable weight of their Piles, that in their giving back they could not escape the danger of the River. And therefore to make the Victory more absolute and compleat, he suffered them all to come over the Water, that all might be endangered in their paffage back again. And this is the benefit which opportunity bringeth, which is the rather to be artended with all carefulness, forasmuch as Non

Concerning the last circumstance, of the apt and fit disposition of the Forces according to time and place, which is necessarily required in the duty of a General; it is referred to this end only, that they may be ranged in fuch manner, that as one Man is affiftant to another in their feveral one brain is animant to another in their reversal Files and Ranks, so one Troop may be in fubfidiis, affiftant to another, to the end that no part may stand naked, or fall in the singleness of its own ftrength, but that one may second another from the first to the last. C. Sempronius a Roman Conful, having fought unadvitedly, and received an overthrow, Julius the Tribune of the People caused Tempanius a Horseman that was present at the Battle to be called, and as Livy reportern it, Coram cis, Sexte Tempani, inquit, arbitreris voces quam manum boffes territare, Si fugam ne C. Sempronium Confulem, aut in tempore pugoften nor long the fame opportunity.

lieve that C. Sempronius the Conful chose a good time to fight, or that he took order for affiftant fupplies to his Army? For Livy faith, he fought incaute inconsultèque, non subsidiis sirmata acie, non equite apre locato, heedlessy and without good advice, neither strengthening his Army with supplies, nor well placing his Cavalry. And of these three circumstances consistent the duty and office of a General, touching the direction of a Battel; wherein whosoever faileth, doth hazard the prerogative of his command over that Army which business of that day to hold a place of fuch gain of his Commentaries, So five, quibuscunque exercitus dicto audiens non fuerit, aut male re gesta fortunam defuisse, aut aliquo facinore comperto, avaritia esse convictum, that he knew well, whenfoever an Army refused to be obedient to their Commander, it was either because upon some ill fuccess they saw he was unfortunate, or that by the discovery of some notorious matter they found him guilty of Avarice. Which Cafar himself needed not to fear, if we may believe Plutarch, In the life of who writeth that he was indowed by nature Cert with an excellent promptitude and aptness to take opportunity in any business.

The Second OBSERVATION.

May not omit to infift a little upon this noise The afe and May not omit to initit a little upon this note the sign and or shout which the Soldiers took up in the in-bones of a stant of the charge, and is related in this place flows tak up that of the charge, and is related in this place flows tak up as a material point in their carriage at this fervice. of sub-A Custom ancient and usual in the Reman Armies, as well in the time of their first Kings, as their first Consuls. Fusi primo impetu & clamore bostes, the Enemies were overthrown at the first onser and flour, faith Livy concerning Romulus. And Lib. it not long after, Conful nee promovit aciem, nee Lib. 2: clamorem reddi passus, the Consul neither marched his Army forward, nor suffered them at all to shout. C.efar in the censure which he gave concerning Pempey's direction for the Battel at Lib. 3. Pharfalia, doth express a double use of this civil. clamour or shouting: First the terrour of the Enemy, and secondly the encouragement or asfurance of themselves: Est quadam animi incitatio (saith he) atque alacritas naturaliter innata omnibus, quæ studio pugnæ incenditur; hanc non reprimere sed augere imperatores debent: neque frustra antiquitus institutum est ut signa undique concinerent, clamorem universi tollerent, qui-Sape, ac diu, eadem occasio est, a Man hath neither the constituent, cannot minutely toutent, qui-bus rebus & hoffes terreri & fuos incitari ex-istimaverumi. There is a certain rising and chearfulness of the mind inbred naturally in all, which is ftirred up by an eagerness to fight. This a General should not crush but cherish. So that it was not without cause that in old times they had a custom the whole Army should make a noise and raise a general shour, whereby they supposed as the Enemies were affrighted, so their own Men were encouraged. Two contrary effects proceeding from a cause, which to common fense carrieth no shew of any such efficacy: Vox & praterea nibil, a bare voice and nothing more; as one faid of the Nigh-tingale in another fense. But such as do ferioully look into the reasons thereof, shall find the faying true which is ascribed to the elder and Voices fooner than Hands may affright the Enemy and put him to flight. The Ear, as I have already noted, will fooner betray the Soul to the diffreis of fear, than any other of the five Lib. 3 cap. 18. Senfes. Which Josephus well understood, although peradventure he applied not so fit a Remedy, when he commanded his Men to stop their Ears at the Acclamations of the Roman Legions, left they might be daunted and amazed thereat. The reason may be, for that our Discourse (diligently attending upon a matter of that consequence which calleth the Lives of both Parties in Question, and valuing every circumstance at the utmost) doth always presuppose a cause answerable to such an effect of joy and affurance. For these Shouts and Acclamations are properly the consequents of Joy, and are so available that they deceive both Parties: For such as take up the shout by way of Anticipation, do feem to conclude of that which is yet in question; and the Enemy thereupon apprehenderh danger when there is none at all, whereencouraged, as Cafar noteth. Besides these Examples, I might alledge the authority of Holy Writ, but that it might seem both unlavory and Si vous estes bien, unseasonable to make a commixture of such diversities. I will therefore content my self with a practice of our time at the Battel of Newport, where, after divers Retreats and Pursuits, either fide chafing the other as it were by turn and mutual appointment, and as it often falleth out in fuch Rencounters, at last commandment was given Cafar carrieth his Army over the Rhine into to the English to make head again, and after some pause to Charge the Enemy with a Shout; which being accordingly performed, a Man might have feen the Enemy startle before they came to the froak; and being Charged home, were fo Routed, that they made not head again that day. For the prevention of fuch a difadvantage, there can be no better Precedent than that which Plutarch noteth, touching the Battel between the Romans and the Ambrons, a part of that deluge of People which came down into Italy with the Cimbri and Teutones; for these Ambrons coming out to give Battel, to the end they might ftrike fear into the Romans, made an often repetition of their own Name, with a loud founding voice, Ambrons, Ambrons, Ambrons. The Italians on the other fide that first came down to Fight were the Ligurians, Inhabiting the Coast of Genoa, who hearing this noise, and plainly understanding them, made answer with the like cry, sounding out their own name, Ligurii, Ligurii, Ligurii. Whereupon the Captains of both fides made their Soldiers cry out altogether, contending for Envy one against another who should cry it loudest: And so both sides were encouraged, and neither of them disadvantaged, Clamore utrinque sublato, whilft both fides continued the cry.

Lib. I.

Lib. VI.

This Labienus was a great Soldier, and well acquainted with Cafar's manner in Leading an Army, and made many good Fights while he continued under his Command: But after he betook himself to Pompey's part, and joyned with a Faction against his first Master, he never atchieved any thing but loss and dishonour.

Dux fortis in armis Cafareis Labienus erat, nunc transfuga vilis.

Once Labienus was a Captain Stout On Casar's fide, now a base Turn-about.

And upon that occasion he is often mentioned as a Memorial of his Difloyalty, to prove that good Success in matter of War, doth follow the General rather than any inferior Captain. For it is observed of divers, whose fortune hath been great under the Conduction of fome Commanders, and as unlucky under other Leaders: Like Plants or Trees that thrive well in fome Grounds, and bear store of Fruit, but being transplanted, do either dye or become Barren. And doubtlefs, there may be observed the like sympathy or contrariety in the particular courses of Man's Life, wherein they are carried upon the stream of their Fortunes, according to the course of their first Embarking. And therefore such as happen in a way that leadeth to successful Ends, shall much wrong themselves, either to turn back again, or by it happeneth, Helies terreit, & Just missari, that the Enemies are affrighted, and our own Men and uncertain: And herein the French faying may Si vous estes bien, tenez vous la.

If you find your felf well, hold your felf there.

CHAP. VI.

Æsar being come from the Menapii Casar. to the Treviri, did refolve to pass the Rhine for two Causes: The one was, for that the Germans had fent Succours and Supplies to the Treviri; the other that Ambiorix might have no Reception or Entertainment among them. Upon this Resolution, a little above that place where be carried his Army over before, he Commanded a Bridge to be made after the known and him to clear themselves from Imputation of Disloy-alty, and that the Treviri had received no Supplies And thereupon he accepted the fatisfaction of the out of the Fields into their Towns, hoping that the barbarous and unskilful Men might, through want of Victuals, be drawn to Fight upon hard Conditions. He gave Order also, that they should every day send out Scouts to the Suevi, to understand what they did. The Ubii did as they were Commanded, and, after a few days, brought word that all the Suevi, having received certain news of the approach of the Roman and fastened with Anchors before and behind, Army, had retired themselves and all their Forces to their utmost Confines, where there was a Wood of an infinite Greatness, called Bacenis, which served as a Native Wall or Defence to keep the Chirusci from the Incursions of the Suevi, and the Suevi from the Injury and Spoil of the Chirusci. That at the entrance of this Wood the Sucvi did expect the coming of the Romans.

OBSERVATION.

I will hold my former purpose, not to deliver any thing concerning Bridges, whereof there are so many Treatise already extant: Neither will I go about to describe the substantial Building or ingenious Workmanship of this Bridge here mentioned, which might well befeem Cafar and his Army: For as he only could, or at the leaft did put in practice the making thereof, so will I leave the description to himself, as best suiting with his Eloquence. But forasmuch as Brancatio an Italian Writer taketh occasion from hence to run into Ignorance and Error, give me leave to fet a Mark upon this place, left others, not knowing the ancient course, should run their Bark upon the same Shallows. Amongst other Advertisements (being but fourteen in all) which he hath given upon Cafar's Commentaries, he noteth and commendeth the use of Bridges made of Boats, which are commonly carried in an Army-Royal to that purpole, before this or any other Invention of former Times, especially in regard of the easiness and expedition which may be used both in making such a Bridge, and taking it up again: For the Boats being prepared ready, as ufually they are in Camps-Royal, fuch a Bridge may be made in a day, which Cafar could not do in Ten, but with great wonderment and admiration. And therein I hold well with Brancatio, that for the speedy transportation of an Army over a River, there is no readier means than a Bridge of Boats, Wester Men: Presupposing the Boats to be first in a readiness.

Waste sharp. But that which he concludeth is, That Mens Wits and readier in these Times are much sharper and readier than those of former Ages, forafmuch as they have found out an easie and expedient course, which former Times could never reach unto. Wherein I will not go about to derogate any thing from the condition of the Time in which we live and breath, but do defire to find them better accomplifted than any other foregoing Ages; howfoever I may fufpect a greater weaknefs of Wit in thefe days, wherein the Temperature of the Body is worse conditioned than it was in the time of our Forefathers, as may appear by many Arguments, and ferveth not fo fitly to the working Powers of the Mind, as it did before this multiplicity of mixture, when the state of Mens Bodies were compounded of those perfect Elements which were in our first Parents. But for this reason which Brancatio alledgeth, the Reader may be pleased to understand, that the use of Boat-bridges was both known and in practice, as well before the Roman Empire, as in the time of their Government. Herodotus relating the Paffage of Xerxes's Army into Greece, describeth this Bridge of Boats Children of their Princes for Pledges, and caused (which Brancatio would attribute to the Invention of our Times) in the felf same manner, or rather more artificially than hath been accustomed in these later Ages: For finding that no Timber-work would serve the turn to make a sufficient Bridge over the streights of Hellespont, being seven Furlongs in breadth, he caused Biremes and Triremes and to be joyned together with Planks and Boards, and then covered with Sand and Gravel, raising a Hedge or Blind on each fide thereof, to the end the Horse and Cattel might not be afraid at the working of the Billow, and fo made a Bridge for the passage of his Army. And in the time of the Roman Empire, Tacitus describeth the like Hift. 2. Bridge to be made over the River Po, by Valens and Cecina, with as great Skill as can be shewed at these Times: For, saith he, they placed Boats a cross the River, in equal distance one from another, and joined them together with strong Planks, and fastned them with Anchors; but in such fort, as Anchorarum funes non extenti fluitabant, ut augescente flumine inoffensus ordo navium attolleretur, the Cables of the Anchors floated loofe, not being extended to their length, that upon the encrease of the River the Ships might be lifted up without any prejudice to them. Whereby it appeareth how much Brancatio was deceived in ascribing that to these later Times which was the Invention of former Ages, and may ferve as a Caveat to our Ourlandish Humorists, that can endure no reading but that which foundeth with a strange Idiom, not to trust too much upon their Authors, lest whilst they stifle their Memory with strange words, in the mean time they flarve their Underftanding.

CHAP. VII.

The Factions in Gallia in Cafar's Time.

Ut here it shall not be amiss to deliver some- Casas. what touching the manner and fashion of Life, both of the Gauls and of the Germans, and wherein those two Nations do differ. In Gallia, not only in every City, Village, and Precinct, but almost in every particular House there are Parties and Factions, the Heads whereof are fuch as they think to be of greatest Authority, according to whose Opinion and Command the main course of their Actions is directed. And this seemeth a Custom Instituted of old Time, to the end that none of the common People, how mean soever, might at any time want means to make their Party good against a greater Man: For if they scould suffer their Parties and Followers to be either Oppressed or Circumvented, they should never bear any Rule or Authority amongst them. And this is the course throughout all Gallia, for all their States are divided into two Faltions. When Czelar came into Gallia, the Hedui were chief Ring-leaders of the one Party, and the Sequani of the other. These finding shemand the Sequam of the other. Ineje junuing them-felves to be the weaker fide, (forasmuch as the Prin-cipality and chiefest Power was anciently seated in the Hedui, having many and great Adherents and Vassals) drew the Germans and Ariovistus, by many great Promises, to their Party: And after many great Victories, all the Nobility of the Hedui being Slain, they went so far beyond them in Power and Authority, that they drew the greatest part of Vafsals from the Hedui to themselves, and took the them to take a publick Oath, not to undertake any thing against the Sequani; besides a great part of their Country which they took from them by Force: And so they obtained the Principality of Gallia. And thereupon Divitiacus went unto Rome to seek aid of the Senate, but returned without effecting. to longs in breath, he cauled Biremes and Triremes any thing. Castar coming into Gallia brought and to be placed in equal diffance one from another, teration of these things, for the Hedges were resolved.

The Third OBSERVATION.

appointed fashion, which, by the great Industry of the Soldiers, was ended in a few days: And leaving the Soldiers, was endea in a few days: Ana teaving a slifficient frength at the Bridge, lest any fudden mation flouid rife amongst the Treviti, he carried over the rest of his Forces, both Horse and Foot. The UDit which before time had given Hossage, and were taken into Obedience, sent Embassadors unto him to a state of the stat from their State: They pray and define him to spare them, less the general dislast of the Germans should cause him to punish the Innocent for the Guilty: And if hewould ask more Hostages they would willingh give them. Cæsar, upon Examination of the matter, found that the Supplies were fent by the Suevi: Ubii, and enquired the way and the passages to the Suevi. Some few days after be understood by the Ubii, that the Suevi had brought all their Forces to one place, and had Commanded fuch Nations as were under their Dominion, that they should send them Forces of Horse and Foot. Upon this intelli-gence he made provision of Corn, and chose a fix place to Encamp in. He commanded the Ubii to take their Cattel, and all their other Goods from abroad back again to the Hedui, and their old followers and tection, that respect and obedience to their Supe-Vassals did likewise return to their protection: Be-sides other new followers which by Cæsar's means did cleave unto them ; for they faw that those which entered into freindship with them, were in a better condition, and more fairly dealt with. Whereby their Nobleness and Dignity was so amplified and enlarged, that the Sequani lest their authority, whom the Men of Rheims succeeded. And forasmuch as the World took notice that they were no less favoured of Caefar than the Hedui, such as by rea-Son of former enmities could not endure to joyn with the Hedui, put themselves into the protection of the Men of Rheims, and found respective protection from that State; which caused a new and sudden raised authority of the Men of Rheims. So that at that time the Hedui went far beyond all the other States of Gallia in Power and Authority, and next unto them were the Men of Rheims.

OBSERVATION.

Factions are generally the rent of a State, and a disjoynting of those parts which common Unity hath knit together for the preservation of good Government. But the Gauls maintained Sides and Parties throughout the whole body of their Continent, and found it necessary for the upholding of their policy at home; and as it fell out in the course of these Wars, rather a help than otherwise in their general defence against a foreign Enemy. The reason of the former benefit was grounded upon two causes, as Casar noteth: The one proceeding from the oppreffion used by the rich and mighty Men towards the poorer and meaner People; and the other from the impatiency of those of inferior Condition, refusing to acknowledge any Authority or Pre-eminency at all, rather than to endure the Wrongs and Contumelies of the Mighty. And therefore to prevent the licentious Might of the great Ones, and to give Countenance and Respect to the lower Sort, these Factions and Sides were devised: Wherein the Foot had always a Head sensible of the Wrongs which were done unto it. Things of great Condition are always injurious to leffer Natures, and cannot endure any Competency; not fo much as in comparison, or by way of relation. In things without Life, the prerogative of the Mountains doth swallow up the lesser rising of the Downs, and the swelling of the Downs, the unevenness of the Mole-hills: the Stars are obscured at the rising of the Moon, and the Moon loseth both her Light and Beauty in the presence of the Sun. So amongst brute Beast and Fishes, the greater doth always devour the less, and take them as their Due by the appointment of Nature: And Men more injurious in this Point, than either Mountains or brute Beafts, inasmuch as they do always overvalue themselves beyond their own Greatness, have in all Ages verified the old Proverb, Homo homini lupus, One Man's a Wolf to another. And on the other fide, as Nature maketh nothing in Vain, but hath given a being to the least of her Creatures: So do they endeavour not to be annulled, but to keep themselves in being and continuance. Habet & musca splenem, The very Fly hath her Spleen, faith the Poet: And the Pifmires and Bees have State do not obey their Decree, they interdit him their Common-weals, though not equal to a Monarch. And therefore that the mighty and great Men of Gallia might not devour the lowest of the People, but that every Man might fland in his own Condition, and by the help of a Rowland live by an Oliver; and again, that the poor-riours, as belongeth to such high Callings, these Factions and Parries were ordained: Whereby the Nobles were restrained from oppressing the Poor, and the Poor compelled to obey the Nobility, which is the best end that may be made of any Faction.

Concerning the Advantage which the Gauls received by these Factions against foreign Enemies, it was rather in regard of the multiplicity of States and Common-weals, which were in the continent of Gallia, than otherwise: for it mani-festly appeareth, that their Factions and Contentions for foveraign Authority, caused one Party to bring in Ariovistus and the Germans; and the other Party the Romans, to make good their Party. But forasmuch as Gallia had many Divifions, and contained many feveral States, relying chiefly upon their own Strength, and effeeming the subversion of their Neighbour City, as a Calamity befalling their Neighbour, from which the rest stood as yet free, it was not so easily conquered as if it had been all but one Kingdom. The Battle which Cafar had with the Nervii, which was fought fo hard, that of Threefcore Thousand Men, there were left but Five Hundred, nor of Six Hundred Senators above Three; nor again, the felling of Three and Fif-ty Thousand Gauls for Bond-flaves at one time, did not so much advantage the Conquest of Gallia, as the Battle of Edward the Third, or that of Henry the Fifth, our two English Casars: In the former whereof were flain at Creffie Thirry Thousand of the French, and in the latter at Agincourt but Ten Thousand. The reason was, for that the former Losses, though far greater, concerned but particular States; whereas these latter overthrows extended to the Members and Branches of the whole Kingdom.

CHAP. VIII.

Two forts of Men in Gallia, Druides, and Equites,

Hroughout all Gallia there are but two forts of Men that are of any reckoning or account : For the common People are in the Nature of Servants, and of no worth of themselves, nor admitted to any Parliament; but being kept under, either by Debts, or by great Tributes, or by the oppression of the Mighty, do put themselves in the Service of the Nobility, and are Potestas vize Subject to the Authority which the Master hath over & necis. hn Bond-slave. Of these two sorts, the one are Druides, and the other Equites or Gentlemen. The Druides, which are always prefer at their Holy Duties, do give order for their publick and private Sacrifices, and expound their Religion. To the Drui-des great Numbers of the Youth do refore for Learning's sake, and have them in great Honour and Reputa-tion; for they do determine almost of all Controversies both publick and private : For if any Offence be committed, as Murther or Man-flaughter, or any Controversie arise touching their Lands or Inheritance, they sentence it; rewarding the Vertuous, and punishing the Wicked. If any private Man or from Holy Duty, which is the greatest Punishment that is among ft them. Such as are thus interdicted, are reputed in the Number of impious and wicked Men, every Man leaves their Company, and doth avoid to meet them, or Speak with them, least they foould receive any hurt by their Contagion : Neier fort might give as a Tribute for their Pro- ther have they Law or Justice when they require it, nor any Respect or Honour that doth belong unto temper to the Body fit for the science and conshem. Over all the Druides there is one Primate, templation of Arts, whereby the mind being enthat bath Authority of the rest. At his Decease if any one do excel the rest in Dignity, he succeedeth: many Equals are found, they go to Election, and sometimes they contend about the Primacy with Force and Arms. They meet at a certain time of the Igar in the Confines of the Carnutes, which is the middle Part of all Gallia, and there they fit in a Sacred Place: thither they refort from all Parts that have Controversies, and do obey their Orders and Judgments. The Art and Learning of the Druides was first found out in Britain, and from thence is thought to be brought into Gallia: and at this time such as will attain to the perfect knowledge of that Disci-pline, do for the most part travel thither to learn it. The Druides are exempt from Warfare and Payments, and have an immunity from all other Duties : Whereby it falleth out that many do betake themselves to that Profession of their own free Will. and divers others are fent to that School by their Parents and Friends. They are faid to learn many Verses, and that some do study therein Twenty Years. Neither is it lawful for them to commit any thing to writing, beside that in other publick and private Businesses they only use the Greek Tongue: And that as I take it for two Causes; First, for that their Learning may not become Common and Vul-gar; Secondly, that Scholars might not truft so much to their Writings, as to their Memory, as it happeneth for the most part, that Men rely upon the trust of Books and Papers, and in the mean time omit the benefit of good Remembrance. They endeavour chiefly to teach Men that their Souls do not die, but that they do remove out of one Body into another after Death; and this they think to be very important to stir Men up to Vertue, neglecting the fear of Death. They dispute further, and give many Traditions to the youth touching the Stars and their Motion, the Magnitude of the Earth and the World, the nature of Things, and the Might and Power of the Gods.

OBSERVATION.

The Quality and Condition of the Druides is in this Place very particularly described by Casar, and may be reduced to these Heads. First, their Office, extending both to things Divine and things Temporal, whereby they executed the place both of Priefts and of Judges. And for that purpose there was one known place appointed where they fate in Judgment: And as I understand it, there was but one Term in the Year, which both began and ended their Suits in Law. The Second Thing is their Authority, ha- are much addited to Religion; and for the Caufe, ving Power to reward Vertue, and to punifh Vice. Juch as are either grievoully Difesfed, or converfant Thirdly, their Privileges and Immunities, being continually in the Dangers of War, do either facrifree from Conttibution, from Warfare, and all o- fice Men for an Oblation, or vow the Oblation of ther Burthens of the State. Fourthly, their Do-ctrine and Learning, which was partly Theologi-cal, concerning the Might and Power of the Gods, the immortality of the Soul; and partly Philosophical, touching the Stars and their Motion, the Earth and the Magnitude thereof. And Laftly, their manner of learning, which was al- whose Limbs and Parts being made of Ofters, are together Pythagorical, refusing the Help of Let- filled with living Men, and being set on Fire, the ters and Books, and committing their Doctrine Men are burned to Death. The execution of fuch to the tradition of their Elders. But that which is especially to be observed, is, that this Learning was not only found out here in Britain, but such as would perfectly attain to the Knowledge thereof, came into England to study the same. contrary to the experience which heretofore hath been observed of the Northern and Southern in all Voyages and Journeys, and they think him to templation of Arts, whereby the mind being enlarged and purified in her Faculties, doth dive into the fecret depth of all Learning, and censure the hidden Mysteries thereof; so the Northern Climates do bind in the Powers of the Soul, and restrain all her Vertues to the use of the Body, whereby they are faid to have animam in digitis, By reason of their Soul in their Fingers, not affording her the curious and artisfield that delight and contentment which is usually received by fpeculation. And thence it happeneth that all speculative Arts and Sciences, and what else soever concerneth the inward contemplation of the Mind, was found out and perfected by fuch as border upon the South, and from them it was brought by little and little into the Nothern Regions: and fuch as would be Mafters in the Arts they professed, went always Southward for the attaining thereof. But here the South was beholding to the North, as well for their principles of Divinity, as for their Philosophy and Moral Learning, being as pure, as that which any heathen People ever drank of. Which proveth an Ancient Singularity in the Inhabitants of this Island, touching the Study of Arts and Matters of Learning, and may with like Evidence be proved from Age to Age even to this time. In Witness whereof I appeal to the two Universities Oxford and of this Land, as a demonstration of the Love Cambridge. which our Nation hath ever born to Learning, being two fuch Magazines of Arts and Sciences. fo beautified with curious Buildings, and supplied with indowments for the liberal Maintenance of the muses, enriched with Libraries of learned Works, adorned with pleasant Places for the refreshing of wearied Spirits, Gardens, Groves, Walks, Rivers, and Arbours, as the like fuch Athens are not to be found in any Part of the

CHAP. IX.

The fecond fort of Men in Gallia, called the Equites in Cafar's time.

The other fort of People are Equites or Gentle-Calir.
men. These when there is occasion, or when any War happeneth (as before Casar his coming was usual every Year, that either they did offer Injuries, or resist Injuries,) are always Parties therein : And as every Man excelleth other in Birth or Wealth, so is he attended with Vassals and Followers. And this they take to be the only Note of Nobility and Greatness. The whole Nation of the Gauls are much addicted to Religion; and for that Cause, nee seen for an Volation, or vow the Oblation of themselves, using in such Sacrifices the Ministery of the Druides; sorasmuch as they are personaded that the immortal Deity cannot be pleased, but by giving the Life, of one Man for the Life of another: And to that purpose they have publick Sacrifices appointed. Others have Images of a monstrous Magnitude, as are taken in Theft or Robbery, or any other Crime, they think to be best pleasing to the Gods; but wanting such, they spare not the Innocent. They worship chiefly the God Mercury, and have many of his Images amongst them; him they adore as the inventor of all Arts, the conductor and guide parts of the World: For as the South giveth a bavegreat Power in all Merchandize and gain of Mo-

Observations upon CESAR'S neys. Next unto him they preferr Apollo, Mars, as it moveth in its own Orb from West to East, Jove and Minerva, and of these they carry the begetting the revolution of Years, and the sea-Same Opinion as other Nations do : Apollo to be Jame Opinion as other traitions as: Amounts to we powerful in healing Diseases, Minerva in finding out artificial Works, Jove ruling the Celestial Empire, and Mars for War. When they are to encounter with an Enemy, they vow all the Spoil unto him; and such Beasts as are taken they facrifice; other things they lay up in some one Place: fice; other trings toey tay top in jume one that and many heaps of things so taken are to be seen in the Holy Places of divers of their Cities. Neither doth it often happen, that any Man neglecting his Religion in that Point, dare either keep back any thing so taken, or take away ought laid up in their Repositionies; for they incur a heavy Punishment and Torture for that Offence. The Gauls do all boast themselves in the Stock from whence they are descended, understanding by the Druides, that they come of the God Dis. And therefore they end the space of all their times by the number of Nights rather than by the number of Days, observing the Days of their Nativity, the beginnings of their Months and their Years, in fuch fort as the Day doth always follow the Night. And herein they differ from other Nations, that they Suffer not their Children to come openly unto them, but when they the grown fit for War: Thinking it shameful and dissoness, that a Son in his Childhood should in publick places stand in the fight of his Eather. To the Portions which they have with their Wives. they add as much more of their own Goods; and the use of this Money thus added together, is kept apart, and the longer liver hath both the Principal and the Interest for all the former Time. The Men have Power of Life and Death, both over their Wives and their Children. And when a Man of great Place and Parentage shall happen to decease, his Kinsfolks assemble themselves together, to enquire of his Death: if there be any occasion of Suspicion, they put his Wife to torture after the manner of a Servant; and if it be found, she dies tormented with Fire and all other Tortures which may be imagined. Their Fune-rals (according to the rest of their Lives) are magnifical and sumptuous, burying with the dead Corps all that he took delight in while he lived, not Sparing living Creatures: And not long out of Memory, the Custom was to bury with the Body fuch Vassals, and Servants as were favoured by him in bis Life-time. Such States as are careful in the Government of their Common-weals, do prohibit by a special Law, that no Man shall communicate a Rumour or Report touching the State to any Man saving a Magistrate; for a smuch as it had been often found, that rash and unskilful Men were so terrified with false Reports, and moved to such desperate Attempts, that they entered into Resolutions touching the main Points of State. The Magistrates do keep secret such things as they think fit. and that which they think expedient they publish: But it is not lawful to speak of matter of State, but in affemblies of State.

The First OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the beginning of days and times, which Cafar noteth in this place to be obferved by the Gauls after Sun-fetting; (whereby it happened that in the natural Day of four and twenty Hours, the Night always preceded the day time, contrary to the use of Italy, where the Day began at Sun-rifing, and the Night followed the artificial Day as the fecond part of the Day natural;) we are to understand, that as all time, and the diffinction of the Parts thereof, dependeth upon the two motions of the Sun: The one derftood it: and therefore when they pleafed (no fons of Summer and Winter, the Spring and the Autumn, with the measure of Months as it paffeth through the figns of the Zodiack; and the other, as it is carried from East to West the first moving Sphere, making the distinction of Nights and Days, Hours and Minutes: so the beginnings of these Times and Seasons are di-versly taken amongst diverse People and Nations of the Earth. The 7ews had the same Computation touching the beginning of the Day as the Gauls had, but upon other Grounds and Reasons than could be alledged for this Custom in Gallia: for they began their Day in the Evening at Sunfetting, as appeareth by many Places of the Scri-pture: and Moses in the Repetition of the First Seven Days Work, upon the accomplishment of a Day, faith, The Evening and the Morning were one Day, giving the Evening Precedency before the Morning, as though the Day had begun in the Evening. The Bobemians in like manner do observe the beginning of their Day in the Evening, and do herein follow the use of the Jews. Other Nations do begin at Sun-rising and take the computation of their Day Natural from the first appearing of the Sun in the East. The Greeks begin and end their Day at Midnight, observing the certainty of that Time, and the correspondence between the equal and planetary Hours in the Meridian Circle: Whereas otherwife by reason of the inequality of the Days and the Nights, out of a right Sphere, there is always some difference between the said Hours: And this Use also is observed by us in England.

This God Dis, whom he nameth for the Father of that Nation, is the same whom the Heathen called Pluto, the God of Hell and Darkness; and for that cause they put Darkness before Light, touching the beginning of their Natural

But foralmuch as this circumstance giveth-occafion to fpeak of Days and Times, give me leave to infert the reformation of the Year, which Cafar to happily established, that succeeding times have had no cause to alter the same. And although it neither concerneth the art of War, nor happened within the compais of these feven Summers: Yet forafmuch as it was done by Cafar, and deferveth as often memory as any other of his Noble Acts, it shall not feem impertinent to the Reader to take thus much by the way concerning that matter. There is no Nation of any civil Government, but observeth a course or revolution differenced with Times and Seasons, in fuch manner as may be answerable to the motion of the Sun, in the Circuit which it maketh through the Signs and Degrees of the Zodiack. But foralmuch as the Government of a civil Year doth not well admit any other composition of Parts, to make it absolute and compleat, than by natural Days; and on the other fide, the Sun requireth odd Hours and minutes to finish his Race, and return again to that part of the Zodiack from whence it came; there hath always been found a difference between the Civil and the Solar Year. Before C.efar's time, the Romans using the ancient computation of the Year, had not only such uncertainty and alteration in Months and Times, that the Sacrifices and Yearly Feafts came by little and little to Seasons contrary for the purpose they were ordained: But also in the revolution of the Sun or Solar Year, no other Nation agreed with them in account; and of the Romans themselves, only the Priests unMan being able to controll them) they would upon the fuddain thrust in a Month above the ordinary Number, which as Plutarch noteth, was in old Time called Mercedonius, or Menfis intercalaris. To remedy this Inconvenience, Cafar calling together the best and most expert Aftronomers of that time, made a Kalendar more exactly Calculated than any other that was before: And yet fuch an one as by long continuance of Time hath bred a difference, for the matter ftandeth thus.

It is found by certain Observation of Mathematicians of all Ages, that the Sun being carried from the West to the East by the motion of his own Sphear, finisheth his yearly course in the fpace of 365 days, five hours, nine and forty Minutes, and fome odd Seconds: Whereupon it was then concluded, That their Civil Year must necessarily contain Three Hundred Threescore and Five Days, which maketh Two and Fifty Weeks and One Day. And forasmuch as those Five odd Hours Nine and Forty Minutes, and fome Seconds, did, in Four Years space, amount unto a natural Day (wanting Two and Forty Minutes, and fix and fifty Seconds, which was thought nothing in comparison) they devised every Fourth Year to add a day more than ordinary, to answer that time which is usually added to February: whereby it happeneth that in every Fourth Year February hath Nine and Twenty Days. And fo they made an Order to reform their Year without any fensible Error for a long time. But fince that time, being One Thousand Six Hundred Years and more, those Two and Forty Minutes, and Six and Fifty Seconds, which, as I faid, do want of the natural Day of Four and Twenty Hours, which is inferted in every Fourth Year, have bred a manifest and an apparent Error: For whereas the Civil Year is by that means made greater than the Solar Years, the Sun ending his Task before we can end our Times, it happeneth that fuch Feafts as have relation to feafonable Times, do as it were foreflow the opportunity, and fall out further in the Year, as though they had a motion towards the Summer Solftice. And as these go forward so doth the Equinoctial return backward towards the beginning of the Month. For Cafar, by the help of the Astronomers, obferved the Aquinoctium the Five and Twentieth of March. Ptolomy, in his Time, observed the Equinoctium, the Two and Twentieth of March. And it was observed the One and Twentieth of March, in the Year from the Incarnation 322. what time was holden the first General Council at Nice, a City of Pontus, in respect whereof the Paschal Tables and other Rules were established for the Celebration of Easter. But fince that time there are passed 1281 Years, and the Equinoctium cometh before the One and Twentieth of March Ten days.

As this Error is reformed among other Nations, and reduced to that state as it was at the Nicene Council: So there might many Reasons be alledged to prove the Reformation convenient, of a greater number of days than Ten. For if the Kalendar were fo ordered, that every Month might begin when the Sun entreth into that Sign, which is for the Month, and end when the Sun goeth out of that fign, it would avoid much con-fusion, and be very easie to all forts of People as have occasion to observe the same: Which doubt-less was the purport of the first Institution of Months; and was observed (as it seemeth) by the old Romans, who began the Year at the Winter Solftice, as Ovid noteth:

Bruma novi prima est, veterisque novissima solis: Principium capiunt Phoebus & annus idem.

And therefore they called that Month January, of Janus, that had Two Faces, and faw both the Old and the New Year. Such therefore as would go about to reform the Year to this course, must not cut off Ten Days only, but One and Twenty; and for one Year make December to continue but Ten Days, and then January to begin, and so successively to the rest of the Months. But it may be faid, that although we help our felves, and put off the Inconvenience which is fallen upon us, yet in tract of Time the like Error will fall again upon succeeding Ages, and put their yearly Feasts, besides the Days appointed for them. For remedy whereof, it may be answered; That whereas this Error hath happened by adding every Fourth Year a natural Day, which in true Calculation wanted Two and Forty Minutes, and Six and Fifty Seconds of Four and Twenty Hours, and in every 136 Years hath accrued within One Minute to a Day more than needed: The only way is, every 136 Years to omit the addition of that Day, and to make that Year to contain but 365 Days, which, by the Order of Casar's Kalendar, is a Leap-Year, and hath One Day more, which hath brought this Error. And fo there would not happen the error of a Day in the space of 111086 Years, if the World should continue fo long.

But leaft we should seem more curious in reforming the course of our Civil Year, than the Manners of our Civil Life. I will proceed to that which followerh.

The Second OBSERVATION.

"He second thing which I observe in their manner of Life, is the respect they had to matter of State, and the care which they took Their respect that no Man should dispute of the Common-weal, States but in Affemblies appointed for the Service of the Common-weal. Whereby they gained two fpecial Points for the maintenance of good Government. The first, That no Man might speak of points of State, but the Governours of State: For fuch I understand to be admitted to their Councils and Parliaments. Secondly, That fuch matters of consequence as touched them so nearly, might not be handled, but in fuch Places, and at fuch Times as might best advantage the State. Concerning the former, we are to note, That Government is defined to be an establishing of Order, best fitting the maintenance of a People, in a peaceable and happy Life. Order requireth Degrees and Diftinctions investing several Parts in several Functions and Duties: To these Duties there belongeth a due observancy, according to the motion and place which every part holdeth in the general Order. Of these Degrees and Diffinctions, Soveraignty and Obedience are two Diffinctions, Soveraignty and Obedience are two main Relatives, the one inverted in the Prince or This forman Magistrate, the other in the People and Subject, der note is incommunicable in regard of their Terms and Squii gloria Subjects, and yet concurring in the main drift or Tracius.

Government, intending the benefit of a happy Life. And therefore the Gauls did carefully provided. The see Mon Bould waves the limite of the limited the second of vide. That no Man should exceed the limits of his own Rank, but that fuch as fate at the helm might shape the course: And for the rest whose Lot it was to be directed, they would have them take notice of their Mandates by Obedience, and not by Dispute.

Touching

Touching the second point, we are to consider interpret the Law, and determine of Controversies. the danger which may happen to a State, by common and ordinary Discourse of the Principles of that Government, or of fuch circumstances as are incident to the fame, (without respect of Time or Place, or any other due regard) which the Wisdom of a well-ordered Policy doth hold requifite thereunto: For whatfoever is delivered by rash Considerations; for our most serious Cogi-tations affished with the best Circumstances, can but speak to purpose. And as the execution falleth short of the purport intended by discourse, so is our Speech and Discourse lame and wanting to our inward conceit. And therefore as Religious Actions stand in need of hoc age, so may Politick Consultations use the help of the same Re-

CHAP. X.

The manner and Life of the Germans.

He Germans do much differ from the Gauls in their course of Life, for they have nei-ther Priests nor Sacrifices. They Worhip no Gods but such as are subject to Sence, and from whom they daily receive Profits and Help, as the Sun, the Fire, and the Moon; for the rest they have not so much as heard of. Their Life is only spent in Hunsing, or in use and practice of War. They inure themselves to Labour and Hardness, even from their Childhood; and such as con-tinue longest Beardless are most commended amongst them : For this some think to be very available to tech : For ions fome toning to be very automatic. when Statinger others to their Strength and Sinews. They hold it a milt dishonest part for one to touch a Woman before he be Twenty Tears of Age: Neither can any such matter be hid or dissembled; for affined to the form of the state of the s as they bathe themselves together in Rivers, and use Skins and other small Coverings on the Reins of their Backs, the rest of their Body being all Naked. They use no Tillage, the greatest part of their Food is Milk or Cheese, or Flesh: Neither hath any Man any certain quantity of Land to his own use; but their Magistrates and Princes do every Year allot a certain Portion of Land to Kindreds and Tribes that Inhabit together, as much and in fuch Places as they think fit, and the next Year appoint them in a new place. Hereof they give many Reasons: Lest they should be led away by continual Custom from the jointa we tea away of constraint capons from each practice of War to the up of Husbandry, or left they feculd endeavour to get themselves great Possessing and so the weaker should be thrust but and diposite of their Livings by the Mighty, or left they should build too delicately for the avoiding of Cold or Heat, or left they should wax Covetous, and thirst after Money, which is the beginning of all Factions and Dissentions; and lastly, that they might keep the Commons in good Contentment, confidering the Parity between their Revenues and the Poffessions of the Great Ones. It is the greatest Honour to their States to have their Confines lie waste and desolate far and near about them: For that they take to be an Argument of Valour, when their borderers are driven to forfake their Country, and dare not abide near them : and withal, they think themselves by that means much safer from any suddain Incursion. When a State maketh War, either by way of Attempt or Defence, they choose Magistrates to Command that War, having power of Life and Death: But in time of Peace they have no common Magistrate, but

Theft committed out of the Confines of their State is not Infamous or Diskonest, but commended as an exercise of the Youth, and a keeping them from Sloth. When any one of their Princes and chief Men Shall, in an Assembly or Council, publish himfelf for a Leader upon some Exploit, and desire to know who will follow him upon the same, they that Speech, without such helpful attendance, is both bave a good Opinion of the Man and the Matter, unseasonable and unprofitable, and the Common- and do promise bitm their belt and difflance, are weal is always a sufferer when it falleth into such commended by the Multitude: The rest that results to accompany him, are held in the number of Traytors, and never have any credit afterwards. They hold it not lawful to hurt a Stranger that shall come unto them upon any occasion, but do protect him from Injuries; to such every Man's House is open, and his Table common. The time was, when the Gauls' excelled the Germans in Propels and Valour and made War upon them of their own accord, and by reason of the multitude of their People, and want of ground for Habitation, they fent many Colonies over the Rhine into Germany. And so these Fertile Places of Germany, which are near unto the Wood Hercynia, (which Eratothenes, and other Gre-cians, took notice of by the name of Orcinia) were possessed by the Volcae Techosages, who dwelt there at this time, and keep their ancient opinion of Justice and Warlike Praise. Now the Germans still continue in the Same Poverty, Want, and Patience, as in former time; do use the same Diet and Apparel for their Bodies : But the Neighbourhood and Knowledge of other Nations hath made the Gauls live in a more plentiful manner, who, by little and little have been weakened and Overthrown in divers Battels, fo that now they stand not in comparison with the Germans. The breadth of the Wood Hercynia is nine days Journey over, for they have no other differences of space, but by means of days Fourneys. It beginneth at the Confines of the Helvetii, Nemetes, and Rauraci, and runs along the River Danubius, to the Territories of the Daci; thence it declineth to the left side from the said River, and by reason of the large extension thereof, it bordereth the Consines of many other Countries. Neither is there any German that can fay, that either he durft adventure, or did go to, or had heard of the beginning of the same, although he had Travelled therein Threescore days Journey. In this Wood are many sorts of Wild Beasts, which are not to be seen in any other place: Amongst the rest, the most unusual and remarkable are. An Ox like unto an Hart, that in the midst of his Forehead, between his Ears, carrieth a Horn longer and straighter than usual, divided at the end into many large Branches; The Female is in all respects like unto the Male, and beareth a Horn of the same magnitude and fashion. There is likewife another fort of Beasts called Alces, not unlike unto a Goat, but somewhat bigger, and without Horns: Their Leggs are without Joynts, that when they take their rest, they neither sie nor lie upon the Ground, and if they chance to fall, they cannot rise again. When they take their rest in the Night, they lean against Trees. The Hunters having found out their Footsteps and their Haunt, do either undermine the Roots of Such Trees, or fo cut them asunder, that a small matter will overthrow them; so that when they come, according to their use, to rest themselves against those Trees, they overthrow them with their weight, and fall with all themselves, and so are taken. The third kind of Beasts are those which are called Uri, somewhat lesser than an Elephane, and in colour, kind, and shape not unlike unto a Bull. They are both strong and swife, and spare neither Man nor Beast that cometh in their sight: These they catch with greater labour and diligence the chiefest Men in the Country and the Villages, do in Pits and Ditches, and so kill them. The Youth do Inure and Exercise themselves in this kind of Hunting, and fuch as kill many of these Beasts, and flow most Horns, are highly commended : But to make them Tame, or any their little Ones, was never yet seen. The largeness of their Horns, as also the fashion and kind thereof, doth much differ from the Horns of the Oxen, and are much fought after for Cups to be used in their greatest Banquets, being first bound about the bring and trimmed with Silver.

Lib. VI.

OBSERATION.

C Esar in this Chapter describeth the course of Life which the Germans in his Time held, throughout the whole Policy of their Government, the scope whereof was to make them Warlike: To which he faith, That in Times past the Gauls were as Valiant and as Warlike People as the Germans: but the Neighbourhood and Knowledge of other Nations had taught them a more plentiful manner of Life, which, by little and litfar inferiour to the Germans. Which bringeth to our confideration that which is often attributed to a Civil Life, that fuch as tafte of the fweetness of Ease, and are qualified with the Complements Recher a Ci of Civility, have always an Indisposition to make a Warlike Practices. The reason is grounded upwaite a Warlike Practices. The reason is grounded up-waite dif- on use and Custom: For discontinuance doth always cause a strangeness and alienation, benumming the aptest Parts with unready and painful Gestures; and is so powerful, that it doth not only Steal away natural Affection, and make Pa-Tyrant, it is able to force us to those things which naturally we are unfit for, as though the decrees of Nature were subject to the Controlment of Custom. Much more then, the things got by Use and Practice, are as easily forgot by Discontinuance, as they were obtained by studious Exercise. On the other side, there is nothing fo horrible or dreadful, but use maketh easie. The first time the Fox faw the Lyon, he swooned for Fear; the next time he trembled; but the third time he was so far from fear, that he was ready to put a Trick of Craft upon him: whereby it appeareth, That the Germans had no further Interest in Deeds of Arms above the Gauls, than what the use of War had gained them: For as usage continueth the Property of a Tenure, so non-ulage implieth a Forfeiture. Cato was wont to fay, That the Romans would lose their Empire, when they suffered the Greek Tongue to be taught amongst them: For by that means they would eafily be drawn from the Study and Practice of War, to the bewitching delight of speculative Thoughts. And Marcellus was blamed for being the first that corrupted Rome with the delicate and curious Works of Greece: For before that, he brought from the Sacking of Syracula the wellwrought Tables of Pictures and Imagery, Rome never knew any fuch Delicacy, but flood full fraught with Armour and Weapons of barbarous People, of the bloody Spoils and Monuments of Victories and Triumphs; which were rather fearful shews, to inure their Eyes to the horror of War, than pleasant Sights to allure their Minds to affections of Peace. Whereby it appeareth, That fuch as fuffer themselves to be guided by the easie Reign of Civil Government, or take a disposition to that course of Life, can hardly endure the Yoke of War, or undergo the tediousness of Martial Labours.

CHAP. XI.

Bafilius his Surprise upon Ambiorix.

Mar finding by the Spies which the Ubii Cafati fent out, That the Suevi had all betaken themselves to the Woods, and doubting want of Corn, forasmuch as the Germans of all other Nations do least care for Tillage; he determined to go no further. But that his return might not altogether free the Barbarous People from Fear, but hinder the Helps and Succours which they were wont to fend into Gallia, having brought back his Army, be cut off so much of the furthest part of the Bridge next unto the Ubii, as came in measure to Two Hundred Foot; and in the end of that which remained, he built a Tower of four Stories, making other Works for the strengthning of that place, wherein he left a Garrison of Twelve Coborts, under the Command of young C. Volcatius Tullus: He himtle, had weakened their Strength, and made them felf, as Corn waxed ripe, went forward to the War of Ambiorix, by the way of the Wood of Arduenna, which is the greatest in all Gallia, and extendeth it felf from the Banks of the Rhine, and the Confines of the Treviri, to the Seat of the Nervii, carrying a breadth of Five Hundred Miles. He sent L. Minutius Basilius before, with all the Horse, to see if he could effect any thing, either by prevention and Speedy arrival, or by opportunity, Commanding bim not to fuffer any Fires to be made in his Camp, lest his coming might be discovered, promising to sollow him at his Heels. Basilius solloweth his Dirents forget to love their Children; but, like a rections, and coming upon them contrary to their expectation, took many of the Enemy abroad in the Fields. and, by their direction, made towards Ambiorix, and, of total attection, made toward called as where he remained in a place with a few Horfemen. As fortune is very powerful in all things, lo fix Challengeth a special Interest in matter of War: for as it happened by great luck, that he should light upon him unawares and unprovided, and that his coming should sooner be seen than heard of; so was it great hap, that all the Arms which he had about bim should be surprised, bis Horses and bis Chariots taken, and that he himself should escape Death. But this happened by reason of the Wood that was about his House, according to the manner of the Gauls, who, for avoiding of Heat, do commonly build near unto Woods and Rivers: His Followers and Friends sustaining a while the Charge of the Hosfemen in a narrow place, while he himself esca-ped in the mean time on Hosseback, and in stying was protected and sheltered by the Woods: where by Fortune seemed very powerful, both in drawing on a danger, and in avoiding it.

The First OBSERVATION.

He Prerogative which Fortune hath always Fortune challenged in the accidents of War, and the special Interest which she hath in that course of Life more than in other Mens Actions, hath made the best Soldiers oftentimes to fing a Song of Complaint, the burthen whereof yet remaineth, and ferveth as a reason of all such misadventures, Fortune de la guerre, The Fortune of the War. Such as have observed the course of things, and have found one and the fame Man continuing the fame means, this day happy, and the next day unfortunate; and again, Two other Men, the one advised and respective, and the other violent and rash, and yet both attain the like good Fortune by two contrary Courses, or otherwise, as oftentimes it falleth out, the more heedless the more happy; have been perfwaded that all things are so governed by Fortune, that the Wisdom of the Life of

vention of that which is unchangeable, they hold as vain as the washing of an Athiopian to make him white. Of this Opinion Sylla seemed to be; professing himself better born to Fortune, than to the Wars, and acknowledging his happiest Victories to have proceeded from his most heedless and unadvised Resolutions. And the great Alexander fo carried himself, as though he had been of the fame Opinion, of whom Curtius faith; Quoties illum fortuna à morte revocavit! Quoties temere in pericula vectum perpetua felicitate protexit! How many times did Fortune call him back from the brink of Death! How often did she happily defend and fave him, when he had, by his Rash-In the Life ness, brought himself into Dangers! And of Alexander, Plurarch faith, That he had Power of Time and Others are not willing to ascribe so much to Fortune, as to make themselves the Tennis-ball to her Racket: And yet they are content to allow her half of every thing they go about, referving the other Moiety to their own directions. And fo, like Partners in an Adventure, they labour to improve their share for their best advan-

Some other there are that will allow Fortune no part at all in their Actions, but do confront her with a Goddess of greater Power, and make Industry the means to annul her Deity. Of this Opinion was Timotheus the Athenian, who having atchieved many notable Victories, would not allow of the Conceit of the Painter, that had made a Table wherein Fortune was taking in those Cities (which he had won) with a Net, whilst he himself Slept: But protested against her in that behalf, and would not give her any part in that business.

And thus the Heathen World varied as much in their Opinions touching Fortune, as Fortune her felf did in her Events to themward : Which were fo divers and changeable, as were able to ensnare the deepest Wits, and confound the Wisdom of the greatest Judgments: Whereby the word Fortune usurped a Deity, and got an Opinion of extraordinary Power in the Regiment of Humane Actions. But our Christian Times have a readier Lesson, wherein is taught a sovereign Providence, guiding and directing the Thoughts of Mens Hearts, with the Faculties and Powers of the Soul, together with their external Actions, to fuch ends as shall seem best to that Omnipotent Wisdom, to whom all our Abilities serve as Instruments and means to effect his Purposes, notwithflanding our particular Defigns, or what the Heart of Man may otherwise determine. And therefore fuch as will make their Ways profperous unto themselves, and receive that Contentment which their Hope expecteth, or their Labours would deserve, must use those helps which the Rules of Christianity do Teach in that behalf, and may better be Learned from a Divine, than from him that writeth Treatifes of War.

The Second OBSERVATION.

O'Untus Curtius speaking of Alexander, saith, Nullam virtutem Regis istius magis quam celeritatem laudaverim, I can commend no Vertue in this King before his Speed and Celerity:

Man can neither alter nor amend them: And Chase well fitting Alexander the Great, and might therefore to spend much Time or tedious Labour, reft unexampled: Notwithstanding, Suetonius either in careful Circumspection, or heedful Pregiveth this general report of Cosfar, that in matter given this general report of Cofar, that in matter Military, Aut equivoir preflamifilmorum gloriam, aut excessit, he either equalled or exceeded the Glory of the best: And for this particular he faith, Quod persper numerius de se precents, that he was very often the Messenger of his own Success. And to speak truly, he seemeth to challenge to himself expedition and speed, as his peculiar Commendation, grounding himself upon the danger which lingering and foreflowing of Time, doth usually bring to well advised Resolutions: According to that of Lucan the Poet.

> - Nocuit semper differre paratis. Delay did always hurt those that were ready.

For by this speedy execution of well-digested directions, he gained two main advantages. First, The prevention of fuch helps and means as the Enemy would otherwise have had, to make the War dangerous, and the event doubtful. And Secondly, The Confusion and Fear, which doth consequently follow such main Disappointments, being the most dangerous Accidents that can happen to any Parry, and the chiefest points to be endeavoured to be cast upon an Enemy by him that would make an easie Conquest.

For proof whereof, amongst many other Examples, I will only alledge his Expedition to Rome, when he first came against Pompey, according ding to Plutarch's Relation. In the mean time Plutarch in (faith he) News came to Rome, That Cafar had the Life of Pompey. won Ariminum, a great City in Italy, and that he came directly to Rome with a great Power, which was not true: For he came but with 3000 Horse and 5000 Foot, and would not tarry for the rest of his Army, being on the other side of the Alpes in Gallia, but made hast rather to surprize his Enemies upon the fudden, being afraid, and in Confusion, not looking for him so soon, than to give them time to be provided, and so to Fight with them in the best of their Strength, which fell out accordingly. For this fudden and unexpected approach of his, put all Italy and Rome it self into such a Tumult and Confusion, That no Man knew what way to take for his fafety: For fuch as were out of Rome came flying thither from all Parts, and those on the other side that were in Rome, went out as fast, and for sook the City. And the amazement was such, that Pompey and the Senate fled into Greece, whereby it happened that Cafar in threescore Days was Lord of all Italy, without any Bloodshed.

Befides this manner of prevention by fudden Surprize, we may fee the like Expedition in the very Carriage and form of his Wars. For if the veni, Vidi, Enemy had taken the Field, he laboured by all Vici. means to bring him to Fight; or otherwise if he refused to take the Field, he then endeavoured, with the like speed, to Besiege him, or block him up in some Hold, to the end he might bring the matter to a speedy upshot, as he did with Vercingetorix at Alefia. But that which is most memorable touching this point, at the first taking in of Spain in the diffurbance of the Civil Wars, Lik. 2 he defeated two Armies, overthrew two Generals, and took in two Provinces in the space of Forty Days. Neither did he make use of Expedition only in his Carriage of a War, but also in the Action and Execution of Battel: For he never Whereof this might be a ground, that he followed Darius with such speed after the second Battel fited, until he had taken their Camp, and he gave him, that in eleven Days he marched Defeated them of their chiefeft Helps, which with his Army fix hundred Miles, which was a Pompey felt to his utter Overthrow; For the fame day he routed him at Pharfalia, he took his Tullius Cicero their Commander, and with him Camp, and inclosed a Hill with a Ditch and a he left two hundred Horse. Rampier, where 25000 Romans were fled for their fafety, and brought them to yield themselves unto him: And fo making use (as he faith) of the benefit of Fortune, and the terrour and amazement of the Enemy, he performed three notable fervices in one day.

Lib. VI.

And this he used with such dexterity and depth of wisdom, that commonly the first Victory ended the War: As by this at Pharsalia he made himfelf Commander of the East, and by that at Tapso he made himself Lord of Africk, and by the Battel at Monda he got all Spain.

To conclude this point, I may not forget the like speed and expedition in his works. In fifteen days he cast a Ditch and a Rampier of sisteen foot in height, between the Lake at Geneva and S. Claude's Hill, containing nineteen miles. He made his Bridge over the Roine in ten days. At the fiege of Marfeilles he made twelve Gallies, and furnished them out to Sea within thirty days after the Timber was cut down. And the rest of his works with the like expedition.

CHAP. XII.

Cativulcus poyloneth himself. Cafar divideth his Army into three parts.

On whether Ambiorix did not make head and assemble his Forces of pur-pose, for that he determined not to sight, or whether he were hindered by the footness of the time, and the fudden coming of the Horsemen, thinking the rest of the Army had followed after; it remaineth doubtful. But certain it is, that he sent privy Messengers about the Country, commanding every Man to Shift for him-felf; and So Some fled into the Forest Arduenna, others into Fens and Bogs, and such as were near the Ocean, did hide themselves in such Islands as the Tides do commonly make: Many forfook their Country, and committed themselves to their fortunes, to meer Strangers and unknown People. Cativulcus the King of the one half of the Eburones, who was a party with Ambiorix in this matter, being now grown old, and unable to undergo the labours either of War or of flying, detefting Am-biorix with all manner of execrations, as the authour of that matter, drank the juice of Yew, (whereof there is great store in Gallia and Germany,) and so died. The Segni and Condruss, of the Nation and number of the Germans, that dwell between the Eburones and the Treviri, fent Messengers to Cæsar, to intreat him not to take them in the number of the Enemy, and that he would not adjudge all the Germans dwelling on this fide of the Rhine to have one and the same cause: For their part, they never so much as thought of War, nor gave any aid to Ambiorix. Casar having examined the matter by the torture of the Captives, commanded them, that if any of the Eburones should flie unto them, to bring them unto bim, and in 6 doing be would force there to bim, and in 6 doing be would force the Country. Then dividing his Forces into three parts, be left the Baggage of the whole Army at Vatuca, a Caftle in the midft of the Eburones, where Titurius and Aurunculeius were lodged. He made choice of this place the rather, for that the fortificaconce of this place the rather, for toat the fortifica-tions made the year before continued perfect and good, to the end he might eafe the Soldier of some labour; and there left the fourteenth Legion for a Guard to the Carriages, being one of the three which he had last enrolled in Italy, making Q.

The Army being thus divided, he commanded Titus Labienus to carry three Legions towards that part of the Sea Coast which bordereth upon the Menapii, and sent Trebonius with the like number of Legions to waste and harrass that Country which bordereth upon the Aduatici : He himself with the other three determined to go to the River Scaldis, which runneth into the Macse, and to the furthest parts of the Wood Arduenna; for that he underflood that Ambiorix with a few Horsemen was fled to those parts. At his departure he affured them that he would return after seven days absence: For at that day he knew that Corn was to be given to that Legion which he had there left in Garrison. He counselled Labienus and Trebonius to return likewise by that day, if they conveniently could to the end that after communication of their discoveries, and intelligence of the Projects of the Enemy, they might think upon a new beginning of War.

OBSERVATION.

THis fudden furprise upon Ambiorix and the Treviri, prevented (as I have already noted) their making head together, and put the Enemy to fuch shifts for their safety, as occasion or opportunity would afford them in particular. And albeit the Treviri were by this means dispersed, yet they were not overthrown, nor utterly vanquished, but continued still in the nature and quality of an Enemy, although they were by this occasion defeated of their chiefest means. And therefore the better to profecute them in their particular flights, and to keep them disjoyned, he divided his Army into three parts, and made three feveral Inroads upon their Country, hoping thereby to meet with some new occasion, which might give an overture of a more absolute Conquest: For diversity of motions do breed diversity of occasions, whereof some may happily be such, as being well managed, may bring a Man to the end of his defires. But herein let us not forget to observe the manner he used in this service: For first he left a Rendezvous where all the Carriages of the Army were bestowed, with a competent Garrison for the safe keeping thereof, to the end the Soldiers might be affured of a retreat, the end the Soughest might befall them in that action, according to that of Serverius, That a king ogood Captain should rather look behind him than serverius. before him; and appointed withal a certain day when all the Troops should meet there again; Ut rursus (as he saith) communicato consilio, exploratifque hostium rationibus, aliud initium belli capere possint, That after communication of their discoveries, &c.

CHAP. XIII.

C.efar fendeth Meffengers to the bordering States to come out and fack the Eburones.

Here was (as I have already declared) no certain Band or Troop of the Enemy, no Cest. Garrison or Town to Stand out in Arms; but the multitude was dispersed into all parts, and every Man lay hid either in some secret and unknown Valley, or in some rough and woody place, or in some Bog, or in such other places as gave them hope of shelter or safety: Which places were well known to the States of that Country. And the matter required great diligence and circumspection, not so much in regard of the general safety of the Army, (for there could no dan- therefore he that will buy much Honour with litger happen unto them, the Enemy being all terriger wappen unes extent, one known sexum au servi-fied and fled,) as in proferving every particular Soldier; which notwithstanding did in part con-cern the safety of the whole Army: For hope of passages would not suffer the Soldiers to go in Troops. If he would have the business take an end, and the very race of those wicked People rooted out, the Army must be divided, and many small Bands must be made for that purpose: But to keep the Maniples at their Ensigns, according to the the wannipies at their Enjigns, accurating to the cultom and use of the Roman Army, the place it self was a sufficient Guard for the barbarous People, who did not want Courage in particular, both to lie in wait for them, and circumvent them as they were severed from their Companies. Yet in extremities of that nature what diligence could attain unto was provided, but in such manner, that Somewhat was omitted in the offensive part, though the Soldiers minds were bent upon revenge, rather than it should be done with any detriment or loss to the Soldier. Casar sent Messengers to the next bordering States, calling them out to sack the E-burones, in hope of Booty and Pillage, to the end the Gauls should rather bazard their lives in the Wood, than the Legionary Souldiers; as also that there might be many spoilers and destroyers, to the end that both the name and race of that State might be taken away. Hereupon a great multitude speedily assembled from all quarters. These chings were atted in all parts and quarters of the Eburones, and the seventh day drew near which he had appointed for his return to the Carriages.

Cafe:

OBSERVATION.

The benefit of T is an Advantage which a General hath, when the Enemy dorn not refuse open Encounter, for so he may be fure that the weight of the bufiness will reft upon Military vertue and prowess of Arms, as a ready means for speedy Victory: But when it shall happen that the Country doth afford covert and protection to him that is more Malicious than Valorous, and through the fastness of the place refuseth to shew himself unless it be upon advantage, the War doubtless is like to prove tedious, and the Victory less honourable. In such cases there is no other way, than so to harrass and waste a Country, that the Enemy may be famished out of his Holds, and brought to subjection by scarcity and necessity. Which is a means so powerful, as well to supplant the greatest strength, as to meet with subterfuge and delay, that of it self it subducth all opposition, and needeth no other help for atchieving of Victory, as may appear by the fequel of this Summer's action. And herein let us further observe the particular care which Casar had of his Soldiers, adjudging the whole Army to be interessed in every private Man's safety. A matter strange in these times, and of small confequence in the judgment of our Commanders, to whom particular fortunes are esteemed Non-entities, and Men in several of no value; forasmuch as Conquests are made with multitudes. Concerning which point, I grant it to be as true, as it is often spoken in places besieged, that the loss defeating of twenty the overthrow of a thousand:

And yet it cannot be denied but the leffer is paid for the Laurel Wreath, the more precious is the Victory: And it then goes hard, when it maketh fuch another Victory would overthrow him. And tle blood, must endeavour by diligent and careful labour to provide for the particular fafety of his Soldiers. Wherein albeit he cannot value an unity at an equal rate with a number; yet he must Booty did draw many far off out of their Ranks, confider that without an unity there can be no and the Woods through uncertain and unknown multitude: And not so only, but the life and strength of a multitude consisteth in unities; for otherwise, neither had Nero needed to have wished the People of Rome to have had but one Head, that he might have cut it off at a stroak, nor Servorius's device had carried any Grace, making a plurate, in lufty Fellow fail in plucking off the thin Tail of the life an old lean Jade, and a little weak Man leave the Serwins. ftump bare of a great-tail'd Horse, and that in a short time, by plucking hair by hair.

CHAP. IV.

The Sicambri fend out two thousand Horse against the Eburones, and by fortune they fall upon Cicero at Vatuca.

Ere you shall perceive the power that For- Case. tune hath, and what chances happen in the carriage of a War. There was (as I have already Said) the Enemy being feattered and terrified, no Troop or Band which might give the least cause of fear: The report came to the Germans on the other side of the Rhine, that the Eburones were to be facked, and that all Men had liberty to make spoil of them. The Sicambri dwelling next to the Rhine, who formerly received the Tenchtheri and Ufipetes in their flight, fet out Two thousand Horse, and sent them over the River some thirty miles below that place where Casar had left the half Bridge with a Garrison. These Horse made directly towards the confines of the Eburones, took many Prisoners and much Cattel, neither Bog nor Wood hindered their passage, being bred and born in War and Thefe. payings, soing orea and some in eval and 1005. They inquire of the Prisoners in what part Caclar was, and found him to be gone far off, and that all the Army was departed from thence. But one of the Prisoners speaking to them, said, Why do ye seek after so poor and so slender a Booty, when otherwise you may make your selves most fortunate? in three hours space you may go to Vatuca, where the Roman Army hath left all their fortunes; the Garrison in that place is no greater than can hardly furnish the Walls about, neither dare any Man go out of the Trenches. The Germans in this hope did hide the Pillage which they had al-ready taken, and went directly to Vatuca, taking bim for their guide that gave them first notice

OBSERVATION.

T were as great a madness to believe that a Man were able to give directions to meet with all chances, as to think no forefight can prevent any Casualty. For as the Soul of Man is endued with a power of Discourse, whereby it concludeth either according to the certainty of Reason, or the learning of Experience, bringing these directions as faulty and inconvenient, and approving others as fafe and to be followed: So we are to underof one Man is not the loss of a Town, nor the stand, that this power of Discourse is limitted to a certain measure or proportion of strength, and inscribed in a Circle of leffer capacity than the compass of possibility, or the large extension of what may happen; for otherwise the course of the buyer Bankrupt, or inforceth him to confess that Destiny were subject to our controulment, and our knowledge were equal to universal Entity, whereas the infinity of Accidents do far exceed and fuperfittious Religions, recalling to mind the fatal the reach of our shallow series, and our greatest calamity of Corta and Ticurius that died in that apprehension is a small and unperfect experience. And therefore as fuch as through the occasion of publick employment, are driven to forfake the ed in their opinion which they had received from flore of minute and particular courtes, and to float the Priform, that there was no Garrifon at a!" in the Ocean of Camalties and Adventures, may doubtless receive ftrong directions, both from the loadstone of Reason, and force of Experience, to shape an easie and successful course: So notwithftanding they shall find themselves subject to the contrary Winds and extremity of Tempests, befides many other letts and impediments beyond the compass of their direction to interrupt their course were in, went unarmed out of his Cabbin, and seeand divert them from their Haven, which made ing the Enemy ready to force the Gates, and the the Carthaginian that was more happy in conquering than in keeping to cry out; Nusquam minus quam in bello eventus rerum respondent, the event of things doth no where answer expectation less than in War, as it happened in this accident.

CHAP. XV.

The Sicambri come to Vatuca, and offer to take the Camp.

Icero having all the days before observed Cæsar's direction with great diligence, and hept the Soldiers within the Camp, not fuffering so much as a Boy to go out of the Trenches; the seventh day distributing of Casar's return according to his promise, for that he understood he was gone further into the Country, and Stood he was gone further into the Country, and heard nothing of his return; and withat being moved with the Speeches of the Soldiers, who termed their patient abiding within their Trenches, a Siege, forafmuch as no Man was suffered to go out of them, and expeding no such chance within the compass of three miles, which was the furthely the purposed to send them for Corn: Especially considering that nine Legions were abroad besides were served of Horse than Early their servers. great Forces of Horse, the Enemy being already dispersed and almost extinguished. Accordingly he ent five Coborts to gather Corn in the next Fields, which were separated from the Garrison only with a little Hill lying between the Camp and the Corn. There were many left in the Camp of the other Legions that were fick, of whom such as were re-covered to the number of three hundred, were sent with them all under one Ensign; besides a great company of Soldiers Boys, and great store of Cattel which they had in the Camp. In the mean time came these German Rutters, and with the same gallop as they came thither, they sought to enter in at the Decumane Gate; neither were they discovered, by reason of a Wood which kept them out of fight, until they were almost at the Trenches; insomuch as such Trades-men and Merchants as kept their Booths and Shops under the Rampier, had no time to be received into the Camp. Our Men were much troubled at the unexpectedness of the thing; and the Cohort that kept Watch did hardly sustain the first assault. The Enemy was quickly spread about the Works, to see if they could find entrance in at any other part. Our Men did hardly keep the Gates; the rest was defended by the fortification and the place it felf. The whole Camp was in a great fear, and one inquired of another the reason of the Tumult : Neither could they tell which way to carry their Enfigns, or how any Man should dispose of himself. One gave out that the Camp was taken; and another that the Army and General was overthrown, and that the place. Through this fear and confusion that had posseft the whole Camp, the Germans were confirmcouraged one another not to Suffer so great a fortune to escape them. Publius Sextius Baculus, that had been Primipilus under Cæsar (of whom mention bath been made in the former Battels) was there left fick, and had taken no sustenance of five days before. He hearing the danger they matter to be in great hazard, taking Arms from one that flood next him, be went and flood in the Port. The Centurions of the Cohort that kept watch followed him, and they for a while ingaged the Enemy. Sextius having received many great wounds, fainted at length, and was hardly faved by those that stood next him. Upon this respite the rest did so far assure themselves, that they durst stand upon the Works, and make a shew of defence.

OBSERVATION.

N the former Observation I disputed the interest which the whole Army hath in one particular Man, which out of Cafar's opinion I concluded to be fuch as was not to be neglected: But if we suppose a party extraordinary, and tye him to fuch fingular worth as was in Sextius, I then doubt by this Example, whether I may not equal him to the multitude, or put him alone in the balance to counterpoise the rest of his Fellows. For doubtless if his Valour had not exceeded any height of Courage, elsewhere than to be found within those Walls, the whole Garrison had been utterly flaughtered, and the place had been made fatal to the Romans by two difastrous calamities. In confideration whereof, I will referr my felf to the judgment of the wife, how much it importeth a great Commander, not only in honour as a rewarder of vertue, but in wildom and good discretion, to make much of so gallant a fpirit, and to give that respect unto him, as may both witness his valiant carriage, and the thankful acceptation thereof on the behalf of the Commonweal, wherein we need not doubt of Cafar's requital to this Sextius, having by divers honourable Relations in these Wars, touching his valiantness and prowess in Arms, made him partaker of his own Glory, and recommended him to posterity for an example of true Valour.

CHAP. XVI.

The Sicambri continue their purpose in taking the Camp.

N the mean time the Soldiers, having made an end of reaping and gathering Corn, heard the Color, cry. The Horsemen hasted before, and found in what danger the matter stood. There was in that place no fortifications to receive the atfrighted Soldiers: Such as were lately inrolled and had no experience in matters of War, fet their faces towards the Tribunes of the Soldiers, and to the Centurions, and expected directions from them. There was none so assured or valiant, but were barbarous People came thither as Conquerours: troubled thereat. The barbarous People having Many took occasion from the place to imagine new spied the Ensigns afar off, left off their Assault:

CHAP. XVIII.

COMMENTARIES.

C.efar returneth to spoil the Enemy: And Punisheth Acco.

Æsar returning again to trouble and vex the Casar. Enemy, having called a great number of People from the bordering Cities, he fent them out into all Parts. All the Villages and Houses which were any where to be seen, were burned to the Ground; Pillage and Booty was taken in every place; The Corn was not only confumed by So great a multitude of Men and Cattel, but beaten down also by the unseasonableness of the Year, and continual Rain: Insomuch, That albeit divers did bide themselves for the present, yet the Army being withdrawn, they must necessarily perish through Want and Scarcity. And oftentimes they happened of the place (the Horsemen being divided into many Quarters) where they did not only see Ambiorix, but kept him for the most part in sight: And in hoping still to take him, some that thought to merit Cælar's highest Favour, took such infinite Pains, as were almost beyond the Power of Nature: And ever there seemed but a little between them and the thing they most desired. But he conveyed himself away through Dens, Woods, and Dales, and in the Night-time fought other Countries and Quarters, with no greater a Guard of Horse than Four, to whom only he durst commit the safety of his Life, The Country being in this manner harasi'd and depopulated Cæsar, with the loss of two Cohorts, brought back his Army to Durocortorum, in the State of the Men of Rheims; where a Parliament being Summoned, he determined to call in question the Conspiracy of the Senones, and Carnutes, and especially Acco, the principal Author of that Council: Who being Condemned, was put to Death, More majorum. Some others fearing the like Judgment, saved themselves by Flight: These he interdicted Fire and Water. So leaving two Legions to Winter in the Confines of the Treviri, and two other amongst the Lingones, and the other fix at Agendicum in the borders of the Senones, having made Provision of Corn for the Army, he went into OBSERVATION.

Italy, ad Conventus agendos.

THe conclusion of this Summer's Work was flut up with the Sack and Depopulation of the Eburones, as the extremity of hostile Fury, when the Enemy lieth in the fastness of the Country, and refuseth to make open War. That being done, Cafar proceeded in a course of Civil Judgment with such principal Offenders as were of the Conspiracy: And namely, with Acco, whom he punished in such manner as the old Romans were accustomed to do with such Offenders as had forfeited their Loyalty to their Country; a kind of Death which Nero knew not, although he had been Emperor of Rome Thirteen Years, and put to Death many Thousand People. The Party Condemned was to have his Neck locked in a Fork, and to be Whipped Naked to Death: And he that was put to Death after that manner, was punished More majorum. Such others as feared to undergo the Judgment, and fled before they came to Tryal, were Banished out of the Country, and made uncapable of the benefit of Fire and Water in that Empire.
And thus endeth the Sixth Commentary.

And first, They thought it had been the Legions that ture. Which continual exercise and use of Arms had returned, which the Prisoners had told them to amongst the Romans, attained to such perfection, as made Militum fine rectore stabilem virtutem, the Valour of the Soldiery, sirm without their Commander, as Livy witnesseth: And as Anti-ochus confessed to Scipio; Quod si vincuntur, non minuuntur animis tamen, though they were Overcome, yet their Courage abated not. Cafar, in all his Battels, had a special regard to the inexperience of the new Inrolled Bands, placing them either behind the Army for a Guard to their Carriages, as he did in the Helvetian Action, or leaving them as a defence to the Camp, or flewing them aloof off; fignifying thereby, as Livy faith of the Sidicini, Quod magis nomen quam vires ad prefidium adferebant, that they made more noise of an Army than they did good. Whereby it confequently followeth, that Military Vertue proceedeth not so much from Nature, or any original Habit, as it doth from exercise and practice of Arms. I grant there is a disposition in Nature, and a particular Inclination to this or that Art: according to that Line of the Poet;

Fortes creantur fortibus & bonis. Stout Men are got by Stout and Good.

But this disposition must be perfected by use, and falleth short of Valour or Military Virtue, which consisteth of two Parts. The first, in knowledge of the discipline of War, and the Rules of Service: Whereby they may understand the course of things, and be able to judge of particular Refolutions. The fecond, is the faithful endeavour in executing fuch Projects as the Rules of War do propound for their fafety. Both which parts are gotten only by use. For as the knowledge of Military Discipline is best learned by Practice; so the often repetition thereof begetteth assurance in Action, which is nothing else but that which we call Valour. In which two Parts, these new enrolled Bands had fmall understanding; for they were as ignorant what course to take in that extremity, as they were unaffured in their worfer

The Second OBSERVATION.

This Cuneus, or Troop of Soldiers disposed in- A Cuneus to a Triangle, was the best and safest way to described break through an Enemy. For an Angle hath break through an Enemy. For an Ange main a renting and dividing Property, and is so sharp in the meeting of the two side Lines, that the point thereof resembleth indivisibility, and therefore is apt and proper to divide afunder, and to make a feparation of any quantity. Which form Nature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed in the fashion of such Creature hath also observed hath also observed hath also observed hath also observed hat the fashion of such Creature hath also observed hat tures as have a piercing and dividing motion; as in Fishes, that have all Heads for the most part sharp, and thence Angle-wise are enlarged into the groffness of their Body : And Pirds likewife, the better to divide the Air, have sharp Bills and little Heads, with a Body annexed of a larger proportion. The manner of the Romans was (as I have already shewed) to strengthen the piercing Angle with thick compacted Targets; and then enlarging the fides as occasion served, either to the quantity of an acute, or a right, or an obtuse Angle, they gave the Charge in fuch fort, Ut quacunque parte percutere impetu suo vellent, suftineri nequeunt, that wherefoever they fell on, they were not long to be endured, as Livy faith.

be gone a great way off; afterward contemning the fmallness of their number, they set upon them on all sides. The Soldiers Boys betook themselves unto the next Hill, and being quickly put from thence they cast themselves headlong amongst the Maniples and Ensigns, and so put the Soldiers in a worse fear than they were before. Some were of Opinion to put them-felves into the form of Battel, which refembleth a Wedge, and so (forasmuch as the Camp was at vecage, and so (fordimics as the Camp was at hand) to break speedily through the Enemy: In which course, if any part should be circumvented and cut a pieces, yet they hoped the rest might save themselves. Others thought it better to make good the Hill, and all of them to attend one and the Jame Fortune. This advice the old Soldiers did not like of, who (as I said before) went out with the others that were fent a Foraging all under one Enfign by themselves: And therefore encouraging one another, Caius Trebonius, a Roman Horseman, being their Causs reconnus, a Koman Horfeman, being their Captain, and Commanding behm at that time, brake through the thickest of the Enemy, and came all safe into the Camp. The Boys and Horfemen following bard after them, were likewife fawed by the Valour of the Soldiers. But those that took the time. Hill, having never had any use of Service, had neither the Courage to continue in that Resolution, which they had before chosen, to defend themselves from that place of advantage, nor to imitate that force and speed which they had seen to have helped their Fellows; but endeavouring to be received into the Camp, fell into places of difadountage; where-in divers of their Centurions, who had lately been taken from the lowest Companies of other Legions, taken from the lowest Companies of other Legions, and for their Valours lake preferred to the highest and chiefest Companies of this Legion, lest they found lase the Honour which they had before gotten, Fighting Valianthy died in the place. Part of the Soldiers, by the Provosts of these Men that had removed the Enemy, beyond all hope, got safe into the Camp; the rest were defeated and slain by the Germans.

The First OBSERVATION.

THis circumstance doth afford us two observable Points. The one, How much an old experienced Soldier, that hath the use and knowledge of Service, exceedeth the rawness of such as are newly enrolled. The fecond, which dependeth upon the former, That Valour and Military Vertue is a consequent of use and practice, rather than any inherent Gift of Nature. Camillus being fent with an Army against the Thuscans, the Roman Soldier was much affrighted at the greatness of the Host which the Enemy had put on Foot: Which Camillus perceiving, he used no other motives of perswasion to strengthen their weakned Minds, and to affure them of a happy day, but this; Quod quisque didicit aut consuevit. faciat, Let every Man do that which he hath been taught, and used to; as well knowing where to rouze their Valour, and in what part their greatest strength rested. For as Men cannot prevail in that wherein they are unexperi-enced, but will be wanting in the Supplies of their own particular, and miscarry even under the directions of another Hannibal: So a known and beaten Track is quickly taken, and the difficulties of a business are made easie by Acquaintance. Use maketh Masteries, saith our English Proverb, and Practice and Art do far exceed NaCHAP. XVII.

The Sicambri give over their purpose and depart.

The Germans being out of hope of taking the Camp, forasmuch as they saw our Men to stand upon the Works, they returned over the Rhine, with the Booty which they had in the Woods. And such was the fear of the Roman Soldier, even after the Enemy was gone, that Caius Volusenus being fent that Night to the Camp with the Horsemen, they would not believe that Cælar and the Army were returned in safety. Fear had so possest their Minds, that they did not let to say, That all the Legions were Overthrown, and the Horse had escaped by flight, and desired there to be received: For they could not be perswaded, the Army being Safe, That the Germans would have attempted to surprise their Camp. Of which Fear they were de-livered by Cæsar's Arrival. He being returned, not ignorant of the events of War, complained of one thing only, that the Cohorts that kept the Watch, were sent from their Stations, forasmuch as no place ought to be given to the least Casualty. And there he faw how much Fortune was able to do by the sudden coming of the Enemy, and how much more in that he was put off from the Rampier and the Gates which he had so nearly taken. But of all the rest, this seemed the strangest, that the Germans coming over the Rhine to depopulate and fool Ambiorix and his Country, had like to have taken the Roman Camp, which would have been as acceptable to Ambiorix as any thing that could happen.

OBSERVATION.

T is an old faying, avouched by Plutarch, For-tuna id unum hominibus non aufert, quod bene fuerit consultum, What a Man hath once well advised, that, and only that Fortune can never despoil him of : Which Tiberius, the Roman Emperour well understood; of whom Suetonius reporteth, Quod minimum fortuna, casibusque per-mittebat, That he trusted very little to Fortune or Casualties: And is the same which Casar counfelleth in this place, Ne minimo quidem casui locum relinqui debuiffe. That no place is to be given to the least Casualty. It were a hard condition to expose a naked Party to the Malice of an Enemy, or to disadvantage him with the loss of his fight.

An Army, without a Guard at any time, is meerly naked, and more subject to slaughter, than those that never took Arms: And the rather, where the watch is wanting, for there fudden Chances can hardly be prevented: And if they happen to avoid any fuch unexpected Cafualty, they have greater cause to thank Fortune for her Favour, than to be angry with her for her Malice: For prevention at such times is out of the way, and they are wholly at her Mercy; as Casar hath rightly delivered, touching this accident. And therefore, whether an Army march forward, or continue in a place, Sleep or Wake, Play or Work, go in Hazard, or reft Secure, let not so great a Body be at any time without a competent ftrength, to answer the spite of such Misad-

The

The Duke of ROHAN'S REMARKS.

NE/ar met with no great opposition in this War, every Body flying before him, while and Cotta were defeated the preceeding Year. he burnt and deftroyed the Country. Nevertheless, there are fine Remarks to be made upon it. For the it does not teach us how to Fight, and to take Places; yet it inftructs us how to deal with those that defend themselves by flight, and retire into inacceffible Places: In which feveral Captains have been deficient, for want of having observed Three principal things like Cx/ar, viz. So to prevent them by great diligence, as to surprise them before their being able to retire and to remove their Goods into Forests; by which means some are constrain'd to Surrender, and others perish with Hunger. Secondly, der, and others perifit with Hunger. Secondly, To divide an Army into as many Bodies as may be confiftent with Safety, to the end that attacking a Country in divers Places, at one and the fame time the Inhabitants may be at a lofs which way to fly; And laftly, To hinder the Soldiers from ftragling without Order, to run after Booty, left they should be fer upon by the Enemies. Such purificus have offen created great Inconveniences. omiffions have often created great Inconveniences in Victorious Armies. Which ought to teach us never to swerve from the strictness and severity of Military Discipline; tho' we suppose our selves at a great distance from our Enemies, and very fafe. We have a very good Example of it in this Book, in the case of Cicero, who receiv'd a confiderable lofs, and had like to have been entirely defeated, by having fuffer'd himself to be prevail'd upon by the importunity of his Soldiers, who, contrary to Cafar's Command, would go out of their Retrenchments to Forage.

We also learn the difference between old and new Soldiers, who, for want of experience, nor knowing how to choose the safest and most honourable way, retiring upon a Hill were cut to pieces: Whereas the others being fensible that there was no fafety but by forcing their way to the Camp with their Swords, fav'd themselves and their Camp. We may also see how ingeni-ous fear is to seek our Subjects to encrease it, for they look'd upon it as an ill Omen.

Let us likewise observe, That when ever Cafar defign'd to go about an Expedition of feven or eight days, in which diligence was requir'd, he fent away his Baggage, which commonly is a great hindrance in the Field. Therefore is impossible to conduct an Army well, unless a General retrenches his Camp according to occasion, or marches without Baggage.

I.et us moreover admire how careful Cafar was to be well inform'd of all that pass'd by his Spies. And indeed, it is a thing of such use that a Prince or General ought never to spare any thing for it, fince it is the only way to attempt great Actions, and to avoid great Ruines.

Neither must we forget his skill in dividing those that were making a League against him, and in attacking them separately: Nor his usual diligence in furprifing them, whereby he did atchieve the best part of his great designs. We will conclude the Remarks of this Book by the Stratagem of Labienus; who being defirous to Fight those of Tryers before the artival of the Germans, declar'd publickly that he was afraid of them, and that he defign'd to retire; being very fenfible that there were Gauls in his Army who would give them notice of it; and in the mean would give them tolders to retire with great noise, and as it were with fear; which those of Triers being acquainted with; unwilling to lose the occasion that offerd it less cross a River, and came up to them in diforder, as to a certain Vi-Ctory, without flaying for the Germans. But Labienus turn'd against them in good Order, and beat them. However, I would never advise any one to attempt fuch a Stratagem with Raw Men, who are commonly frightened when an Enemy comes running upon them without Order; tho' on the contrary it encourages those that are experienced in Combats.

The Seventh COMMENTARY of the Wars in GALLIA.

The Argument.

His last Commentary containeth the Specialities of the War which Casar made against all the States of Gallia, united into one Confederacy, for the expelling of the Roman Government out of that Continent, whom Calar Overthrew in the end, Horribili vigilantia, & prodigiosis operibus, by his horrible Vigilancy, and prodigious Actions.

CHAP. L.

The Gauls enter into new deliberations of Revolt.

Allia being in quiet, Cæsar, according to his determination, went into Italy to keep Courts and Sessions. There he understood that P. Clodius was Slain, and of a Decree which the Senare had made, touching the Af-fembly of all the Youth of Italy: And thereupon he purposed to Enroll new Bands throughout the whole Province. These News were quickly carried over the Alpes into Gallia, and the Gauls themselves added fuch Rumors to it, as the matter seemed well to bear; that Casar was now detained by the Troubles at Rome, and in such Diffentions could not return to Kome, and in Jush Differitions could not return to bit Army. Being fittered up by this occassim, fluch as before were inwardly grieved, that they were fubject to the Empire of the People of Rome, did now more freely and bodly enter into the confideration of War. The Princes and chiefest Men of Gallia having appointed Councils and Meetings in Remote and Woody Places, complained of the Death of Acco, and showed it to be a Fortune which might concern themdo propound all manner of Promises and Rewards to fuch as will begin the War, and with the danger of their Lives redeem the Liberty of their Country: Wherein they are to be very careful not to lose any Time, to the end that Cæsar may be stopp from coming to his Army before their secret Conferences be discovered. Which might easily be done, for simulated as neither the Legions durst go out of their Winter-Quarters, in the absence of their General, nor the General come to the Legions without a Convoy. To conclude, they held it better to die in Fight, than to lose their ancient Honour in matter of War, and the Liberty left them by their Predecessors.

OBSERVATION.

His Chapter discovereth such sparkles of Revolt, rifing from the discontentment of the Conquered Gauls, as were like to break out into an universal burning; and within a while proved fuch a Fire, as the like hath not been seen in the Continent of Gallia. For this Summer's Work verified the Saying of the Samnites, Quod pax fer Livy, iii, 31 vientibus gravior quam liberis bellum esfet, That Peace is more grievous to those that are in Vasfalage, than War is to Free Men: And was carried on either part with fuch a Resolution, as in respect of this Service, neither the Gauls did before that time engage themselves seriously in their Tote that time engage memory's netrousy in their Countries Caule, nor did the Romans know the difficulty of their Task. But as Epaminandas called the Fields of Baotia, Mars's Scaffold, where he Life of he kept his Games; or as Xenophon nameth the Marcellus.

City of Ephefus, the Armorer's Shop: So might Gallia, for this Year, be called the Theatre of War. The chiefest encouragement of the Gauls at this time, was the trouble and diffention at at this time, was the trouble and diffention at Rome, about the Death of Clodius, and the accu-fation of Milo, for killing Clodius.

This Clodius (as Plusarch reporteth) was a Plusarch in young Man of a Nioble House, but wild and in-the Isle of folent, and much condemned for prophaning a Gieoo, fecret Sacrifice, which the Ladies of Rome did Celebrate in Cela's House, by coming amongst them, disguised in the Habit of a young singing Wench, which he did for the Love of Pompeia, Calar's Wife: Whereof being openly accused he Cafar's Wife: Whereof being openly accused, he was quitted by secret means which he made to the Judges; and afterwards obtained the Tribuneship judges; and atterwards obtained the Tribunefhip of the People, and caufed Cieero to be Banifhed, and did many Outrages and Infolencies in his Tribunefhip: Which caufed Mile to Kill him, for which he was also accused. And the Senate fearing that this Accusation of Mile, being a bold-spirited Man, and of good Quality, would move fome Uproar or Sedition in the City, they gave Commission to Pompey to see Justice executed, as well in this Cause, as for other Offences, that the City might be quiet, and the Commonwealth Ne quid respirate fuffer no derriment. Whereupon Pompey possess the Market-place; where the Cause was to be explan. heard with Bands of Soldiers, and Troops of Armed Men. And these were the Troubles in Rome upon the Death of Clothus, which the Gauls did take as an occasion of Revolt, hoping thereby that Cafar (being in Gallia Cifalpina, which Province was allotted to his Government, as well as that Gallia (Northward the Alpes) would have been detained from his Army.

The

CHAP. II.

The Men of Chartres take upon them the beginning of a Revolt, under the Conduct of Cotuatus and Conetodunus.

Hese things being thus disputed, the Men of Chartres did make themselves the chief of that War, refusing no danger for the common Safety of their Country. And foras at that present they could not give caution by Hostage, lest the matter should be discovered; they defire to have their Covenants strengthened by Oath, and by mutual Collation of their Military Enfigns, which was the most Religious Ceremony, they could use, to bind the rest not to forsake them, having made an entrance and beginning to that War. The Men of Chartres being commended by the rest, and the Oaths of all them that were present being taken, and a time appointed to begin, they brake up the Affembly. When the day came, they of Chartres, under the Conduct of Cotuatus and Conctodunus, two de-Sperate Fellows, upon a Watch-word given, ran speedily to * Genabum; and such Roman Citizens as were there upon business, namely, C. Fusius Cotta, a Knight of Rome, whom Calar had left Overfeer of the Provision of Corn, they Slew, and took their Goods. The report thereof was quickly spread over all the States of Gallia, for when any fuch great or extraordinary matter happeneth, they fignifie it through the Country by an Out-cry and Shout, which is taken by others, and delivered to the next, and fo goeth from hand to hand, as it happened at this time: For that which was done at Genabum, at Sun-rifing, was before the first Watch of the Night was ended, heard in the Confines of the Arverni,

OBSER VATION.

His manner of Out-cry here mentioned to be usual in Gallia, was the same which remaineth in use at this present in Wales, although not so frequent as in former Times. For the Cuftom is there, as often as any Robbery happeneth to be committed, or any Man to be Slain, or what other Outrage or Riot is done, the next at hand do go to fome eminent place where they may be best heard, and there they make an Out-cry or Howling, which they call a Hoobub, fignifying the Fact to the next Inhabitants, who take it as paffionately, and deliver in further, and joyn themselves with the Arverni fo from hand to hand it quickly spreadeth over all the Country. It is a very ready way to put the Country in Arms, and was first devised (as it feemeth) for the ftay and apprehension of Robbers and Outlaws, who kept in strong Holds, and lived upon the spoil of the bordering Inhabitants: But otherwise it savoureth of Barbarism, rather than of any Civil Government.

CHAP. III.

Vercingetorix stirreth up the Arverni to the like Commotion and Revolt.

N like manner Vercingetorix, the Son of Celtillus, of the Nation of the Arverni, a young Man of great Power and Authority, (whose Father was the Commander of all Gallia, and because he sought a Kingdom, was Slain by those of

Vassals, did easily incense them to Rebellion. His purpose being known, every Man took Arms; and so he was driven out of the Town of Gergovia, by Gobanitio his Uncle and other Princes, who thought it not safe to make trial of that Fortune. And yet he desisted not, but enrolled needy and desperate People; and with fuch Troops, whomfoever he met withal of the State, he did eafily draw them to his Party, perswading them to take Arms for the defence of Common Liberty. And having at length got great Forces together, he expelled his Adversaries out of the Town, by whom he was himself before thrust out. He was called of his Men by the Title of King, and sent Embassiages into all Parts, adjuring them to continue constant and faithful. The Senones, the Parisii, the Pictones, the Cadurci, the Turones, the Aulerci, the Lemovices, the Andes, and all the rest that border upon the Ocean. were quickly made of his Party: And by all their Confents, the chief Command was conferred upon him. Which Authority being offered him, he Commanded Hoftages to be brought in unto him from all those States, and a certain number of Soldiers to be fent him with all speed. He rated every City what proportion of Arms they should have ready, and especially he laboured to raise great store of Horse. To extraordinary Diligence he added extraordinary Severity, compelling fuch as flood doubtful, by hard and severe Punishment: For such as had committed a great Offence, he put to Death by Fire and Tor-ture; lesser Faults he punished with the loss of their Nose or their Eyes, and so sent them home, that by their Example others might be terrified. By these Practices and Severity, having speedily raised a great Army, he fent Lucterius of Cahors, a Man of great Spirit and Boldness, with part of the Forces, towards the Rutheni, and he himself made towards was enaca, neard in the Conjines of the Hivelin, towards the Bituriges. Upon his coming the Bituriges fent to the Hedui, in whose Protestion they were, to require aid against Vercingetorix. The Hedui, by the advice of the Legates which Casar had left with the Army, fent Forces of Horse and Foot to the aid. the Bituriges : Who coming to the River Loire, which divideth the Bituriges from the Hedui, after a few days stay, not daring to pass over the River, returned home again, bringing word to our Legates, riges, and so returned. For they knew that if they had paffed over the River, the Bituriges had inclosed them in on the one fide, and the Arverni on the other. But whether they did return upon that occasion, or through perfidious Treachery, it remaineth doubtful. The Bituriges, upon their departure, did presently

OBSERVATION.

T is observed, by fuch as are acquainted with There says always a proportion of quality between him that lity terment Commandeth and them that Obey For if a No. Commandeth and them that Obey: For if a Man commander of Sardanapalus's condition should take upon him and his Silla the charge of Marius's Army, it were like to take riani. Sub no better effect, than if Manlius had the leading a Mafter, of lacivity one Crandes. of laicivious Cinades. And as we may observe in fuch a Soreconomical Policy, a diffolute Mafter may as foon command Hair to grow on the palm of his Hand, as to make a vertuous Servant; but the respect of Duty between such Relatives doth likewise inferr the like respect of quality: So in all forts and Conditions of Command, there must be fympathizing means to unite the diverfity of the parts in the happy end of perfect Government. In this new Empire, which befell Verbis own State) calling together bis Followers and cingetorix, we may observe a double proportion

Lib. VII.

COMMENTARIES.

between him and his People. The first, of Strength Commanded part of the Forces which were in the and Ability; and the other, of Quality and Refemblance of Affection: Upon the affurance of which proportion, he grounded the aufterity of his Command. For it appeareth, That his first beginning was by Perfwafion and Intreaty, and would endure no direction, but that which was guided by a loose and easie Rein; holding it neither fafe nor feemly, but rather a strain of extream Madness, first to punish or threaten, and then to want Power to make good his Judgments: But being strengthned by authority from themfelves, and backed with an Army able to control their Disobedience : he then added Punishment as the Enfign of Magistracy, and confirmed his Power by rigorous Commands; which is as neceffary a demonstration of a well-fettled Government, as any circumstance belonging there-

Touching the refemblance and proportion of their Qualities, it is manifeftly shewed by the feguel of this Hiftory, that every Man defired to redeem the common liberty of their Country, in that measure of endeavour as was fitting so great a cause. Amongst whom Vercingetorix being their Chief Commander, Summe diligentia (as the Story faith) added Summam severitatem, to great Diligence great Severity; as well affured, That the greater part would approve his Justice, and condemn the uncertainty of doubtful Refolutions, defiring no further Service at their hands. than that wherein himfelf would be the foremost. In imitation of Valerius Corvinus: Facta mea, non dicta, vos milites, sequi volo; nec disciplinam modo, sed exemplum etiam à me petere; I would have you, O my Soldiers, do as I do, and not fo much mind what I fay; and to take not your discipline only, but your Pattern also from me. And therefore the Party was like to be well upheld; forafmuch as both the Prince and the People were fo far engaged in the matter intended. as by the refemblance of an earnest desire might answer the Measure of due proportion.

CHAP. IV.

Cafar cometh into Gallia, and by a device getteth to his Army.

Hefe things being told Cæsar in Italy; as soon as he understood that the matters in the City were by the Wisdom of Pompey brought into better state, he took his pey brought into better frate, he took his fourney into Gallia, and being come thicher he was much troubled how to get to his Army. For if he Bould fend for the Legions into the Province, he underfloat that they flould be certainty foughs withat by the way, in his Abfence. If he himfelf flould go unto them, he doubted how he might safely commit his Person to any, although they were such as were yet in Peace. In the mean time Lucterius of Cahors being fent against the Rutheni, doth easily unite that State to the Arverni: And proceeding further against the Nitiobriges and the Gabali, he received Hostages of both of them, and having raised a great Power, he laboured to break into the Province, and to make towards Narbo. Which being known, Casar resolved by all means to put him by that purpose, and went himself to Narbo. At his coming he encouraged such as stood doubtful or timorous, and placed Garrisons amongst the Rutheni, the Volsci, and about Narbo, which were Province, together with those Supplies which he had brought out of Italy, to go against the Helvii, which are adjoining upon the Arverni. Tingbeing thus ordered, Lucterius being now Suppressed and Removed bolding it to be dangerous to ater among the Garrisons, he himself went towards the Helvii. And albeit the Hill Gebenna, which divideth the Arverni from the Helvii, by reason of the hard time of Winter, and the depth of the Snow, did hinder their Passage; yet, by the industry of the Soldiers, making way through Snow of six foot deep, they came into the Confines of the Arverni: Who being suddenly and unawares Suppressed, little mistrusting an Invasion over the Hill Gebenna, which encloseth them in as a Wall, and at that time of the Year doth not afford a Path to a fing Nan alone, he Commanded the Horsemen to featter themsclves far and near to make the Enemy the more afraid. These things being speedily carried to Vercingetorix, all the Arverni full of Fear and Amazement flocked about him, befeeching him to have a care of their State, and not to suffer themselves to be Sacked by the Enemy, especially now at this time, when as all the War was transferred upon them. Upon their instant entreaty he removed his Camp out of the Territories of the Bituriges, and marched towards the Country of the Arverni. But Cæsar having continued two days in those places, for asmuch as he understood, both by use and opinion, what course Vercingetorix was like to take : he left the Army, pretending some Supplies of Horse, which he went to raise, and appointed young Brutus to Command those Forces, admonishing him to send out the Horsemen into all Quarters, and that he himself would not be absent from the Camp above three days. These things being thus settled, none of his Followers knowing his determination, by great Journeys he came to Vienna; where taking fresh Horse, which he had laid there many days before, he ceased neither Night nor Day, until he came through the Confines of the Hedui to the Lingones, where two Legions Wintered; to the end if the Hedui should undertake any thing against him, he might with speed prevent it. Being there, he sent to the rest of the Legions, and brought them all to one place, before the Arverni could possibly have notice of it.

OBSERVATION.

Æsar, upon his first entrance into Gallia, was To abuse an perplexed how to get to his Army: And the Employmen matter stood in such Terms, as brought either commendable the Legions or his own Person into hazard. For in a com-(as he faith) if he should send for the Legions to mander. come unto him, they should doubtless be Fought withal by the way, which he was loath to adventure, unless himself had been present: Or otherwise if he himself had gone unto them, he doubted of the entertainment of the Revolting Gauls, and might have Overthrown his Army, by the loss of his own Person. In this extremity of Choice, he resolved upon his own Pasfage to the Army, as less dangerous and more honourable, rather than to call the Legions out of their Winter-Quarters, where they flood as a Check to bridle the Infolency of the Mutinous Gauls, and fo to bring them to the hazard of Battel, in fetching their General into the Field: Whereby he might have loft the Victory before he had begun the Wars. And for his better fafety in this Paffage, he used this cunning. Having affured the Roman Pro-vince by ftrong and frequent Garrisons on the Frontier Places and near unto the Enemy, and Frontiers, and removed Lucterius from those Parts; gathering together fuch supplies as he had brought with him out of Italy, with other Forces which he found in the Province, he went speedily into the Territories of the * Arverni, making a way over the Hill, * Gebenna, at fuch a time of the year as made it unpaffable for any Forces, had they not been led by Cafar; only for this purpole, to have it noised abroad, that whereas Vercingetorix and the Arverni had principally undertook the Quarrel against the Romans, and made the of beginning a new War, Cafar would first deal with them, and lay the weight thereof upon their shoulders, by calling their Fortunes first in question, to the end he might posses the World with an opinion of his presence in that Country, and draw Vercingetorix back again to defend his State. whilft he in the mean time did flip to his Army without suspicion or fear of peril: For staying there no longer than might serve to give a suffici-ent colour to that pretence, and leaving those Forces to execute the reft, and to make good the fecret of the Project, he conveyed himself to his Army with fuch speed and celerity, as doth verifie the saying of Suetonius; Quod persape nuncios de fe prævenit, that he often outwent the ordinary Messengers.

These blinds and false intentions, are of special use in matter of War, and serve as well to get advantages upon an Enemy, as to clear a difficulty by cleanly Evafion : Neither is a Commander the less valued for fine conveyance in Military Projects, but deserveth rather greater honour for adding Art unto Valour, and supplanting the ftrength of opposition with the sleight of Wit.

Dolus an virtus quis in hoste requirit?

Who looks at Fraud or Valour in a Foe? hath always been held a principle amongst Men of War. And Lisander his Counsel is the same in effect, that where the Lion's skin will not ferve the turn, there take the Fox's. Carbo spake it to the commendation of Sylla, that he had to do both with a Lion and a Fox, but he feared more his Fox's pate than his Lion's skin. It is reported that Hannibal excelled all other of his time for abusing the Enemy in matter of Stratagem, for he never made fight but with an addition of affiftants, Supporting Force with Art, and the fury of Arms with the fubrilty of Wir.

Of late time amongst other practices of this nature, the Treaty at Oftend is most memorable, entertained onely to gain time: that while speech of Parlee was continued, and Pledges delivered to the Arch-Duke Albertus, for the fafety of fuch as were fent into the Town to capitulate with the which were no fooner taken in, but the Treaty proved a ftratagem of War. In these foils and tricks of Wit, which at all times and in all ages have been highly efteemed in Men of War, as special vertues beseeming the did his Master good service, in abusing Crassus the Roman General by fair promises; or as Plu-Flut. Oraffieb. tarch saith, by foul Perjury, till in the end he turiges. brought his head to be an actor in a Tragedy: albeit Surena never deserved well of good report fince that time. Howfoever, Men of civil Society ought not to draw this into use from the example of Soldiers, forasmuch as it is a part of the pro- be chosen: but in a variety of evils to be able feffion of cutting of Throats, and hath no pre- to discern the difference, and to chuse the least, scription but in extremities of War.

CHAP. V.

Vercingetorix besiegeth Gergovia. Casar taketh in Vellaunodunum and Genabum,

His being known, Vercingetorix brought Castai.
back his Army again into the Country of the Bituriges, and thence marched to besiege Gergovia, a Town held by the Boii, whom Casar had left there after the Helvetian War, and given the Jurisdiction of the Town to the Hedui. Which brought Casar into great perplexity, whether he should keep the Legions in one place for that time of Winter which remained and so suffer the stipendaries of the Hedui to be taken and spoiled, whereby all Gallia might take occasion to revolt, forasmuch as the Romans should Seem to afford no protection or countenance to their Friends; or otherwife draw his Army out of their Winter quarters sooner than was usual, and thereby become subject to the difficulties of provision and carriage of Corn. Notwithstanding it seemed better, and so he resolved, rather to undergo all difficulties, than by taking fuch a fcorn to lose the good wills of all his followers. And therefore perfuading the Hedui diligently to make supply of necessary Provisions, he fent to the Boii, to advernecessary Evolutions, so sent to see Doils, to macri-tife them of his coming, to encourage them to continue Loyal, and nobly to resist the assume that the Enemy: and leaving two Legions with the Carriages of the whole Army at Agendicum, he marched towards the Boii. The next day coming to a Town of the Senones called Vellaunodunum, he determined to take it, to the end he might leave no Enemy behind him, which might hinder a speedy Supply of Victuals: and in two days he inclosed it about with a Ditch and a Rampier. The third day some being sent on touching the growth day some being sent out touching the grown, the commanded all their Arms and their Cattel to be brought out, and fix hundred Pledges to be delivered. Leaving C. Trebonius a Legate to see it performed; he himself bolius a Legate to see it persormes; we outnied made all speed towards Genabum in the Territories of the Men of Chartres; who as soon as they heard of the taking in of Vellaunodunum, perfuading themselves the matter would not rest so, they resolved to put a strong Garrison into Gena-bum, Thither came Cæsar within two days, and incamping himself before the Town, the Evening drawing on, he put off the affault unto the next day, commanding the Soldiers to prepare in a rea-diness such things as should be necessary for that Service. And for asmuch as the Town of Genabum General, there might be time gained for the fend-ing in of fuch supplies of Men and Munition as feared less they of the Town would steal away in were wanting, to make good the defence thereof: the night: for prevention whereof he commanded two Legions to watch all night in Arms. The Townsmen a little before Midnight went out quietly, and began to pass over the River. Which being discovered by the Scouts, Casar with the Legions which he had ready in Arms, burnt the in Men or war, as special vertices betterming the gions which he had ready in Arms, burnt the condition of a great Commander, if it he demanded how far a General may proceed in abunumber of the Enemy being taken, and a very fing an Enemy by deeds or words; I cannot feeak few escaping, by reason of the narrowness of the diffinctly to the question: but sure I am, that Bridge and the Way which shut in the multitude. Surena, Lieutenant-General of the Parthian Army, The Town being saked and burned, and given for did his Master good services in abusing Cardia. a Booty to the Soldiers, he carried his Army over the River Loire, into the Territories of the Bi-

The First OBSERVATION.

IT is a known and an approved faying E malis minimum eft eligendum, of evils the least is to

COMMENTARIES. Hie labor, boe opus, here's all the skill and work. was far spent before he came to Genabum, he com-Vereinzeterix besieging Gergovia (a Stipendary manded such things to be sitted and had in a rea-MANUTERIA Town belonging to the Hedui, that of long time had ferved the Roman Empire,) at such a time of the year as would not afford provision of Victual for the maintenance of an Army, but with great difficulty and inconvenience of Carriage and Convoy; C.c.far was much perplexed, whether he should forbear to succour the Town and raise the fiege, or undergo the hazard of long and tedious Convoys. A matter often falling into dispute, although it be in other terms, whether honesty or honourable respect ought to be preferred before private ease and particular commodity. Casur hath declared himself touching this point, preferring the honour of the People of Rome, as the Majesty of their Empire, and the reputation which they defired to hold, touching affiftance and protection of their Friends, before any inconvenience which might happen to their Army. And not without good reasons, which may be drawn as well from the worthiness of the cause, as from the danger of the effect: For duties of Vertue and respects of Honesty, as the noblest parts of the mind, do not only challenge the service of the inferiour faculties of the Soul; but do also command the Body and the cafualties thereof, in fuch fort as is fitting the excellency of their Prerogative: for otherwise Vertue would find but bare attendance, and might leave her Scepter for want of Lawful Authority. And therefore Cafar chose rather to adventure the Army upon the casualties of hard Provision, than to blemish the Roman name with the infamy of Disloyalty. Which was less dangerous also in regard of the Effect: For where the Bond is of value, there the Forfeiture is great: And if that tie had been broken, and their opinion deceived touching the expectation of affiftance and help, all Gallia might have had just cause of revolt, and disclaimed the Roman Government for non-protection. To conclude then, let no Man deceive himself in the present benefit, which private respect may bring upon the refusal of honest regard, for the end will be a witness of the errour, and prove Honesty to be the best Policy.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Cofir near t I is observed by some writers, that Casar never undertook any Action, or at the least brought day four it not to trial, but he first assured himself of these four things.

The first was provision of Victuals, as the very foundation of warlike expeditions, whereof I have already treated in the first Commentary: The difficulty whereof made him fo doubtful to undertake the relief of Gergovia. And doubtless wholoever goeth about any enterprize of War, without certain means of Victual and Provision, must either carry an Army of Camelions that may find his Enemy either in his bosom, or as the Proverb is in Plutarch, to leap on his Belly with both his Feet.

Plarerch in

The fecond thing was Provision of all necessa-ries, which might be of use in that service: wherewith he always fo abounded, that there might rather want occasion to use them, than he be wanting to answer occasion. And these were the inftruments whereby he made fuch admirable works, fuch Bridges, fuch Mounts, fuch Trenches, fuch huge Armadoes, as appeareth by the Sea-fight with the Maritime Cities of Gallia: According to which his former cuftom, foralmuch as the day diness, as might serve for the siege the next day.

The third thing was an Army for the most part of old Soldiers, whom the Romans called Veterani, whereof he was likewise at this time provided; for the two Legions which were fresh and lately inrolled, he left at Agendicum with the Carriages, taking only the old Soldiers for this fervice, as knowing that in pugna usum amplius prodesse quam vires, uscfulness is more serviceable in War than numbers.

The fourth thing was the trial and experience of the Enemies Forces, which the former Victories affured him to be inferiour to the Romans; it being always a Rule in the Roman Discipline. (as I have already noted,) by light and eafie Comment. 1: Skirmishes, to acquaint the Soldiers with the manner of the Enemies fight, Ne eos novum bellum, novus hostis terreret, lest a new kind of fight, or Enemy might affright them; as Livy faith.

CHAP. VI.

Cafar taketh in Noviodunum, and beateth the Enemy coming to refcue the Town.

Ercingetorix understanding of Cafar's co- Cafar. ming, left the fiege, and went to meet him. Cæsar resolved to take a Town lying in his way in the Territories of the Bituriges, called Noviodunum, Which they of the Town perceiving, fent out unto him to befeech him To the end therefore that he might speed that he siness with as much celerity as he had accomplished former fervices, he commanded them to bring out their Arms, their Horse, and to deliver Pledges. Part of the Hostages being given, while the rest were in delivering over, divers Centurions and a few Soldiers being admitted into the Town, to feek out their Weapons and their Horses, the Horsemen of the Enemy, which marched before Vercingetorix's Army, were discovered afar off: Which the Townsmen had no somer perceived, and thereby con-ceived some hope of relief, but they presently took up a shout, and betook themselves to their Arms, frut the Gates, and began to make good the Walls. The Centurions that were in the Town perceiving fome new resolution of the Gauls, with their Swords drawn, poffestithemselves of the Gates, and saved both themselves and their Men that were in the Town. Cæfar commanded the Horsemen to be drawn out of the Camp, and to begin the Charge. And as they began to give ground, he sent four hundred German Horsemen to second them, whom he had resolved to keep with him from the first : Who charged the Enemy with fuch fury, that the Gauls, could no way endure the affault, but were presently put to flight; and many of them being flain, the live by the Air, or intend nothing but to build rest retired back to the Army. Upon their over-Castles in the Air, or otherwise shall be sure to throw, the Townsmen were worse affrighted than they were before; and having apprehended such as were thought to have stirred up the People, they brought them to Casar, and yielded themselves unto him. Which being ended, Cafat marched towards the Town of Avaricum, which was the greateft and best fortified of all the Towns in the Territories of the Bituriges, and situate in the most fertile part of the Country; for that being taken in, he doubted not to bring the whole State of the Bituriges eafily into his subjection.

OBSER-

OBSERATION.

the mind of Man, which (notwithstanding the low degree of baseness wherein it often sitteth,) will as occasion giveth way to revenge, readily amount to the height of Tyranny, and spare no labour to cry quittance with an Enemy: It hath been thought expedient in the wisdom of foregoing ages, to pluck the wings of fo mounting a bird, and to deprive an Enemy of fuch means, as may give hope of liberty by mutiny and revolt.

The practice of the Romans in taking in any The practice of the Romans in taking in any Romans used. Town, was to leave them forceless, that howsoto meaks an ever they might fland affected, their Nails should be furely pared for feratching, and their Power appeareth by this and many other places of Cafar, no Surrender of any Town was accepted, until they had delivered all their Arms, both offensive and defensive, with such engines and instruments of War as might any way make for the defence of the fame. Neither that only, but fuch Beafts also, whether Horse or Elephant, or any other whatsoever, as might any way advantage the use of those Weapons. Which as it was a great difmay and weakning to the Enemy; fo was it short of the third condition, commanding the delivery of fo many Hostages or Pledges as were thought convenient, being the prime of their Youth, and the flower of their Manhood, and were as the marrow to their bones, and the finews to that body. Whereby it came to pass, that the remnant was much disabled in strength, concerning their number of Fighting Men; and such as were left had neither Arms nor means to make refiftance.

The Turk observeth the same course with the Christians, but in a more cruel and barbarous manner: For he cometh duely at a certain time, not regarding any former demeanour, and leadeth away the flower of their Youth, to be invested in impiety and infidelity, and to be made Vaffals of heathenish impurity.

Oftentimes we read, that a Conquered People were not only interdicted Arms, but the matter also and the Art whereby such Arms were made and wrought: For where the People are great, and Metal and Matter plenty, it is a chance if Artificers be wanting to repair their lofs, and to refurnish their Armory. At the siege of Carthage the Romans having taken away their Arms, they notwithstanding, finding store of Metal within the Town, caused Workmen to make every day an hundred Targets and three hundred Swords, befides Arrows and Cafting-flings, using Womens Hair for want of Hemp, and pulling down their Houses for Timber to build Shipping. Whereby we may perceive, that a General cannot be too careful to deprive an Enemy of all fuch helps as may any way strengthen his hand, or make way to refiftance

CHAP. VII.

Vercingetorix perfuadeth the Gauls to a new course of War.

Ercingetorix having received fo many losses one in the neck of another, * Vellaunodunum, * Genabum and * Noviodunum being taken, he calleth his Men to Council, and telleth them that the War must be carried in another course than it hath been to keep the Romans from Forag. unu convoy of Victual: Which would easily be brought to pass forasmuch as they themselves did abound in Horse-L'Orasmuch as nothing is more changeable than men: And for that the time of the Tear did not yet serve to get Forage in the Field, the Enemy must necessarily seek it in Houses and Barns, whereby the Foragers would dayly be cut off by their Horsemen. Moreover, for their Safety and defence they were to neglect their private Commodity: Their Houses and their Villages were to be burns Their Hottles and their vitinges were to we out in the round about as far as Boia, wheresever the Romans might go to fetch their Forage. For themselves they thought it reason that they should make supply of Victual and Provision, in whose possessions they were, and for whom they fought. By this means the Romans would never be able to endure that want as would befall them, or at the confined to the circuit of their mind. For as it least be constrained to fetch their Provisions far off, with great danger and peril to themselves: Neither did it make any matter whether they killed them or put them besides their Carriages; for without necessary supplies they were never able to hold War. And to conclude, such Towns were likewife to be set on fire, as by the strength of their situation were not safe from danger, lest they should prove receptacles to linger and detract the War, and serve the Romans for booty and supplies of Provision. And albeit these things might seem heavy and bitter; yet they ought to esteem it more grie-vous to have their Wives and their Children led away into servitude, and themselves to be slain by the Sword of the Enemy: which doth necessarily fall upon a Conquered People. This opinion was generally approved by the consent of all Men, and more than twenty Cities of the Bituriges were burnt in one day: the like was done in other burns in one day: the tike was done in other states, great fires were to be seen in all parts. And although all Men took it very grievously, yet they propounded this comfort unto themselves, that Enemy being by this means defeated, they she Enemy verng vy ross means aeseatea, they should quickly recover their losses. Touching Avaricum they disputed it in Common Council, when ther it scould be burnt or defended. The Bituriges do prostrate themselves at the feet of all the Gauls, that they might not be forced to fet on fire with their own hands, the fairest City in all Gallia, being both an ornament and a strength to their State; they would easily defend it by the situation of the place, being incircled round about with a River and a Bog, and being accessible by one nar-row passage only. At length leave being granted them to keep it, Vercingetorix at first dissipading them from it, and afterwards yielding unto it, moved by the intreaty of the Gauls, and the commiseration of the common multitude; and so a fit Garrison was chosen to defend the Town.

OBSERVATION

have seen an Imprese with a Circle, and a trit a bord Hand with a sharp Stile pointing towards the matter is centre with this Motto, Hic labor, boc opus, this solit, take is a thing of work and labour; signifying there-that configurations. by, that albeit the Area thereof were plainly and which my diffinctly bounded, and the Diameter of no great my length, yet it was not an easie matter to find the Centre, which is the heart and chiefest part of that figure. In like manner, there is no business or other course so easie or plain, but the Centre may be mistaken, and the difficulty commonly resteth in hitting that point, which giveth the circumference an equal and regular motion.

The Gauls were resolved to undertake the defence of their Country, and to redeem their liberty with the hazard of their Lives: But it heretofore; for they must endeavour by all means seemeth they were mistaken in the means, and ran a course far short of the Centre. For Vercingetorix perceiving the Romans dayly to get upon the Gauls, first by taking in one Town, secondly another, and lastly of a third, he advised them to fet on fire all the Country Houses, Villages and Towns for a great circuit round about, and fo force the Romans to fetch their Forage and Provisions far off, and undergo the difficulties of long Convoys, whereby the Gauls might make use of their multitude of Horse, and keep the Romans without supplies of necessary Provisions: And so they doubted not but to give a speedy end to that War. And this he took to be the centre of that business, and the true use of their advantage.

Lib. VII.

Polybius writeth, That M. Regulus having divers times overthrown the Carthaginians in Battel, one Xantippus a Lacedamonian, clearly perceiving the cause of their often routs, began openly to say, That the Carthaginians were not overthrown by the Valour of the Romans, but by their own Ignorance: For they exceeding the Romans in Horse and Elephants, had neglected to fight in the Champaign, where their Cavalry might shew it felf, but in Hills and Woody places, where the Foot Troops were of more force, and so the Romans had the advantage. Whereby the manner of the War being changed, and by the counfel of the pregnant Greek, brought from the Hills into the level of the Plain, the Carthaginians recovered all their former losses by one absolute Victory. In like manner Hamibal finding himself to exceed the Romans in strength of Cavalry, did always endeavour to affront them in open and Champaign Countries; and as often as the Romans durft meet him, he put them to the worse: But Fabius per-ceiving the disadvantage, kept himself always upon the Hills, and in covert and uneven places, and fo made the advantage of the place equal the multitude of the Enemies Horsemen.

There is no greater from can touch a Man of reputation and place, than to be thought not to understand his own business. For as Wisdom is the excellency of humane nature, so doth want of Judgment deject Men to the condition of fuch as Aristotle calleth Servants by Nature: whose Wit being too weak to support any weight, do recompence that want with the service of their body, and are wholly employed in a Porter's occupation. Which Homer layeth upon Diomedes's Shoulders, with as fine conveyance as he doth the rest of his inventions. For Olysses and he going out on a Party to do some Exploit upon the Trojans, they carried themselves so gal-lantly, that they sell to share King Rhesus's Chariot and Horses. Ubsses presently seized upon the Horses, being of a delicate Thracian breed, and Diomedes seemed well contented with the Chariot. But being to carry it away, Pallas advised him to let it alone, lest he might prove his Strength to be greater than his Wit, and vet not find fo much neither as would carry

But for these Directions which Vercingetorix gave unto the Gauls, I referr the Reader to the fequel of the Hiftory, wherein he shall find how they prevailed.

CHAP. VIII.

Cafar beliegeth Avaricum, and is diffressed for want of Corn.

Ercingetorix followed Cæsar by small and cæsar. easie Journies, and chose a place to in-camp in, fortified about with Bogs and Woods, fifteen miles distant from Avaricum: where he understood what was done at Avaricum every hour of the day, and commanded likewise what he would have done. He observed all our Foraging and Harvesting, and did set upand on congring and rearrotting, and a. 2 fet up-on fuch as went far off upon an; such occasion, and incumbred them with great inconveniences: albeit they took what course they could to meet with it, as to go out at uncertain times, and by unknown and unufual ways. Cæfar incamping himmediand and unjust ways. Actast incare no time-feff before that part of the Town which was not flut in with the River nor the Bog, and a wel-ed but a narrow and firately passage, began to make a Mount, to drive Vinet, and to raise two Towers; (for the nature of the place would not fuffer him to inclose it round about with a Dirch Juffer tom to incide it round about with a Dich and a Rampier; and never refled to admonish the Hedui and the Boii to bring in supplies of Corn: Of whom the one, by reason of the small care and pains they took, did little belo him; the other, of no great ability, being a small and a weak State, did quickly consume all that they had. The Army was diffressed for want of Corn, by reason of the poverty of the Boil, and the indiligence of the Hedui, together with the burning of the Houses in the Country, in such manner as they wanted Corn for many days together, and sustained their lives with Beafts and Cattel which they had fetched a great way off: And yet no one voice at all was heard to come from them, unworthy the Majesty of the Roman Empire, and their former Victories. And when as Cæsar did Speak unto the Legions severally as they were in the Works, that if their wants were heavy and bitter unto them, he would leave off the Siege; all of them with one voice defired him not to do So, for since they had so served many years under his command, as they never had received any dishonour, neither had they at any time departed and left the business undone; it would be imputed unto them as an ignominy and difgrace to leave this Siege; and that they had rather undergo all difficulties, than not to revenge the death of the Citizens of Rome that by treachery were flain at Genabum. The Same Speeches they delivered to the Centurions and Tribunes, to be told Casar.

The First OBSERVATION.

The worth of a Soldier confifteth in a disposition patience in a of Mind and Body, which maketh him apt Soldier occulto suffer and to undergo the difficulties of War to Valuer. For let his resolution otherwise be never so great, and his Courage invincible in the day of Battel; yet if he faint under the burthen of fuch tediousness as usually attendeth upon warlike defigns, he is no way fit for any great enterprize. Pindarus faith, that he understandeth not the War, that knoweth not that the atchieving of one piece of service, is always accompanied with the sufferance of another difficulty as great as that which was first intended. Et facere, & pati fortia, Romanum eft. It was the peculiar commendation of the Roman People, patiently to endure the extremities of warfare: which made the Voljci to cry out, That either they must forswear Arms, and forget to make War, and receive the Yoak of Thraldom and Bondage; nec patientia, nec disciplina rei militaris cedendum; or elfe they must thew themselves no ways inferiour to their Antagonists, either in Valour, or Sufferance, or Military Discipline. Appian forgetteth not to fay, that the Roman Empire was raised to such Greatness, not by Fortune or good Luck, but by meer Valour, and patient enduring of Hardness and Want. Which is the self-same which Craffus in his Sorrow uttered to his Soldiers. who neither did nor spake many things well: Plat. Craffus. For as Plutarch rightly censureth him out of the Comical Poet, he was

Plutarch in the Life of

• Ville neufe en la Franche Boterus di Principe.

A good Min, any way else but in Wars.

The Empire of Rome (faith he) came not to that Greatness which it now possesset by good Fortune only, but by patient and constant suffer-ing of Trouble and Adversity; never yielding or giving place to any danger.

Some Italian Writers are of an Opinion. That the two chiefest parts of a Soldier's Valour and Sufferance, are in these Times divided unto two Nations, the French and the Spaniard: The Spaniard making War rather by Sufferance than by violence of Affaults; and the French impatient of delay, and furious in Affaults: So that according to his Opinion, a Spaniard and a French-Man will make one good Soldier. Touching the Spaniard, I cannot deny but that he hath the name of one of the best Soldiers in Christendom, and I do gladly allow all that Vertue can Challenge, for Truth will prevail against all Affection: yet I may fay thus much on the behalf of our own People, That we have feldom loft Honour in confronting any Nation. Concerning the Sufferance, and patient enduring of Hardness, which is said to be in the Spaniard, being able to live long with a little, it may peradventure not unfitly be attributed to the property of their Country, and the nature of their Climate, which will not bear nor digeft fuch plenty of Food; as is required in Colder Countries: And thereupon being born to so weak a digestion, they are as well satisfied with a Root or a Sallet, as others with better plenty of Food; and therein they go beyond other Nations. Of the French I fay nothing, but leave them to make good the Opinion of the Italian Writer.

Suetonius witnesseth of Cafar, That he himfelf was laboris ultra fidem patiens, one that endured toil beyond belief, whereby he might the better move his Army to endure with patience the difficulties of the Siege: And yet so artificially, as he feemed rather willing to leave it uneffected, than to impose any burthen upon them, which they themselves should be unwilling to bear; the rather to draw the Legions to engage themselves therein, by denying to forsake it, than to cast that upon them, which their unwillingness might easily have put off.

The Second OBSERVATION.

WE may further observe the means the Soldiers used to acquaint Casar with their defires, which was by the Tribunes and Centurions. For as these were mediate Officers between the General and them, and delivered the Mandates and Directions of the Emperor to the Soldier; fo did the Soldiers use their help to make known unto him their Requests; as be-fides this place may appear in the First Commentary, where they defired to give him fatif-

Liey. lib. 6. aut iis quibuscum de imperio certetur, nec virtute, ceived of Ariovistus and the Germans, which they likewise did by the Centurions and Tribunes.

CHAP. IX.

Casar leaveth the Siege, and goeth to take the Enemy upon advantage; but returneth again without Fighting.

Hen the Towers began to approach near Casar. unto the Walls, Cæsar understood by the Captives, that Vercingetorix baving confumed all his Provision of Forage, had removed his Camp nearer to Avaricum, and that he himself was gone with the Cavalry, and fuch ready Footmen as were accustomed to Fight among the Horsemen, to lye in ambush in that place mong the Horjemen, to ye in among an income where he thought our Men would come a Foraging the next day. Which being known, fetting forward about Midnight in filence, in the Morning he came to the Enemies Camp. They having speedy advertisement, by their Scouts, of Casar's coming, did hide their Carriages in the Woods, and drew up all their Forces in an eminent and open place. Which being told Cxfar, he Commanded the Bag-gage to be speedily laid together, and their Arms to be made ready. There was a Hill of a gentle rifing from the bottom to the top, encompaffed round about with a difficult and troublesome Bog of fifty Foot in breadth. Upon this Hill, the Bridge being broken, the Gauls kept themselves, trusting to the strength of the place, and being distributed into Companies, according to their several States, they kept all the Fords and Passages of the Bog with Watches, with this Resolution, that if the Romans did pass over this Resolution, that if the Romans did pass over the Bog, they might easily, from the higher ground, keep them under, as they sluck in the Mire, who little reckpning of so small a dissence, would deem the Fight to be upon equal Terms, whereas they themselves well-knowing the inequality of the Con-ting will make him the second to the condition, did make but a vain and idle Oftentation. The Soldiers disdaining that the Enemy could endure their presence so near at hand, and requiring the sign of Battel, Cæsar acquainted them with what detriment, and loss of many Valiant Men, the Vi-Story must at that time be bought, who being so re-Solute, that they refused no danger to purchase him Honour, he might well be condemned of great Ingratitude and Villainy, if their Lives were not dearer unto him than his own Safety: And fo comforting the Soldiers, he brought them back again the same day into the Camp, and gave order for such things as were requisite for the Siege of the Town.

OBȘERVATION.

This Chapter hath divers special particulars worthy observation. The first is, The opportunity which Cefar took to visit the Army of the Gauls, when Vercingetorix was absent, and gone to lie in Ambush for the Roman Foragers: Which was a Caveat to Vercingetorix, not to be too busie with the Roman Convoys, lest his abfence might draw on fuch an inconvenience, as might make him repent for going a Birding.

The fecond is, the inequality which the advantage of the place giveth to a Party: Which I have already to often spoken of, as I am almost weary to repeat it; and the rather, for that I have produced this paffage in the former Book. to fignifie the benefit of fuch an advantage. Yet faction touching the fear they had con- foralmuch as it is fo pregnant to that effect, as may well deserve a double consideration, and to Fight, which he laten they all desired, as not able was also produced by C.c.far himself upon occafion at Gergovia, give me leave to note how much it fwayeth to counterpoise the want of the adverse Party. Wherein, as it cannot be denied, but that it may give fuch help as may make a fmall number equal a far greater proportion of Men; fo in Cafar's Judgment it countervaileth the absence of the General, and maketh the Bopter tand of perfect without the Head. Neither were from Catar, which was now melt certain and fure, the General; but their Cavalry, wherein they fo both to himself and the rest of the Gauls. And much trusted, was absent likewise; and yet more for that Authority which be had received from them, but have much the Downey Legions be was ready to give it up into their bands again; dy perfect without the Head. Neither were excelled the Gauls in Valour and Prowefs of Arms: Which being all put together, is no small advantage. For doubtless, if the matter had stood upon equal terms touching the place, neither the presence of Vercingetorix, nor the addition of their Cavalry to affift them, had hindered the Battel, or turned the Romans back to their Camp.

Lib. VII.

The third thing is, the moderation which he shewed, forbearing to Fight, the Gauls insolently vaunting, and the Roman Soldiers fretting and disdaining the Enemies Pride: Whereby he settled fuch a confidence of his Directions in the Minds of his Men, by shunning the peril of apparent danger which might fall upon them in particular, as afterwards they would make no question of his Commands, but take them as the only means of their Safety, being never better affured than in performing what he Commanded. The practice of later Times hath not fo well deferved that Vertue, but hath often shewed it self more prodigal of Blood, as though Men were made only to fill up Ditches, and to be the woful Executioners of other Men's Rashness.

The last thing is, the making ready of their Weapons, Arma expediri justit. Concerning which point, we must understand that the Romans always carried their Targets in Cases, and did hang their Helmets at their Backs, and fitted their Piles as might be most convenient with the rest of their Carriages. And therefore whenfoever they were to give Battel, they were first to put on their Helmets, to uncase their Targets, to fit their Piles, and to make them ready for the Charge: And this was called Arma expedire. Romans,

CHAP. X.

Vercingetorix excuseth himself to the Gauls for his Absence.

Ercingetorix returning back to the Army, was accused of Treason: In that he had removed his Camp near unto the Romans; and further, that he had gone away from it, and took all the Cavalry with him: that he had deft so great an Army without any one to Command it; that upon his departure the Romans should come so opportunely and so speedily: For all these things could not fall out by chance without Counsel and Direction : It seemed he had rather have the Kingdom of Gallia, by a grant from Cæsar, than by their Means and Gift. Being thus Charged, he answereth, That he removed the Camp for want of Forage, they themselves desiring it. He came near unto the Romans, being led thereunto by the opportunity of the place, which was fuch as might defend it self by its own Strength; The Cavalry was of no use in a boggy place, but might do good Service there where it went. He left no Man to Command the Army of purpose, lest by the perswasion of the multitude he should be forced long to endure any labour. If the Romans came by chance, they were to thank Fortune; if by any Man's Direction, they were beholding unto him that had brought them, where they might from the higher ground, both see how small a number they were, and contemn their Valour; who not daring to Fight, did shamefully return into their Camp. He desired to receive no Imperial Dignity by Treachery he was ready to give it up into their hands again, if they thought the Honour which they gave him to be greater than the help and Safety which they received from him. And to the end you may understand these things to be truly delivered by me (saith he) hear the Roman Soldiers. And therewithal he brought forth Servants which were taken Foraging a few days before, miserably tormented with Famine and Irons. They being taught before-hand what to answer, said they were Legionary Soldiers, and had Stole out of the Camp to See if they could meet with any Corn or Cattel in the Fields : The whole Army Suffered the like Penury, and Mens Strength began to fail them, insomuch that they were not able to undergo any Labour: And therefore their General had resolved. That if he prevailed not against the Town, he would withdraw his Army within Three days. These Benefits (faith Vereingetorix) you have of me, whom you accuse of Treason: For by my means, without shedding of your Blood, you see so great a Conquering Army almost consumed with Hunger; and by me it is provided, That when they fly from hence, no State shall receive them into their Territories. The whole multitude applauded his Speech, by shaking and striking their hands together, as their manner is in fuch cases, commending Vercingetorix for a great Soldier, whose Loyalty, as vercingetorix for a great Souther, whose Loyalty, as it was not to be districted, so the War could not have been carried with better directions. They agreed further to fend 10000 choice Men out of all their Forces into the Town, as not thinking it fit to commit the common safety of Gallia only to the Bituriges, for they were perswaded that the Summ of all the Vi-Hory consisted in making good that Town against the

OBSERVATION.

A Multitude is Bellua multorum capitum (as one faith) an unreasonable Beast of many Heads, apt to receive froward and perverse Incitements, and hard to be drawn to better Understanding, Jealous, Impatient, Treacherous, Unconstant, an Instrument for a wicked Spirit, and sooner moved to Mischief by Thersites, than reclaimed to Vertue by the Authority of Agamemnon, or the Eloquence of Ulyffes, or the Wisdom of Neftor, more turbulent than the raging, either of the Sea, or of a devouring Fire. And therefore they may well go together to make a triplicity of Evils, according to the faying, Ignis, mare, populus, tria mala; Fire, the Seat and the rabble Multitude are three Evils.

Vercingetorix had both his hands full in this Service, for his care was no less to keep the Gauls from being distasted, than to make his Party good against C. of ar. It is disputed, touching the Government of a multitude, whether it be fitter to be fevere or obsequious. Tacitus faith peremptorily, that In multisudine regenda plus para quam who for torily, that In multisudine regenda plus para quam in meleobsequium valet; foul means does more than mener domore fair to the governing of a multitude. But he avail in go. understandeth such a multitude as are subject to Moutinude.

their Commander, either by ancient Service, or raifed to the due height. This fashion, as it is a the interest of regal Authority, whereby they are work not deformed either in show or variety, obnot refuse that which Custom prescribeth. For otherwise, where the People stand free from such Bonds, and have submitted themselves to Government for fome special Service, their Clemency or oblequious imoothing prevailed more than the feverity of Command: According to the faying, Homines duci volunt, non cogi; Men will be led by fair means, not compelled. Upon a differnion which happened at Rome, between the People and the Senate, the People were presently sent into the Field under the leading of two Senators, Quintius and Appius Claudius. Appius, by reason of his Cruelty and Severity, was not obeyed by his Soldiers, but forfook his Province, and returned non preficient, they will do nothing: Quintius being courteous and benign, had an obedient Army, and came home a Conquerour. Inthe like terms did Vercingetorix stand with the Authority, and for the defence of the common Cause had submitted themselves to Order and Government: And therefore he carried himfelf accordingly, but with fome cunning too, for he made no scruple to abuse the Beatt, and to prefent them with a leffon of deceit, taught to Servants and Roman Slaves, as the confession of Legionary Soldiers, which is a liberty that hath ever been allowed to fuch as had the managing of an unruly Multitude, who have made as much use of the false Rein, as the Bit or the Spur, or any other help belonging to that Art.

CHAP. XI.

Cafar continueth the Siege at Avaricum, and describeth the Walls of the Towns in Gallia.

I the fingular Valour of our Soldiers all the Counsels and Devices of the Gauls were made void and of none effect. For they are a Nation of great dexterity, apt to imitate and make any thing which they see other Men do before them : For they turned afide the Hooks with Ropes, and drew them into the Town with Engines : They withdrew the Earth from the Mount with Mines, with their great Skill, by reason of their from Mines, wherein they are much practifed: They fet up Towers upon every part of the Wall, and co-vered them with Raw Hides: They Sallied out of the Town Night and Day, and either fet fire to the Mount, or assaulted the Soldiers as they were at Work: They did every day make their Towers equal to that height of our Towers, which the daily encrease of the Mount had added to their height: They hindred the open Trenches, and kept them from approaching the Walls with sharp burned Stakes, cast into them with hot Pitch and with great Stones.
All their Walls are almost of this saskin: Long strait Beams are placed upon the ground, with an equal distance of Two Foot one from another, and bound together on the infide of the Wall, and fastned with great store of Earth: The distances between the Beams are filled and fitted with great Stones in the Front of the Wall. These being thus placed and fastned with Mortar, another such a course is laid upon that, keeping always the same distance, so as one Beam be not laid upon another, but in the second rank placing them upon the distances filled up with Stones, and so forward until the Wall be tied to Obedience by hereditary Duty, and can-ferving alternate courses of Beams and Stones, which keep their Order by even Lines; so is it profitable also and very much advantaging the defence of the Town: For as the Stone keeps it from burning, so doth the Wood from the violence of the Ram, forasmuch as the Beams are for the most part Forty Foot long, and can neither be broken nor pull'd

The First OBSERVATION.

This Chapter doth in some part express the Things and manner of their Siege in ancient time, and profile of the means which the defendant had to frustrate in Best the Affaults and Approaches of the Enemy. Be- and affaults fides the Ram which the Romans used to shake Town.

and overthrow the Wall (whereof I have already spoken) they had commonly great Hooks of Iron to catch hold of a Turret, and to pull it over the Wall, or to pull down the Parapet, or to difturb any Work which was to be made upon the Wall. These Hooks were used by the Legionary Soldiers, being covered with Vines in the fame manner as they handled the Ram: And were averted and put off by the ingenious practices of the Gauls, with Ropes cast and ensnared about them, and then by force of Engines drawn into the Town. In like manner the open Trenches, by which the Romans made their approaches to the Wall, were answered from the Town with Stakes or Piles, hardned at the end with Fire. and then cast into them to hinder such as were at work, together with seething Pitch and great Stones. Furthermore, as the Romans raised their Mount, and brought matter unto it to enlarge it in breadth and height, fo did the Gauls undermine it, and drew the Earth away, or fet it on Fire to burn it: For as I have already noted in the description of a Mount, it was made as well with Wood and Timber, as with Earth and Stones. They strengthned their Walls with Turrets and Towers, and covered them with raw Hides to keep them from burning: And as the Romans mounted in height with their Turrets and Engines, so the Gauls raised their Towers answerable unto them, that in the defence of the Town they might Fight with equal advan-

And thus they proceeded both in the offenfive and defensive part, as far as either Valour or Wit could improve those means which were then in use in Besieging a Town.

The Second OBSERVATION.

T was the use of all Nations to Fortifie their ftrong Towns with fuch Walls as might make best defence against the practice of those Times wherein they lived, touching the Taking and Befieging of Towns. So the Gauls, as it appeareth by Cafar, raifed their Walls of Wood and Stone, laid in mutual courses one with another, that the Wood might make void the violence of the Ram, and the Stone keep it from burning with Fire, which in those days were the means to affault and overthrow a Wall. In these Times the Walls of Strong and Fortified Towns are Temanner only made and raised of Earth, as the best de- in the initial fence against the fury of the Artillery. But for-days. asmuch as the old manner of Fortification is here in part delivered by Cafar, give me leave to speak a word or two touching the Fortifications of their

And first touching the art it self, in respect of ing sometimes too large and spacious, and somethe matter and the manner, it is a member of times too strait. The Enemies Artillery hath Architecture, but the end is military: For to fortifie is nothing else but to make a Building anfwerable to necessity and the occurrences of War. Neither is it the end of Fortification to make a Place inexpugnable, or impossible to be taken, for fo it were Ars Artium, but to reduce it to a good and reasonable defence.

Lib. VII.

Wherefoever then any fuch defence is required, the mystery of Fortification is to raise such a Fort, and to apply fuch a Figure, answering the quality and fituation of that place, as may give greatest strength thereunto : For as all places are not capable in the disposition of their best strength of all forts of Figures, so there is a difference of ftrength between this and that Figure. And as the place wanteth the advantage of Nature for its own defence, so is it requisite it should be furnished with the best means and commodities both to annoy the Enemy, and to defend its own People. And in that respect all circular Forms, as compounded of parts of one and the same nature, are unfit for Fortification: For where a Fort ought so to be disposed, that it may have as many hands to strike as Briareus and as a Hydra never to want a head, it is necessary that the Figure thereof be of different and unlike parts, as apt to work divers effects. For unless it be able to discover afar off, to command the Country about as far as the Artillery will play, to ftop the paffages, to hinder approaches and affaults, to damnifie the Enemy at hand and affar off. fometimes with the Artillery, fometimes with Small Shot, fometimes with Fire-works, and other times by Sallies, it hath not that perfection as is requifite. Admitting therefore composition of parts, next unto the Circle of the triangular Fortress is most unperfect; first in regard it is a Figure of less Capacity than any other of equal bounds, which is a great inconvenience in a Hold, when the Soldiers shall be pinn'd up for want of room, and through the streightness of the place, not to be able to avoid confusion. Secondly, the Bulwarks of all fuch triangular Fortresses, have always such sharp Cantons as are easily subject to breaking, which giveth the Enemy means to approach them without diffurbance from the Fort.

The Quadrangle Fortress hath almost the same imperfection of Angles as the Triangle hath, but is more spacious within, and of greater Ca-

And therefore Pentagons or Hexagons, or any other that hath more Angles, is fittest for Fortification, (understanding the place to be capable of them,) as being of a greater content, and having their Angles more obtuse, and by consequence more folid and ftrong.

A plain champain level doth admit all forts of Figures, and may take the best; having these advantages: It easily hindereth an Enemy from approaching near unto it, or encamping before ir, and is not subject to Mines, by reason of the water rifing in fuch levels. But on the other fide, a finall Troop will befige it, and Battery may be laid to divers places of it: It is always fubject to Mounts of Earth, and needeth many Bulwarks, Ditches, and much cost to keep it.

A Fortress upon a Hill hath these advantages: an Enemy can hardly lodge near unto it, or lay battery against it; it requireth more Men to be-Difadvantafiege it, and is not subject to Mounts. The dif-advantages are, that it is not in our choice to make it in the best Form of strength, but must give it fuch a Figure as may beft fit the Place, be-greater force against it playing upward, and the Artillery of the Fort playeth not fo fure down-

The Strength of all Forts are the Bulwarks The firmgth of from whence the Artillery playeth; the fupple-all Forts.

ments to the Bulwarks are the Ravelins, the Platforms, the Casmates, and the Cavalero's. The Walls are made in fcarp canting inwards, the better to bear the weight of the Earth, with this proportion, that to every five foot and half, or fix foot in height, there be one foot allowed in scarp. The Counterfearp is another Wall outward to the first, and slopeth inward in the same manner as the former.

And thus much touching the general view of Fortification, which is as much as may well be comprehended in these short Observations, referving the further confideration thereof to a particular Treatife by it felf.

CHAP. XII.

The Siege of Avaricum continued.

He Siege being hindered by so many distur- Coesar. bances, and the Soldiers afflisted all the time with cold and continual Rain. yet they overcame all thefe letts with continual labour, and in five and twenty Days they raifed a Mount of three hundred and thirty Foot in breadth, and fourscore in height. When it came almost to touch the Wall, Casiar himself attending the work, as his Custom was, and encouraging the Soldiers to omit no time from the same: A little before the third Watch of the Night, the Mount was seen to smoak, the Enemy having set it on sire with a Mine. And at the same instant of time. a Shout being taken up by them that stood upon the Wall, they made a Sally out at two Gates on both sides the Towers. Some cast Fire-brands and dry matter from the Wall unto the Mount, pouring Pitch and other things to nourish the Fire; that no Man knew whither to run first, or where to give help. Notwithstanding forasmuch as Cæsar had appointed two Legions by turns to watch before the Camp, and two other to follow the Works, it happened, and that quickly, that some were ready to confront the Sailies and others to draw back the Towers from the Front of the Mount, and to cut the Mount afunder the whole Multitude coming out of the Camp to quench the Fire. The rest of the Night being now Spent, the Fight continued every where, and ever the Enemy took new Spirits and had hope of Victory the rather because they saw the Sheds or Hovels belonging to the Towers burnt, and that the Soldiers could not come near the Said Towers to manage them as was fitting, without skelter and Covert, and that they ever fent fresh Men to take the Rooms of such as were weary and over-laboured: Supposing of such as were wears and over-suvence: supposing the safety of all Gallia to consist in that instant of of time. There happened, our selves beholding it, an accident worthy memory, which I think not fit to omit. A certain Gaul before the Gate of the Town, casting with his hands Balls of Tallow and Pitch to increase the Fire, right over against the Tower, was shot through the right side with a Cross-Bow, and fell down dead. One that food next him feet over him and began to do the like fervice : He likewife was flain with a Shot out of a Cross-bow. Him a Third Man Succeeded; and the Third, a Fourth. Neither was the Place forfaken, until the Mount was quenched, the Enemy removed, and the Fight ceased.

The First OBSERVATION.

Waether there many Men to defend a

T were a matter worthy observation to consider, whether there need not as many Men to defend a Town as to befiege it. Which at the first fight may peradventure feem frivolous: Forastruch as the defendants, are but to make good the place which they hold, and to stand only upon their defensive Guard, having the advantage of the place, the shelter of the Walls, the strength of the Ditch, and many other like helps for their defence and fafety; whereas the Affailant is to ftrive against all these advantages, and to oppose himself to the danger of so many difficulties. But if we look a little nearer into the matter, and confider the fervice to be performed on either is no Paradox.

The defence of For the better understanding thereof, we are Town con- to know, that the defence of a Town touching offen in four matter of fight, consisteth chiefly in these four Points. First, in manning and making good all parts of the Wall. For if the defendant be not able to strengthen all parts with a competent Force, then he hath not Men enough to defend the Town; forafmuch as all parts are subject to affault, and what part foever is not made good, that lieth open to an Enemy : Or otherwise if the Affault be only to be made at a Breach, the rest of the Wall being strong enough to defend it self, there is required a competent ftrength within the Town to defend that Breach. In this point there is little difference touching a competent number of Men between the Affailant and the Defendant: For if he that layeth fiege to a Town hath Men enough to affault all parts at one inftant, the Enemy must have an answerable proportion to defend all; or if he have no use of more Men than may ferve to give an affault at a breach, the Defendant must have the like proportion for the defence of the Breach.

The fecond point is, in relieving wearied Men, either fighting or working with fresh supplies to continue that business, as oftentimes it falleth out in the Siege of a Town. Wherein likewise there is small or no difference touching an equality between both Parties. For if the Defendant be not as well able to relieve his wearied Soldiers with fresh supplies, as the Enemy is to continue the affault, the Town may quickly have a new Mafter.

The third point is, in defeating and making void fuch works as the Enemy shall make against the Town, as Mounts, Mines, Approaches, and fuch like inconveniences; which being fuffered to go on without opposition and prevention, the Town cannot hold out long. In this point the Defendant hath the disadvantage, having need Works, than the Affailant hath to make them good. For there he that befiegeth the place fighteth with the advantage, and hath the fame helps as the Defendant hath in the fastness of his hold: Which caused this extraordinary accident, which C.esar noteth, touching the successive slaughter of so many Gauls, who labouring to burn the Roman Works with Balls of Tallow and Pitch, were all flain with the blow of one Man's Bow.

The last point is in fallies, which is as necessary for the defence of a Town as any thing else whatfoever. For if the defendant be not able For he that is in the Field, lyeth in the ftrength of his Trenches; whereas the other cometh our naked upon him.

And thus much touching this question in particular. Concerning the general, if it be demanded whether there have been more Men loft in the defence of Oftend, than in besieging it; I answer, That neither fide can much vaunt of a fmall lofs.

The Second OBSERVATION.

TN the fecond place there are two observable The Eye of I points. The one, Cafar's continual atten-the Master dance upon the Works, being present night and feedabite day, without any long intermission, which did much advantage their proceeding at that time, part, we shall find, that to say, As many Men and was as important to a fortunate iffue, as any are necessary to defend a Town as to besiege it, other thing whatsoever. For where an Enemy is extraordinary, either in Valour or Diligence. there must needs be extraordinary means to countervail the Height of fo great a resolution: Which C.far overtopt with monftrous and huge Works, and speeded those works with his continual attendance.

The fecond point is the fucceffive task of the Roman Army, being eight Legions present at that Siege; (for the other two were left at Agendicum with the Carriages of the Army;) in fuch fort as half the Army was always at reft, and the other half imployed: Two Legions at work and two Legions in the Watch: And thus they eafed each other, and ftill continued the Work. For otherwise they had not been able to have undergone the burthen, as the faying is;

Quod caret alterna Requie durabile non est. It cannot hold that refts not now and then.

CHAP. XIII.

Cafar by an Affault taketh Avaricum.

He Gauls having tried all means, and Color.

none taking effect, the next day they confulted touching their leaving of the Town, Vercingetorix both commanding and per-Swading them unto it : Which they hoped they might do in the Night time, without any great loss unto themselves, forasmuch as Vercingetorix was not far off with his Camp, and all the way thither was a continual Bog, which would hinder the Romans from following after them. And for that purpose they pre-pared themselves against the next Night. Which the Women perceiving, did run suddenly our into the Streets and publich places, and cast themselves at the Feet of their Husbands; and by all means intreated them not to leave them and their Children to the cruelty of the of more Men to overthrow and prevent the Enemy, whom Nature and infirmity of Body would not Suffer to flie away. But finding them to continue resolute in their purpose, forasmuch as in extream peril, sear for the most part hath no Commiseration, they cried out, and signified their Flight unto the Romans. Wherewith the Gauls being feared, they desifted from their Purpose, lest the Ways should be forestalled and laid by the Roman Horsemen. The next day Caesar having advanced forward the Tower, and perfected these Works which he had determined to make, there happened to fall a great Rain, which he thought to be a fit occasion for his purpose. what doesn't for it the describation to solve the state of ally out, the Enemy will quickly coop him And for a finance as he saw the Guard upen the Wall up, and tread upon his Belly. And herein the tobe samewhat negligently dispersed, he commanded Defendant needeth more Men than the Assailant. his Men to work fair and softly, and shewed them what he would have done. And encouraging the Legions which were hid in a readiness under the Vines, at length to enjoy the Sweetnels of Victory for their manifold labours; he provided a reward for such as were seen first upon the Walls, and gave them the fign to begin. The Soldiers stying suddenly out of all Parts, did quickly possess themselves of the Walls. The Enemy being frighted with so sudden an accident, and put from the Towers and Walls embattelled themselves angle-wise in the Market-place, and in other spacious Streets of the City, with this resolution, that if they were assaulted in any part, they would resist in form of Battel. But when they faw no Man to descend on even ground, but to enclose them round about upon the Wall, fearing lest there would be no way to escape, they cast their Arms away and fled all to the furthest Part of the Town. Part of them sticking in a Throng at the Gate, were there slain by the Soldiers; and Part being got out of the Gate, were flain by the Horsemen. Neither was there any Man that looked after Pillage, but being moved to anger with the slaughter of our Men at Genabum, and with the Travel and Labour of those great Works, they neither spared Old Men, Women nor Children. In the end of all that number, which was about fourty thousand, scarce eight hundred (that upon the first noise for sook the Town) came safe to Vercingetorix. These he received with great silence, being now far in the Night, lest any sedition should have grown in the Camp, through the Pity and Commi-feration of the oulgar People; and fent out his fami-liar Friends and chiefest Men of each State to meet fuch as had escaped away, and to bring them to their own People as they lay quartered in the Camp.

COMMENTARIES. Lib. VII.

The First OBSERVATION.

The Ganle in

WE may see here the saying verified touching the disposition of the Gauls for matter of Valour: Which in the beginning feemed fo great, that it needed no further strain to countervail distant the worth of Cesar's Army, and was expressed with such industry and resolution, both in spoiling and disappointing the Roman Works, as also by ingenious fortifying and making good their own labours; that a Man would have deemed them virtute pares, equal in Valour. But being a little spent in the action, like a Pot that hath a Mouth as big as the Belly, and poureth out all the Liquor at an inftant, they fell at length to that baleness, as shewed less spirit than the Women did, who chose rather to betray their Husbands purpoles to the Enemy, than to hazard their Lives by escaping to Vercingetorix. And this is that which is so often noted by Historiographers; Quod multa Bella impetu valida per tædia & moras evanuere : That many Wars which are hot at the first, slacken and vanish upon a tedious continuance. The first thing that I observe, is that which Casar himself noteth: Quod plerumque in summo Periculo, Timor mifericordiam non recipit; That usually in case of extreme Danger, Fear hath no mercy. Which was true on either fide. For the Gauls were fo fet upon flying to Vercingetorix, that they regarded not the wofull laments of the Women and Children, whom they were well content to hazard, whilft they themselves might escape in fafety. And on the other fide the Women did forget to be pitiful to their Husbands, whom they would not suffer to escape, and leave them in their weakness behind as a prey to appeale the wrath of the bloody Soldier, which would sheweth that there is no tie comparable to the bond of nature, especially when it concerneth the preservation of Life. For as in other things, respect and affection may easily work a communication of good things unto others, as also a participations of their evils for their relief: So herein we are altogether fenfeless, and the love we owe to our Lives is fo great, that it admitteth no respect. Ageillaus to his Friend was without respect a Friend: And yet notwithstanding being driven one day to remove upon the fudden, and to leave one fick behind him whom he loved dearly; the Sick Man calling him by his name as he was going away, befought him that he would not for fake him. Agefilaus turning back again, answered; O how hard it is both to love and to be wife! according to the faying, Sapere & amare vix Deo conceditur, To be wife and to love, God himfelf can scarce do it.

The Second OBSERVATION.

IT is a principle among Men of War, not to A General put neceffity upon an Enemy, nor make him neaffity upon valiant whether he will or no, (as I have al-an Enemy. ready noted in the former Commentaries;) which the Romans well observed in this particular fervice at Avaricum: For being poffest of the Walls, they did not fuddenly affault them in the Market-place, where they had made head for their defence, but gave them a breathing time, the better to understand what they did, and respite to bethink themselves of a starting hole for the safety of their Lives. Which as it was quickly apprehended by the Gauls, so it made an easie execution to the Roman Soldier.

And as it feemeth, it was the more carefully handled in respect of the condition of the Enemy being Revolters: For fuch Provinces as have rebelled, are harder to be recovered after their Revolt, than they were at first to be fubdued. For at the first, they have no occasion to fear any hard condition, but yielding to fubjection do look for Favour: Whereas Rebels Revolutionary and Revolters, besides the condition of an Ene- in the conditimy, are in the nature of Offenders, and ftand in on both of an fear of the Extremities of War which maketh an effender. them more obstinate than otherwise they would be. And therefore it behoveth a General not to impose any further necessity upon an Ene-my, than the quality of the War doth lay upon him: which oftentimes is more than can be well avoided.

CHAP. XIV.

Vercingetorix doth comfort the Gauls for the loss of Avaricum.

He next day calling a Council, he com- Casar. forted the Gauls, and exhorted them not to be utterly difmayed with that Lofs: For the Romans had not overthrown them with Valour, nor in a fet Battel, but with a kind of Art, and Skill in besieging a Town, whereof they themselves were ignorant. He erred much that looked for all the Events of War to fall out prosperously. It was never his opinion, that Avaricum should be kept; whereof they themselves were Witnesses. But it fell out by the imprudency of the Bituriges, and over great indulgence of the Rest, that this Loss hap-pened unto them: Woich notwithstanding he would speedily heal with greater helps. For by his diligence he would unite such States unto them, consequently follow in that escape. Which as were not yet of the Confederacy, and make one pur pose of all Gallia, which the whole World was not able to refift: and that he had almost effected it already. In the mean time he thought it fit that they should yield unto one thing for their Safeties Sake, which was to fortifie their Camp; to the end they might better Sustain the Sudden affaults of the Enemy. This Speech was not unpleasing to the Gauls; and the rather, that he himself was not dejected in Spirit upon so great a loss, nor did hide himself, or flie the presence of the multitude: Being the more esteemed, for a smuch as when the matter was in question, he first thought it fit that Avaricum should be burned, and afterwards he persuaded them to for-Sake it : Wherein as misfortune and adversity do impair the Authority of other Commanders; fo contrariwise his Honour daily increased by the loss which he received. And withal they were in great hope upon his affirmation, to win the rest of the States unto them. And that was the first time that the Gauls began to fortifie their Camp, being so appalled in Spirit, that where they ever were unaccustomed to labour, yet they thought it their part to Suffer and undergo all that was commanded them.

Ньто диа-

The First OBSERVATION.

Agread Com-mander must Ext to the knowledge and experience of have a great War, there is nothing more requisite in a great Commander, than greatness of Spirit: For where his employment confifteth in managing the great businesses of the World, such as are the flaughter of many thousands in an hour, the facking of Cities, the fighting of Battels, the alteration of Commonweals, Victories, Triumphs, and the Conquest of Kingdoms, which like the Constellations in the eighth Sphere, are left to succeeding Ages in fuch Characters as cannot be defaced, and make an impression of the greatest measure of joy, or the greatest heap of forrow; it is necessary that his Courage be answerable to such a fortune, neither to be crushed with the weight of Adverfity, nor puffed up with the pride of Victory; but in all times to shew the same constancy of mind, and to temper extremities with a fetled refolution.

Of this metal and temper, is the Philosophers homo quadratus made of, such as Camillus was in Rome. For never Speech did better befeem a great Personage than that, of his, having known both the favour and the difgrace of Fortune : Nec mihi dictatura animos fecit, nec exilium ademit. Neither did my Dictatorship puff me up, nor my banishment sink my Spirits, saith he. Whereas weak Spirits do either vanish away in the smoak of Folly, being drunk with the joys of pleafing Fortune; or otherwise upon a change of good Times, do become more base and abject, than the Thief that is taken in the Fact: Such as Perfeus the last Macedonion King was, who be-fides his ill fortune for losing his Kingdom in the space of one hour, hath ever fince stood attainted of a base and abject mind, unworthy the Throne of Alexander the Great.

The wife Romans used all means to give Courage and Spirit to their Leaders, and to free their minds from fuch external respects, which loss or dishonour might cast upon them. And therefore when Varro had fought fo rashly at Canna, that he had like to have loft the Roman Empire to Hannibal, upon his return to Rome the whole Senate went out to meet him: And although they could not thank him for the Battel, yet they gave him thanks that he was returned home again, whereby he feemed not to despair of the State

In like manner did the Gauls congratulate Vercingetorix, that notwithflanding fo great a lofs, he was neither dejected in spirit, nor did hide himfelf from the multitude; but as a Commander of high resolution, had found out means to heal those harms, and to recompence the loss of Avaricum, with the uniting of all the States of Gallia into one Confederacy.

The Second OBSERVATION.

SEcondly we may observe, how dangerous it is to be the Author of a Counsel touching any "Bibliograms" important or grave deliberation, or to lay down to teste any project for the fervice of a State: For all file a State Men are blind in this point, that they judge of good or ill Counsel by the success, and look no further than the end which it taketh, which proving difafterous or unfortunate, doth either bring the Author to destruction, or into danger both of Life and State.

In the Occurrences of this Kingdom, it appeareth that Henry the Fifth being sollicited by the Commons touching the Abbeys in England, and moved by Petition exhibited in Parliament, to that which was afterwards accomplished by Henry the Eighth, was diverted from those thoughts by an eloquent Oration made in Parliament by Hen-Himbert ry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterbury, a grave and learned Prelate, perfuading the King by many concluding Reasons, to carry a great Power into France, and there to make his claim for that Kingdom, according to the right derived unto him from his noble Progenitors. Whereupon the King was persuaded to undertake that War; which albeir it fell out most happily, yet the Bi-shop to satisfie both the King and the People for his former Counsel, whereby many Men were loft, built a College in Oxford dedicated to All Sculs, wherein he placed forty Scholars, to make Supplications for all Souls, and especially for such as had been mischieved in France in the time of that Vercingetorix was happy in this point, for he persuaded the Gauls not to keep Avaricum, but to fuffer it to be burned as an Enemy to their fafety: And thereupon he did not let to put them in mind of his opinion, as free from the danger which happened to a great Man near unto Perfew whom I last spake of, who after his overthrow by Paulus Æmilius, being told by that party of many errours which he had committed in the carriage of that War, turned himself suddenly, saying, Traitor, hast thou reserved thy Counsel or fairness the until now, when there is no remedy? And there-rum square withal (as fome report) flew him with his own benevolation hand. And this was it that gave Vercingetorix imperation bus: it is not the same than the same than the same than the same that the same than the same that the same than the same that the same than the same that the same than that happiness: Ut reliquorum imperatorum res advose die adverse authoritatem minumt: sic hijus ex con-coccius. trario dignitas incommodo accepto indies augebatur; Lib.; Isla As Missortune and Adversity, &c. as before.

CHAP. XV.

Vercingetorix laboureth to unite all Gallia into one League for the upholding of their War.

Either did Vercingetorix omit any en- Cafe. deavour for the accomplishment of his promise, to draw the rest of the States unto him : And to that purpose he dealt with their chiefest Men both by rewards and promises, and chose out fit Men, that either by subtile Speeches, or Friendship, or some other means, might win them unto him. He took order that such as had escaped from Avaricum, scould be both cloathed force to pluck out the barbed heads, that had and armed: And withal, that he might reinsorce pierced far into their Bodies through their Veins his Troops which were weakned, he commanded every State to furnish out certain supplies, and to be brought by a day to the Camp. He commanded likewife all the Archers, of whom there is great store in Gallia, to be fought out and fent unto him. And by this means he speedily repaired his losses at Avaricum. In the mean time Teutomatus the Son of Ollovico King of the Nitiobriges, whose Father had the Title of a Friend from our Senate, came to him with a great number of Horsemen, which he had brought out of Aquitain.

OBSERVATION.

IT feemeth by this place, that France in those days did favour Archery: For (as the Story faith) they had great store of Archers amongst them, but of what value they were, is not here delivered. The use they made of them followeth after in this Commentary, which was to intermingle them amongst the Horse, and so they fought as light-armed Men.

In the times that our English Nation carried a scourging hand in France, the matter between us and them touching Archery, flood in fuch terms as gave England great advantage: For I have not heard of any Bow-men at all amongst them; whereas our Nation hath heretofore excelled all other, as well in number of Bow-men, as in excellent good Shooting, and hath made fo good proof thereof against the French, as it needeth not any long dispute.

* Concerning Archery I find these things confiderable fiderable.

First, that every Man be so fitted with Bow h the time of and Arrows, as he may be apt for ftrong and Henry the fifth, the Eng. quick Shooting: Wherein I cannot so much combine the normal mend these Livery Bows, being for the most part did commonly heavy flugs, and of greater weight than ftrength.

ba commonly heavy lings, and of greater were finder of and and of more shew than service.

Secondly, that in a day of ser the bad.

endeavour so to deliver their Secondly, that in a day of fervice the Bow-men endeavour so to deliver their Quivers, that the whole band or fleeve of Shot may let go all at one instant of time : For so the shower of Arrows will be more fierce and terrible, and more available againft an Enemy.

Thirdly, the fittest form of imbattelling for Bow-men; which must not at any hand be deep in Flank, for fo fuch as are in the hindmost Ranks will either shoot short or to no purpose. And Jones J. Weather at the put therefore the fittest form of imbattelling for Artens at into chery, hath ever been accounted a long-sided Square, refembling a * Hearfe, broad in Front, tel of Creffie and narrow in Flank.

Fourthly, their defence in a day of Battel; the black FOURTHIPS, then defended a covert woody place, the Vernoural, the More the Horse of the Enemy cannot come at the Mr. where the Horse of the Enemy cannot come at their standing them, or a Trench cast before them, or the place ner must be fortified with Galthrops and Stakes, such Holinofted, as were devised by Henry the Fifth at Agincourt The Archery Field, or fome other means to avoid the Cavalry.

The last thing is the effects which the Bow-men I fie and thing is the Calling of the bas the First. work: which are two; first the Galling of the 2. Defor- Enemy, and fecondly Diforder. Touching the do. Galling of the Enemy, there cannot be a better the Craffus, description than that which Plutarch maketh of the overthrow of the Romans by the Parthian Arrows.

The Roman Soldiers Hands (faith he) were nailed to their Targets, and their Feet to the ground, or otherwise were fore wounded in their Bodies, and died of a cruel lingring death, crying out for anguilh and pain they felt, and turning and tor-menting themielves upon the ground, they brake him. Moreover, the Arrows having barbed heads, the Arrows sticking in them. Again, striving by although they make but a light hurt, yet they are and Sinews, they opened the Wounds wider, and fo cast themselves away.

The Diforder or routing of an Enemy which is caused by the Bow-men, cometh from the fear-ful spectacle of a drift of Arrows: For a shower of Arrows well delivered and well feconded, for a while is so terrible to the Eye, and so dreadful in the fuccefs, that it is almost unpossible to keep the Enemy from routing.

The two great Victories which our Nation had in France at Creffie and Agincourt, next to the Valour of the English, are attributed to our Archery: And the effect of our Archery at those times, was first Disorder, and consequently Slaughter. In the The battel of Battel of Creffie the King of Bohemia fighting for Creffie. the French, caused his Horsemen to tie the Bridles of their Horses together in Rank, that they might keep Order, notwithstanding the Galling which he feared from our English Archery: But it fell out as ill as if he had tied their Heads and their Tails together in File; for the drift of Arrows fell fo terribly amongst them, that they ran together on heaps with fuch confusion, as made the flaughter great, and their particular deftinies most miserably fortunate. At Agincourt the number of The battel of Prisoners which every Soldier had, was admirable Agincourt. to speak of; for some report that many of our English had ten Prisoners apiece: Which hapned chiefly from the Disorder which fell amongst the French, and that Disorder came by our Archery. And doubtless if ever we should have occasion to go against an Enemy that so aboundeth in Horse as the French do, there could be no better means against such Horse than our English Bow-men. I know it hath been faid, that now the times are altered, and the Harquebuse and Musket are so Harq generally received, and of fuch reputation in the and Market course of our modern Wars, that in comparison of them, Bow-men are not worth the naming. Wherein I will not go about to extenuate the use of either of these Weapons, as knowing them to be both very ferviceable upon fit and convenient occasions, nor take upon me to determine which of them is most effectual in a day of fervice; but only deliver my conceit touching their effects, and leave it to the consideration of wise and different Commanders. And first touching Shot. A Wing of Muske-How for a teers is available against an Enemy, only in such wing of Shot Bullets as do hit, for fuch as do not hit, pass prevan away infenfibly without any further fear, and the crack is but as the lose of the Bow. Of such Bullets as do hit, the greatest part do not strike to death, but are oftentimes carried until the skirmish be ended before the party do feel himself hurt: So that an Enemy receiveth no further hurt by a that an Enemy receives no intener and by a charge of Shot, than happeneth to fuch particular Men as shall chance to be stain out-right or fore hurt.

But a sleeve of Archers is available against three far a an Enemy, as well in such Arrows as do not hit, sieve of Aras in fuch as do hit: For whereas the cloud of the avail-Arrows is subject to our fight, and every Arrow an Energy. is both suspected and able to bring death sitting on the head, an Enemy is as much troubled at fuch Arrows as come fair upon him and do not hit, as at those that do hit; for no Man is willing to expole his flesh to an open and eminent danger, when it lieth in his power to avoid it. And therefore whilft every Man feeketh to avoid hurt, they fall into fuch confusion, as besides the loss of particular Men, the Enemy doth hardly escape Disorder, which is the greatest disadvantage that can befall not eafily palled out, which maketh the Soldiers help to the War in hand, wherein they might chalor be otherwise managed for any service.

And thus much touching Bow-men and Archery, Gough 27.3. Hiftory, and is of the number of fuch Weapons as Men use to fight with afar off. The use whereof is too much neglected by the English of these times, confidering the Honour they have atchieved by it in former ages.

CHAP. XVI.

A Controversie fell out in the State of the Hedui, touching the choice of their chief Magistrate.

Æsar stayed many days at Avaricum: For Mai jidyea many day at Avaricum: For finding there great flore of Corn and of other Provisions, he refreshed his Army of their former labour and wants. The Winter now being almost ended, and the time of the Tear being sit for War, he determined to followed. low the Enemy, to fee whether he could draw him out of the Woods and Bogs, or besiege him in some place. Being thus refolved, divers of the principal Men of the Hedui came unto him, befeeching him that he would fland to them, and affift their State in a time of great need, the matter being in extreme danger: Forasmuch as their ancient usage was for one to be created their annual Magistrate, having Regal Authority for that Year : Whereas now two had taken upon them the Said Office, both of them affirming themselves to be lawfully created; the one was Convictolitanis, a famous and flourishing young Man, the other Cotus, born of and Kindred, whose Brother Vedeliacus had born the Said Office the Year before. All their State was in Arms, their Senate and their People divided, together with their Vassals and followers: If the Controversie continued for any time, it would come to a Battel; the prevention whereof consisted in his Diligence and Authority. Cæsar, though he knew it would be difadvantageous unto him to leave the War, and to forfake the Enemy: Yet knowing what inconveniences do ufually arise of such discords and dissensions, lest so great a State, and so near to the People of Rome, which he himself had always favoured, and by all means honoured, should fall to War amongst themselves; and that Faction which distrusted their own strength, should feek help of Vercingetorix; he thought it most necessary to be prevented. And forasmuch as such as were created chief Magistrates among the Hedui, were by their Laws forbidden to go out of their confines: to the end he might not feem to derogate any thing from their Laws, he himself determined to go unto them. At his coming he called before him to Decetia all the Senate, and those also that were in controversie for the Office. And finding in an Assembly almost of the whole State, that one of them was chosen by a few privily called together, in another place, and at another time than was accustomed, the Brother pronouncing the Brother: Whereas their Laws did not only forbid two of one Family, both being alive, to be created Magistrates, but also to be of the Senate together: He compelled Cotus to give over his interest in the Magistracy, and confirmed Convictolitanis, being created by their Priests, and according to the custom of their State. This Decree being ra-Controversies and Dissensions, and to give their best not to mind the Fight until they be delivered of lenge and expect (the Gauls being subdued) such them: And the Horse so to sling and chase, that rewards as they deserved; commanding all their it is impossible they should either keep their Rank Horse and ten thousand Foot to be speedily sent unto him, which he meant to dispose into Garrisons for the better provision of Corn. And then diviwhich is a Weapon as ancient as the first and truest ding his Army into two parts, he fent four Legions towards the Senones and the Parifians under the leading of Labienus; the other four he led himself against the Arverni, to the Town of Gergovia, along the River Elaver, sending part of the Horse with him, and keeping part with himself.

OBSERVATION.

O loofe the least jot of that which a Man hath Non-immer of in possession, is more dishonourable, than to virtus, que fail of getting what he hath not. And therefore rueri puris Cafar chose rather to forgo the advantages which a speedy pursuit of the Enemy might have afforded him to the ending of that War, than to hazard the loss of so great a State, and so well-affected to the People of Rome, as were the Hedui, wherein he carried so equal and indifferent a hand, that he would do nothing but what the Laws of that State directed him unto, as most assured that such directions were without exception.

CHAP. XVII.

Cefar paffeth his Army over the River Elaver. and incampeth himself before Gergovia.

Hich thing being known, Vercingetorix Calar. having broken down all the Bridges of that River, took bis journey on the other fide of Elaver; either Army being an ancient Family, and he himself of great Power in view of each other, and incamping almost over ain view of each orner, and meamping entengle over a gainft one another: Scoutt being fent out to watch, left the Romans should make a Bridge in any place, and carry over the Forces. Cæstar was much troubled, left he should be hindered by the River the greatest part of that Summer, for a much as Elaver is not passable at any Ford until towards the Autumn. And therefore to prevent that, he incamped himself in a Woody place, right over-against one of those Bridges which Vercingetorix had commanded to be broken. The next day he kept himself there secretly with two Legions, and fent forward the rest of the Forces. with all the Carriages, as were accustomed, taking away the fourth part of each Cohort, that the number of Legions might appear to be the same : commanding them to go on as far as they could: And making conjecture by the time of the day, that they were come to their Camping-place, upon the same Piles, (the lower part whereof remained there whole) he began to re-edifie the Bridge; and having speedily ended the work, and carried over the Legions, and chosen a fit place to incamp in, he called back the rest of his Forces. Vercingetorix having notice thereof, left he should be forced to fight against his will, went be-fore by great journeys. Cæsar with sive incampings went from that place to Gergovia, and after a light skirmish between the Horse the Same day he came, having taken a view of the situation of the Town, which was built upon a very high Hill, and had very hard and difficult approaches on all sides, he despaired of taking it by Affault, neither would be determine before the Town, had placed the several Forces of the States by themselves, in small distances round about him, and having possess himself of all the tops of tified, he exhorted the Hedui to forget their private that Hill, made a very terrible shew into all parts where he might be seen: He commanded likewife the chief Men of the States, whom he had cho-fen out to be of the Council of War, to meet always ment. The Hedui were the only State which kept know if any thing were to be communicated unto them, or what elfe was to be done. Neither did he omit any day to skirmish with his Horsemen, with Archers intermingled amongst them : to the end he might try what Courage and Valour was in his Pcople. Right over-against the Town at the foot of the Hill, there was a Mount or rifing ground exceedingly fortified, and hard to be come unto on all fides, which if our Men could get, they were in hope to hinder the Enemy, both of a great part of their Water, and also from free Foraging: but the place was kept with a strong Garrison. Notwithstanding Cæsar went out of his Camp in the silence of the night, and before any help could come out of the Town, he put by the Garrison, possessed himself of the place, left two Legions there to defend it, and drew a double Trench of twelve foot in breath from the greater Camp to the less, that fingle Men might go safe to and fro from any sudden incursion of the Enemy.

OBSERVATION.

Lib. VII.

The meens the may observe his manner of passing which Carliar over the River Elaver, without any impedition the River the Rive which Wereingetorix had to hinder his paffage, which was plotted with as great dexterity as could be devifed in fuch a matter: And to shadow his purpose the better, that the number of down his purpose the better, that the number of aeryana wege soning from some soat are ejeaged. Legions marching up the River might appear to from the slaughter: for I my self (my Brethern be the same, he took the fourth part of every and Kinsmen being slain) am bindred with grief Cohort, which in the whole amounted to two Lefrom telling you what hath bappened. Presently gions. For, as I have already delivered in my former Observations, a Legion consisted of ten Cohorts, and every Cohort contained three Maniples, and every Maniple had two Companies, which they called Orders: So that every Cohort having fix Companies, the fourth part of a Cohort was a Company and a half, and a Legion came to fifteen Companies, and in eight Legions one hundred and twenty Companies; which being reduced make threescore Maniples, which were equal to two Legions: and proveth that which I have already noted, to fit and convenient disposi-tion of their Troops, to take out at all times competent Forces for any fervice without feeming to leffen any part. Secondly, I observe the phrase which he useth in this place, Quintis castris Gorgoviam pervenit, he came to Gergovia at five incampings; which implyeth their infallible cultom of incamping every night within a Ditch and a Rampier: For as we usually say, that to such a place is fo many days journey, because an ordinary Traveller maketh fo many journeys before he come thither; fo the Romans reckoned their journeys with their Army by their incampings, which were as duly kept as their journeys, and were the most fignal part of their days journey.

CHAP. XVIII.

Convictolitanis moveth the Hedui to a Revolt.

Hilft shele things were a doing at Gergovia, Convictolitanis the Heduan, to whom the Magistracy was adjudged by Cæsar, being wrought up-on by the Arverni with Money, brake the matter to certain young Men, amongst whom Litavicus together with him at the dawning of the day, to Gallia from a most assured Victory: For by their Authority and Example, the rest would be concluded, which being fet over, there would be no place in Gallia for the Romans to abide in. Touching himself, he had received a good turn from Cæsat, but in such sort, as he had but his right: but he owed more to the common liberty. For why Should the Hedui rather dispute of their Customs and Laws before Cæsar, than the Romans come before the Hedui? These young Men were quickly persuaded, as well by the Speech of the Magistrate, as by rewards; insomuch as they offered themselves to be the Authors of that Council. But now the means was to be thought on, forasmuch as they were persuaded that the State would not easily be drawn to undertake that War. They determined at last, that Litavicus should have the leading of those ten thousand Men that were to be fent to Cafar, and that his Brethren should be sent before to Cæsar, and concluded likewise in what sort they would have other things carried.

Litavicus having received the Army, when he was about thirty miles from Gergovia, calling the Soldiers suddenly together, and weeping: Whither do we go (faith he) fellow Soldiers? All our Horsemen and our Nobility are flain, the Princes of our State, Eporedorix and Viridomarus, being falfs accused of Treason, are put to death by the Romans without calling them to their answer. Understand these things from them that are escaped those were brought forth, whom he had taught beforehand what he would have faid: who verified to the multitude those things which Litavicus had Spoken : that all the Horsemen of the Hedui were flain, forasmuch as they were said to have had jiam, jorajmuco as toey were jara to nave naa Speech wingst the Averni: for themselves they were bid amongst the multitude of Soldiers, and were e-scaped out of the midst of the slaughter. The Hedui cry out all together, and do beseech Lita-vicus to look to himself, and to them also. As though (saith he) the matter needeth any advice or counsel, and that it were not necessary for us to go directly to Gergovia, and to joyn our felves with the Averni. For do we doubt, but that the Romans, having begun fo wickedly, will run pre-Sently upon us to take away our Lives? And therefore if there be any Courage at all in us, let us persecute their death that have perished so undeservedly, and let us kill these Thieves. He shewed them divers Roman Citizens that were in the Troops for Safety of Convoy: And forthwith he seized upon a great quantity of Corn and other Provisions, and tortured them cruelly to death. He sent out Messengers throughout all the State of the Hedui, continuing the same false suggestion touching the slaughter of the Horsemen, and the Princes; persuading them to revenge their injuries in like manner as he had done.

The First OBSERVATION.

This treacherous practife of Convictolitanis, who a little before (as we may remember) had received so great a benefit from Cafar, proveth true the saying of Cornel. Tacitus, That Men are readier to revenge an injury than to requite a good turn; forasmuch as Gratia oneri, ultio Gratia oneri, in quastin habetur, A good turn is as a burthen fin habetur. and a debt to a Man, whereas revenge is reckonwas chief, and his Brethren, being Touths of a ed. a gain. The debt of Loyalty and good Afgreat House: With them he treated at first, and fection, wherein Convictoitanis thou encaused fection, wherein Convictolitanis stood engaged to wished them to remember, that they were not only Cafar, for confirming that right unto him which civil diffention had made doubtful together him fo willing to revolt from the Romans, and in lieu of thankful acknowledgment to requite him with Hostility. A part so odious and detestable, that Verrue grieveth to think that a Man should be capable of any such Wickedness, or be stained with the Infamy of so horrible a Crime. Other Vices are faults in special, and are branded with the several marks of Ignominy: But Ingratitude is equal to the Body of Evil, and doth countervail the whole nature of hateful Affections; according to that of the Philosopher, Ingratum si dixeris omnia dixeris; Ingratitude is culpable of all forts of Wickedness, and deferveth the greatest measure of revenge. And the rather, for that it taketh away the use of Vertue, and maketh Men forget to do good. For whereas the nature of goodness is seen in communicating it felf to the relief of other Mens Wants, we ought to give all diligence not to himder this enlargement, nor by a froward and crooked example to prejudice others that fland in need of the like favour

I have often heard it spoken, but I know not how true it is, and am loth to believe it, that in the exchange of a good turn, the party that receiveth it hath more affurance of his Benefactor, touching a faithful and friendly disposition for the future time, than he that shewed the kindness can have of the Receiver: For Men are loath to loofe both the Fruit and the Seed. and will rather bestow more cost and labour, than forego the hope of their first endeavours, expecting both in reason and nature; Fruit answerable to their Seed: Whereas the badness of our nature is such of it self, Ut gratin oneri, ultio in Quaftu babetur.

The Second OBSERVATION.

A Matinute There is no means to ready to abuse a Multiunder a falle fuggestion, which like a teingliam. tude as falle fuggeftion, which like a lying spirit feduceth the minds of Men from the truth conceived, and fashioneth their hearts to such purposes as seemeth best to the abuser: And the rather when it is delivered by a Man of place and authority, and fuch a one as pretendeth carefulness for the fafety of a People; for then it flieth as faft as the Lightning in the Air, and deludeth the wilest and best experienced of the Multitude. A Mischief that can hardly be prevented, as long as Piedo Plato-

Numa Pompilius (to whom the Roman Empire did owe as much for Laws and civil Government, as to Romulus for their martial discipline:) the better to establish such ordinances and decrees as he made in his Kingdom, feigned familiar acquain-tance with a Goddess of that time called Egeria, and by her he faid he was affured, that the Statutes which he made were both equal and just, and good for the Romans to observe: And the People found no hurt in believing it.

In like manner Lycurgus having given many Laws to the Spartans, repaired to the City of Delphos, and there he got a pleasing Oracle, which he fent to Spara, affuring them that his Eaws were very good, and that City keeping them, should be the most renowned of the World.

And Sertorius for want of other means used with the respect of the general cause, made the service of a white Hind; as a Gift sent him from Diana, to make the Lusitanians believe whatsoever might best advantage his business. And thus a Multitude lieth open to good and ill purposes, and is either happy or unfortunate in the Counsel of their Leader.

CHAP. XIX.

Cafar hindereth the revolt of the Hedur.

Poredorix the Heduan, a young Man of great Parentage, and of great Power in his Country, together with Viridotnarus, of like Age and Authority, but not fo nobly born, who being preferred to Carlar by Divitiacus, was by him advanced from mean Estate to great Dignity, came both to Cafar with the Heduan Horsemen, being called out by name to that War by him. Between thefe two there was always Contention who should be the chiefest, and in that Controversie for Magistracy, the one stood for Convi-Ctolitanis, and the other for Cotus. Of these two Eporedorix understanding the tefolution of Litavicus, opened the matter to Cafar ulmost about Midnight. He prayed him not to Suffer their State Managht. He prayed him not to Juffer their State to fall way from the Friendlip of the People of Rossie by the wicked Connfel of Toing Men, which would meet farily fall mi, if he faffered so thany thoughted Men to join themselves to the Etherny, whose supposes a metric their Knifolki whild wighted, to the Secrements and that it and the secrements of their Knifolki whild wighted, to the Secrements and that it and the secrements of their secrements. as neither their Knistolik ideals neither, to the State could not lightly officient of. Cacata being much perplexed as this McHole, foreignible in he had al-ways therefored the State of the I-lectus, wishout the frairber dollors of Jinice, be took fair texplette and the burtlemed Lectus wins all the Hole duty of the Camp. our shemed Legions wind all the Holfs only of the Campy. Noticity was there fact it flick a time to make the Camp there, fraginated at the marier fermed to coulfif in expellition. He left betward the C. Fabius a Legite with two Legions for a Garrifon to the Camp. And having from order for the apprehending of Litaricius Bettheren, he found that a little legion they were field to the Brothy. Thereminon waters and the Letters are falled to the Brothy. that a use vegore they were nea to the enemy. Thereupon exhoring the soldiers not to think much of their tations in so necessary a time, every him being miss willing, be went five with steeling Miles, and then her with the towers of the Hedul. The Horfemen being fent to flay their March, be communded not to kill any one of them, and gave order to Eporedorix and Viridomarus (whom they thought Michief that can hardly be prevented, as long as there is a Tongue to feak or an Ear to hear. But as Socrater fail of Pain and Eafe, that they are always tied together: So Men must endeavout to redeem the hurts of finch an Evil, by the benefit which thereby is confequently implyed: For it were hard if wife Men could not make the like use of a Multitude to good purpose, as these the ceivers do for their own advantage.

Name Demailius (to whom the Roman Finchis danger, fled to Gergovia. Carlar baving difpatched Messengers to the State of the Hedui, to acquaint them that he had saved their People, which by the law of Arms be might have Main, gave the Army three hours rest that Night, and then returned towards Gergovia. In the Midway certain Hossemen sent by Fabius made known unto Cæsar in what danger the matter flood: That the Camp was affailed with all the Encines Forces; and foralmuch at fuch as were wearied were still retreved with fresh Men, it came to pass that our Men fainted with con-titutal labours; for the Camp was so great, that they were always to stand upon the rampier to make it good: And that many were wounded with the Multirude of Arrows and other fores of Weapons; wherein their Engines had feroed them to good purpose for

Lib. VII. their defence. Fabius when these Messengers came come that all their Soldiers were under Cesar's away, had shut up two Gates, and left other two open, and had made sheds and Honels for the better open, and that make poear and Hovels for the vertex defence of the Wall, and prepared himself for the like fortune the next day. These things being known by the exceeding travel of the Soldiers, Castar came into the Camp before Sun-rifing.

OBSERVATION.

A S often as the People of Rome had occasion to make War, besides the body of the Army inrolled for that fervice, in fuch fort and with fuch ceremonies as I have formerly delivered; the Conful or General had authority to call out fuch others, either of the Commonalty or the Equites, as for their long fervice were freed by the Laws from giving in their Names at a Muster:
Fronti, mio And these they called Evocati, as a Man would And there they called out, being all Men of special note favour to the Hedni and service, and such as were able to give found advice for matter of War. These Evocati went all for the most part under an Ensign, and were lodged together in the Camp behind the Pavilion of the General, near unto the Gate which they called Porta Pratoria, and were always free from ordinary duties, as watching, Encamping, and fighting, unless it came to such a pals, that every Man would put to his helping hand : But every Man would put to his helping hand: But in all fervices they had their place appointed them according to their former experience and their Army with the Wildom and experience of fuch, as for many Years together had been acquainted with the difficulties and calualities of War, and oftentimes were able to afford fuch helps both by example and otherwife his good disch helps both by example and otherwise by good directions, as the Wildom of the General did gladly embrace. Concerning these two Young Nobles Eporedorix and Viridomarus, whom he nameth in this place Evocati, we are to underftand that they were called out to that War under the fame Title, but to another End : For being Men of great place and Authority, he feared leaft in his absence they might be so wrought to favour Vercingetorix, as neither himself nor the Hedui should have any cause to commend them, according as it happened to Litavicus.

CHAP. XX.

The Hedui rob and kill divers Raman Citizens.

Hile thefe things were a doing at Ger-govia, the Hedui having received the first messages from Litavicus, gave themselves no time to understand the truth: Some being led on by covetousness, ethers by anger and rashness, as it is naturally ingrafted in that Nation to take a light hear-fay for a certain truth. Spoiled the Roman Citizens of their Goods. and slew them besides, or drew them into bondage; Convictolitanis stirring up the Common-People to Madness, that when they had done some wicked Fast, they might be ashamed to be good again. They drew Marcus Aristius a Tribune of the Soldiers, as he went to the Legion, out of the Town Cavillonium, notwithstanding their Faith and Promise before given, causing the rest to do the like, which were there for matter of Trade: These they fet upon forthwith as they travelled rebbed them of their Carriages, and besieged such as made resistance Day and Night: Many were flain on both sides, and a greater number were friered up to take Arms. In the mean time News being Power, they ran speedily to Atiftius, they tell him that nothing was done by publick Authority, they called fuch as robbed the Romans of their Goods to answer the matter, they confiscate the Goods of Litavicus and his Brethren, they fend Embaffadors, unto Casar to clear themselves of these disorders: And this they do for the better recovery of their People that were now with Cæfar. But being contaminated with a wicked Fast, and taken with the shame of robbing the Roman Citizens, many of them being couched in the Fact, and much perplexed for fear of punishment; they privily entered into consultations of War, and sollicited other States to that purpose by their Embaffadors. Which although Cafar understood, yet he entertained them as courteously as he could, telling them that for the ignorance and levity. of the Common People he would not think hardly of the State, nor abate any thing of his good will and

The First OBSERVATION.

Wicked Act is not only hurtful in it felf One ill At A Wicked Act is not only nurruu in it ien begetist. and of its own condition, but is like that box ther. of evil, which the Poets feign to have been given to Pandora to be kept always shut: For when the Way is once made, and the Gap opened, one Mischief draws on another, and the Tail that followeth is more viperous than the Head. There was never any one that stained himself with any detestable Crime, but was moved to commit a fecond Evil that had relation to the first : For Wicked Deeds are justified by themselves, and one Crime is upheld by another. When the hand is dip'd in Blood, it seemeth no great matter to imbrue the Arm : And the Loyalty of a People being once shaken by the indirect practices of a few, it is no strange matter if the whole body of that State do immediately enter into treasonable Consultations. As it happened in this place with the Hedui, who from that time which disclosed the Treachery of their Heart, carried no faithful regard to the Roman Government, until the bitterness of that War which happened shortly after had made them know their

It shall be necessary therefore, as much as lyeth in the possibility of our means, to keep the Body of Verme fafe from wounding: For albeit the Wound be never so little, yet it is always wide enough to let out both the Blood and the Spirits, even to the evacuation of the Viral Breath of moral honesty.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Onvictolitanis Plebem ad furorem impellir, stirred ne poor for up the Common People to madnes (faith the & Pople do madness) ftory) as the fittest instruments to riouble the State, mean of more all and to level the rest of the People with the fury of moutin madness. For the poorer and meaner People, that have no interest in the Common-weal but the use of Breath, nor any other Substance but a Flie in the Commons, are always dangerous to the Peace of that Kingdom: For having nothing to dofe, they willingly embrace all means of innovation, in hope of gaining fomething by other Mens ruin, believing altogether in the Proverb, which averreth the fifthing to be good which is in troubled Waters.

Catiline conspiring against the Roman Empire, made choice of such to accompany him whose fortune was desperate. And thereupon Salust salust in the faith; Homini Potentiam quarenti, Egentissimus Confinats quisque Opportuniffonus, cui neque sua chara, quippe que nulla sunt, & omnia cum bonesta videntur: Indigent Fellows are the fittest firengthning of it. Casar perceiving the Entmies Instruments for Ambitious Men, who regard not Camps to be void of Men, biding his Ensigns and their own, because they have nothing, esteeming Colours, he drew the Soldiers by little and hittle out all Actions honest that they gain by.

Livy writeth, That upon the rumour in Greece, of War between Perfeus and the Romans, the poorer fort did put themselves in pay under Per-fens, with this resolution, that if there happened no alteration upon this occasion, they would then cleave to the Romans, and affift them to put the incommodious disadvantage of the place, which the state of Greece into a Confusion. Semper in civitate (faith Saluft) quibus opes nulla funt, bonn invident, malos extollunt; vetera odere, nova exoptant, odio suarum rerum mutari omnia student

There are these two means left for a State to ease it self of this fort of People: Either to employ them abroad in Wars, or to interess them in the quiet of the Commonweal, by learning them such Trades and Occupations as may give them a tafte of the (weetness of Peace, and the benefit of a Civil Life.

CHAP. XXI.

Cafar spieth an occasion to advance the Service at Gergovia.

Elar suspecting a greater Revolt of the Gauls, left he might be hemmed in with the strength of all the States of Gallia, he entred into deliberation how he might leave Gergovia, and get all his Army together again, that his departure might not seem to rise from the fear of their Revolt, and thereby be thought of slying away. And as he thought upon these things, he feemed to fpy an occasion of doing somewhat to purpose: For coming into the lesser Camp to view the Works, he observed a Hill which was kept by the Enemy to be bare of Men, which the day before could scarce be discerned, by reason of the multitude of People: And wondering at it, he enquired the cause of the Differeers, which came daily in great numbers unto him. They all agreed of that which Casar had before understood by the Scouts, that the back of that Hill was almost level, but narrow and woody where it gave passage to the other part of the Town. The Gauls did much fear that place, for the Ro-The Gauss and must pear trate place, for the Normans having took one rifing Ground, if they should possess themselves of another, the Gauls were almost block d in round about, and cut off from Foraging, or any other issuing out of the Town: And therefore Vercingetorix had called them all to fortific that place. This being known, Cafar fent many Troops of Horse to that place about Midnight, Commanding them to ride up and down all thereabout somewhat tumultuously. And early in the Morning he caused many Horses and Mules for Carriage to be taken out of the Camp with Horse-keepers upon them, having Casks upon their Heads, the better to resemble Horsemen, and to be carried round about the Hills. And to them he added a few Horsemen, to the end they might Spur out the more freely, and so make a better free commanding them all to go to the same place by a long circuit: about. These things were done in view of the Town; for Gergovia so stood, that they might from thence fee into the Camp; but yet in so great a distance they could not certainly perceive what was done. He sent likewise one Legion to the same Hill, and appointed them to go a little way; and then to make a ftand in a Dale, and to hide themselves in the Woods. The Gauls began more to suspect that place, and all their Forces were drawn thither for the of the greater into the leffer Camp, and acquainted the Legates, to whom he had given the several Le-gions in charge, what he would have done; warning them especially to keep in the Soldiers, lest they should be carried out either with a desire of Fighting, or in hope of Booty. He propounded unto them must only be avoided by expedition, the matter con-fisting rather in occasion and opportunity, than in

The First OBSERVATION.

T is an easier matter to begin a business, and to h is an unite make work for many hands; but to put it off matter again, and to quit it without prejudice of other gin a Winter important respects, is no small labour. Casar be-again was ing engaged in the Siege of Gergovia, and fear-cross.
ing a general Revolt throughout all Gallia, was not a little troubled how he might clear himself of that business, without suspicion of fear or flight, and gather all his Forces into one body again, which he had before divided into two Armies: For as Marcellus faid to Fabins, touching the Siege of Casselium, Multa magnis ducibus sicut Live non aggredienda, ita semel aggressis non dimittenda esse, quia magna same momenta in utranque par-tem siunt; Many things, as they are not to be attempted by great Captains; so when they are once attempted they must not be lest unatchieved: For in either their Reputation is much concerned. An Enemy will conceive greater hopes from fuch a Retreat, than from a greater advantage. And therefore a General ought to have as special a re-gard to the Opinion which he defireth to be held of his Proceedings, as of any part belonging to his Charge: For Fame is the Spirit of great Actions, and maketh them memorable or unworthy by report. Cetern mortalibus in eo stare consilia quid fibi conducere putent; Principum (faith Tacitus) diversam esse sortem, quibus pracipua rerum ad sa-mam dirigenda; Other Mens Consultations tend only to what may most advantage themselves: Princes have more to do; to look in their management of things principally at their Honour and Reputation. Wherein there cannot be a better Rule for the avoiding of that Inconvenience, than that which Lucretius observed, of whom Livy faith; Id prudenter ut in temere fuscepta re Romanus fecit, quod circumspectis difficultatibus, ne frustra tempus tereret, celeriter abstitit incepto: He did thus far prudently in a business rashly undertaken; that when he saw what difficulties attended the enterprise, rather than spend time in vain, he forthwith defifted from his purpose. For the speedy leaving of any such enter-prise, doth excuse the rashness which might be imputed to the beginning; and Men are not fo much blamed for making tryal of an ill-digefted project, as they are for obstinate continuing in the fame.

The Second OBSERVATION

Some Services (faith C. far) are Rev occasionis, Some Services of non prailit, Businesses of Opportunity, not of write occasionis, War: Whereof I have already disputed. Note foods, one withstanding, give me leave to add the Mistake prailies which often falleth out in matter of Opportunity. For in viewing the occurrences of the Wars of these later Times, we may find that some horfpur Commanders, having tasted of the good Success which occasion afforders, have thought of the Booty which be had got at Avaricum so stirred nothing but of Services affished with opportunity, bin up, that he would suffer no Man to get up upon in such manner as at length they forgot that occasion came but seldom, and carried their Men upon such desperate Attempts, as proved the business to the top of the Wall, and then he himself did help to be a matter scarce assording means to Fight for up his Fellows. In the mean time such as were on their Lives, but were often fwallowed up with devouring danger: Wherein they did mistake the condition of the Service, and fell short of Cafar's Example. For albeit he fent out his Men to struggle with the height of the Hill, and the disadvantage of well-fortified Camps; yet he knew they should find little resistance by the Enemy, being drawn away upon other occasions, if they made that expedition as was requisite in this Service; whereby he left them not without means to overfway those difficulties, and so made it Rem occasionis, non pralii, a business of opportunity, not of War.

CHAP. XXII.

The Romans make an affault upon Gergovia.

Hefe things being delivered, he gave the Soldiers the fign to begin, and at the fame time he fent out the Hedui by another afcent on the right fide. The Wall of the Town was distant by a right Line from the Plain and the foot of the Hill (if it lay even without any Dale or Valley) a Thousand and Two Hundred Paces: Whatfoever more was added in fetching Circuits about, to climb the steep of the Hill, was over and besides that distance. From the mid'st of the Hill in length, as the nature of the place would bear it, the Gauls had with great Stones raised a Wall of fix Foot in height, to hinder the affault of our Men; and all the lower part being left void and empty, they filled the upper part of the Hill even to the Wall of the Town with thick and frequent Camps. The Soldiers upon the fign given were quickly come to the Works, and passing over them they possest themselves of Three Camps, with such speed and expedition, that Teutomatus, the King of the Nitiobriges, being surprised in his Tent as he rested about Noon time, the upper part of his Body being naked, and his Horse Wounded, did hardly escape the hands of Soldiers Occupied in Booty. Cæsar having got that which he propounded to himself, commanded a Retreat to be founded; and the Enfigns of the Tenth Legion staid. But the Soldiers of the other Legions not bearing the found of the Trum-pet, forasmuch as a great Valley was between them, were staid notwithstanding at first by the Tribunes of the Soldiers and the Legates, according as Casar had given in Charge. But being carried away as well with a hope of speedy Victory, as by the flight of the Enemy, and the fortunate Battels of former Times, they thought nothing so disjust but they could overcome it by their Valour, insomuch as they desifted not from following, until they came to the Wall, and the Gates of the Town. Then a great Out-cry being took up in all parts of the Town, fuch as were further off being terrified with the suddenness of the Tumult, thinking the Enemy had been within the Gates, did cast themselves out of the Town : And the Women cast down their Apparel and their Silver from the Walls; and holding out their naked Breasts, with their hands spread abroad, adjured the Romans to fave them, and that they would not (as they had done at Avaricum) deftroy both Women and Children: And some Women Slips down by up his Fellows. In the mean time fuch as were on the other side of the Town, busied in Fortifying that place (as we have already delivered) first the noise being heard, and then stirred up by often Meffengers, that the Romans had took the Town, fending their Horsemen before, they hasted thither in great numbers, and still as they came, they stood under the Wall, and encreased the number of such as they found Fighting. A great multitude being at length come together, the Women that a little before had reached out their hands from the Wall to the Romans, began now to adjure their own People, and, as the manner of the Gauls is, to shew their Hair loofe about their Ears, and to bring out their Children.

OBSERVATION

T is both safe and honourable for Soldiers and it is Hamura inferiour Commanders to keep their direction of for Saddi-ons: For whenfoever they go about to enlarge their directions their business according to their own fantasie, one howloever occasion may seem to further their defires, they invert the whole course of Discipline, and do arrogate more to themselves than they do attribute to their General.

The Romans were strict in this point, as may appear by that of Manlius, who put his own Son to Death for making a happy Fight against the Enemy, contrary to his directions: For although it fortuned to fall out well at that time, yet the Example was fo dangerous in a well-ordered War, that he chose rather to bring a mischief upon his own Son, than an inconvenience to their Military Government. Injussu tuo (faith one in Livy to the Consul) nunquam pugnabo, non si cer-tam victoriam videam; unless thou biddest, I will never Fight, no, though I see the Victory clear before me; making profession of true Obedience, and ranging himself in the order of such Parts, as have no other Office but Observance. For an Army is as a Body, and the Soldiers are as particular Parts, every Man according to his Place: The General is as the Life and Soul, and giveth Motion to every part according to reason. And as in a natural Body no part can move without directions from the Life; so in the Body of an Army, when any part moveth without the confent of the Head, the motion is either monftrous or exorbitant, and fuiteth with fuch an effect as condemneth the Instruments of unadvised Rashness.

Polybius faith, That Men have two ways to come by Wisdom, either by their own Harms, or by other Mens Mif-cafualties. Such Wifdom as is got through Correction, happening by their own Errors, is dearly bought; but fitting near them, is not easily forgotten: That which is ob-tained by other Mens Misfortunes, is well come by, and at an easie rate; but for the most part it is foon forgotten: But fuch as can retain it to a good use, are most happy Men. This Precept to Soldiers, touching Obedience, and the precife keeping of their Directions, hath, by other Mens Harms fo often been urged, as a Man would think, That later Ages should beware of this Disorder. And yet it falleth out almost in every fmall Service. For the greatest Loss which the English received at any one time at Ostend, their hunds from the Wall, and gave themselves was in a Sally; wherein Captain Woodward freely to the Schliers. L. Fabius a Centurion of the having possess himself of some of the Enemies

Works, when by his directions he should have which Blood and Strength have already for saken: stayed, thinking to improve his Reputation by forme further Service, deeming it easie peradventure to go forward, he went on beyond the compass of his Command: Whereby it happened, that both the Enemy had greater scope to Revenge their former Dishonour, and the rest of our English Troops that had their part in that project by way of second Helps, could not proceed according to their directions; and fo they all returned with loss.

That which Xenophon reporterh touching one Chryfantas, is notable to this purpose; who being in the hear of a conflict, and having his Sword lift up to strike one of the adverse Party, he chanced to hear a Retreat founded, whereupon he prefently withdrew his hand, and did forbear to fmite him. Which howfoever to fome may feem ridiculous, and unfitting the Temper of a Soldier in time of Battel; yet let them know that Xenophon a great Commander, and an ex-cellent Historian, did alledge that Example to the eternal Memory of the forenamed Party, for the Knowledge and Instruction of Cyrus, whom he propoundeth to the World as an absolute Pattern both of Military and Civil Vertue.

CHAP. XXIII.

The Romans continue the Affault, and are beaten off with loss.

He Contention was not indifferent to the Romans, neither in place nor in number of Combatants, being wearied withal, both with the long Race which they had Run, and with the continuance of their Fight, whereby they did not so easily bear, the Enemy being whereby they did not Joeally bear, the Ememy verny whole and fresh. Celar feeing the Fight to be in an unequal place, and the Ememy still to encrease their Forest, fraving his Popels, he sint to T Sextius, the Legate, whom he had left to Command the lesser camp, to bring out the Cohort: speedily, and to place them as the spot of the Hill on the right side of the Enemy; to the end, That if our Men were forced to forfake their place, yet the Enemy might be terrified from following them over freely, he himself removing a little out of that place where he stood with the Legion, attended the event of the Battel. And as they fought at hand very fiercely, the Enemy trusting in the place, and in the multitude, and our Men in their Valour, the Hedui suddenly appeared on the open fide of our Men, whom Cafar had fent up by another ascent on the Right-hand, to keep off ip by another ascent on the Kigut-hand, to keep off part of the Entry. These, by the likeness of their Armour, did wonderfully assonish our Men? Woo, although they saw their Right-Arms sewed or put forth, which was a sign of Peace, yet they doubted less the Enemy had used that Policy to deceive them. At the same instant L. Fabius the Centurion, and those that climbed up upon the Wall with him, being flain, were cast down from the Wall again, and M. Petreius, a Centurion of the same Legion, as he was about to cut down the Gates, being oppressed with the multitude, and despairing of his own Life, having received many Wounds; Forasmuch (saith he to his Soldiers that followed him) as I cannot fee to its Source; some jouweed nim jas; cannot fave my left and you too, I will certainly provide for your lafety, whom I have brought into danger, whilf I thirfted after Honour. You, while you may, shift for your selves. And withal, be brake through the thickest of the Enemy, and with the slaughter of a couple, he removed the rest from the Gate. And as his Soldiers went about to help him, In vain (faith he) do you endeavour to fave my Life,

And therefore get you hence, while you have means, and betake your felves to the Legion; and so Fighting fell down dead, but saved his Men. Our Men being over-charged on all sides, with the loss of six and forty Centurions, were beaten down from the place: But the Tenth Legion, which stood for a Rescue in a more equal place, hindred the Gauls from following over eagerly. And again, the Colorit of the Thirteenth Legion, which Sextius had brought out of the Camp, seconded that Legion, having got the advantage of the upper Ground. The Legions as foon as they came into the Plain, flood still, and turned head to the Enemy. Vercingetorix drew back his Men from the foot of the Hill, and brought them into their Camps. That day few less than Seven hundred Soldiers were wanting.

OBSERVATION.

A Nd this is the end of presumptuous Rashness, when Men are become so pregnant, as to take upon them more than is required. But as they fay of fair Weather, that it is piry it should do hurr: So is it great pity that Valour and Re-folution should prove disadvantageous. For this over-doing of a Service, is but the spirit of Valiant Carriage, and the very motion of Prowess and Courage, memorable in the Offenders themfelves; as we may fee by this particular report of Fabius and Petreius: And much to be pitied, that Vertue should at any time be over-quelled with a greater strength.

At this Service the Romans stood in these Terms; they were over-matched in number, they had spent their Strength in speedy running to the place which in it felf was not favourable unto them, but almost as great an Enemy as the Gauls, only they trufted in their Valour, and thought Vertue to clear all difficulties. The Gaule had the favour of the place, a far greater number of Fighting Men, they came freh to the Battel, and were always feconded with fresh Supplies. Cafar feeing the two Armies engaged one with another, could neither part them nor recall his Soldiers, but fet fuch Forces as were free in fuch convenient places, as might rescue his People in the Retreat, and keep the Gauls from following the Chase, or making any great slaughter of the Roman Soldier. Whereby it happened, that in great an inequality, where there were fo many Swords drawn to make way to Death, there were not Seven Hundred Men loft of the Roman Army. And yet it happened to be the greatest loss that ever he received in those Wars in his own presence, when the issue of the conslict gave the Enemy the better of the day.

CHAP. XXIV.

Cafar Rebuketh the Rashness of his Soldiers; and maketh light, but fuecefsful Skirmishes upon the Enemy.

Æsar the next day calling the Army before Casar him, rebuked the Temerity and stupidity of the Soldiers, forasmuch as they had took upon them to judge how far they were to go, or what they were to do; neither would they stay upon the founding of a Retreat, nor hearken to the Tribunes nor the Legates that would have kept them back. He laid open unto them how available the inequality of the place was, and what he himself thought of it, when at Avaricum he took the Enemy without a General, and without Cavalry, yet did foregoe a most assured Victory, lest in the buckling he might have received a small loss through the inequality of the place. How admi-rable was the greatness of their Spirit, whom nei-ther the Fortifications of the Camps, the height of the Hill, nor the Wall of the Town could stop or hinder! Wherein he blamed their licentious Arrogancy the more, for a smuch as they had took upon them to judge better of the Victory, and the success of that Service, than the General himself: Neither did be so much defire to find Courage and Vertue in his Soldiers, as Modesty and Sobriety. This Speech being delivered, and in the end confirming their Minds that they might not be discouraged at the matter, nor attribute that to the worth of the Enemy, which indeed was in the nature of the place: Keeping his former purpose of departure, he brought the Legions out of the Camp, embattelled them in would not be drawn into an indifferent place, after a light skirmish of Horse, wherein the Romans had the better, he carried his Army back again into the Camp: And doing the like the next day, thinking it Sufficient to abate the Pride of the Gauls, and to strengthen the Courage of his Soldiers, he removed his Camp into the State of the Hedui, the Enemy refusing to make after him.

OBSERVATION.

Lib. VII.

Beneration of Honour is a chief point in the carriage of an Army: For he that leaveth an ein. are either awed or well-beaten, must look to find the same Spirit and Courage in them, when they shall come again to confront the Enemy, as they had when they last left him with a disadvantage; which is nothing else but an unskilful continuance of his own loss, and a preparation to a fecond Overthrow. In the War the Romans had with Hamibal, in all the Fights they made, they continued their first loss unto the Battel at Nola: At what time by Marcellus's good directions, they gave him an Overthrow; which was the first time that ever Hannibal's Soldiers began to give place to the Romans, and repaired the Romans Valour again, after fo many Battels as they loft. For then they were perswaded that they fought not with an Enemy altogether Invincible, but that he was subject to Loss and Overthrow. And in respect of this so happy a Fortune, restoring the Roman Soldiers to their ancient Valour and good Fortune, it is that Livy faith, Ingens eo die res, ac nescio an maxima illo bello gesta sit, A great piece of Service was performed that day, and I think I may say the greatest that was done in that War. Cafar did well understand this Philosophy: And therefore he laboured to repair the breach which the Ene-Dyrachia maxim cefar my had made in the Valour of his Soldiers, by nega fair light and fimall Skirmifhes, before he would admitted by the confliction of the business which in any fer conflict. And the rather, for that he unque inter- had a purpose to leave the Enemy for a time, promodum whereby he seemed to end the former Services: wherein he had a special care not to depart with the last Blow, having always before that time had the better: For the condition of the end doth challenge much of the former proceedings, and doth draw the opinion of Men to deem of all as the conclusion importeth. According as Claudius Nero told his Soldiers: Semper quod postremo adjectum sit, id rem totam videri traxisse: As the end of the Service is, so the whole seems to

CHAP. XXV.

The Hedui Revolt: C.cfar passeth his Army over the River Loire.

He third day he repaired the Bridge at the Cafar. River Elevar, and carried over his Army. There he understood by Viridomarus and Eporedorix, that Litavicus was gone with all the Enemies Horse to sollicite the State of the Hedui, and therefore it was requisite that Cæsar Should send them before to confirm the State, and keep them in Loyalty. And although Cæsar did mistrust the State of the Hedui for many Causes, and did think that the departure of these two the Legions out of the Camp, embastelled them in Nobles would hasten their Revolt; yet be did not a convenient place, and finding that Vercingetorix think it fit to detain them, lest be should either feem to do them wrong, or to give any suspicion of distrust. At their departure he propounded unto them briefly, how well be had deserved of their State; how low and weak they were when he received them, confined within their Towns, their Lands extended, all their Affociates taken from them, a Tribute laid upon them, Pledges extorted from them with great contumely; and into what Fortune and Greatness he had brought them again, that not only they had recovered their former state, but did exceed the Dig-nity and Favour of all former Times: And with these Mandates he let them go. Noviodunum was a Town of the Hedui, situate in a convenient place, a lown of the Hecul, fitnate in a convenient place, upon the Bank of the River Loine. This her had Cælar sent all the Hossages of Gallia, the Corn, the Publick Treasure, and the greatest part of the Baggage of the Army; and this ther he had ligenife sent great store of Horse, which he had bought in Spain and Italy for the Service of this War. Eporedorix and Viridomarus coming thither, and understanding touching the Affairs of their State, that Litavicus was received into Bibract by the Hedui, which is the Metropolitan City of their State, and that Convictolitanis their chief Magistrate, and a great part of the Senate were come unto him, and that publick Messengers were sent to Vercingetorix, touching a League of Peace and Amity; they did not think it fit to omit so great an opportunity. And there-upon having slain the Guard at Noviodunum, with fuch others as were there, either by way of Trade or Travel, they divided the Money and the Horses between them, and took order that the Hostages of the other States should safely be conveyed to Bibract. For the Town, forasmuch as they thought they were not able to keep it, left the Romans might make any use of it, they burned it : Such Corn as they could carry on the suddain, they conveyed away in Boats, the rest they either burned or cast it into the River. They began to raife Forces in the Country next adjoining; to dispose of Watches and Garrisons on the Bank of the River Loire; to shew their Cavalry in all places, to strike fear into the Romans, to the end they might exclude them from Provision of Corn, or drive them through necessity of Want to forsake the Province. Whereof they were the rather affired for a smuch as the Loire was much swelled by a fall of Snow, whereby it was unpassable at any Ford. These things being known. Caelar thought it need any ford. They him to make hast (especially if he must make up the Bridges) to the end he might give them Battel before they had gathered a greater head: For touching his purpose for returning into the Province, he did not think it fit by any means, both in respect of the Shame and Infamy thereof, as also for a funch as the opposition of the Hill Gebenna, and the difficulty of the passage did hinder him; but especially for that he did exceedingly desire to joyn himself with Labienus and the Legions that were with him.

have been.

Plutarch in the Life of

And therefore making great journeys both by Day the same way that he came, he went to Melodunuun and Night beyond all Mens expectation, he came to a Town of the Senones, situate in an Island of Sethe River Loire, where the Horsemen having found a convenient Ford for the necessity of the time, that the Soldiers might pass over with their Arms and Shoulders above the Water, to hold up their Weapons, dispessing the Horse in the River to break the force of the Stream, and the Enemy being affrighted upon their first shew, he carried over his Army in safety. And having satisfied his Soldiers with Corn which he found in the Fields, and good store of Cattel, he determined to march towards the

OBSERVATION.

THe greatest difficulty that ever Casar found in the course of these Wars, was at this instant upon the revolt of the Hedui. For whereas that State after C.e.far's coming into Gallia, was ever reputed the Favourite of the Roman Empire, having received fuch special Privileges and Prerogatives above the reft, as might tie them with an inviolable bond of amity to the People of Rome: It was not to be expected that they should for fake fo great a stay, or favour any thing that might tend to the weakning of that Authority, which preferred them in Dignity before all other States of that Continent: and was as a Remora to divers other Nations of Gallia, from shewing that defection by plain and open revolt, which they had fo long before conceived in their minds.

But when it appeared (notwithstanding any precedent benefit, or the merit of Imperial favours) that the Hedui did affect the common cause of their Countries Liberty, and were content to ingage themselves therein, as far as their Lives or Fortunes could any way be valued: It was not to be doubted, but that fuch other Commonweals, as before that time had remained neutral, and had less cause than the Hedui to keep back their hands from a work of that Piery, would apprehend the matter as a business importing the lafety of their Country, whereunto Cafar and the Legions were common Enemies. The confideration whereof made Cafar to think of returning back into the Province, had not the dishonour of such a retreat, and the desire he had to joyn with Labienus, hindred that purpose.

CHAP. XXVI.

Labienus cometh to Lutetia with four Legions.

Hile these things were done by Cæsar, Labienus having left those supplies which came last out of Italy, at A-gendicum, for the safety of the Car-riages, went himself with four Legions towards Lutetia, a Town of the Parifians, built in an Island in the River Sequana. The Enemy understanding of his coming, great Forces were speedily brought together out of the Countries near about. The chiefeft Command was given to Camulogenus of the Nation of the Aulerci, who notwithstanding his great Age, was called to that Honour for his fingular knowledge in matter of War. He finding it to be a continued Bog that ran into Sequana, and much hindered all that place, did stay there with his Army, and purposed to hinder the passage of the Romans. Labienus did first endeavour to drive the Vines, to fill up the Bog with Hurdles and Earth, and fo to make the paffage firm : But after that he perceived it to be very hard to effect, in the third Watch of the Night he went out of the Camp with filence, and Fortune.

a Town of the Senones, situate in an Island of Sequana, as Lutetia is: And having surprised some fifty Ships and Boats, and Manned them with Soldiers, the Townsmen being affrighted with the novelty of the matter, of whom a great part were called out to that War, he possess himself of the Town with-out any resistance. The Bridge being repaired which the Enemy had cut down a few days before, he transported over the Army, and went down along the River towards Lutetia. The Enemy having notice thereof by such as escaped from Melodunum, commanded Lutetia to be burned, and the Bridges of the Town to be broken: They themselves for sking the Boy, fate down upon the Banks of Sequana, right ver-against the Camp of Labienus. By this time Cæsar's departure from Gergovia was known abroad, with the revolt of the Hedui: and rumours were brought of a second rising and motion in Gallia. It was certainly confirmed, that the Gauls were in confultation, that Casar was kept back both by the difficulties of the Passage and the River Loire, and for want of Corn was constrained to return into the Province. The Bellovaci also understanding of the revolt of the Hedui, whereas they were before treacherous and disloyal of themselves, did now begin to raise Forces and prepare for open War. Labienus upon to great a change of things, understood that it was necessary for him to take another manner of course than was before intended. For now he thought not of roan was sejore intenaed. For now ne thought not of making any Conqueft, or urging the Enemy to Battel, but to bring the Army back in Jafety to Agendicum. For on the one fide, the Bellovaci flood ready to Charge him, being a People that had the name for deeds of Arms of all the Nations in Gallia; the other side was kept by Camulogenus with an Army ready in the Field: And last of all, the Legions were kept from their Garrison and their Carriages with a great River that ran between them

OBSERVATION.

He great alteration which the revolt of the 114 that and Hedui made in Gallia, caused Labienus to let dothings and fall his former resolutions, and to shape such a must were such the time course as might best answer the extremity of the Tempest. For he that will attain the end of his defires, or make peace with the affections of his mind, must not think at all times to carry away contentment with the ftrength of his means, or fubdue refiftance with force of Arms, but must be well pleafed to be driven with the Stream, until he meet with a tide of better opportunity: For oftentimes it falleth out, that the opposition of refifting Power is more available than ten Legions commanded by Casar, or what the Roman Empire could add befides, to so great an Army. For there is no quantity fo great, but there may be found a greater; nor none so little, but there may be a less: Which may teach a Man neither to conceit himself in a matchless fingularity, nor to despair of a weak condition. And this is that which is so often recommended to the consideration of discreet Governours, whether they be Magistrates in Peace, or Commanders in War, to put them in mind of the condition of times, and to carry themselves answerable thereunto: Forasmuch as fortunate and happy success, riseth for the most part from such means as have respect to the occurrences of the time, not running always upon one biass, nor failing at all times with a fore-wind; but sometimes to press forward, and fometimes to give back, according as the circumstances of the time shall make way to good

Fabius

Fabius the great Roman thought it no fcorn to ancient Vertue, and to recall the Memory of their Fable the great coman intogen it in control ancient versue, and to stead the vernony of toest be called Coward, or to undergo the displeature fortunate Battelt, and to suppose that Caelar himsof the People of Rome, while he gave place to self was present, under whise leading they had ofthe fury of the Carthaginian, and refused to receive a third overthrow. And thus he altered the course of the Roman warfare according to the time, and overthrew that Enemy by shunning to encounter him, which in a Battel would have hazarded the Conquest of Rome. In like manner Enemy being pierced through and beaten dead down Cn. Sulpitius the Dictator, did imitate this wildom of Fabius against the Gauls, by lingring out the War : Nolens se fortunæ committere adversus hostem (as Livy faith) quem tempus deteriorem indies & locus alienus faceret; Not willing to put the trial to Fortune, when as he dealt with an Enemy, which time and ignorance of the place rendred every day weaker and weaker. And to conclude this point, Cxfar upon the loss which he received at Dyrrachium, Omnem sibi commutandam belli rationem existimavit, thought it his best way to alter same fortune. Such of the Enemy as were left over the whole course of the War, as the Story saith: Which was nothing elfe but varying with the time, and helping a bad Fortune with new directions.

CHAP. XXVII.

Labienus passeth the River Sequana, and fighteth with the Gauls.

Or the avoiding of these great difficulties which came so suddenly upon him, he knew there was no help to be had, but that which the vertue of his mind would afford him:

And therefore calling a Council a little before the Evening, he exhorted them to execute such things as he commanded both with diligence and industry; and so taking the Ships which he had brought from Melodunum, he divided them amongst the Roman Horsemen, and after the first Watch he commanded them to go four miles down the River in silence, and there to attend him. He left five Cohorts, which he thought to be too weak for any Fight, as a Garrison to the Camp, and sent the other five Cohorts of the same Legion about midnight with all the Carriages up the River, commanding them to make a great noise and tumult as they went. He fought out all Barges and Boats, and fent them up the River with much neife and beating of Oars: and a little while after he himself went quietly with three Legions to the place where he had commanded the Ships to abide him. At his coming thither, the Enemies Sceuts which were disposed on all parts of the River, were Suddenly and at unawares Sus prifed by our Men, by reason of a sudden Tempest that did rife in the mean time : and the Army and the Horse were by the diligence of the Roman Knights (to whom he had committed that business) carried over. At the same time a little before day-light, the Enemy had intelligence that there was an extraordinary noise and tumult in the Roman Camp, and a great Troop went up the River, and the beating of Oars was heard that way, and a little below the Soldiers were carried over. Which being known, for a much as they judged that the Legions were carried over in three places, and that they were so perplexed at the revolt of the Hedui, that they fled away; they divided their Forces also into three parts. For a Garrison being left right over-sgainst the Roman Camp, and a small Band fent towards Glossendium, which was to go so far as the Boats went, they carried the rest of their Army to meet Labienus. By the dawning of the day all our Men were carried over, and the Enemy was discovered ranged in Battel. Labienus exborting the Soldiers to bethink themselves of their tentimes overthrown the Enemy; he gave the fign of Battel. Upon the first affault, on the right Wing, where the seventh Legion stood, the Enemy was beaten back and put to flight; in the left Wing, where the twelfth Legion was, the former Ranks of the with the Piles, the rest notwithstanding did stoutly relist, neither did any Man give suspicion of flying. amulogenus the General was present with his Men, and encouraged them to fight, the Victory being uncertain. When the Tribunes of the seventh Legion understood what was done in the left Wing, they shewed the Legion behind on the back of the Enemy, and there began to charge them: and yet none of them forsook his place, but were all inclosed and flain, Camulogenus ending his days by the against the Roman Camps, understanding that the Battel was begun, came to second their Fellows, and Battet was vegum, came to jectome topes recurvey, and took a Hill, but were not able to abide our Conquering, Soldiers; but joyning themselves to the rest that sled, were neither protested by the Woods nor. the Mountains, but were all slain by the Horsemen. This business being ended, Labienus returned to Agendicum, where the Carriages of the whole Army were left: and from thence came to Cæsar with all the Forces.

The First OBSERVATION.

Abienus being to pass the River of Seine, which was strongly guarded by the Gauls, was forced to feek a means out of the vertue of his mind, (as Cafar faith,) and to lay fuch a Project as might amuse the Enemy, and keep him in fuspence what way to take to prevent his passage, until he had effected that which he defired. Which bringeth to our confideration the faying of Epaminondas the Theban, that there is nothing Newffary for more necessary or behoveful for a General, than a Gunral to to understand the purposes of the Enemy. A materianal point so much the more commendable, by how the Enemy. much it is in it felf difficult, and hard to be discovered; for it were hard to understand their fecret deliberations, which for the most part are only known to the General, or to fuch chief Commanders as are near about him, when their very actions which every Man knoweth, and fuch things as are done in the open view of the World, are oftentimes doubtful to an Enemy.

Livy hath a notable Story to this purpose. Semprenius the Roman Conful giving Battel to the Æ-qui, the Fight continued until the Night parted them, not without alteration of Fortune, fometimes the Romans prevailing, and sometimes the Aqui: The Night coming on, both fides being weary and half routed, they forlook their Camps, and for their better fafery took each of them a Hill. The Roman Army divided it felf into two parts: the one part followed the Conful, and the other a Centurion, named Tempanius, a Fellow of great spirit, and had shewed much worth in the Battel. The next morning the Conful without further inquiry, made towards Rome; and so did the Equi withdraw their Army back into their Country: either of them deeming themselves overthrown, and cafting Victory upon each others Shoulders. It happened that Tempanius with that part of the Army that kept with him, inquiring after the Enemy, found him to be overthrown and fled : Whereupon he first went to the Roman Camp and made that good, and then marched to the Camp of the Agui, which he took and rifled, and so returned Victor to Rome.

The morning following the Battel of Agincourt, Montjoy the French Herald coming to enquire for Prisoners, King Henry asked him who had won the Field: To which he answered. That the French had loft it: which was unknown to that worthy Conquerour. Plutarch writeth, that Caffius killed himself upon the like errour, not knowing the fortune of the right Wing of his Army. And therefore it must needs be a commendable matter, to understand the deliberations of an Enemy, when the iffue of a Battel is oftentimes fo

The Second OBSERVATION.

CAmulogenus hath the report in this place of fingular knowledge and experience in matter of War, and being of a great Age he fought as resolutely as the youngest Gallant of them all, which may bring to our confideration the fitteft To first age Age of Life to be wished in a General, for the General. atchieving of noble and worthy Exploits. Wherein we are to confider, that the Youth and former years of a Man's Age, are plentifully stored with hot Blood and nimble Spirits, which quickly appre-hend the conceptions of the mind, and carry them with fuch violence to Execution, that they bereave The Gauls confult of the carriage of that War. the judgment of her Prerogative, and give it no respite to consure them; whereby it cometh to pais, that young Men are for the most part heedless, inconsiderate, rash and resolute, putting more upon hazard than upon good advice.

On the other fide, Old Age is cold in Blood, and not fo quick of Spirit, but being beaten with the Rod of long experience, it learneth to be flow and lingring, full of doubts and confideration, inclining rather to a feminine fear, than to a forward refolution.

felves the best attendants of noble Enterprises: For a hot-spur Gallant may run apace, but not go fure; and what young Man foever is advanced to Command, had need of an old Man's Wit to discharge it. And if Authority did at any time fall into the hands of Youth in the Roman Government, which was very feldom, it was Pra-mium virtutis, non atatis; for his Vertues fake, not his Age. Pompey was extraordinary happy in that behalf, for he attained the furname of Great, because he had deserved the honour of Triumph before his Beard was grown. And yet Sertorius took such advantage at Pompey's Youth, coming against him in Spain, that he faid he would have whipped the young Boy to Rome again with Rods, had not that old Woman (meaning Metellus) come to help him.

Again, where Old Age heapeth doubt upon doubt, and falleth into the danger of unprofitable lingring, Nec ausus oft satis, nec providit, it wanteth boldness to steel the Enterprise, and falleth also short of good Providence, as Tacitus speaketh of F. Valens. Augustus Casar purposing to commend Tiberius his Succeffour with an extraordinary praife, faid he was a Man that never put one thing to be twice consulted of. And it is faid of Marius, that being come to the age of Threescore and five years or thereabouts, he shewed himself very cold and flow in all his Enterprises, forasmuch as Age had mortified his active hear, and killed that ready disposition of body that was wont to be in him. The Romans finding Fabius Maximus to be full of doubts and delay, good to defend but not to offend, and Marcellus of a stirring spirit, neither and so make a temperature fit for a General; whereupon they called Marcellus the Sword, and Fabius the Buckler: wherein Casar of himself was excellent, of whom Suetonius reporteth, Dubium cautior, an audentior: It is uncertain whether he was more wary or daring.

The best state of years then for business, is that which tempereth the heat of Youth with the coldness of Age, and quickneth the slow and dull pro-ceedings of double advice, with the rathness of youthful resolution: and falleth out between the years of five and thirty and five and fifty. Scipio Africanus commanded the Roman Army in Spain at four and twenty years of age, and died at four and fifty. Hannibal was choien General to Afdrubal at fix and twenty years, and poisoned himfelf at threescore and ten. Pompey was slain at nine and fifty, and Cafar at fix and fifty. Marcellus kept his youthful resolution to his old days: For being threefcore years of age, he never longed for any thing more than to fight with Hannibal hand to hand

C H A P. XXVIII.

The revolt of the Hedui being known, the Cafat.

War waxed greater. Ambaffadors were Sent out into all parts, and they laboured to draw the rest of the States to their party, as far as either Favour, Authority, or Money could prevail: Having got the Pledges into their hands which Cæsar had left with them, they terrified fuch as stood doubtful, by threatning to kill them.

The Hedui do desire Vercingetorix to come unto them, and to acquaint them with the course of that Neither of these attributes are simply in them- War; which being yielded unto, they labour to have the chief command transferred upon them. The matter growing unto a Controversie, a General Council of all Gallia was summoned at Bibract. Thicher they repaired in great multitudes: and the matter being put to Voices, they all with one consent made allowance of Vercingetorix for their General. The Men of Rheims, with the Lingones and Treviri, were absent from this Council; the two first continuing their affection to the Roman party: The Treviri were far off, and were annoyed by the Germans; in respect they were absent from that War, and remained neutral. The Hedui were much grieand remained neutral. It is a lection were much grie-wed that they were put by the Principality, they complain of the change of their Fortune, and wished for Caclas's former indulgence; neither yet durst they disjoyn themselves again from the rest, the War being already undertaken; but Eporedorix and Viridomarus, two young Men of great hope, were constrained, though unwilling, to obey Vercingetorix. He commanded Pledges to be delivered by the rest of the States, and appointed a day for that business. He commanded fifteen thousand Hose to be speedily brought together: touch-ing Foot Forces, he would content himself with those which he had; for his purpose was not to wage Battel, but whereas he was very strong in Horse, he made no doubt to keep the Romans from Corn and Forage: Only they must patiently endure to have their Corn spoiled, and their Houses burnt; which particular loss would quickly be recompenced with liberty and perpetual sovereignty. These things being ordered, he commanded ten thousand Foot to be raised by the Hedui and Segusiani bordering upon the Province; and to them he added eight hundred Horse, and sent them quiet with good nor ill fortune, (as Hamibal under the command of Eporedorix his Brother, to truly fail of him) they thought to joyn Marcellus make War against the Allobroges. And on the youthful Courage with Fabius's Fear and Wildom, other fide he caused the Gabali and the nearest

Lib. VII.

Villages of the Arverni to set upon the Helvii, the Rutheni, and the Cardurci, and to depopulate their Country. Notwithstanding by secret Messages he dealt with the Allobroges, whose Minds he thought to be scarce settled from the former War: He promised Money to their Chiefest Men, and to give the Government of all the Roman Province to their State. To answer all these Chances, there were provided but two and twenty Cohorts, which being raised out of the Province, were disposed by L. Casar a Legate to prevent these Mischiefs. The Hedui of their own accord giving Battel to their Borderers, were beaten out of the Field, and were driven into their Towns with the Slaughter of C. Valerius Donotaurus, the Son of Caburus the chief Men of their State, and of many others. The Allobroges having fet many Watches and Garrisons upon the River Rhine, did with great care and diligence defend their Borders. Cafar understanding the Enemy to be stronger in Horse than he himself was, and the passages being Sout that he could not fend either into the Province or into Italy for any Supplies, he sent over the Rhine into Germany, and got Horse from such States as he had quieted the Year before, with fuch light-armed Footmen as were accustomed to fight amongst the Horse. At their Arrival, forasmuch as they were not well fitted with Horse, he mongst the Germans.

OBSER VATION.

Mestofavour

THere are three principal means to draw a State into a Party which of it felf ftandeth neutral, or to win the Minds of Men, when they carry equal or indifferent affections. The sometime lips is by favour or friendlip; the fecond, by Authority; and the third, by Money.

Authority; and the tintu, by avoney.
Friendthip relieth upon former refpects, and the exchange of precedent Courtefies. Authority concludeth from future dangers, and the inconveniences which may follow the refusal. Money doth govern the present occasion, and is more general than either Favour or Authority. The Gauls were not wanting to make their Party good in any of these three perswading Motives: But as Casar saith, Quantum gratia, Au-thoritate, Pecunia valent, ad sollicitandas Civitates nituntur: They follicited the Neighbour States as far as Friendship, Authority, and Money would Wherein as they went about to lay the Stock upon it, so they left themselves but one tryal for the right of their Cause and joyned Issue for all upon the Fortune of that Action: For when they should fee their best possibilities too weak, and their uttermost Endeavours prosit nothing against a mighty prevailing Enemy, the greater their hopes were which they had in the means, the greater would be their despair when such means were fpent; for it is a shrewd thing for Men to be out of means, and not to drive a hope before them.

It is usual upon such main occasions to imploy the chiefest Man in a State, in whom the Soldiers and Cavarillus, who after the revolt of Litavicus may have most affurance, and to accompany him with fuch means as the ftrength of the Common-Weal may afford him: But if their greatest hopes die in his ill success, or wax faint through cold Fortune, the Kingdom receiveth Loss, and the Enemy getteth Advantage, as may appear by the Sequel of this great Preparation.

CHAP. XXIX.

The Cavalry of the Gauls do fet upon the Roman Army, and are beaten, Hile these things were a doing, the Casar. Enemies Forces and the Horsemen that were commanded to be levied in all Gallia, met together, and came out of the Territories of the Arverni. A great number of these being gathered together, as Cæsar marched against the Sequani by the Borders of the Lingones, to the end he might the easier relieve the Province, Vercingetorix fate down about ten Miles from the Romans in three feveral Camps, and calling the Captains and Colonels of Horse to Counsel, he told them that the time of Victory was now come; for the Romans left Gallia, and fled into the Province: Which was sufficient for the obtaining of their present liber-ty, but availed little for the Peace and Quiet of suture time, forasmuch as the Romans did not purpose to make an end of the War, but to return again with greater Forces. And therefore it was necessary to fet upon them in their March laden with Carriages. If the Foot did affift their Horse, then they were not able to make any way or proceed in their Journey. But if (which he hoped would rather happen) fortook the Horses from the Tribunes, the Roman sking their Carriages every Man skifts of himself, Knights, and the Evocati, and distributed them aof their honour : For they need not doubt of the Encmies Horse, of whom he was most assured that they durst not go out from amongst the Foot Forces. And to the end they might be the better encouraged, he would draw all the Forces in a readiness out of the Camp, and place them so as they might be a Terror to the Enemy. The Horsemen cried out all together, that this refolution might be streng-thened with an Holy Oath: Let him never be received under any Roof, or have access to his Wife, Children, or Parents, that did not twice run through the Army of the Enemy. The thing being well liked of, and every Man forced to take that Oath, the next Day he divided his Cavalry into three parts: Two Armies shewed themselves on each side, and the third began to make stay on the Van. Which being known, Casar divided his Horses likewise into three Parts, and fent them to make head against the Enemy. At the same time they fought gainst one thums. At the jum time to jugger in all Parts, the Army flood fill, the Carriages were received within the Legions: If our Men were overcharged any where, Cæsar tens the Legions that way, which did both hinder the Enemy from following them, and affure our Men of hope of rescue. At length the Germans having possess them-selves of a Hill on the right side, did put the Enemy from their place and followed them as they fled even to the River where Vercingetorix stayed with the Foet Companies and slew many of them. Whereupon the rest fearing lest they should be encompassed about betook themselves to flight: Execution was done in all places. Three, of the Nobility of the Hedui were taken and brought to Cæsar: Corus the Gencral of the Horse, who at the last Election of the Magistrates flood in Controversie with Convictolitanis; commanded the Foot Troops; and Eporedorix, under whose command, before Carlar's coming into Gallia, the Hedui made war with the Sequani. All the Cavalry being put to flight, Vercingetorix drew in his Forces which he had embattelled before his Camp and, immediately after began to march towards Alesia a Town of the Mandubii, commanding the Baggage to be speedily brought out of the Camp and to follow him. Cæsar having conveyed his Carriages to the next Hill, under the Custody of two Legions, he followed the Enemy as long as the day would give bim leave: And having slain some three thousand of the Rere, the next day following he encamped at Alefia.

OBSERVATION.

Washerthe

The Gauls were much stronger than the Romans in Cavalry, both according to quantity fantry be of and quality: But the Roman Infantry was greater in Vertue and Worth than any Foot Forces sance and sele of the Gauls, notwithstanding their inequality in number. Which sheweth that the Romans did more rely upon their Legionary Soldiers, than upon their Equites: And may serve for an argument in the handling of that question, which is for much debated amongst Men of War, whether the Horse or the Foot Companies be of greater importance in the Carriage of a War. Which indeed is a question à male divisis : Being both' so necessary for the perfect execution of Martial Purposes, as they cannot well be disjoined. And if we look particularly in the nature of their feveral fervices, we shall easily discern the differences. and be able to judge of the Validity of their parts.

Wherein first it cannot be denied, but that Foot Companies are ferviceable to more purposes than Troops of Horse: For the Horsemen are of no use, but in open and Champaign Places; whereas Footmen are not only of importance in Champaign Countries, but are necessary also in mountainous or Woody places, in Vallies, in Ditches, in Sieges, and in all other parts of what fite or nature foever, where the Horsemen cannot shew themfelves. Whereby it appeareth that the Infantry extendeth its fervice to more purposes than the Cavalry, and maketh the War compleat, which otherwise would prove lame and uneffectual.

froke in a day part upon the Foot Troops: Eor the Horfemen are profitable to the Army wherein they ferve, by ma-Formen. The king discoveries, by haraffing the Enemies Country, by giving fuccour or rescue upon a suddain, by doing execution upon an overthrow, and by confronting the Enemies Horse; but these are but as second services, and fall short of the main Stroke, which for the most part is given by the Footmen. Neither doth a rout given to the Cavalry ferving an Army royal, concern the Body of that Army further than the services before mentioned; but the Army doth oftentimes go on notwithstanding, and may well atchieve a happy Victory: Whereas upon the overthrow of the infantry, the Horsemen have nothing to do, but to shift for themselves, and get away to their own home. So that it appeareth that the Foot Companies are the Bulk and Body of the Army, and the Horse as the Arms and outward parts, having expedient and necessary offices, but always subordinate to the main stroke given by the Foot.

If any Man look for proof hereof by example, he shall not need to seek further than the Romans. being Masters of the Art Military, who by an an-The Distance Cient Law interdicting the Dictator to have the forbidden the use of a Horse in the Wars for his private ease, use fating intimated, as Plutarch saith, the strength of their Army to confift in their Footmen, which the General in a day of Battel should affift with his pretence, and in no wife forfake them if he would. But touching the use of War amongst them, their Equites were so far short of the service performed by their Foot Troops, that when they would fland to it indeed, they forfook their Horfes and fought on foot: As in the Battel with the Latines at the Lake Regillus, which I have already mentioned in my former Observations. Neither were the Romans good Horsemen, as it seemeth by Casar: For he took the Horses from the Tribunes and the Roman Equites, and gave them to the Germans, as better Riders than any Romans. But howsoever a State that aboundeth in Horse, and trusteth more in them than in Foot Companies, may harrass a Champaign Countrey, but shall never be able to follow a War with that strength, as is requisite to make it fortunate.

CHAP. XXX.

Cafar befiegeth Alefia, and fighteth with the Ene-

Æsar having viewed the fituation of the Cæsar. Town, and knowing the Enemy to be much troubled for the overthrow of their Horse, in whom they put all their hopes, exhorting the Soldiers to take a little pains, he determined to inclose the Town round about with a Ditch and a rampier. Alesia was seated on the top of a Hill in a very eminent place, and not to be taken but by a continued Siege. At the foot of the Hill ran two Rivers on each fide of the Town: Before the Town there lay a Plain of three Miles in length: The other sides were enclosed round about in a reasonable distance with Hills of equal height with the Town. Under the Wall on the East side lay all the Forces of the Gauls, having drawn a Ditch and a dry Wall on that part of eight Foot in height: The whole Circuit of the Works which the Romans made to enclose the Town about, contained eleven Miles. Their Camp was feated in a convenient place, where there were made three and twenty Castles, which in the day time were kept by Garrisons, to prevent any Touching the weight of the business when it sudden attempts of the Enemy, and in the night by cometh to a day of Battel, it resteth for the most strong Watches. The Work being begun, there happened a Skirmisk between the Cavalry of both sides in pened a Setring's oesween the Cavally of work flues in that plain which lay before the Town of three Miles in length. They fought eagerly on both fides. Our Men being overcharged, Cactar fent the Germans to second them, and set the Legions before the Camp, lest there might happen any sudden Sally by the foot of the Enemy. Upon the Safegard of the Legions our Men took Courage. The Enemy was put to flight and being many in number one hindered another, and fluck in heaps in the streight passage of their Gates. The Germans followed them close to their Fortifications and made a great execution amongst them. Many of them for aking their Horses attempted to leap the Ditch, and to climb over the dry Wall. Casar commanded the Legions drawn before the Camp to advance a little forward. The Gauls that were within the Fortification were no little troubled : For thinking the Enemy would pre-Sently have come unto them, they made an Alarm: Some were so frighted that they brake into the Town. Vercingetorix commanded the Gates to be shut, lest the Camp should be left naked of Defendants. Many of the Enemy being stain, and very many Horses taken, the Germans fell off and returned to Cæsar.

OBSER VAION.

Forasmuch as casualty and chance have often- One event in times the Prerogative of a Service, and in me i entime middenning opinions do carry away the Honour for the approximation of the carry from Vertue and Valour: The first Trial of a for- are stone in tune is not of that affurance, nor so much to be sended as the carry of the carr trufted, as when it is seconded again with the like another of the effect: For when a matter by often trial falleth out to be of one and the fame quality, it sheweth as where before they fware the overthrow of the Romans, they were now content to take the protection of a ftrong Town: But this fecond foil which they received, did so assure them of a harder refiftance and ftronger opposition than they were able to bear, that they never thought of any further trial, but were content to go away losers, rather than to hazard their Lives in a third Combate. And thus, when a fecond event backeth a lofer desperate. Pompey was so transported with joy for the blow which he gave Cafar at Dyrrachium, that he fent Letters of that days Victory fo fecure touching the iffue of that War, Ut non de ratione belli cogitarent, sed vicisse jam sibi viderentur, that they never thought how the War was to be carried on, esteeming themselves already absolute Victors: Not remembring, as Cafar faith, the ordinary changes of War; wherein oftentimes a small matter, either of a false fuspicion, or of a sudden fright, or some other accident, doth indanger an Army, which the Enemy

CHAP. XXXI. Vercingetorix fendeth away the Horse: Cafar incloseth Alefia with a strong Wall.

Ercingetorix thought it best to dismiss all the Horse, and send them away in the Night, before the Fortifications were perfected by the Romans. At their departure he commanded them, that every Man should repair unto his own State, and send all to the War that were able to bear Arms. He layeth open his deferts towards them, and doth adjure them to have regard to his Safety, and not to Suffer him to be delivered over to the torture of the Enemy, that had so well deferved of the common liberty; wherein if they should prove negligent, fourscore thousand chosen Men would perish with him in that place. And looking into their Provisions, he found that they had Corn fcarce for thirty days, but by sparing and good husbandry it might be made to serve longer. With these Mandates he sent out the Horsemen in silence about the second Watch of the Night, at that part of the Town where the works were not perfected: he commanded all the Corn to be brought unto him upon pain of death. The Cattel he distributed to the Soldiers by Pole, whereof there was great store brought out from the Mandubii: The Corn he began to measure out very sparingly. All the Forces which he had placed before the Town, he received within the Walls; and so he purposed to attend the supplies of Gallia. Which being known by the Runaways and Captives, Cæsar appointed to make these Fortifications. He drew a Ditch of twenty foot in breadth and depth, with streight sides, as broad at the bottom as at the top. The rest of the work he made forty foot short of that Ditch, which he did for these reasons; that the whole body of the Romans might not easily be inclosed about with an Army of Soldiers, which he thought to prevent by taking in so great a circuit of Ground; and se-condly, lest the Enemy sallying out upon a sudden, should in the Night come to destroy the works, or a certainty of a cause, producing ends of like casting Weapons as they were bused about the works. condition. The Gauls (as it seemeth) were much This space of fort, that being left, he made two discouraged upon the first overthrow of their Ditches of figuren foot in breadth and depth, the Horse, in whom they so much believed, and alinnermost whe reof being carried through the Fields tered the course of their high resolutions so far, and the lower ground, he filled with Water drawn out of the River. Behind them he made a Ditch and a Rampier of twelve foot, and strengthened it with a Parape t and Pinacles, and with great boughs of Trees cut in Cags like unto a Harts-born, which he let w, here the Hovels were joyned to the Rampier, to his der the Enemy from climbing up; and made Towe rs round about the whole work, in the distance of j courscore foot one from another. At the same time t he Roman Soldiers were both to Our Forces bein g much weakened, and being to feek Corn and J. buff far off from the Camp; the Gauls also ofter times attempting to destroy the into all parts of the World, and made his Soldiers works, and to fa: 'y out of the Town at divers Ports: Therefore Casar thought it fit to add thus much more to the fore faid works, that the fortifications might be made good with the less number of Men. He made Ditches round about the works of five foot deep , and in them he planted either the bodies of Tr. ecs, or great firm boughs sharpened into many 1 likes and Snags, being bound together at the bouttom, that they might not be eafily plucked up, and spreading themselves at the top into very sharp Cags. There were of these sive taketh to himself, perinde ac si virtute vicissent, as if he had overcome by his Valour. Ranks, so comb ined and infolded one in another. that which way foever the Enemy should enter upon them, he wo uld necessarily run himself upon a Sharp Stake; the efe they called Cippi. Before these, in oblique cours es, after the manner of a quin-cunce, were dis ged holes of three foot deep, nar-row at the bott om like a Sugar-loaf: These they set with round Stakes of the bigness of a Man's Thigh, with a Skarp hardened point, in such fort that they stuck not above four fingers out of the Earth; and fo the better fastening of them, they fluck all a foot within the ground: the rest of the hole for the bett er ordering of the matter was hid with Osers and sma ill Twigs. Of these were eight courses three foot distant one from another: and these they called Lilies, from the resemblance they had to the figure of that flower. Before these were Galthrops of a foot lor g, fustened in the Earth, and headed at the top v with barbed Hooks of Iron, sowed up and down in all places in a reasonable distance one from a mother: and thefe they called Stimuli. The inner fortications being thus perfected, he followed the even and level ground as much as the nature of the place would give him leave, and took in fourteen miles in circuit, and made the like fortification is in all points against the Enemy wiel-out, as he had done against the Town; to the end that if be were driven upon occasion to depart and leave the works, it might be no danger for him to leave: the Camp; forasmuch as a few Men would defend it. He commanded every Man to have F grage and Provision of Corn for thirty days. The First OBSERVATION.

COMMENTARIES.

Prc miled in my former Observation to speak I for newhat touching the Roman works, and to thew the use they made of them in their greatest occas ions: But this description of the works at Alesi, t. doth so far exceed the inlargement of comment ing words, that it hath drowned the Eloquer ice of great Historians, and instead of Expofitio ns and Inforcements, hath drawn from them Spe eches expressing greater admiration than belief.
Circa Alesiam (saith Paterculus) tanta res gesta, quantas audere vix hominis, perficere nullius nifi in the day-time trouble the Soldiers with Darts and Dei fuerit : So great things were done at Alefia, for more Ser-

Hallman

The main use of Horse-miftaken. Poliorceti-

Pletarch is the Life of Marius.

a Town with a Ditch and a Rampier of eleven miles in circuit, was a matter worthy the Roman Army: But to add fuch variety of works, and to make fuch strange Traps and oppositions against an Enemy, was admirable to the hearer; and not that only, but to make the like works without. to keep the Gails from raifing the fiege, did double the wonder: By which works he did befiege and was befieged, took the Town and overthrew the Enemy in the Field.

Such as fince that time have imitated this induftry only by a fmall Ditch and a Rampier (for wrought wonders in matter of War. Castruccio got the name of renewing the ancient Military Discipline in Italy, chiefly for that he besieged Piftoia, and with the help of a double Trench, according to the example of Cafar, he kept in the Piftoians on the one fide, and kept out an Army on the other fide of thirty thouland Foot and three thousand Horse, in such manner as in the end he took the City and made their fuccours of no effect. The States Army of the United Provinces under the leading of Grave Maurice, did the like at the Town of Grave in the year 1602. But of this at Alefia may well be faid that which Livy speaketh of the Battel at Nola: Ingens eo die res, ac nescio an maxima illo bello gesta sit: A great piece of service was done that day, and I think I may call it the greatest in that whole War

The Second OBSERVATION.

T is here delivered, that the outward circuit of the works contained fourteen miles, and the circuit of the inward works eleven miles: Jastus Lipsius upon which ground Justus Lipsius maketh an unjust conjecture of the space between the outward con, Lib. 2. and the inward works where the Romans lay incamped. For according to the proportion between the circumference and the diameter, he maketh the diameter of the greater Circle four, and of the leffer three miles: And then he taketh the leffer diameter out of the greater, and concludeth the space to be almost a mile between the inner and the outward Rampier, where the Romans lav incamped between the works: And left the matter might be miftaken in Cyphers, he doth express it at large in fignificant words, whereby he maketh the space twice as much as indeed it was. For the two Circles having one and the fame center, the semi-diameter of the one was to be taken out of the femi-diameter of the other, and the remainder would amount almost to half a mile; which according to the ground here delivered. was the true diftance between the works, if the nature of the place (whereunto they had a respect) would fuffer them to keep the fame diftance in all parts. But aliquando bonus dormitat Homerus, Homer himself is out sometimes; and no disgrace neither to the excellency of his Learning, deferving all Honour for the great light which he hath brought to the knowledge of Hiftories, and for redeeming the truth from blots and Barbarism.

CHAP. XXXII.

The Gauls raise an Army of 248000, to raise the fiege at Alefia.

7 Hile these things were a doing at Alesia, the Gauls having summoned a Council of the Princes and chiefest Men of each State, they thought it not convenient to take all that were able to bear Arms, according to Vercingetorix's di-that they might seem too great for any Man to rection; but to proportion out a certain number for attempt, or any but a God to effect. To inclose every State; less that of such a consuled multitude there would be no Government, being not able to know their Soldiers, or to Martial them in any good order, or to make provision of Victual for so great a body. The Hedui and their Vassals, the Segusiani, Ambivareti, Aulerci, Brannovices, and Brannovii, were commanded to fend out 35000: The Arverni with their Vaffals, the Heleuteri, Cadurci, Gaballi, Velauni, as many: The Senones, Sequani, Biruriges, Santones, Rutheni, Carnutes, 12000: The Bellovaci, 10000: The Lemovices as many: The Pictones, Turones, Parifii, Heleuteri, Sueffiones. 8000: The Ambiani, Mediomatrices, Petrocorii, Nervii, Mo-I think no Man ever made fach works) have rini, Nitiobriges, 5000: The Aulerei Cenomani. as many: The Atrobates, 4000: The Bellocaffi Lexovii, Aulerci Eburones, 3000: The Rauraci and Boii 30000: The States bordering upon the Ocean, whom by the custom of Gallia they call Aremoricæ. fuch as are the Curiofolites, Rhedones. Ambibarri, Cadetes, Ofilmii, Lemovices, Veneti Unelli, 6000. Of these the Bellovaci resused to give their number, saying, that they would make War with the Romans in their own name, and according to their own directions, neither would they Serve under any Man's command. Notwithstanding being intreated by Comius, for his sake they sens two thousand. Cæsar, as we have heretofore delivered, had used the help of this Comius the Years hefore in Britain, being both faithful and serviceable: In recompence of which service he had freed his State of all duties to the Roman Empire, and refored unto them their ancient Laws and Customs; and to himself he had given the Morini. Notwithstanding such was the universal consent of all Gallia, to redeem their Liberty and their ancient Honour in matter of War, as neither friendship, nor the memory of former benefits could any way move them, every Man intending that War as far as either the power of his mind or the possibility of bis means would reach unto: And having drawn together eight thousand Horse, and two hundred and forty thousand Foot, they mustered their Forces in the confines of the Hedui, where they appointed Captains; and the chief Command was given to Comius of Arras, and to Viridomarus and Eporedorix, Hedui, and to Vergasilaunus of the Arverni, Cousin-germain to Vercingetorix. To these there were certain chosen out of every State to give affiftance in Council of War: and all of them went jocundly and full of hope to Alefia. Nei-ther was there any Man that did think, that the very fight of such a multitude was able to be endured, especially when the Fight would grow doubtful by sallies made out of the Town, and so great Forces of Horse and Foot skould be seen

OBSERVATION.

[7 Ercingetorix's defire was to have had as many of the Gauls fent to his Rescue as were able to bear Arms, grounding himself upon that Maxim; Where the whole State is in question, there the whole Forces of that State are to be employed. But the other Princes of Gallia thought it not expedient to raise so great a number: For they would have accrewed to such a multitude of People, as could not have been contained within the rules of Government: which may bring to our confideration that which the course of these times doth not often bring into dispute: What number of Men well martialled and with good What number discipline, are a competent proportion for any of men are a fervice. Xerxes's Army which he carried into portion for any Greece, was famous for two respects: First, in service.

regard of the multitude, which was so great, that perpetual Bondage. Do you doubt of their Faith and when he himself returned back into Asia, he left Confiancy, because they came not by a day! What do with the loss of one thousand and three hundred Gracians. Whereby it appeareth, That the Consueft of a Kingdom doth not necessarily follow the multitude of Soldiers in an Army; for either Xerxes's Army was too few in number to Conquer Greece, or too many to be well Martialled.

COMMENTARIES.

Marius, with Fifty Thousand Men, defeated the Cimbri that were fo many in number, as they made a Battel of Thirty Furlong square, and of them he flew an Hundred and Twenty Thousand. and took Threefcore Thousand Prisoners. And for that I do remember of that which I have read, the greatest Conquests that ever were made, were atchieved with Armies under Fifty Thousand Fighting Men. The great Alexander subdued all Ajia, and brought the Monarchy from the Persian into Greece with Thirty Thousand Men.

The Romans had very feldom Ten Legions in an Army, which was about that rate, but commonly their Conquering Armies were far under Househing that proportion. Paulis Empirics only and the Isle of Hundred Thouland in his Army against Perseus, Paulis Emp and won the Battel in an hour. The condition that proportion. Paulus Æmylius only had an of our Times requireth no dispute touching this point, for we feldom fee an Army of Fifty Thoufand Men in the Field, unless it be the Turk, or fome fuch Monarch.

CHAP. XXXIII.

keeping of the Town.

Hey that were Besieged in Alesia, the day being past by which they looked for Suc-cour, their Corn being spent, and not knowing what was done abroad, entred into Consultations touching the end of their Fortune; and divers Opinions being delivered, some of them tending to the yielding up of the Tewn, and others personading that as long as strength lasted there might be Sallies continually made upon the Enemy : I will not omit the Speech of Critognatus, for the Singular and wicked Cruelty which it imported. He was a Man of great Birth and Authority amongst the Arvetni. I will say nothing (saith he) of their Opinion, that call hase Servitude by the name of Surrender: Neither do I think them fit to be accounted Citizens, or to be admitted to Council of State. With them will I deal that like well of Sallies, in whose Advice and Counsel, even by all your Consents, the Memory of ancient Vertue Seemeth to confift. It is no Vertue, but a weakness of the Mind, not to be able to bear Want a little while. It is an easier matter to find Men that will offer themselves willingly to Death, than such as will endure Labour with patience. For mine own part, I could like well of that Opinion, (for Henour much prevaileth with me;) if I did not fee a further loss than of our Lives. But in these cur Consultations, let us look upon all Gallia, whom we have called together to succour us. What Spirits do you think upon pain of Death, should once speak of a Treaty, would our Friends and Kinfmen conceive, Fourfcore Thousand Men being Slain in one place, if they were constrained to wage Battel upon their dead Carcasses? I would not have you to defraud them of your help. that do neglect all peril for your fake; nor by your Foolifeness, and your Rashness, or the weakness of your Mind, throw down all Gallia, and cast it into behind him three hundred thousand of the best the Romans then mean in these outward Works? Soldiers chosen out of the whole Army, under Do you think they make them for exercise, or to pass Soldiers chosen out of the whole Army, under the conduct of one Mardonius. Secondly, that was the time? If you cannot then receive affect of so many Fighting-men, there were two hundred and threefcore thousand slain in one Battel, use them for Witnesses, at passes being stope, affect and threefcore thousand slain in one Battel, use them for Witnesses, that their coming it at hand, for fear whereof they labour night and day. What then? my Advice is that we do, as our Forefathers did in a War against the Cimbri and Teutones, not equal to this, who being fout up within their Towns, and brought to the like necessity, did fatisfie their Hunger with the Bodies of such as were found unfit for War, neither did they yield themselves unto the Enemy : Whercof, if we had not an Example, yet I would judge it an excellent thing to be begun now for Liberties sake, and to be left to Po-Sterity. For, What War was like this? Gallia being wasted and dispeopled, and the Kingdom brought into great Mifery, the Cimbri at length forfook our Country, and Sought out other Territories, and left unto us our Laws, Customs, Lands, and Liberty. For the Romans, What is it they defire? Or, What would they have! But being drawn on with Malice and Envy, whom they understood to be a Noble and a Warlike Nation, their Fields and Cities they did defire to take from them, and to Toke them with eternal Bondage; as never making War with other Condition. For if you be ignorant what they do far off in other Countries, look at home in that part of Gallia which is reduced into a Province. Their Laws and Customs being changed, it is subjected to the Axe and to perpetual Servitude. Their Opinions being delivered, they decree, that such as through Age or Sickness were unfit for War, should depart the Town; and that they should prove all means, before they yielded to Critognatus's Opinion: And Critognatus his Speech at Alesia, touching the yet if the matter so required, to consent unto it, and to attend their Succours, rather than to yield to any Surrender and Condition of Peace,

OBSERVATION.

T is oftentimes made questionable in the extre- How long as mity of a Siege, how far the Commanders Comm may go in continuing their refiftence to the dan- in a Sign. ger and hazard of the People Belieged, whether they may not in Honour proceed as far as Critognatus's Opinion would draw them: Or how they may know when to leave it, in the very point of discreet and valiant Carriage. Which is to be answered according to the quality of the Enemy that giveth Siege to the place. For against a Treacherous and Disloyal Enemy, that maketh profession of Insidelity, and would not stick after a Composition to ensnare them in a greater danger than the peril of Death, there would be much endured rather than to undergo so hard a Fortune. And yet I do no way approve the cruel Refolution of this Gaul, but do rather commend the Example of the Hungarians at the Siege of Agria. Agria. For in the Year 1562. Mahomet Bassa lay before that Town with an Army of Threescore Thoufand Turks, and laid Battery to it with fifty Canons. There were within the Town Two Thoufand Hungarians, who endured and put off Thirteen most terrible Assaults of the knemy: And for the better strengthning of their high Rcfolution, they took a mutual Oath, that no Man. or of giving up the Town, or to make any Aniwer to the Enemy, but by the Harquebuss or the Cannon: And if the Siege should happen to continue long, rather to die for Hunger, than to put themselves in the hands of so cruel and barbarous an Enemy. They determined further, That fuch amongst them as were not serviceable inforce the Rampier and repair the Ruines. And to avoid Treachery, they took Order that there might be no Affemblies in the City above the number of Three together. They Commanded likewise that all the Victual as was either publick or private: should be divided into equal Portions amongst the Soldiers, and the best of it should be referved for fuch as were hurt in Fight. It is further reported, That the Bassa having often-times offered a Treaty, they only shewed for an answer to his Summons a Funeral Bier covered with black, lifted up above the Wall between two Pikes, to fignifie thereby that they would not come out but by Death.

As this is a degree short of Critognatus's Resolution, fo I do not deny but that a General may give up a Town before he come to these Terms with true Honour and Wifdom. But the matter (as I have faid) confifteth altogether upon the circumstances interlaced. But that which is further to be observed in this place, is the extream contrariety of Opinions, which are usually delivered upon dispute of such difficult cases, wherein Quantum alteri sententia deest animi, tantum alteri Superesse Solet; one Man's Opinion speaks too much Courage, and anothers as much too little: As Curio faid upon the like occasion. Medio tutissimus ibis. -- The middle is the safest way, was Phabus's direction to his Son Phaeton in a matter of difficulty and great hazard, and observed in this place by the Gauls.

CHAP. XXXIV.

The Gauls do fet upon Cafar's Camp, both from the Town and the Field fide.

He Mandubii, who had received the Army into the Town, were themselves thrust out with their Wives and Children. They coming to the Roman Works, did with Weeping Tears befeech them to receive them into Bondage, and relieve them with Food. Cafar gave Order they should not be received, and set a guard on the Rampier to keep them out. In the mean time Comius, and the rest of the Captains, that had the chief Command given them, came to Alefia with all their Forces, and having taken a Hill on the outfide, they fate down not above half a Mile from our Works. The next day bringing their Cavalry out of their Camp, they filled all that Plain, which, as I bave already faid, extended Three Miles in length before the Town, fetting their Foot Forces a little distant from that place, and hiding them upon higher Ground. The prospect lay open out of the Town into the Field: And upon the fight of these Succours they ran together, and Congratulated each other, and all their Minds were filled with Gladness. And thereupon the next day they brought their Forces and placed them before the Town, and began to cover the next Ditch upon them with Hurdles, and to fill it up with Earth, and to provide themselves to Sally out, and to endure all Chances. Cæsar having dispojed of all his Army on each fide of the Works, that if there were occasion, every Man might both know and keep his place, he Commanded the Cavalry to be carried out of the Camp, and to Charge the Encmy. There was a fair view out of all the Camps, which were seated round about upon the ridge of the and light-armed Soldiers, which might relieve their Fellows, being over-charged, and fuftain the Force with a Weapon, should attend continually to re- and Assault of our Horse. By these were many hurt upon a suddain, and for sook the Fight. The Gauls being perswaded that their Men had the better of the Fight, perceiving our Men to be overcharged with multitudes on all sides, as well those that were Befieged, as the other that came to relieve them, they took up a shout, and a howling to encourage their People. And forasmuch as the matter was carried in the fight of all Men, fo that nothing could be hid. whether it were well or ill done; the defire of Honour and the fear of Ignominy did ftir up both fides to Promess and Valour. And baving Fought with a doubtful Fortune from Noon-tide until almost Sunfetting; the Germans on the one fide with thickthronged Troops, gave a fierce Charge upon the Enemy, and put them to flight: Whereby it happened that the Archers were circumvented and flain. In like manner on the other fide, our Men Inding them to give ground, did follow them even to meir Camps, and gave them no time to recover themselves. Such as were come out of Alefia, returned back fad into the Town, despairing of Victory. One day being inthe I own, defpairing of victory. One day vering in-termitted, in which time they made provision of great fore of Hurdles, Ladders, and Hooks, about Mid-night they marched filently out of their Camp, and came to the Works on the Field fide; and taking up a fuddain Shout, to give notice of their coming, to them of the Town, they cast their thrustes upon the Ditches, and with Slings, Arrows, and Stones, they began to put our Men from the Rampier, and to put in practice fuch things as belong to a Siege. As the same time the shout being heard, Vercingetorix sounded the Trumpet, and brought his Men out of the Town. Our Men betook themselves to the Fortithe Town. Our Men betook thempieves to the texts-fications, according as every Man's place was adlosted him the day before; and with Slings and Bullets which they had laid ready upon the Works, they did betat down the Gauls, their light being taken away through the darkness of the Night. Many Wounds were received on both sides, and many Weapons were cast out of Engines. M. Antonius and C. Trebonius, Legates, who had the Charge of those Parts where our Men were most laid to, caused Men to be taken out of the further Castles, and to be brought to second them. The Gauls being a good way distant from the Works, did much burt with multitudes of Weapons: But approaching nearer, either they struck themselves unwittingly upon the Galthrops, or falling into the Holes, were struck through the Bodies with the sharp Stakes, or died with mural Piles, being caff from the Rampier and the Towers. Many Wounds being received on all fides, as the day appeared, the Gauls fearing left they flould be Charged on the open fide by a Sally from the upper Camp, retired back again to their Fellows. On the inner fide, whilft they brought out fuch things as were pre-pared beforehand by Vercingetorix, and were filling up the first Ditches, being somewhat long in the Execution of these things, they understood that the other Gauls were departed before they themselves could come near the Works: And thereupon they returned into the Town without doing any thing.

OBSERVATION.

The Gauls committed the Command of this one Army great Army to four Generals, contrary to rould have practice of Warlike Nations, and the order which one General: Nature observeth throughout all the several Kinds of Creatures: Amongst whom there was never Body found of many Heads, but one Hydra, being made, as it feemeth, or rather feigned to be made, to the end that Hercules might have a task answerable to himself, and make it one of task answerable to himleit, and thake it one of Er gents in his twelve Labours to kill the Beaft. The Scrpent geninum e-amphishena is said to have two Heads, whereby you Amphishena the either loseth the use of local Motion, or at towards Noon, he made towards that pare of the heaft moveth so imperfectly, one Head taking Camp which I have before mentioned: And at the one way and the other another way, as there is no certain or direct paffage in her creeping.

These many-headed Armies do resemble these Serpents, being carried according to the fence of their feveral Heads, and diffracted by the diverfity of their many Leaders. The Government of Rome confifting of feveral Magistrates, having fovereign Authority, gave occasion oftentimes to make two Heads to one Body, but with fuch Succefs, as they were forced in the end to create one Head for the repairing of that Loss, which the multiplicity of Leaders had brought upon their State; as it happened in the War against the Fidenates Revolted, which nothing but their Recourse to a Dictator could make happy to their Empire. Whereupon Livy faith; Tres Tribuni, petestate confulari, documento juere quam plurium imperium Bello inutile esset; Tentando ad sua quisque consilia, cum alis aliud videretur, aperuerunt ad occasionem locum hosti: The Three Tribunes with consular Power, clearly shewed how inconvenient a thing it is to have more than one Commander in Chief: For while every one adheres to his own Advice and Judgment, one Man thinking this thing convenient, another that, they open a way to the Enemy to make advantage against them. In the time of their Confuls, Quintius and Agrippa being fent against the £qui, A-grippa, referred the business wholly to his Colleague, concluding, as Livy saith: Saluberrimum in administratione magnarum rerum est summum imperii ad unum esse; It is the safest way in the managing of great Affairs to have one Man bear the chief fway. And therefore, as one Body requireth but one Head, so one business would have but one Director, forasmuch as Æmulatio inter pares, & ex eo impedimentum ; Emulation, and confequently hindrance will be amongst Equals.

Same time the Horsemen began to approach towards the Works, and the rest of the Forces shewed themfelves before the Camp. Vercingetorix perceiving the out of the Watch-Tower of Alelia, went out of the Town, and carried with him long Poles, Hooks, and such other Provisions which he had made ready before-hand for a Salley. They fought at one instant in all places, all ways were tryed: And where they thought it to be weakest, thither they ran. The Roman Forces were dismembred by reason of the large extention of their Works, so that they could not easily defend many places: And the shout which was made behind their Backs, did much affright our Men, for a fruch as they perceived that their danger did consist in other Mens Valour; for such things as are absent do for the most part greatly perplex and trouble Mens Minds. Castar having got a convenient place, doth see what is done in every part: If any were overcharged he sent them succour, and was ready to answer all occasions on both sides the Camp. He told them, that that was the time, wherein it he tota them, total total was the time, wherein we was beloveful for them to Fight. The Gauls would despair of all good success, unless they brake down the Works. The Romans, if they obtained their purpose, might expett an end of their Labours. The greatest Contention was about that place to which Vergasilaunus was sent. A small rising in a place doth give much advantage in a shelving descent. Some cast Weapons, others put themselves into a Testudo, and came under the Works. The wearied and over-laboured were seconded by fresh Supplies. Every Man cast Earth into the Works, which raised it so high, that the Gauls had advantage of ascent: And the Pikes and sharp Stakes which the Romans had cunningly hid under the Earth to annoy the Enemy, were thereby covered. It came at last to that pass, that our Men wanted both Strength and Weapons. Which being known, Cæsar Jent Labienus pons. Protes vering Rowm, Cattai Jess Laurenius with fix Coborts to Relieve thofe that were over-charged, Commanding birm (if he could not bear out the Charge) to Sally out upon them, but not unlefs he were confiratined unto it. He bimfelf went about to the rest, exhorting them not to faint under their Labour, for asmuch as the fruit and benefit of all their former Battels confifted in that day and that hour. The Enemy within being out of hope of doing any good upon the Works made in plain and Champaign Places, by reason of the Strength of the Fortifications, tried what they could do in steep and broken places; and thither they brought those things which they had prepared. With the multitude of their casting Weapons, they cast out such as fought from Turrets, they filled their passages with Hurdles and Earth, they brake down the Parapet and the Rampier with Hooks. Cælar fent first young Brutus with fix Cohorts, and after him Fabius a Legate with seven more; and at length as the Fight waxed bot, he went himself with a fresh supply. The Fight being renewed and the Enemy beaten off, he hasted to that place whither he had sent Labienus, and took four Cohorts out of the next Caftle. Part of the Horsemen he commanded to follow him, and the rest to compass about the outward Works, and to set upon the Enemy behind. Labienus finding that neither Rampier nor Ditches were able to keep out the Enemy, having got such Forces together as were drawn by chance from the Works nearest hand, to the number of thirty nine Cohorts, be acquainted Czesar by Messengers what he thought fit to be done. Cæfar made haste to be at the Fight. His coming being known by the colour of his Garment, which he was accustomed to wear in time of Battel, and the Troops of Horfe and the Cohorts be-

CHAP. XXXV.

The Gauls do choose out Sixty Thousand of their best Men, and do Assault the weakest part of Cæfar's Camp.

He Gauls being Repelled twice with great loss, do fall into consideration what they were next to do. They call unto them such as were well acquainted with the nature and situation of the place, by whom they understand of the situation of the upper Camp. On the North fide there lay a Hill, which, by reason of the greatness of the Circuit, our Men could not take in within the compass of their Works: And thereupon were necessarily constrained to lay their Camp in an unequal place somewhat shelving. This part was kept by Caius Antistius Rheginus, and Caius Caninius Rebilus with two Legions. This being known by the Scouts, the Captains of the Enemy chofe out Sixty Thousand of those States which carried the greatest Opinion of Manhood, and did secretly determine amongst themselves, how and in what sort they would have the Service carried, and do determine to put it in execution, when the Sun should be near about the Noon Meridian, appointing Vergafilaunus to Command those Forces, being one of the four Captains, and Kinsman to Vercingetorix. He going out of the Camp in the first Watch of the Night, came to the end of his Journey a little before day, and hiding himself behind a Hill, Com-manded his Soldiers to refresh themselves from the former Nights Travel. And when it began to be ing discovered which he had Commanded to follow bim, as the siewing and declining places were sub-jest to the view of higher Grounds; the Enemy be-their Arms to be delivered, and the Princes to be gan the Fight, a great shout was taken up on both sides. Our Men having thrown their Piles, betook themselves to their Swords. Suddenly the Horsemen were discovered behind them, and other Cohorts made their approaches towards them. The Enemy turned fled; the flaighter was great in this place. Se- out all the Army, to every Man a Fliffour, by dulius, a Captain and Prince of the Lemovici, was the name of a Booty. Thefe things being Slain. Vergatianums was taken alive. Threefore ended, he went to the Hedui, and received in the and fourteen Ensigns were brought unto Cæsar: And very few of so great a number returned safe into their Camp. Those of the Town beholding the Slaughter and Flight of their Friends, being out of all hope, drew back their Forces from the Works. This being known, the Gauls fled presently out of their Camp: And if the Soldiers had not been weadestroyed all their Enemies. About Midnight the Horse being sent out to fall upon the Rere, a great number was Taken and Slain, the rest escaped into their Countries.

OBSERVATION.

IT is an old faying of a Hungry Man, That it is an easier matter to fill his Belly than his Eye: Which is as true in other cases; wherein our defires are oftentimes fo great, that we think no means fufficient to accomplish the same: But when we shall come to put it in tryal, and suffer every Man to be measured with his own Foot, it will appear that our defires are better applied to the infinity of the Mind, than to the necessary occasions of our Life. Vercingetorix was so far interessed in the success of this War, that he thought all the able Men of Gallia not enough to make it happy unto him: But the other Princes that were not io deeply touched, and yet flood as well affected to the Cause, refused to Inroll all that were able to bear Arms, but thought Two Hundred Forty and Eight Thousand Men to be a competent force for this Service. But coming to the execution of the business, they employed only fixty Thousand: And when they failed of their endeavour, and were Routed and Overthrown by the Romans, the rest staid no longer to dispute the matter, but fled all away by Night. Which sheweth the difference between the Affections which are fore-runners of a Cause, and such as grow and encrease with a business, and are not commonly found in one and the fame subject in their greatest Strengths. For these antecedent defires are like Womens Longings; ftrong and soughts fave violent at first, but decaying as fast again before a langing. they come to any Ripeness: Whereas such Affections as rife from the carriage of a business, and grow from the Occurrences of that proceeding, are not so easily abated, but do hold out strong either for Constancy or Obstinacy.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Vercingetorix yieldeth himfelf and the Town to Cæfar.

He next day Vercingetorix having called a Council, told them, that he had not un-dertook that War for his own occasions, but for the cause of common Liberty: And forasmuch as they were necessarily to yield to fortune, he made offer of himself unto them, either to satisfie the Romans with his Death, or to be brought out. He himself sate in the Fortifications before the Camp: Thither the Captains were brought, Vercingetorix was delivered; their Weapons were cast out. The Hedui and the Arverni being reserved, to the end he might recover the rest of the States by his back and fled : The Horsemen met them as they them; of the rest of the Captives he gave through-State. Thither did the Arverni fend Ambassadors unto him, promifing to obey whatfoever he Commanded. He demanded a great number of Hostages, and fent the Legions into their Winter-Quarters. He sent home Twenty Thousand Captives to the Hedui and the Arverni. He fent T. Labienus with two Legions, and the Horse into the Sequani, ried with that days Labour, they might eafily have and gave him M. Sempronius Rutilius to affift him. He lodged C. Fabius and Lucius Minutius Basilius with two Legions amongst the Men of Rheims, left they should receive any damage by the near bordering Bellovaci. He sent C. Antistius Rheginus to the Ambivareti, and T. Sextius to the Bituriges, and C. Caninius Rebilus to the Rutheni. with each of them a Legion. He placed Q. Tullius Cicero and P. Sulpitius at Cavillonis and Matifcona of the Hedui upon the River Arar, for Provifion of Corn : He himself determined to Winter at Bibract. This Years Service being known at Rome, there was a Feast of Thanksgiving appointed for twenty days together.

OBSERVATION.

Tercingetorix, notwithstanding a hard Fortune. entertained a noble Refolution: For having first acquainted the Gauls that he had not undertook that War for any respect to himself, but for the cause of Gallia, and the ancient liberty of that Continent; he made offer to fatifie the angry Romans with his Body dead or alive.

Plutarch reciteth the manner of his Delivery to Harrhin be in this fort: Being armed at all Parts, and the Life of Mounted on a Horse furnished with a rich Caparison, he came to Casar, and rode round about him as he fate in his Chair of State; then lighting off his Horse, he took off his Caparison and Furniture, and unarmed himself, and laid all on the Ground, and went and fate down at Cafar's Feet, and faid never a word. Cafar at length committed him as a Prisoner taken in the Wars, to be led afterwards in his Triumph at Rome: But the Civil Wars did cut off that Solemnity.

If it be demanded, what became of these great Princes and Personages after the Triumph: It will appear that they did not stroke their Heads. or make more of them than of milerable Captives. For Paulus Æmylius, after the noble Triumph Plurarch is for King Perseus, pitying his Fortune and defiring the Life of to help him, could never obtain other Grace for lius. him, than only to remove him from the common Prison, which they called Carcer, into a more cleanly and sweeter House: Where being streightly guarded, he died, either by Abstinence, or being kept from Sleep by the Soldiers. Two of his Sons died also, but the third became an excellent Turner or Joyner, and could write the Roman Tongue so well, that he afterwards became Chancellor to the Magistrates of Rome. And thus the Romans dealt with their Captive Princes, making them examples of Fortunes unconstancy, and turning their Diadems into Shackles of Iron.

And thus far did Cafar Comment himself upon delivered unto them alive. Ambassadors were sent the Wars he made against the Gauls, being a Noble and a Worthy People, and bred in a very pregnant witnesses. They continued under large and fertile Continent; the Inhabitants the Roman Government Four Hundred Forty and whereof have in all Ages, even to these times, One Years, according to the computation made and Carriage from time to time deferving as Ho- and means they denied to pay that Homage and nourable Memory, as these Wars recorded by Tribute to the Emperour Full Cefar's own hand; whereof Paulus Æmylius, Vereingetoris had lost to Cefar. Philip Commines, and of late John de Seres are challenged an eminency, both for Politick Government and Martial Prowefs, amongst the World: Their Actions

Western Kingdoms of the World: Their Actions

Martial Prowefs, amongst the merus a General of the French, by whose Prowess Tribute to the Emperour Valentinianus, which

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

LL the other Wars of Cafar against the many different Nations) to lock himself up in a Gauls were different from this, by reason that in the former he made use of their Divisions to Ruin them. This was made almost by a general confent of them all, Electing a Supream Chief of great Prudence and Courage, who being fensible that the good Discipline of the Romans, and their Skill in the Trade of War, render'd them invincible in Battel, chang'd the manner of making it, by Protracting of time, without hazarding a general Combat, being fuperiour in Horse, in a Country which favour'd him; and by cutting off the Provisions of their Army, fail'd but little of ruining them: Which affords us a scope for very fine Remarks.

First upon Vercingetorix, who being voluntarily chosen Head of divers People, who Emulated each other, knew fo well how to Govern them, that, notwithstanding all his Adversities, he still preserv'd a great Authority among them, and kept them in great Awe; never sparing Severity where it was requifite: (For fear is the most powerful motive to keep Men within Bounds) his ill Success having never daunted him, nor alter'd his Mind : even when he was accus'd of holding Inrelligence with the Enemy: He Harangud them with 10 much boldness, that it encreased his Authority inftead of leffening it. And indeed the most effectual way to satisfie People is to speak often to them about present transactions. He was allow'd to Burn about Twenty Towns to inconvenience their Enemies: Which argues his Ability; fince the only way to Vanquish the Romans (who were too hard for them in Fight) was to Combat them by Hunger. In such Affairs all mild Councils, or fuch as are only Executed by halves are ruinous; of which the taking of Bourges may falls infinitely florr of the two Circumvallations ferve for a memorable Example by reason that in of Alexia: The Industry, and Labour of which, faving it from a necessary Conflagration, it was together with the shortness of time in which they preserved for the use of the Romans, who supply'd their Wants by the taking of it. His great Credit is remarkable, by his being able to perwant free People at the very beginning of a War, before their having tryd the ill fucces of it, when they were full of hopes of Vanquishing and Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the principal Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the property of the principal Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the principal Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the principal Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the principal Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the principal Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the principal Grounds on which they are established are particularly and the principal Grounds on the principal Gr without applying fuch violent Remedies, to fet Fire to their Houses and Goods, for the preservation of which, Wars are commonly made. It was, without doubt, a very difficult Enterprife; by reason that the loss of things that are certain and present, that are seen and felt, is presert'd by Ignorant People, to those things of which the Event is uncertain, and the uferlindes diffant: And none can perfectly apprehend that difficulty, unless such as have experienced it in governing of the did not defign to Attack, but not so near as place, in which he perform'd what-ever could be done by a prudent brave Commander, despising Hunger, and all the Inconveniences of a Siege, and holding out until the Relief he expected was Repuls'd and Defeated, but whereas Histories are only compil'd by the Victorious, we feldom hear the Praises of any but the Children

Let us now Examine Cxfar's Conduct in this War, which surprises him in the midst of Winter, he being in Italy at that time, his Army divided into divers Countries, diftant from each other, and the Revolted laying fo much in his way, that it was almost impossible for him to joyn his Le-Those great difficulties requir'd an incomparable Labour in order to overcome them, which he did, by making himself a Passage through Mountains which were cover'd with fix Foot deep of Snow, and terrifi'd his Enemies more by appearing in the midst of them (at a time when they imagin'd him to be in Italy, without a possibility of coming towards them) than by the number of his Forces. He likewise improv'd their Terror, by making feveral Incursions with his Horse,

Method of the War alter'd, and that his Enemies avoided to come to Battel; addicts himself to the Siege of Towns, in which he shew'd himfelf as excellent as in other Feats of War. For whatever is practis'd by the best Modern Commanders, is Copy'd after him; and all that we admire in the Siege of Oftend, Breda, Bois le Duc, and feveral other Sieges of the late Prince Man-rice, who surpass'd all others in those Matters, of Alexia: The Industry and Labour of which, were perform'd, furpasses whatever has been done elsewhere, by much. I am sensible that the Invention of Powder and Artillery has alter'd the ticularly Copy'd from Cafar, who excell'd all the Roman Generals in that point.

He is equally to be admir'd for his Inventions and Stratagems, and for the boldness of his Undertakings. When he refolved to Storm the Retrenchments about Clermont, he created a Jealousie in them, by a Body he form'd of the Serhe did not defign to Attack, but not fo near as People. He also express'd his Constancy to the to permit them to discern what they were, and very last, not fearing (tho' at the Head of so having put a Legion in Ambush in the Night, and flipt the Flower of his Army into the little Camp, creas'd in Wealth and Honour, and in whom he which was nearest to the Place, he falls upon greatly Confided: He excuses his Revolt, instead them to unexpectedly that he Forces all their Retrenchments:

When he resolv'd to pass the River of Aliers, which was oppos'd by Vercingetorix, he Posted fome Legions near a Bridge that had been broken down, and with the remainder of the Army, which he had order'd in fuch a manner, that it feem'd to be entire, he marches along the Riverfide, as if he had fought for another Paffage: Amusing the Army so well, that the Bridge was mended before any Body took notice of it, and thus he pass'd without any hindrance.

When Vercingetorix, during the Siege of Bourges, march'd out with his Cavalry, he departed in the Night, and Attack'd his Infantry in his Camp, which he was very near taking.

When at the Siege of Clermont, being inform'd of the Revolt of 10000 Autunois, who were come to his Afliftance, he takes four Legions, marches Day and Night to furprise them; takes them all, and returns time enough to defend his Camp which was Attack'd by Vercingetorix. Whereupon we will observe by the by, the advantage of keeping a Camp always well Fortified, in order to be ever in a condition to Assault ones Enemy, according as occasions offer themselves.

I cannot pass by his great Modesty, in the Case of Cornio, whom he had ever favour'd, en-greatly Confided: He excuses his Revolt, instead of blaming him for it; alledging, that he suffer'd himself to be involv'd in the general design that was form'd for the recovery of the Liberty-and the Glory of all the Gauls.

Fig. make 100

Let us speak a word of Labienus, one of his Lieutenants, who finding himself nonplus'd with four of Casar's Legions in that general Revolt, being Surrounded on all Parts with Enemies, and necessitated to cross the Seine upon Boats, in order to joyn Casar, being oppos'd by great Forces in three Bodies, makes a great shew of passing in two places, where he did not design it. And having thus divided their Forces in divers Bodies, not knowing whither to go to oppose him, pass'd in the Night with three Legions in the Place where he was least expected, fought and routed the next that came in his way; infomuch that having pass'd the remainder of his Forces with ease, he joyn'd Casar without the least opposition. Upon which I will make this Remark, that whoever is not very careful, diligent, and watchful in keeping the paffage of a River or Mountain is commonly furpriz'd, by reason that he who keeps it, relies upon the advantage of the Place, whereas those that defign to pass, seek out all means (and finally find them) to overcome all those Obstacles.

The next Summer's Service compiled by Hirtius, omitted in the former Editions, has been thought fit to be added in this, for the better compleating of the whole Work.

المعالمة ال المعالمة ا

120 (100)

The Eighth COMMENTARY of the Wars in GALLIA

Written by Aulus Hirtius.

CHAP. I.

The Gauls raise new Troubles in divers Places. Cæsar scattereth and wasteth the Bituriges, and after that the Carnutes.

Fter that all Gallia was Subdued, forafmuch as Casar had refted no part of the former Summer from War, he was defirous to refresh his Soldiers after so great Pains taken, the rest of the Winter season; when News was brought him that many States at the felf-fame time, did lay their Heads together again about War, and make Conspiracies. Whereof there was reported a very likely Cause; in that it was known to all the Gauls, that there could not any Power so great be affembled into one place, as should be able to withstand the Romans: Neither if many States at once made War in divers places at one Instant, could the Army of the People of Rome have sufficient, either of Aid. or of Time, or of Men of War to pursue all at once: And there ought not any State to refuse the lot of their Misfortune, if by the respite thereof, the reft might fet themselves at liberty.

The which Opinion, to the intent it should not fettle in the Minds of the Gauls, Cafar leaving M. Antonius, the Quæftor, with charge of his Winter Garrisons, went, with a strong company of Horsemen the last day of December from Bibracte to his twelfth Legion, which he had placed not far from the borders of the Hedui, in the Country of the Bituriges, and taketh thereunto the eleventh Legion, which was next unto it. Leaving two Cohorts to defend his ftuff and Carriages, he led the rest of his Army into the most plentiful Fields of the Bituriges : The which being a large Country, and full of Towns, could not be kept in awe with the Garrisoning of one Legion amongst them, but that they prepared for War, and made Conspiracies.

By the fuddain coming of Cafar, it came to pass (which must needs happen to such as are unprovided and fcattered abroad) that fuch as were Tilling the Ground without fear, were furprised in the Fields by our Horsemen, before they could get them into the Towns. For at that time the common token of Invasion which is wont to be perceived by burning of Houses, was by C.cfar's Commandment forborn, left they should either want Forage and Corn if they were minded to make any further Road into the Country, or else, that their Enemies for fear of the Fires, thould convey themselves out of the way.

After that many Thousands of Men had been taken, the Bituriges being fore afraid, fuch of them as could escape out of the Romans hands at their first coming, upon confidence either of the old acquaintance and familiarity that had been privately between them, by reason of reforting as Guests one to another, or of their mutual Agreement, and partaking in the same Devices, fled into the next Cities: But all was in vain. For Cafar, by great Journeys came fo sud-dainly upon all places, that he gave not any City leifure to think of the safeguard of other Folks rather than of themselves. Through the which speed he both kept his Friends faithful unto him, and put the wavering fort in fuch fear, that he compelled them to be glad to receive Peace.

The matter flanding in this case, when the Bituriges faw that through Cafar's gentleness there was yet a way for them to return into his Favour again, and that the next States had deli-vered him Hostages, and were thereupon received to Mercy without further Punishment: They themselves did so likewise. Cafar, because his Men had patiently endured fo great Travail in the Winter-days, through most cumbersome ways, in intolerable cold Weather, and continued most in intoerable cold weather, and continued from refolutely in the fame to the uttermost, promised to give to his Soldiers Two Hundred Sesterces apiece, and to the Captains Two Thousand apiece, apiece, and to the Captains I wo I nonline apiece, in the name of a Prey: And so sending his Legions again into their Winter Places, he himself returned to Bibraste the Fortieth day after his setting forth. There, as he was Ministring of Justice, the Bituriges fent Messengers unto him, desiring help against the Carnutes, whom they complained to make War upon them.

Upon the receipt of this News, when he had not lain in Garrison past eighteen days, he draweth the fourteenth and fixteenth Legions out of Garrison from the River Arar, where he had placed them for the speedy purveyance of Corn and Victual, as was shewed you in the last Book: And with those two Legions went to prosecute the Carnutes.

When our Enemies heard of the coming of our Army, the Carnutes, moved with the Calamity of others, left their Towns and Villages that they dwelt in, which they had made upon the fudden with little Cottages for necessities sake to keep off the Winter; (for fince they were Conquered of late, they had loft many of their Walled Towns:) and fled scattering abroad. Cufur, forasimuch as he would not put his Soldiers to the abiding of the unfeafonable sharp Storms which chiefly at that time fell, encamped himself within Genabum, a Town of the Carnutes, and Housed his Soldiers their Stuff into Woods that were farther off: partly in the Buildings of the Gauls, and partly in Of the which War there were many Noblemen fuch Buildings as being unfinished they Thatched in hafte with the Straw that was brought in to cover their Tents and Cabbins. Nevertheless he fendeth abroad his Horsemen and Auxiliary Footmen into all parts, whither he heard his Enemies reforted: And that was not in vain; for commonly our Men returned ever with a great Booty.

The Carnutes being put to it with the hardness of the Winter, and the terror of the Danger, being driven out of House and Home, and not daring to flay any where any long time, the Woods not being able to defend them from the bitterness of the Storms, were scattered abroad, and with the loss of a great part of them, disperied into the next Cities.

CHAP. II.

The Bellovaci and other States under the leading of Corbeus and Comius Invade the Sueffiones: Cæfar marcheth against them.

Æfar at that hard time of the Year, thinking it enough to difperfe the Powers that were affembling, to the intent no beginning of War might fpring up, and weighing how much it concerned him, to prevent any open War from breaking out the beginning of the next Summer; he placed C. Trebonius in Garrison at Genatum with those two Legions that he had there about him: And forasmuch as he was by often Meffages certified from the Men of Rheims, that the Bellovaci (who excelled all Gauls, and the Belga also in Military Fame) and the States adjoyning unto them, under the Conduct of Corbens of Beauvais and Comius of Arras, Levied Men of War, and affembled them into one place, to the intent with their whole Power to Invade the borders of the Sueffiones, which were appertaining to the Men of Rheims; thinking it food not only upon his Honour, but also tended to his own Security for the future, to fave his Allies, which had deferved well of the Commonweal, from displeasure and damage, he called the eleventh Legion again out of Garrison. Moreover he wrote to C. Fabius to bring the two Legions that he had, into the Confines of the Sueffiones; and fent for one of those two Legions that were with T. Labienus. So according as his Garrisons lay for the purpose, and as the state of the War required, to his own continual Trouble, he put fometimes one of his Legions, and fometimes another, to March from their

With this Power that he had affembled he went against the Bellovaci: And Encamping him-felf in their Country, sent abroad his Horsemen into all Quarters to glean up fome of them, by whose means he might learn what his Enemies purposed to do. His Horsemen doing their Dury, brought word how few were found in the Houses, and those not such as had stayed behind to Till the Ground, (for they were purpofely removed out of all places) but fuch as had been fent back again to Spy. Of whom Cesar enquiring in what place the Forces of the Bellovaci were, and what was their intent; found that all the Bellovaci were gathered together into one place: And that the Ambiani, Aulerci, Caletes, Velocasses, and Attrebates had chosen a very high Ground to Encamp in, enclosed with that were Ring-leaders, but the multitude obeyed Corbeus chiefly, because they understood that he hated most the name of the People of Rome: And that Comius of Arras was a few days before gone to fetch aid of the Germans, who were their next Neighboars, and fwarmed in multitudes of People. He learned moreover at their hands, that the Bellovaci by the confent of all the Noblemen, at the earnest instance of the Commons, were determined, if Cafar came (as it was faid he would) but with three Legions, to offer him Battel, left afterward to more difadvantage and hindrance they should be compelled to Encounter with his whole Hoft: And if he brought a greater Power with him, then to keep themselves still in the same Ground that they had chosen, and by Ambushes to keep the Romans from Forage (which by reason of the time of the Year was scarce, and also lay scattering) and from Corn, and other Victuals and things necessary for their Army.

The which things when Casar understood, by the concurring Report of many, confidering how full of Wisdom this Project was, and how far from the rashness that the Barbarous People are wont to use, he determined to make the best advantage of all things, to the intent his Enemies disdaining his small Company, should make the more haste to come into the Field. For he had three old practifed Legions, the seventh, eighth, and ninth, of singular Valour and Prowess; and the eleventh, which was of chosen young Men of great Hope and Towardness, which having at that time received eight Years Wages, was, notwithstanding look'd upon as not comparable to the other three either for ftanding, or for Valour and Courage. Wherefore fummoning an Affembly, and there declaring all things that had been reported unto him, he confirmed the Hearts of the common Soldiers, if peradventure with the number of Three Legions, he might draw out his Enemies to Fight with him in the Field. He fet his Battel in this Order: The feventh, eighth, and ninth Legions went before the Carriages, and the eleventh closed in the Rere thereof, the which notwithflanding was but fmall, as it is wont to be in fuch Expeditions: And this he did, left the Enemies should find a greater number than they expected. By this means, in a square Battel almost, he brought his Host in fight of his Enemies fooner than they looked for him.

When the Gauls beheld these Legions so suddainly set in order, marching toward them apace, as it had been in a pitched Field (whereas it was reported to Casar that they intended to carry on their business with confident boldness) whether it were for the peril of the Encounter, or the fuddainness of our coming, or that they looked to fee what we intended to do, they fet themfelves in order of Battel before their Camp, and would not descend from the higher Ground. Albeit that Cafar was defirous to have fought with them, yet wondering at the great number of his Enemies, he pitched his Camp directly over against theirs, on the other side of a Valley, which was more in deepness downward, than in wideness any way at the bottom. This Camp he commanded to be Fortified with a Rampier twelve Foot, and an open Gallery to be builded upon it according to the measure of the same height, and a double Ditch to be made of a troubletome Marish, and had conveyed all fifteen Foot apiece, with sides plum down, and many Turrets to be reared of three Stories high, first to draw out our Men into the danger of their fenced with Grates of Wicker; to the intent the Enemy might be repulfed with double Rows of Defendants: Of which the one from the Bridges, the more out of danger they were by reason of the height, so much the boldlier and the farther off might they fend their Darts; the other the nearer they were placed to their Enemy upon the Rampier, fo much the better should they be covered from the Artillery that might fall down upon them: And over the Gates he made high Towers. This kind of Fortification was to two good purposes: For by the greatness of his Works and his pretence of fear, he hoped to put the barbarous Gauls into a great Confidence; and when-foever he should have occasion to fend out far for Forage or Victuals, he faw that the Camp might be defended with a small Power, the strength of the Fortifications was fo great. In the mean while, Parties on both fides would feveral times go out and skirmish in the Marish that was between our two Camps: The which oftentimes either the Gauls and Germans that were of our Hoft would pass, and eagerly pursue their Enemies; or else in like manner our Enemies passing over it, did fend our Men farther off.

It happened in our daily Foraging (as there was no other shift, forasmuch as we were fain to fetch Forage at Houses that stood scattering far afunder) that our Foragers being diffevered which thing, as it was some loss to us of our Beasts of Carriage and Slaves, so it heightened the foolish Courages of the barbarous Gauls: And that so much the more, because Comius of Arras (who we faid before was gone to fetch aid of the Germans) was returned with some Horse; of whom, although there was not above the number of Five Hundred, yet the Gauls were puffed up at the coming of the Germans.

CHAP. III.

Cæsar strengthens himself with more Forces. The Men of Rheims worsted by the Enemy, and they again by the Germans on Cæfar's Party.

Hen Casar perceived how his Ene-mies kept themselves many days together within their Camp, which was Fortified both with a Marish and also with advantage of the Ground, and that he could neither Affault them without manifest Peril, nor enclose the place where they were with any Fortifications, without a greater Army; he directed his Letters to Trebonius, that he should with all hafte possible fend for the Thirteenth Legion which Wintered amongst the Bituriges, under T. Sextius the Legate, and so with Three Legions make long Marches to come to him. In the mean feason he fent out by turns the Horsemen of Rheims, and of the Lingones, and other States, of whom he had called forth a great number, to fafe Conduct the Foragers, and to withftand the fuddain Affaults of the Enemy.

This being done day by day, and our Men taking now less heed, because it was an ordinary matter with them, (which thing for the most part cometh to pass by daily custom) the Bellovaci, with a Band of chosen Footmen, knowing the places where our Horfemen daily kept their But Cesar thought it not good to affail them thandings, laid Ambushes in Woody places: And that were ready to defend themselves, having many Turrets to be reared of three stones man, and to be joyned together with Draw-Bridges to a Manufamens, and then to affail them as they let down at pleafure, the Fronts whereof were upon the Men of Rheims, whose turn it was to perform the duty that day. For they, when they had espied the Horsemen of their Enemies . upon the fuddain, despising them because they were less in number, followed them over-greedily, and were enclosed by the Footmen. Whereby being disordered, they retired more hastily than Horsemen are accustomed to do in Battel, with the loss of Vertifco the Prince of their State, and Capain of their Horiemen. Who being fearce able to fit upon a Horfe, by reason of his Age, would notwithstanding (according to the cultom of the Gaulz) neither seek to disburthen himself of the Captainship, by excuse of his Age, nor fuffer the encounter to be Fought without him. With this lucky Battel, wherein they flew the Prince and Captain of the Men of Rheims, the Courages of our Enemies were heightned and raised, and our Men were taught by their own harm, to fearch the places better where they should keep their standings, and to follow their Enemy more advisedly when he sted. In the mean while ceased not the daily Skirmishes in the fight of both our Camps, which were made at the Foords and Passages of the Marish.

In this kind of exercise, when as the Germans (whom Cafar had for the same purpose fetch'd over the Rhine, that they should Fight intermin-gled with his Horsemen in the Battel) had all boldly passed the Marish, and slaying a few that made Refiftance, followed eagerly upon the reft of the multitude; not only they that were over-thrown at hand, or Wounded aloof, but also they that were wont to fuccour afar off, were fo ftricken with fear, that they ran away shamefully, and never left flying from higher Ground to higher, which they oftentimes loft, before they either recovered into their Camp, or (as some did for very shame) fled farther off. With whose danger the rest of the Host was so troubled, that it can scarcely be judged, whether good Success (were it never so small) would make them more Arrogant, or a Misfortune (were it never fo mean) would make them more cowed and fearful

CHAP. IV.

The Gauls Discamp, and are pursued by Cæsar. The Routing of part of them, and the Death of Fter they had lurked many days in the fame Camp, when the Captains of the Bellovaci understood that C. Trebonius, one of Cafar's Legates, was at hand with more Legions, fearing the like Siege as was at Alexia, they fent away in the Night all such as by reason of Years, or otherwise wanted strength, and all fuch as wanted Armour among them, and with them they fent away also their Carriages. While they were fetting forth this troubled and confused Company, (for the Gauls, even when they go lightest, are wont to have a great mutitude of Carts following them) day-light came upon them; and therefore they fet their Men in Battel-Array in their Camp, left the Romans should pursue, before the Company of their Carriages could get any thing forward. the next day they fent thither their Horsemen, so high a Hill to climb up unto them; and yet he thought to come so near them with his Host, as that they might not depart out of the place where they were without danger, our Men being hard at hand ready to fall upon them. Therefore whereas he perceived that the troublefome Marish parted Camp from Camp, (the difficult passage whereof might hinder the speedy purfuit of our Enemies) and that the same ridge of the Hill which went from the farther fide of the Marish almost to the Camp of the Enemies, was parted from their said Camp with a small Valley: He made Bridges over the Marish, and passing over his Army, got quickly into the Plain of the faid Ridge, the which on two fides was fortified with a deep descent. There embattelling his Men, he came to the farthest end of the Ridge: And ordered his Battels in fuch a place, from whence with an Engine Artillery might be shot amongst the thickest of the Enemies.

CESAR'S Wars in GALLIA.

The Gauls trufting to the advantage of the place, when they would neither have refused the Encounter, if perchance the Romans should have adventured up the Hill against them, nor yet durst by little and little diminish their Battel by fevering themselves, left when they had been out of Array, they might hap to have been fet upon, kept themselves in order of Battel. Whose wilfillness Cafur perceiving, kept twenty Cohorts in a readiness, and pitching his Tents in the same place commanded his Camp should be fortified. As soon as the works were finished, he set his Legions in Array before the Rampier, and appointed the Horsemen to their standings with their Horses ready bridled.

When the Bellovaci faw the Romans in a readiness to pursue them, and that themselves could not without peril either lodge that night, or continue any longer in the fame place where they were, they devised this shift to recover themselves. In the place where they were fet together, (for it is declared in Cafar's former Commentaries, how the Gauls are wont to fit down in the Battel) they received from hand to hand one of another bundles of Straw and Faggots, whereof there was great store in their Camp, and cast it all on a heap before their Battel, and in the latter end of the day, at a watch-word that was given, they fet it on fire all at one inftant: By means whereof the continual flame fuddenly took away the fight of all their Army from the Romans: And therewithal the favage Gauls fled away as fast as their Legs could bear them.

Albeit that Cafar could not perceive the departing of his Enemies, by reason of the flame that was betwixt them; yet notwithstanding, forasmuch as he suspected it to be a deceit practifed by them, that they might the fafelier fly away; he marched his Footmen forward, and fent his Horsemen to pursue them. Howbeit for fear of Treachery in the business, lest perhaps his Encmies should abide still in the same place, and only draw us forth into a Ground of diladvantage, he went the flower pace. His Horfemen fearing to venture into the smoak and thick flame (and if any were fo refolute as to enter it, they could liberty to recover themselves whither they would. Thus our Enemies by their flight, which was mixt with fear and subtilty, escaping without any loss, went but ten miles off, and encamped themselves in a very advantageous Ground. From whence by laying Ambushes both of Horse and Foot in divers places, they did the Romans great displeafure as they went a Foraging.

After this had happened many and fundry times, Cafar learned of a Captive, that Crobeus, Captain of the Bellovaci, had chosen out of his whole Hoft, fix thousand of the valiantest Footmen, and a thousand Horsemen, which he had laid in ambush in the same place whether (for the plenty of Provision and Corn that was there) he judged the Romans would fend to Forage.

This being known, Cafar bringeth forth more Legions than usual, and sendeth his Horsemen before as he was wont to do, to fafe-conduct his Foragers. Among them he mingleth for their affiftance many light-armed Footmen, and himfelf with his Legions followeth as near as poffibly he might. The Enemies that were laid in ambush, having chosen a Field for their purpose, not above a mile over every way, environed round about, either with cumbersome Woods, or else a very deep River, befet it with their ambushment, as it had been with a toil.

Our Men, forasmuch as they were privy to the defign of their Enemies beforehand, being ready both with heart and hand to fight, feeing their Legions followed hard after them, would refuse no encounter: but went Rank by Rank down into the faid place. At whose coming, Corbeus thinking an occasion of doing some good to be fallen into his hands, first discovereth himself with a small number, and giveth charge upon the next Troops. Our Men floutly withfland the brunt. and flock not many into one place at once; which in skirmishes of Horse is wont commonly to happen through fear, and their clustering together turneth to their own loss. They being thus engaged in small parties, and having a care still that their Fellows should not be circumvented, the rest brake out of the Woods while Corbeus was fighting. Then was the Encounter hot and doubtful After it had continued indifferent a good space, by little and little came their Footmen in array out of the Woods, which compelled our Horsemen to give back. But they were quickly re-lieved again by the light-armed Footmen, which as was faid, were fent before our Legions, who being intermixed among the Horsemen, fought

The Encounter continued a good while doubt-Bur as the course of War requires, they that had withstood the first brunt of them that lay in ambush for them, had thus much the advanrage, that they received not unawares any foil at their hands. In the mean while our Legions drew nearer, and divers Messengers brought word both to our Men and to our Enemies at one and the same time, that the General was at hand with his Army in Battel array. Which thing being known, our Horsemen trusting to the help of the Cohorts, lay about them very eagerly, left if they should have delayed the matter, they might have given the Foormen part of the honour of the Victory. Upon this our Enemies hearts began to fail; and they fought to fly by feveral ways: but all was in vain. For by the difad-vantage of the fame places in which they would have inclosed the Romans, they were themselves any were to resource as to enter 15, they could have the fore-parts of their own Hories) left traps and could not get out. Notwithflanding, they should be intrapped, gave the Beliovaei free being vanquished and altogether out of heart. when they had loft the greatest part of their company, like Men amazed they betook themselves to flight; and some made toward the Woods, others toward the River, where being overtaken by our Men that followed eagerly after them, they were all flain. In the mean time Corbens, whose heart could by no misfortune be daunted or overcome, never departed out of the Battel, nor made toward the Woods, neither could by the entreaty of our Men be perfuseded to yield mands; only Comius food off, who durft not for himself: But fighting most valiantly, and hurting fear trust his Life into any Man's hands. For the many of our Men, he so far exasperated the Victors, that they could not forbear to throw their Darts at him, and dispatch him.

CHAP. V.

The remainder of the Gauls submit themselves to Cæfar. Comius in danger to be flain by Trea-

He matter being brought to this pass, Cafar pursuing his newly-got Victory, forasmuch as he thought that his Enemies being difcouraged with fo great a misfortune, would immediately upon the news thereof, forfake the place where they were encamped, which was faid to be not above eight miles from the place where the flaughter was made; although he faw it would be fome trouble to him to pass the River, yet passed he his Army, and marched toward them. But the Rellovaci and the other States, upon the return of a few of their Men, and those wounded, out of the chase, which had escaped the mischance by means of the Woods, understanding by them their own great misfortune and misery by the death of Corbeus, the loss of their Horsemen, and the slaughter of their stoutest Footmen, and mistrusting that the Romans would out of hand come upon them; immediately called an Affembly by the found of a Trumpet, and cried all with one voice, to fend Ambaffadors and Hoftages to Cafar.

When Comius of Arras perceived that this motion would be entertained, he fled to those Germans of whom he had borrowed affiftance to the War. The rest sent Ambassadors presently unto Cafar, defiring him to content himself with that punishment of his Enemies, which if he might have laid upon them without Battel in their chief profperity, they were well affured that of his clemency and courtefie he would not have done it. The Bellovaci faid that their power was weakened by the loss of their Horsemen, many thousands of their choicest Footmen were cut off, scarce any escaping to bring tidings of the flaughter: Yet notwithstanding their great misfortune, they had by that Battel received this happiness, that Corbeus, the Author of the War and raiser of the multitude, was flain. For as long as he was alive, the Senate could never bear fo great fway in the City, as the rude and unskilful Commonalry.

As the Ambaffadors were speaking these things, C.efar put them in mind, that about the fame time the last Year, the Bellovaci and other States of Gallia raifed War, and that they above all others flood most stiffly in their opinion, and would not be reduced to obedience by the fubmiffion of the rest. He told them, he knew and understood it was an case matter to lay the fault of their offence upon him that was dead. But he was fure that there was no Man of fo great power, that against the Noblemens wills, the Senate refifting him, and all good Men withstanding him, could with a weak handful of the Commonalty, raise a War, and go through with it. Nevertheless he was satisfied with the punishment which they had brought upon themselves.

The Night following, the Ambaffadors returned this answer to those that sent them, and forthwith they gave Hoftages. Then also the Ambailadors of other States, which waited to fee what fucceis the Bellovaci would have, came to C.f.w, giving Hoftages, and performing his com-

Year before Titus Labienus perceiving how while Cafar was ministring Justice in the hither Gallia, Comius stirred up the States and made Confederacies against Casar, thought he might without being accounted a faith-breaker, revenge his treacherous carriage. And thereupon, because he thought he would not at his sending for come into the Camp, left he should by such a message make him more cautious, he fent C. Volusenus Quadratus to murther him, under pretence of communing with him: and for the performance of the matter, he fent with him certain felected Centurions for the purpose. When they came to conference, and that Volusenus (as it was agreed upon) had caught Comius by the right hand, one of the Centurions, as if he had been moved at the strangeness of the matter, gave Comius a shrewd blow on the Head with his Sword; howbeit he could not dispatch him, because his Friends stept in and faved him. By and by was drawing of Swords on both fides, and yet none of both parties were minded to fight, but to fly away: Our Men, because they believed that Comius had had his deaths wound; the Gauls, because perceiving the Treachery, they feared there had been more behind than they faw. Upon which business it is reported, that Comius vowed he would never come in the fight of any Roman.

CHAP. VI.

Cælar disposeth his Forces into several parts of Gallia, and himself wasteth the Country of Am-

Hen Cafar had fubdued the Nations that were most Warlike, perceiving there was now no City that prepared War, to fland against him, but that many to eschew the present Yoke of the Roman Empire, left their Towns and fled out of the Fields, he determined to fend his Army abroad into divers quarters. M. Antonius the Quæftor with the eleventh Legion he took to himself. C. Fabius the Legate with Twenty-five Cohorts. he fendeth into the farthest part of all Gallia, because he heard say that certain States were there in Arms, and that he thought C. Caninsus Rebilus the Legate had not a fufficient strength of those two Legions that were with him already. T. Labienus he called unto him from the place where he was: And the twelfth Legion which wintered under him, he sent into Gallia Togata, to defend the Towns that the Romans had there peopled with their own Citizens, left any fuch harm should happen to them by invafion of the barbarous People, as had happened the Summer before to the Tergestini, who were surprised and spoiled of their Goods by their fudden Invafions.

He himself set sorward to waste and spoil the borders of Ambiorix; who flying before him for fear from place to place, when he faw there was no hope to get him into his hands, he thought it was most for his Honour, so to despoil his Country of People, Buildings and Cattel, that is Countrymen might so hate him (if Fortune reserved any Countrymen for him) that for the Calamities he had brought upon his Country, he might never have access thither again.

After he had fent abroad his Hoft into all parts of Ambiorix his Country, and wafted all places with flaughter, burning and rapine, having flain and taken Prisoners a great number of the Treviri: Whose Country, by reason of the nearness thereof unto Germany, being daily inured to the Wars, is not much unlike to the Germans in rudeness and salvageness of life; neither did they obey the commandments of Cafar at any time longer than we had an Army in their Country to compell them.

Бь 2

Men,

CHAP. VII.

A new War raised in the Territories of the Pictones. C. Fabius putteth to flight the Forces of Dumnacus: Subdueth the Carnutes and Aremorici.

N the mean season C. Caninius the Legate, understanding by the Messengers and Letters of Duracius, (who had continued always firm to the friendship of the People of Rome,) that a great number of Enemies were affembled in the borders of the Pictones; forafmuch as a part of that City had renounced their obedience, went to the Town of Lemovicum. When he came near the Town, and understood by his Prisoners, how that Dumnacus Captain of the Andes, with many thousands of Men had enclosed Duracius, and that Lemovicum was belieged; he durft not with his weak Legions adventure upon his Enemies, but pitched his Camp in an advantageous ground. Dumnacus hearing of the approach of Caninius, turned all his power against the Roman Legions, determining to fet upon them in their Camp. After he had fpent many days in the affault, and had loft many of his Men, and yet could not break down any part of their Fortifications, he returned again to befiege Lemovicum.

At the fame time, C. Fabius receiveth many Cities by composition, and affureth them with Hoftages; and is advertised by Caninius's Letters, of those things that were done among the Pictones. Upon the knowledge whereof, he letteth forth to rescue Duracius.

But Dumnacus understanding of Fabius's coming, forafmuch as he thought he should hazard the lofing all, if at once he flould be compelled both to abide the Romans his Enemies without, and also to have an eye to and stand in fear of the Town, retired suddenly with all his Forces from the place, and could not think himfelf to be sufficiently in safety, before he had passed his Army over the River Loire, which by reason of the greatness thereof, was to be passed by a Bridge, and not otherwise.

Although Fabius was not yet come within fight of his Enemies, nor had joyned with Caninius, yet forafmuch as he was throughly informed by fuch as knew the Coaft of the Country, he fuspected that his Enemies would take that way which they did. Therefore he marcheth with his Army to the faid Bridge where his Enemies had paffed, and commanded his Horsemen to go no farther before the Footmen, than that they might upon occasion retire into the same Camp without tiring their Horses. Our Horse, as was commanded them, overtook the Hoft of Dumnacus and fet upon them; and affaulting them flying and amazed, as they marched with their luggage at their backs, flew a great number and took a great Prey: and fo with good fuccess retired into their Camp.

The Night following Fabius fent his Horfe-

Men, he fent Labienus with two Legions among counter the Enemy, and stay all the whole Army until he should overtake them. Q. Atius Varus the Commander of the Horse, a Man of fingular Courage and Wisdom, having encouraged his Men and overtaken the body of his Fremies, disposed certain of his Troops in places convenient, and with the rest of his Horsemen gave charge upon his Enemies. The Cavalry of the Enemy fought fo much the more boldly, because their Foot were ready to affist them, who being mingled through the whole Army, as often as occasion was, did succour them againft our Men. The encounter was very sharp. For our Men despising them whom they had vanquished the day before, and remembring that the Legions followed at their heels, ashamed to give ground, and defirous to get the day before their coming, fought very valiantly against the Footmen. On the other fide, our Enemies believing that no greater Forces of ours were behind, according as they had feen the day before, thought a fair opportunity offered them to deftroy our Cavalry utterly.

When they had fought a good while very eagerly, Dumnacus made a Battel to relieve his Cavalry, when occasion should be. But on the fudden our Enemies espied our Legions coming up close together: At the fight of whom their Horse were stricken into such a fear, and the Foot fo amazed, that breaking through their Carriages, with great clamour and confusion they betook themselves every where to flight. Then our Cavalry, who a little before had their hands full, being heartened with joy of the Victory, raifed a great flout on all fides, and casting themselves amongst them as they fled, made slaughter of them as far as their Horses breaths would ferve to purfue them, and their Arms were able to ftrike them. Infomuch that having flain above twelve thousand Men, armed and fuch as for fear had cast away their Arms, they took all their Carriages, none escaping.

Out of the which chase, forasmuch as it was certainly known, that Drapes the Senon was escaped (who when Gallia first began to rebel, gathering to him Men of desperate fortunes out of all places, fetting Bondmen at liberty, entertaining Outlaws of all Countries, and receiving Highway Thieves, had cut off the Carriages and Victuals of the Romans) was going toward the Province with five thousand Men at the most, which he had rallied after the chase; and that Luterius of Cahors joyned himself with him, who in the former Commentary is faid to have attempted an Invafion of the Province at the first Insurrection of Gallia; Caninius the Legate with two Legions purfued after them, left fome great dishonour might be received by those loose Fellows terrifying and harrassing the Province.

C. Fabius with the reft of the Army went against the Carnutes and the other States, whose power he knew to be crushed in the Battel that was fought against Dumnacus. For he doubted not, but he should find them more tractable to deal with, by reason of the late overthrow: Whereas if he should give them time of respite, by the instigation of the said Dumnacus, they might be raifed again. Fabius with marvellous good luck and speed brought those States to submission. For the Carnutes, who had been often-times before ill-handled by us, yet would never liften to Peace, now gave Hoftages, and came into subjection. And the rest of the States situare in the farthest parts of Gallia, bordering men before, so provided, that they might en- upon the Sea, which are called Armorica, tollowfollowing the example of the Carnutes, at the ced to set but weak Watches in so many places at coming of Fabius with his Legions amongst them once. performed his commandments without delay.

Dumnacus thus driven out of his own Country, wandring and lurking in Corners alone, was compelled to betake himself to the uttermoft Countries of all Gallia.

C H A P. VIII.

Drapes and Luterius feize upon Uxellodunum. Caninius pursueth them, overthroweth their Forces, taketh Drapes Prisoner, and with Fabius beliegeth Uxellodunum.

Ut Drapes and Luterius, when they underflood that Caninius approached with his Army, perceiving they could not without manifest Peril enter the Bounds of the Province, confidering how the Army pursued them, nor yet range abroad on thieving at their pleasure, stayed together in the Country of the Cadurci. There Luterius (who in times past while he was in prosperity, was able to sway greatly with his Countrymen, and had gotten great estimation among the rude People, as one that was ever a beginner of new defigns) took with his own and Drapes's Forces, a Town called Uxellodunum, which had been formerly in his tuition, a place excellently well fortified by the natural fituation thereof, and caused the Townsmen to joyn with him.

To this Town Caninius forthwith came; and perceiving that all parts of the fame were fortified with craggy Cliffs, infomuch that though no Man were there to defend it, yet were it a hard matter for Men in their Armour to get up; knowing also that the Moveables of the Townsmen were great, which if they should go about to carry privily away, they could not escape either our Horsemen or Footmen: He divided his Cohorts into three parts, and made three Camps upon a very high ground; from which by degrees, as his Army was able, he determined to draw a Rampier and Trench round about the Town.

The Townsmen perceiving that, and remembring the miserable Condition of Alexia, feared the like Siege. Luterius especially, who had tafted the imart of that misfortune, advised them to lay for Corn beforehand: Whereupon they determined by general consent, that leaving a part of the Army for the defence of the Town, Luterius and Drapes with the best provided should go forth to fetch in Corn. This counsel being approved of, the next Night Drapes and Luterius leaving two thousand Armed Men behind them, drew the rest out of the Town. After a few Days being abroad, they brought in a great quantity of Grain out of the Country of the Cadurci, who partly were willing to help them therewith, and partly durft not withftand their taking it, as not being able to make their part good againft them. Oftentimes also they would fly our in the Night, and affault the Caffes of our Camp. Upon which confideration C. Caminius stayed the making of Fortifications round about the Town, left he should not be able to defend the Circumvallation when it was finished, or else should be for-

and the second s

When they had gotten together a great quantity of Grain, Drapes and Luterius took up their flandings not above ten Miles from the Town, the better at times to convey it in; and they parted the Charge between them. Drapes tarried behind with part of the Army to keep the Camp: Lucrius drave the Beafts with their Carriages toward the Town: And fetting Guards there for his defence, about ten of the Clock in the Night purposed by narrow ways through the Woods to convey the Corn into the Town. The Watchmen of our Camp hearing the noise of their Feet, and the Scouts which were fent out reporting what was a doing, Caninius caufed his Cohorts to arm themselves quickly, and about break of Day made attempt out of the next Caffles upon the Foragers. Who being frighted with the suddenness of the Michief, fled to their Guards. Which as foon as our Men perceived, they flew more fiercely upon them, and suffered none to be taken alive. Luterius fled from thence with a few, but returned not to his Camp.

After this good fuccess, Caninius understood by his Prisoners that part of the Army was behind in the Camp with Drapes, not above twelve Miles off. Which when he had learned by many to be truth, believing that one of the Generals already put to flight, the remnant of the Army being terrified might eafily be overthrown; he thought it a great piece of happiness, that none escaped from the Slaughter into the Camp, to carry tidings of the Mishap to Drapes. And forassuch as he saw there was no danger in putting the matter to tryal, he sent all his Horsemen and the German Footmen, fwift and nimble Fellows, before, to the Camp of his Enemies. One of his Legions he left in his Camp, and the other eafed of all Carriages, he took with him.

When he came near his Enemies, his Scouts that he had fent before, brought word that (as the cuftom of the barbarous Nations commonly is) they had abandoned the higher Ground, and encamped themselves by the River side; and that our Horse and the Germans had flown upon them suddenly ere they were aware, and charged them. Upon the receit of this News, he hafted forward with his Legion well armed and well appointed: And so the fign being given suddenly on all fides, And to the fight occurs given houself, on all the higher places were taken by our Men. At the doing whereof, the Germans and our Cavalry feeing the Enfigns of our Legion, fought very floutly: And by and by all our Cohorts charged upon them round; fo that in the conclusion, they were all either flain, or Prisoners, and a great booty taken. Drapes himself was also taken in the same conflict.

Caninius having done his work fuccefsfully, without almost any hurt at all to his Soldiers, returned to beliege the Town: And having now destroyed his Enemy without, for fear of whom he could not before divide his Garrisons, nor environ the Town with Fortifications; he commandeth the Works to be carried on round about the Town. The next day came thither C. Fabius with his Forces, and took another part of the Town to befiege.

CESAR'S Wars in GALLIA.

CHAP. IX.

Casar having punished Guturvatus for the revolt of the Carnutes, joyneth with Caninius and Fa-bius before Uxellodunum. Upon his depriving them of Water the Town yieldeth. Cafar cutteth off their Right-Hands.

N the mean time, C.efar left M. Antonius the Ouæstor with fifteen Cohorts among the Bellovaci, to prevent any new confederacies among them for the future: And he himmore Hostages, and with comfortable Words

When he came amongst the Carnutes, in whose Country (as C.efar hath declared in his former Commentary) the War first of all began, inafmuch as he perceived them to be chiefly afraid, as being confcious to themselves of their fault, to the intent he might the more speedily deliver the rest of the State from fear, he demanded Guturvatus, the ring-leader of that Mischief, and raiser of the Rebellion, to be delivered unto him to be punished: Who albeit he trufted not himself with his own Country-men, yet all Men made fo diligent fearch for him. that he was foon found out and brought to the Camp. C.efar, contrary to his own Nature, was compelled to punish him whether he would or no, by the importunity of his Souldiers, who imputed all the Dangers and Losses that they had fustained by this War, unto Guturvatus: infomuch that his Body after it was in a manner whipped to Death, was beheaded.

While Casar tarried here, he was advertised by feveral Letters from Caninius, what was done to Drapes and Luterius, and how the Townsmen persevered in their resolution : the fmall Number of whom although he despised, yet he deemed their wilfulness worthy of severe Punishment; lest they might give occasion to all Gallia, to think that they wanted not Strength, but Conftancy and Resolution to withstand the Romans; or left by their Example, other Cities of Gallia, trufting to the advantage and strength of Places, should attempt to recover their I iberty: especially seeing he was fure that all the Gauls knew his Commission lasted but one Summer longer, which if they could hold out, they should need to fear no danger after. And therefore leaving Q. Calenus the Legate behind with twon Legions to follow leafurely after him by eafy Marches, he himself with all his Cavalry made hafte to Caninus.

When Cafar, contrary to all Mens expectation, was come to Uxellodunnm, and faw the Twon environed with Fortifications, perceiving that it was not for him to break up his Siege on any Condition, and learning moreover by Runaways that the Town had great abundance of Victuals: He affayed to cut off the Water from

There was a River that ran through the bottom of the Valley, which environed well-near all the Hill whereon the Town flood, from whence the Descent was rough and steep on all sides. The Nature of the Place would not fuffer this Stream to be turned any other way. For it ran in such fort at the very Foot of the Hill, that there could be no Ditch cut low enough to drain it. The Townsmen had hard and very steep coming down to it, insomuch that if our Men withstood them, length the Veins of the Spring were cut off with-they could not without Wounds or danger of in the Ground by Mines, and turned another get up the fteep Hill again. Which diffress of theirs Casar well knowing, placed Archers and Slingers, and other Artillery also, against such places where the easiest coming down was, to keep the Townsmen from the Water of the River: who afterward came for Water all to one Place. For under the very Walls of the Town there gushed out a great spring of Water on that side where there was a space almost of three hundred Foot not encompassed with the River.

Now whilst all the rest wished, and only Ca-Car perceived, that this Spring might be taken from the Town, though not without great Dafelf vifited the other States, charging them with mage; he began to raife Vines directly against it toward the Hill, and to make Mounts, with great labour and continual fighting. For the Townf-men came runing down from the higher Ground. and fought with our Men at a distance without danger, wounding many of them that preffed up too forwardly. Notwithstanding our Men were nothing deterred from bringing forward their Vines, endeavouring to overcome the crabbedness of the Place, with their Labour and Works. At the same time they drew privy Mines to the Head of the Spring, which kind of Work they might do without any Danger or Miftruft of their Enemies. A mount was cast up fix Foot high, and thereupon was raifed a Tower of Ten Stories: not fuch a one as might equal the Height of the Walls, (for that was not poffi-ble to be done any way) but such a one as might exceed the top of the Spring. From which conveying Darts with Engines to the Brim of the Spring, to that the Townsmen could not fetch Water without Danger, not only all forts of Cattle, but also a great Number of Men died

> The Townsmen greatly astonished hereat, filled Barrels with Grease, Pitch, and Shingles, and fetting them on Fire, rolled them down upon our Works, and at the fame time also fought very desperately, with the peril of fighting to keep the Romans from quenching the Fire. Suddenly there was a great Flame in our Works. For whatfoever was thrown down from that fleep Place, the same staying against the Vines and Rampier, took hold upon the things that flayed them. On the other fide, our Souldiers, albeit they were hindred both with the dangerousness of the Encounter, and with the disadvantage of the Place, yet they bare out all things with a ftout Courage. For the thing was done both in an eminent Place, and also in the fight of our Army: and a great Cry was raifed on both fides. So that every Man as far as he could, especially the most daring, (to the intent his Valour might the better be known and testified) ventured himfelf upon the Fire, and the Weapons of his Ene-

Cafar when he faw many of his Men wounded, commanded his Cohorts to climb up the Hill on all fides of the Town, and to raife a Shout as if they purposed to scale the Walls. Wherewith the Townsmen being frighted, forasmuch as they knew not what was doing in other Places, called back their Men from affaulting our Works, and placed them upon the Walls. So our Men having respite from fighting, did quickly either quench the Works that were on fire, or elfe cut them off from the reft.

The Townsmen stubbornly standing out, tho' they had loft a great part of their Men by Thirst, and continuing still unanimously resolved, at their Lives, either come down to the River, or way: By means whereof the Fountain of running Water was presently dried up. Which so daunted the Heatrs of the Defendants, who believed the Heatrs of the Defendants who believed the Heatrs of th ed it could not be done by the Wit of Man, but came to pass by the Will of the Gods; that when they faw there was no other Remedy, they yielded themselves.

Cafar being affured that his Clemency was fufficiently known to all People, and therefore he needed to fear that it would be imputed to the cruelty of his Nature, if he dealt fomething harsh-ly with them; and besides that, considering with himself, that it might well be thought he little regarded the good fuccess of his Counsels and Undertakings, if by fuffering fuch things Unpunished, others should be encouraged to rebel in divers Places: he thought it requisite to hold the rest in awe by the Punishment of these. And therefore he cut off the Hands of as many of them as were able to bear Arms, and let them live ftill, that his Leg the Punishment of such wicked Men might be toccuma. more manifest to the World.

be of greater Authority in all Gallia. Two more he placed amongst the Treviri, in the borders of the Carnutes, to be a flay to all the Country that lay upon the Sea-coaft. The other two he placed in the borders of the Lemovici, not far from the Arverni: That so there might not be any part of Gallia without an Army.

After he had tarried a few Days in the Pre-vince, and there speedily taken cognizance of all their Courts, fitting upon publick Controverfies, and rewarded fuch as had deferved well, (for he had a great defire to understand how every Man had carried himself towards the Commonweal during the general Rebellion of all Gallia, which he had born out through the faithfulness and affiftance of the said Province) as soon as he had dispatched these things, he returned to his Legions into Belgium, and wintered at Neme-

CHAP. X.

Drapes dieth. Luterius brought to Cæfar. Labienus's good Success against the Treviri. Cafar after his expedition into Aquitania, putteth his Army into Winter-quarters.

Rapes, whom I declared to have been taken by Caninius, whether it were for Vexation and Grief that he was in Bands, or for fear of more heavy punishment, fasted a few Days from Meat, and so starved.

At the fame time Luterius, that escaped by flight from the Battle (as I shewed before) fell into the Hands of Epafnactus the Arvernian. For in often shifting from Place to Place, he was fain to venture himself upon the Courtefy and Civility of many, because he thought he could never conrinue any long time in one Place without Danger, his Heart mifgiving him how much he had deferved to have Cafar his Enemy. Epafnactus the Arvernian being a faithful Friend to the People of Rome, as foon as he had gotten him into his Hands, brought him without further delay bound unto Cafar.

In the mean time Labienus warreth prosperously against the Treviri: And having slain many both of the Treviri and also of the Germans, who were ready to affift any Man against the Romans, got the Chief of them alive into his Hands; among whom was Surus the Heduan, a Man of great Valour and Noble Birth, who alone of the Hednans had unto that Day continued in Arms against the People of Rome.

Cafar knowing thereof, and forafmuch as he faw his Affairs went well forward in all parts of Gallia, weighing himself how all Celtica and Belgica where the former Summers conquered and fubdued, and that he had never all this while vifited Aquitania, only he had made a kind of entrance into it by certain Victories gotten by P. Crassus: He marched thither with two Legions, with intent to bestow the latter part of the Summer there. Which thing (as he had done all others before) he dispatched quickly and luckily. For all the States of Aquitania fent Ambaffadors unto him, and gave him Hoftages.

After the accomplishment of these things, he went to Narbone with his Guard of Horlemen, and fent his Foot into their Winter-quarters by his Legates. Four Legions he placed in Belgium under M. Antonius, C. Tribonius, P. Viti-again upon the Energy, put them back. Many of nius, and Q. Tullius, Legates. Two he quar-the Energies by the violent charge of our Men

CHAP. XI.

Comius of Arras overthrown in a Battle of Horse by C. Volusenus, submitteth to M. Antonius, and receiveth Pardon.

Hile he was there, he understood that Comius of Arras had encountred with his Cavalry. For Antonius being come into his Winter-quarters, and the City of Arras continuing firmly Loyal, Comius, who after his Wound that we spake of before, was wont still to be ready at hand to his Countrymen at every Turn, to the intent that if they would begin any new rifing, they should not want a Head and a Captain for the War: as long as the City continued obedient to the Romans, he with his Horsemen maintained himfelf and his followers by thieving, for laying the Ways, he cut off many Convoys that were going with Provision to the Roman Garrisons. C. Volu-Senus Quadratus, the General of the Horse, was appointed to winter in the same Place with Antonius: Him did Antonius fend to pursue the Horse of his Enemies. Volusenus, beside the singular Valour that was in him, did also bear a great Hatred toward Comius, and for that cause was the more willing to execute the thing that was commanded him. Wherefore placing divers Ambushes, he oftentimes set upon Comius's Horsemen, and worsted them.

At last, when the contention grew more Vehement, and that Volusenus, defirous to cut off Comius himself, followed him somewhat more eagerly with a finall Party, and Comius on the other fide fled the faster away, thereby to draw him farther from his Company; at length espying his Advantage, Comius suddenly cried out to all his Men, that as they were true unto him they should stand to him, and not suffer the Wound that was given him basely under colour of Friendfhip, to be unrevenged: And therewithal turning his Horse, he runneth from the rest of his Company upon Volusenus. All his Horse followed, and because there were but a few of our Men, they made them retreat, and purfued them. Comius putting Spurrs to his Horic, encountred the Horse of Quadratus, and with his Spear thrust olusenus by great Violence through the Thigh.

When our Horse saw that their Captain was wounded, they bestirred themselves, and turning taken Prisoners. As Comsus escaped any farther mishap by the swiftness of his Horse: so our General being by him in this Battle fore wounded was carried into the Camp in such a case, that it was not likely he should have lived. And Comius, whether it were that he thought himself sufficiently revenged, or because he had lost a great part of his Men, fent Meffengers to Antonius, giving Hoftages, and affuring him that he would continué where it should please him to appoint, and do whatfoever he should command him. Only one request he made, wherein he befought him to bear with his fearfulness, that he might not be forced to come in the fight of any Roman. Which request Amonius judging to proceed out of a real fear, and not without good cause, he pardoned him according to his desire, and receiving his Hoftages.

CHAP. XII.

While Cæsar is busic in quieting and ordering things in Gallia, and visiting some municipal Towns in Italy, his Enemies conspire against him at Rome.

Uring the time that Cafar wintred in Belgium, his chief purpose was, to keep the States in amity, and to take away all hope and occasion of War: For he intended nothing less, than the carriage of his business so, as he should be constrained to have War at the time of his departure : left when he should withdraw his Army, he should leave any Troubles behind, which all Gallia could willingly engage in, so that it might be without present Danger. And therefore by entreating the Cities honourably, by rewarding the Noble-men highly, by burdening the Country with no new impo-fitions, he eafily kept all Gallia, which now was tired out with io many unfortunate Battels, in quiet and obedience.

Winter being over, Cafar, contrary to his cufrom, hasteth into Italy with as much expedition as might be, to treat with the municipal ed should not be done : and so ruling the matter Towns and Colonies, and to commend unto them the Suit of his Ouæstor M. Antonius for the Priefthood. For he made all the Friends for him he could, both because the same Antonius was his very dear Friend, whom he had fent before to fue for that promotion, as also to oppose the factions and unreasonable proceedings of a few Men, who by putting Antonius beside his purpole, sought to disparage Cassar now going out of his

Albeit he had tidings by the way before he came near Italy, that Antony was made Augur, yet he thought he had as good reason as before, to visit the municipal Towns and Colonies, both to give them thanks for appearing in the busi-ness, and for their Civility shewed in the behalf of Antony; as also to commend unto them his own case, touching the honour which he purpofed to fue for the next year : And that the rather, because his Adversaries proudly made their brag, that L. Lentulus and C. Marcellus were created Confuls, to deprive Cofar of all Honour and Authority: and that the Confulship was wrested through the had more Voices on his Side, because he was a familiar Friend of no Man need doubt but that Cassar was spoil-Casar's, and had been engaged unto him as his

Towns, was entertained with extraordinary Affe- hither Gallia, to be delivered to him according to

were beaten off, and wounded: Of whom some ction and Respect: That being his first coming were overthrown in the chase, and some were from the Wars in Gallia. Nothing was omitted raken Prisoners. As Comius escaped any farther ing of their Gates, Ways, and Places where Cafar should pass. All the People came forth with their Children to meet him by the Way; Sacrifices were every where offered; the Temples and Market-places were hanged with Clothes of Tapestry: So that a Man would have thought by the expressions of Joy, there had been some great Triumph expected and provided for. So great Coftliness was among the richer Sort, and such hearty Expressions was among the meaner Sort.

When Cafar had lightly paffed through all the Countries of Gallia Togata, he returned with all speed to his Army at Nemetocenna, and calling all his Legions out of their Winter-quarters into the Country of the Treviri, he went thither, and there mustred them. T. Labienus he made Governour of Gallia Togata, thereby to get himself the more Favour and Furtherance in his Suit for the Confulship. He himself removed from one Place to another, accordingly as he found it ne-ceffary for Health. And albeit he heard oftentimes that Labienus was folicited ftrongly by his Enemies, and was also advertised how it was carried on by a fmall Faction at Rome, to take away part of his Army from him by a Decree of the Senate: yet notwithstanding he neither gave Credit to any thing that was reported of Labienus, nor would be drawn to do any thing contrary to the Authority of the Senate. For he believed that if the Senators might give their Voices freely, he should easily obtain his purpose.

For C. Curio Tribune of the People, who had taken upon him the defence of Cafar's cause and dignity, had oftentimes propounded to the Senate, that if the fear of Cafar's Army prejudiced any Man, and feeing that the Authority and Power of Pompey did not a little keep the Courts in awe; that both of them might lay down their Arms and difmiss their Armies: And so should the City be at liberty to use her own Right as the pleafed. This he not only propounded, but began to divide the Senate about it: Which the Confuls and the Friends of Pompey commandas they lifted, they departed. This was a great Testimony of the whole Senate, and agreeable to their former Act.

For Marcellus the Year before opposing Cafar's Dignity, contrary to the Law of Pompey and Crassus, and having put up a Bill to the Senate for the discharge of Casar before the time of his Commission was expired; when they had given their Voices, Marcellus, who fought all his Honour by working Spight against Cxfar, departed aside, and the Senate sell all of them quite upon other matters. This did not at all daunt the Spirits of C.efar's Enemies, but rather ftirred them up to strengthen their Party, and thereby to compel the Senate to approve of that which they had determined. Hereupon a decree was made, that Cneize Pompeius should send one Legion, and Casfar another, to the War against the Parthians. But it was eafily discerned that both these Legions were taken from Casar. For the first Legion, which Cneius Pompeius had fent unto Casar levied in ed at the Pleasure of his Enemies, yet he sent Pompey his Legion again: and of his own Forces, he Cafar at his coming among the municipal ordered the fifteenth Legion which he had in the the Decree of the Senate. In the room where- in obedience. This done, he took his journey of he fent the thirtcenth Legion into Italy, to lie into Italy. in Garrison in the same place from whence the fifteenth was drawn.

Quarters. C. Trebonius with four Legions he placed in Belgium : C. Fabius with as many amongft the Hedui. For this he thought would be the best way to keep Gallia in most safety and

When he came thirher, he understood that the two Legions which he had difmiffed; which by Then he distributed his Army into Winter the Decree of the Senate should have been employed in the Parthian War, were by C. Marcelhus the Conful delivered to Pompey, and kept fill in Italy. Although by this dealing it was evident to all the World, what was intended against Casar, quiet, if the Belge, who were the most Valorous, and the Hedui, who were of most Authority, had Forces quartered among them to keep them

OBSERVATIONS upon the Eighth Commentary of the Wars in GALLIA.

Ome attribute the fo frequent revolts of the Gauls to their changeable and impatient bumour, which cannot endure to be Lorded over by Strangers: and others, to the too great Clemency of Cæsar. I grant that Clemency apt to pardon emboldens to Revolt; for that we easily forget all benefits which do not intirely establish our Liberty: But if Cruelty causeth them less frequent, yet it renders them more dangerous; for that when despair driveth Men thereunts, and that the hope of safety resteth only in Victory, the revolted become all valiant, obstinate, constant, and faithful to the end; which never falleth out where there is hope of the which never falleth our where there is loope of the Enemies Cliemency. We have here plentiful Exam-ples thereof. Caclas in the greater pars of the Re-volts of the Gauls hath often found great facilities to reduce them to his obedience, by reason of his Clemency; which hath been a powerful means for him to make divisions amongst themselves, and to prevent oblitinacy in their Revolts: And if some-times is hath so happened that he hath used several-city, it hat heen oxidinced by soul and severalrity, it hath been occasioned by foul and unworthy Alls; as when the Veneti under publick faith im-prisoned the Roman Officers, which came to them to buy Corn for the sustenance of the Army. But I cannot excuse that of Uxellodunum. On the contrary, the cruelties of the King of Spain executed by the Duke of Alva, drove poor Filhermen fo into delpair, that they have shaken off in in-supportable Tode; and with an admirable constancy have maintained and enriched themselves, and are grown so Potent, as that they are able to resist bim by Land, and by Sea take from bim his Treafure in the Indies.

Caesar sheweth us also by his care and industry to get intelligence of the Enemies proceedings (whether by taking Prisoners in the Field, or by having goed Spirst the advantage which may be made thereof; many of his fuccefful defigns bowing been founded thereupon, there being great advantage in the attempting them; for that he which affaileth hath more Courage than he which is affailed, and always believeth the Affailant to be the franger; not knowing what part he will affail, and ever jealons that he hath some secret intelligence. Briefly, all that a well-exercised and well-disciplia ned Army is able to do in such a case, is to dea nea Army is able to do its juch a cafe, is to dea fend is fell; but where are new-levied Soldiers, fall ant great disorders: Which was the reason be took so much care to sertisc his Camp very strongly; to the end he might defend it and all his Baggage with a sew Man, and might withous on baggage with a few Men, and might without danger execute many brave defign; being always affured of his retreat. Let us farther take a view of the Siege of Uxellodunum: Which Celar judging to be impregnable by force, and knowing it to be well provided of Corn, undertaketh by a great and dangerous labour to keep them from Water, which was from a Fountain without the Town, from whence they were only supplied: Which 10mm, from whence they were only supplied: Writch
the befieged perceiving, having fet fire on Caclar's Works, by a Sally they hindred him from quenching it. Caelar not being able to repulfe them by reason of the advantage of the place, resolveth to make an assault upon the Town; which appre-hension caused them to retreat.

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

Ome People impute the frequent Revolts of the Gauls to the fickleness of their Tem-per and their Impatience, which can abide per and their Impatience, which can ahide mong our Enemies, either by taking Prisoners in no Foreign Yoke; and others to Cæsar's the Field, or by keeping Spies among them, and extraordinary Clemency. I confess that Clemency Shews us the advantage of it. Several of his hap-which gives hopes of Pardon, sometimes Imboldens py Successes were grounded upon it, it being allow a Revols; by reason that Men easily forget kind-ways advantageous to attempt them, by reason that nesses which do not fully response the two ways advantageous to attempt them, by reason the new book Cruelty renders them less frequent, it makes them is Attack, whoever supposes the Assantage more dangerous, because that when Man Ast by than himself, does not know which was be will Despair, and have no hopes unless of Vistory, the Attack him, and dreads Treachery. Finally, all most Timoways become Valiant Oshimate. Constant when can be once in such as coshim to the constant of the coshimate and the constant of the sone in such as coshimated. more amogetous, occasife to when Neur Ad by Despair, and have no hopes unless of Vistory, the most Timorous become Valiant, Obstinate, Constant, and Faithful to the last, which never happens when People vely on the Clemency of their Enemies. These Wars afford us frequent Examples of it. Cæsar in most of the Revolts of the Gauls, has Caciat in moje of the Revolts of the Gauls, has often found it eafle to tring them back to their Allegiance, by his Clemency, which provid a puissant Motive to create divisions among them, and to hinder them from being oblinate in their Revolts. And when ever he chanc'd to exert any Severity And when ever be chance to exert any severity it was grounded on fome belg tumority Aftion; as when those of Vannes contrary to the Law of Nations shope the Roman Knights, who came to buy Corn of them for the Maintenance of the Army, (but I cannot excuse that of Cadenat;) On the contrary, the King of Spain's Cruelties, Executed by the Duke of Alva, reduc'd miserable Executed by we have of MNA, reause a myeraous Fishermen to despair, who thereupon, shook off his Insupportable Toke, and by an admirable Constancy have maintain'd themselves, increased their Dominion, and are become so formidable, that they are able to Resist him in these Parts, and to snatch his Treasures in the Indies.

Cæsar teaches us also by his Care and Industry, to inform our selves with what passes among our Enemies, either by taking Prisoners in that can be done in such a case by a brave welldisciplin'd Army, is to defend themselves. But it occasions great disorders among raw Soldiers. And therefore he took fo much care to Fortifie his camp, in order to Guard it, and all his Baggage, with a small number of Men, and to be able to persorm great Executions without danger, being always certain of a Retreat.

Let us also consider the Siege of Cadenac. Let us also consider the Siege of Cadenac. Cacíar judging it Impregnable by open force, knowing that it was very well provided with Corn, undertakes a great and dangerous Labour to deprive them of the Water of a Fountain, which lay without the Town, and the only one that supply'd them. But the Bessegal perceiving it, put the Works on Fire, and endeavour'd by a Sally to prevent the Extinguishing of it, which Casíar observation and sinding that he could not repulse them, by reason of the advantage of the Place, be betongth himself to Storn the City, whereby he oblig'd them to Review. he oblig'd them to Retire.

OBSER.

OBSERVATIONS UPON

Cæsar's Commentaries

CIVIL WARS

HIM and POMPEY.

By CLEMENT EDMUNDS, Remembrancer of the City of London.

The First COMMENTARY of the Civil Wars.

The Argument.

His Commentary containeth the Motions and Contentions at Rome, concerning Cafar's giving up his Government: The rent in the State, upon the disagreement of the Senate: How either side bestirred themselves, to seize upon the Provinces. Pompey got the East, and Casar the West part of the Empire; and defeated Afranius and Petreius in Spain.

CHAP. I.

The Senate's affection on Cafar's behalf.

Etters being delivered by Fabius to the Confuls from C. Cæsar, it was hardly obtained by the extreme importunity of the Tribunes, by the extreme importunity of the Tribunes, to get them read in the Senate: but to conful thereof, or to bring the Contents in question, would not be granted. The Consuls propounded businesses conful, proststed bits assistance should not be wanting, neither to the Senate not to the Commonweal, if they would speak their minds freely and while the series of the Content of the Cont boldly: But if they respected Cæsar, and had an eye to his favour (as in former times they usually construction of the Mannet of the School of foip and good acceptance. To the same effect spake Scipio; That Pompey was refolved to be aiding to the Commonweal, if the Scnate would stand to him: But if they temporized, and dealt coldly, in vain hereafter should they seck aid from him, albeit they

ing present, and the Senate kept within the City. ing projent, and the senate kep whith the City. Some others spake more temperately. As first M. Marcellus, who thought it not convenient that the Senate should bring these things in question, until they had made a levy of Soldiers throughout all Italy, soey our mane a tevy of Solater's torologoout all Italy, and smolled an Army; by whole protection, they might [afely and freely determine what they shought fit. As alfo M. Calidius, who thought is requisite, that Pompey [hould go to his Provinces and Governments, to remove all occasions of taking Arms: vernments, to remove all occasions of taking Arms: For Casta baving two Legions newly taken from bim, feared that Pompey kept them near about the City to his prejudice. And likewise M. Russis, varying sense few words, declared himself of Calidius's opinion. All these were bitterly reproved by L. Lentulus the Cossus, who utterly denied to publish what Calidius had sentenced. Marcellus scared with these Calidius had sentenced Marcellus scared with the self-word of the Combile the terror of the Combile the terror. So, what with the clamour of the Conful, the terrour of the present Army, and the threatmen used by Pompey's Faction, most of the Senators were compelled against their will, to allow that which Scipio thought fit: which was, that by a certain day Calar should dissolve and dismis his Army; which if he did refuse to do, that then be openly shewed himself an Enemy to the Commonweal. M. Antonius and betagier found very seek as from Scipio's feemed an Enemy to the Commonweal. M. Antonius and to come from Pompey's own mouth, he himself beL. Cassius, Tribunes of the People, did oppose this Cc 2

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

Ome People impute the frequent Revolts of the Gauls to the fickleness of their Temno Foreign Yoke; and others to Cælar's the Field, or by keeping Spies among them, and extraordinary Clemency. I courfes that Clemency flows us the advantage of it. Several of his heat to a Revolt; by reason that Men easily forget kind-ways advantageous to attempt them, by reason that Men easily forget kind-ways advantageous to attempt them, by reason that nessess which do not fully restore Liberty. But if he who Attacks has more Courage than he who Cruelty renders them less frequent, it makes them is Attackd, whoever supposes the Assailance that when Men 482 h. Cruety renders toem less frequent, it mades toem more dangerous, because that when Men Alt by Despair, and have no hopes unless of Victory, the most Timorous become Valiant, Obstinate, Constant, most Timorous become Valiant, Obstinate, Constant, and Eathsful to the last, which never happens when People rely on the Clemency of their Enemies. These Wars assigned us frequent Examples of it. Castar in most of the Revolts of the Gauls, has often found it easte to bring them back to their Allegiance, by his Clemency, which provid a puissant Masive to create divisions among them, and to hinder them from being obstinate in their Revolut. And when ever he chance to exert any Severity it was grounded on some base unworthy Action; as when those of Vannes contrary to the Law of Nations stops the Roman Knights, who came to buy Corn of them for the Maintenance of the Army, (but I cannot excuse that of Cadenat;) Army, (but I cannot excule that of Uadenat;)
On the contrary, the King of Spain's Cruelites, Executed by the Duke of Alva, reduc'd miferable Fiftermen to defpair, who thereupon, flook off his Infupportable Toke, and by an admirable Confiancy have maintain'd themfelver, increased their Dominion, and are become so formidable, that they are able to Resist him in these Parts, and to snatch his Treasures in the Indies.

Cæsar teaches us also by his Care and Industry, to inform our selves with what passes a-mong our Enemies, either by taking Prisoners in be who Attacks has more courage tons to who is Attack, whoever supposes the Assainst stronger than himself, does not know which way he will Attack him, and dreads Treachery. Finally, all that can be done in such a case by a brave wellthat can be done in Just a case of a brave wend diciplind Army, is to defend themselves. But it occasions great disorders among raw Soldiers. And therefore he took so much care to Fortisie his Camp, in order to Guard it, and all his Baggage, with a small number of Men, and to be able to perform great Executions without danger, being always certain of a Retreat.

Let us also consider the Siege of Cadenac. Let us also consider the Siege of Cachara. Cachar judging it Impregnable by open force, knowing that it was very well provided with Corn, undertakes a great and dangerous Labour to deprive them of the Water of a Fountain, which lay without the Town, and the only one that fupply'd them. But the Befeged perceiving it, put the Works on Fire, and endeavour'd by a Sally so occurs the Festivatificities of it which Cache the Works on Fire, and endeavour dy a Sally to prevent the Extinguilibring of it, which Celar observing, and finding that he could not repulse them, by reason of the advantage of the Place, he bethought himself to Storm the City, whereby he obliged them to Retire.

OBSER-

OBSERVATIONS Cæsar's Commentaries CIVIL WARS

Betwixt

HIM and POMPEY.

By CLEMENT EDMUNDS, Remembrancer of the City of London.

The First COMMENTARY of the Civil Wars.

The Argument.

This Commentary containeth the Motions and Contentions at Rome. concerning Cafar's giving up his Government: The rent in the State. upon the disagreement of the Senate: How either fide bestirred themselves, to seize upon the Provinces. Pompey got the East, and Casar the West part of the Empire; and defeated Afranius and Petreius in Spain.

CHAP. I.

The Senate's affection on Cafar's behalf.

Etters being delivered by Fabius to the Confuls from C. Cæsar, it was hardly obtained by the extreme importunity of the Tribune;
to get them read in the Senate: but to confult thereof, or to bring the Contents in question, would not be granted. The Confult propounded businesses conful proceed businesses of the City. L. Lentulus, Conful, protified bit affishmen should not be wanting, neither to the Senate nor to the Common-weal, if they would speak their minds freely and boldly: But if they respected Cæsar, and had an ing present, and the Senate kept within the City. Some others spake more temperately. As first M. Marcellus, who thought it not convenient that the Senate should bring these things in question, until they had made a levy of Soldiers throughout all Italy, they had made a levy of Soldier's throughout all Italy, and involved an Army; by whose protection, they might safely and freely determine what they thought sit. At all M. Calidius, who thought it requisite, that Pompey Bould go to his Provinces and Governments, to remove all occasions of taking Arms: For Casata having two Legions newly taken from him, feared that Pompey kept them near about the City to his prejudice. And likewise M. Rusus, varying some sew words, declared himself of Calidius's opinion. All these were bitterly reproved by L. Lentulus the Cossilis who tutterly denied to publish what Calidius had sentenced. Marcellus scared with these Memaces, vertailed his continue. weat, if toey we was peak and bed an the best of the properties of the frequency of the frequency of the senate; neither the frequency of the frequency of the senate; neither the frequency of the senate into Calar's friend of the present of the threating used by frip and good acceptance. To the same effelt shade the property of the senate would fland to him: the senate with the senate with the senate. The senate when the senate we can have a senate when the to; and many sharp and hard censures were given upon the same: For according as any one spake most bitterly and cruelly, so they were most highly commended by Cæfar's Enemies.

The First OBSERVATION.

A S the former Commentaries do carry in their front the enfigns of Honour, displaying the Military Valour of the Roman People in the Continent of Gallia, and other Kingdoms of Warlike Nations: So are these Relations branded in the Forehead with a note of Infamy, and Titled with the direful name of Civil War. An odious and detestable Cause, ill besitting the Integrity of that State, or the excellency of the Actors, which are chief in this Tragedy; who neglecting all that might either enlarge the Empire, or repair Rome's Honour for the loss of Crassus, chose rather to imbrew their ambitious Swords in the Blood of (a) Pares A- their own Country, (a) Eagle against Eagle, and quales, & pila Pile against Pile, in a War which could challenge smanta per a gainst rise, in a War which could challenge in Bala gai no Triumph. If it be now demanded, as former-placest studies by it was,

Quis furor, 6 Cives? que tanta licentia ferri? What fury's this? what these licentious Arms?

Was it Pempey's Ambition, or Cafar's high Thoughts, that bereft the State of Liberty, with the loss of so many Romans? It were besides the scope of these discourses, to lay an imputation upon either of those Worthies; the one being chief Affiftant to the Empire, when the put off her Confulary Government, and the other fitting fole at the Helm, directing a course to fetch in (b) Arma cir many Cassars. Only this I may truly say with villa neque Tacitus (b); That Civil Wars were never fet on before, per bo foot by justifiable courses. Yet for the Readers nas Arres pol- better direction, and for opening the truth of this Story ((c) which is more to be regarded than (c) Amics either Socrates or Plato's friendship) it shall not Secrates, amic be impertment to fetch the causes of this War a magis amica little higher in a word than these Commentaries do afford them. The Histories of that Age do all intimate, that when Rome had ennobled Pompey with her fer-Confrantine vice, and stiled him by imployments with the Title of Greatness, as a satisfaction for the injutheres, that rics done unto his Father; he (forgetting the as Edit, that Rights of a State, which challengeth the Renown of other Mens labours, and fuffereth no Subject all Victories foods be at to be co-partner therein, further than by approfronta of all residues to bation of Service and Obedience) affumed to him-bins, although felf the Honour due to the Commonweal, and became proud of that which was none of his: In which conceit, the ambition of his Spirit kept no measure, but over-valued his merits so far, that he thought himself rather a Soveraign than a Servant. So easily are Men bewitched, when the favour of a State hath once made them Absolute, and put it felf under the awc of private Command. In this height of Greatness and Authority, he made way for Casar, his Father-in-law; who had a Spirit as subject to Ambition, and as capable of publick Dignities, as any one amongst all the Pa-(4) Fonte ca- trician Families: And upon the ending of his first dit modico, Consulship, in the Year of Rome 695, obtained perulgue um the Government of Gallia Transalpina, and like-perulgue undis Ru-wife of that other Gallia which they called Cifal-Punices Ru-bicon, & Gal- pina, containing the Countries that lie between liea certus the Alpes and the (d) little River Rubicon, toge-

Decree. Their opposition was instantly spoken un-favour and mediation of (e) Pompey, and the (e) Fastia wind domining affiftance of Craffus, for five Years longer, with communis Reaffiltance of Craffus, for the Teals adjust, with communic a redoubling of his Forces. But after that Craffus ma-pen was flain in the Parthian War, and that Julia, Craff. Craff. was hall in the two prompts had Married, crajo, Cafar's Daughter, whom Pompts had Married, was deceased (whereby Cafar stood single, with- (a) Nam sia was utceased (whetery vapar most lingue, with (a) Nom file out any tie of alliance, or other (a) Counterpois frame of office of a third party, to hold them balanced at the grat bein me, fame weight as they flood while Craffur lived) due musa. Pompey jealous of those Victories and passages of Arms which Casar had atchieved by his Valour, (b) Notice and impatient of any (b) partner in point of Lord- fanita ficiethip; found means first to draw two Legions from tas, nee fide hip; found means first to draw two Legions from on the parthan War; and regni. Enniu. him, under colour of the Parthan War; and regni. Enniu. afterwards got a Decree of Senate, to fend him a jam ferre po Succeffour before his time was expired; and with- reft, Cafaroe al, to return as a private Person to Rome, to ren- Priorem, Pan der an account of his Actions during his imploy- Priorem Priorem. ment. Which Cafar taking as an affurance of his lib. 1. downfal, gave (c) huge fums of Money to gain (c) Ardus re Paulus Amylius, one of the Confuls, and C. Curio, non traders a Tribune of the People, to refift this Decree. mires. Mar-Howbeit, the fucceeding Confuls being both his tiel. Enemies, having no farther hope of repealing the fame, he intreated in the end, that he might hold only Gallia Cifaplina and Illyricum with two Legions, until he should obtain the Consuship; which was the effect of these Letters delivered by Fabius. And being denied by Pompey's Faction, in these partial and tumultuous affemblies of the (4) Sape me Senate, caused him to forseit his Loyalty to the join forsume.

State, verifying the old saying, (d) That often-locum said times an injury maketh way to a greater fortune. injuria. The Second OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the opposition of the Tribunes, it is Toe Tribune to be understood, that the People, eaten up of the people. with Usury and other grievous exactions, for look both the City and the Camp, when the State had War with the Volsei and the Æqui; and taking themselves to a Mountain near unto Rome, would not return from thence, until the Senate had given order for their grievances. In which Transaction it was agreed, that there should be Magistrates chosen out of the body of the People, to counterpoile the Power of the Senate, and to reftrain the boundless Authority of the Consuls: Which Office was reckoned in the number of their holieft things, never to be violated either in word or deed, but the offender should redeem it with the loss of his life. Their whole Power confifted in letting and hindering. As when either the Senate, or any one Senator, went about a matter which might be prejudicial to the People in general, or to any one of the Commonalty in particular; then did the Tribunes interpole their Authority, to frustrate and avert the same: Which was available, albeit the matter was gainfaid but by one Tribune only. By which intervention they kept the Senate in aweful moderation, and were always profitable to the State, but when they happened upon factious and turbulent Persons; howbeit, their Power was bounded with the Walls of Rome, and extended no further than the Gates of the City. Their Doors were never thut, but flood open night and day, for a refuge to such as should fly to them for fuccour: Neither was it lawful for them to be absent from Rome a whole day together. The Robes of their Magistracy were of Purple; as Cicero intimateth in his Oration Pro Cluentio. This Tribunitian Power began about the Year of Rome 260; was suppress'd by Sylla; restored by Pompey; and utterly taken away by the Emperour Constantine.

Lib I. that kind of If it be demanded what kind of Commonwealth this Roman Government was; it is to be underis of Rome stood, that upon the expulsion of their Kings, the (a) Libertain Sovereignty rested in their Consuls. For, as (a) Livy faith, there was nothing diminished of Kingsogn, quia de la commentation de the gram made Annual. But that held not long, for Publical diminuccola imparted this Sovereignty to the Commonalty, making it lawful to appeal from the Confuls guam fit ex to the People. Whereby (b) the Confular Sove-summers. Liv. reignty was diffolved, and the People took occafion to oppose themselves against the Fathers. (i) His legibis Hence grew the reciprocal Invectives between the Senate and the Tribunes; and when the Conful fent a (c) Serieant to the Tribune, the Tribune would fend a (d) Pursuevant to the Consul. And fo the Commonwealth halted between an Aristocracy and a Democracy, until at length the vogue of the Commonalty drew it to a perfect Democracy, and made their Acts of Senate of no value, unless they were ratified by the People. Howbeit, the Senate afforded always many famous and eminent Men, fuch as having inlarged the bounds of their Empire, and kept on foot their ancient Valour, and were the flower of that Cyneas inter- People, which Cyneas called A Town of Kings, Guainter People, which Cyneas called A Town of Kings, means a were confequently so engaged in the bussiness paragraph in the State, that matters were for the most paragraph carried as they stood affected; as appeareth by Bayan were, this passage of Cofar.

The Third OBSERVATION.

Fadim in a Cannell, is an Partiality are the bane of all Confultations: many to the Partiality are the bane of all Confultations: with private respects. And albeit the Gravity of the Roman Senate far exceeded all that can be fooken of other Councils of State, rectifying the inordinate affections of any Catiline that would lift up his head higher than his Fellows: Yet here it suffered equity and indifferency to be suppressed (a) Nom male with Faction, giving way to Violence, (e) which far impears, governeth all things untowardly, and with Cords of frimular of private hate oftentimes draweth the Commonwai odi per wealth into utter desolation. For prevention wai odi per whereof, the Athenians swore their Senators to makes in ex- make the common good the chiefest scope of all time. Tac. their Counsels: Implying thereby, that private 1. hill.

respects are always offensive to publick ends;

senator jura- and the State ever suffereth, when favour prevailbu fe preci- eth against the common profit.

Per pepuls and the Common profits.

Tully going about to direct a Counsellour in Demust. con. this behalf, only wisheth a Man to deliver fincerely what he thinketh of any matter, although he happen to ftand alone in his own conceit: For the iffue of a business doth not so much concern a Counsellour, as to speak truly his opinion thereof. And to that end, the custom of the Roman Senate was, that the youngest, and such as came last in place should declare themselves first; that they might not be forestalled in their Opinions. nor put besides that they would have spoken; together with the equality which it made of their Voices: For things first spoken, do always flick fastest in our apprehensions. And for that cause Theodorus (a Greek Tragedian) would never shew himself on the Stage after any other Actor; as holding the first passages to affect most the Spectators. Notwithstanding which Custom, it is reported that Casfar, in favour of Pompey, after their new-made Alliance, would take his Voice first, thereby to anticipate the opinion of others that should follow.

tery and Oftentation, both of himself and other great Friends, which were able to sway much, as well in the course of Justice as in the Commonwealth. Pompey, in his particular, was much provoked Pompeius ut Rompey, 11 DB particular, was must provoked Pompeius ut by Caclar's Enemies, and especially for that he could primum remember on Man to be his Equal. He was aliented pub. agged-altogether from Caclar's Friendship, and had reconquire to their common Enemies; the greatest animo pueme had been applied to Cacle with Values. part of whom were, by his means, gained to Cæsar, will valling in the time of their Alliance. He was also moved by the Dishonour which he had gotten by taking these

The Emperors (as it feemeth) took what place they pleased: For Tiberius in Marcellus's Tacit. i. cause, said, that he would sentence openly, and caule, taid, that ne would rememe openly, and upon Oath, that other Men might do the like; Whereunto Cn. Pijo replied; What place will thou take to declare thy felf. Cafar? For if thou speak first, I know how to follow; if last, I am afraid I shall diffent from thy opinion. But that which is most blameable in matter of Counsel is. when they come to the Senate-House as to a prize Tacit. 6.

Wherein L. Pife is deservedly com
tomal. mended, for that he never willingly shewed himfelf of a fervile Opinion; but when necessity forced him, he tempered it with Wildom. Neither is it the least mischief, that the condition of Sovereignty is fuch as will hardly endure reproof, but must be disguised, as Apollonius corrected Plusards. Lyons, by beating Dogs before them.

CHAP. II.

The Senate proceed against Casar with all eagerness.

He Senate rising a little before Night, were Casar. all sent for to Pompey. He commended the forward for what they had done, and confirmed them for after Resolutions; re-prehended such as shewed themselves indifferent, and stirred them up to more forwardness. Many which were of Pompey's former Armies were sent for, upon hope of Reward and Advancement : Many of the two Legions which lately came from Cæsar, were Commanded to attend; insomuch as the City Swarmed with Soldiers against the Election of new Magistrates. C. Curio called out the Tribunes of the People. All the Confuls Friends, the Kinsfolks and Allies of Pompey, and such others as had any former Enmity with Cæsar, were compelled into the Senate. By the presence and Votes of these Men the Weakest were terrified, the Doubtful confirmed, and the most part were cut off from giving absolute and free Voices. L. Piso the Censor, and L. Roscius the Prator, offered themselves to go to Casar, to advise him of these things; requiring but six days space to return an Answer. Others thought it sit, that Embassadors should be sent to Calar, to give him notice of the pleasure of the Senate. To all these was opposed, what the Consul Scipio, and Cato thought fit. Cato was incited, through former Enmity, and especially by the repulse of the Pratorship. Lentulus, out of a consideration of his great Debts, hoping to Command an Army, to Govern Provinces, and to receive the liberal acknowledgments of Kings, whom he should thereby procure to be stiled with the Title of Friends to the People of Rome; infomuch as he would not stick to boast in private, that he was like to prove a second Sylla, on whom the sovereign Command of the Empire would be conferred. Scipio was drawn on by the same hope of having the Government of a Province, or the Com-mand of an Army, which, by reason of his Alliance, he thought to share with Pompey; being otherwise afraid to be called into Justice; as also through flat-

If

Limes do Av-forisis different ther with Sclavonia, and four Legions of Soldiers, joint depends on Soldiers, and four Legions of Soldiers, nat area colo for the term of five Years. At the expiration with Lucan, whereof, his charge was continued, by the like lib. 1.

Syria, and using them for the Advancement of his own particular. Which things moved him to draw own particular. Which things moved that to diab the matter to Arms. For these respects all things were carried impetuously and consusedly; neither was there leisure given to Casar's Friends to adverwas source usquee given to Canas extends to dever-tife him thereof; nor yet to the Tribunes, to avoid the danger which was falling upon them, or to use their right of opposition which L. Sylla left unto them: But within seven days after they were entred into their Office, they were forced to shift for their fafety; notwithstanding, that the most turbulent and seditious Tribunes of former Times, were never put to look into their Affairs, or to give account of their Actions, before the eighth Month. In the end. they betook themselves to that extream and last Ast of Senate, which was never thought upon, but when the City was upon the point of burning, or in the most desperate estate of the Commonweal: That the Consuls, Prators, Tribunes of the People, and such as had been Consuls, and were resident near about the City, should endeavour that the Commonweal might not be endangered. This Act was made the Ne quid might not be endangered. This Act was made the respub. de- seventh of the Ides of January: So that the five riment as first days, in which the Senate might sit, after that par content as first days, in which the Senate might sit, after that can send the continues was entered into the Consultation only two days for the general Assembly of the Peoper was the play may be any and cruel Decrees were made against many them. natus habers the Authority of Casar, and against the Tribunes Cic. L. fratri. of the People, famous and worthy Men; who thereupon fled presently out of the City, and came to Cæsar : Woo being then at Ravenna, attended an Answer to his easie and modest Demands, if by any reasonable course matters might be drawn to a peace-

The First OBSERVATION.

IT is the condition of Humane Nature, to make good that which once it hath avouched, although the matter be of fmall consequence in particular, and tendeth rather to Infamy than to Profit; neither will it eafily be reclaimed by Motives of Reason, but is rather incited thereby (per Antiperistasin) to persist in wilfulness, than or, he ultio to hearken to that which is more convenient; espe-in quellu ba- cially when either Jealousie or Revenge do imply bear. Tac an advantage: For then Partiality keepeth no measure; but to justifie an Error, runs headlong into all Extremities, and flieth to the last Refuge of desperate and deplored cases, to make disordered Passions seem good Discretion. Which evidently appears by Pompey's Faction, in resolving of that desperate Act of Senate, which was never thought of but in most eminent danger. For as in foul Weather at Sea, when a Ship rideth in a dangerous Road, and through the violence of the Tempest, is upon the point of Shipwrack, the Mariners are wont to cast out a Sheet-Anchor Suprema lex as their last Refuge: So had Rome anciently results reput- course to this Decree, at such times as the Commonwealth was in imminent and extream Calamity; whether it were by Enemies abroad, or by Serpents in their Bosom at home. Livy speaking of the War of the Æqui, faith; The Senators were io affrighted, that following the form of the Decree, which was always reserved for cases of extremity, they ordained that Postbumius (one of the Consuls) should take care that the Commonwealth might not be endangered. The like was used in Civil and Intestine Seditions: As when Manlius Capitolinus aspired to a Tyranny; and as likewise in the tumults of the Gracchi, the Conspiracy of Catiline, and other times of like danger. For albeit the Confuls had all lovereign Authority, as well in War as in Peace: by one Chilo.

two Legions from their Journey towards Asia and Yet nevertheless there were certain reserved cases wherein they had no Power, without express Order from the Senate, and affent from the Peo- 5- Philip Can Order from the benate, and ament from the Feb 3-remptangle; as, to Levy on Army, to make War, to take Remptangende Money out of the Treafury: Whereas upon fuch mendandan a Decree, they were enabled to dispose of all bu-confe, figure finesses of State, without further moving of the permittendus, Senate or People, which Tully noteth in his Ora-defendant, tions against Antony. I think it fit (faith he) that provide the whole state of the Commonweal be left unto me quid derithe Confuls, and that they be fuffered to defend accipiat. the fame; and to take care that the Commonweal he not endangered.

The Second OBSERVATION.

May not omit (for the better understanding I of this noble History) to fay fornewhat of the Persons here mentioned. And first of Fabius, Fabius. as descended of the nobleft and most ancient Family of the Patrician Order; being able of themselves to maintain War a long time against the Veii, a strong and Warlike Town, until at length they were all unfortunately flain by an Ambushment: Which Ovid mentioneth, where 2. De Fastis.

Hec fuit illa dies, in qua, Veientibus arvis, Ter centum Fabii ter cecidere duo.

This was that black day, when in Veian Field Three hundred and fix Fabii were kill'd.

Only there remained of that House a Child then kept at Rome; which in tract of Time multiplied into fix great Families, all which had their turn in the highest Charges and Dignities of the Commonweal: Amongst whom, he that supplanted Hannibal by temporizing, and got thereby the furname of Maximus, was most famous, as En- Feb. Mer. nius witneffeth:

Unus homo nobis cunctando restituit rem : Non ponebat enim rumores ante salutem. Ergo postque magisq; viri nunc gloria claret.

One Man by wife delay hath fav'd our State: Who rumours after publick fafety fet. For which his Fame grows every day more great.

But C. Fabius, here mentioned, never attained to any place of Magistracy, other than such Commands as he held in the Wars under Cafar.

Lenzulus the Conful was of the House of the Lentulus. Cornelii, from whom are faid to come fixteen Confuls. He was from the beginning a Mortal Enemy to C.efar, and so continued to his Death, which fell unto him in Egypt, by commandment of King Ptolemy, after Pompey was flain.

Scipio was Father-in-law to Pompey, after the Scipio. Death of Julia, Cafar's Daughter; and by that means obtained the Government of Afia. In the beginning of the Civil War, he brought good Succours to affift his Son-in-law, as it follows in the third Commentary: And upon the Overthrow at Pharsalia he fled into Africk, where he renewed the War, and became chief Commander of the remaining Parry against C.sfar; but being in the end defeated, he made towards Spain; and fearing by the way left he should fall into his Enemies hands, he flew himfelf.

Marcellus was of the ancient Family of the Mercellus Claudii, which came originally from the Sabines: On his behalf there is an Oration extant of Tully's, Intituled, Pro Marcello. He was afterwards flain

M. An-

M. Anionius is Famous in all the Roman Hi-ftories, for attaining in a finall time to so great a height in that Government. For in all the Wars of Gallia, he was but a Treasurer under Casar, which was the leaft of all publick places of Charge. In the beginning of the Civil Wars he was made Tribune of the People; and within less than eight Years after, came to be Fellow-Partner with Ottavius Casar in the Government of the Empire. And if Cleopatra's Beauty had not blinded him. he might have easily, through the favour of the Soldiers, supplanted his Competitor, and seized upon the Monarchy.

Lib. I.

Helicarnasse

The name of Cassius was ominous for trouble to the state of Rome, and their ends were as unfortunate. This L. Cassias, for his part, after the great Troubles he had stirred up in Spain, was drowned in the mouth of the River Eber.

Pifo was made Cenfor in the Confulthip of L. Paulus and Claudius Marcellus, having himfelf been Conful eight Years before, in the Year of Rome, 695. fucceeding Casar and Bibulus; and was the Man against whom Tully Penned that Oration, which is extant in Pisonem. Touching the Office of Censor, it is to be understood, that about the Year of Rome 310. the Confuls being diftracted with multiplicity of Foreign business, omitted the Censure or Affessment of the City for some Years together: Whereupon it was afthe Roman Citizens: For it was very material for the State to know the number of their People, to the end they might be informed of their own ftrength, and so shape their course accordingly, either in undertaking Wars, transplanting Colonies, or in making Provision of Victuals in time of Peace. It was also as requisite to know every Mans Age, whereby they grew capable of Honour and Offices, according to that of Ovid; -finitaque certis Legibus est ætas, unde petatur honos.

> -In certain Laws Age is defin'd, and thence is Honour had.

Gusfred ad M. Antonius commanded that the names of the matern 3, Roman Children should be brought into the Trea-De Conf. fury within thirty days after they were born; according to which cuftom, Francis the French King published an Edick, Anno 1539, that every Parish should keep a Register of Burials and Christenings: which since that time is used in England,
The diffinction of Conditions and States, ran-

African primary in the Commonweal, and so worthy of the first primary in the Commonweal, and as worthy of the commonweal and so worthy of the commonweal and as worthy of the commonweal and so worthy of the commonweal and co ram, Just Censors notice, as any thing besides. Neither may say slud quot the affessment of Mens abilities be omitted: which as illed qued the alterishment of receive abundes of offineed. When the was ordained, that every Man might bear a part law shifter, in the Service of the State. In which refpect * Serbus lib. vius Tullus is commended, for rating Men accorage, a. ding to their Wealth; whereas before that time every Man paid alike: For Men are taken to be interessed in the Commonweal according to their means. The last and basest fort of Citizens were Gill. Lib. 16. named Capite censi, and were set in the Subsidy at three hundred feventy five pieces of Money. Such as were not affeffed, had no Voice in the Commonweal.

The fecond and chiefest part of this Office was Palls. in reforming Manners, as the ground-plot and foundation of every Commonwealth; to which end they had power to enquire into every Mans Life. If any one had plaid the ill husband, and neglected his Farm, or left his Vine untrimmed, the Censors took notice of it. If a Roman Knight kept his Horse lean, it was a matter for them to look into. They deposed, or brought in, new Senators. They reviewed all degrees and conditions of Men: Advanced this Man from a mean Tribe to a more honourable, and pulled another down. They had the care of Buildings, repairing of High-ways, with other publick Works; and were reputed of the best rank of Magistrates in Rome. L. Rescius had formerly been one of Casar's L. Rosine. Legates in Gallia; as appeareth in the fifth Commentary, Tertiam in Elfus, L. Rofeio; the third Legion amonght the Effui, under L. Rofeius. The Prestor was Judge in Caufes of Controverfie, and differences between Party and Party; and was as the Caddy amongst the Turks.

CHAP. III.

The Senate prepareth for War.

He next day after the Senate assembled Pompey hafor lone 1 cars together: whereupon it was arterwards thought fit, that there should be a peculiar Officer appointed for that Service, and to be called Cenfor; forasiment as every Man was to be Taxed, Rank'd and Valued, according to his Opinion and Cenfure. The first part of their Office constited in an Account or Valuation of the Number, Age, Order, Dignity, and Possession of the Roman Citizens: For it was very material for would mot the Roman Citizens: For it was very material for would mot the Roman Citizens: For it was very material for would mot the Roman Citizens: For it was very material for would mot the Roman Citizens: For it was very material for would mot the Roman Citizens: For it was very material for would not be drawn either to defend or follow him. And upon the assurance of these Remonstrances, other motions were entertained. As first that a Levy should be made throughout all Italy. That Faustus Sulla should forthwith be sent as Propra-Faust. Sulla tor into Mauritania. That Money should be delivered out of the Treasury to Pompey. That King Juba might have the Title of Friend and Confederate Rex Juba, focing & to the People of Rome. Which Marcellus con- micus, tradicting, stopt the passage thereof for that time. Philippus, Tribune of the People, countermanded Faussus's Commission. Other matters were passed by Act. The two Consular, and the other Pratobad no Office of Magistracy.

Syria fell to Scipio, von were and Gallia to L. Domitius.

Philippus and Mar-lay Province. for their Impleyment. Into the other Provinces Comm ne-were sent Preters, without any consent or approbaet quant tion of the People, as formerly had been accusto-Domitius. med: Who having performed their ordinary Vorses, Cic. ad Ant-put on their Military Garments, and so took their ii exeun. Journey. The Confuls (which before that time was never seen) went out of the City, and had their Serjeants privately within the City, and in the Capitol, against all Order and ancient Custom. A Levy was made over all Italy: Arms and Furniture was commanded: Money was required from Municipal Towns, and taken out of Temples and Religious places. All Divine and Humane Rights were confounded.

The First OBSERVATION.

The neglect of Ceremonies and Forms in mate-the use of catter of Stare, is the ruin and abolishment of remonies. a Commonweal. For if it hold generally true Forms det is a month of the same of the s which Philosophers say, That the Form giveth being to whatsoever subsisteth, and that every thing hath his name from his fashion and making: Then it must necessarily follow, that the life and

Ltb. 3.

Lib. I.

zard of confusion. For Complements and Solemnities are neither Nimia nor Minima (as some have imagined,) either superfluites, which may be spared, or trifles of small consequence. But as the Flesh covereth the hollow Deformity of the Bones, and beautifieth the Body with natural Graces: So are Ceremonies which ancient Cufrom hath made reverent, the Perfection and Life of any Commonweal; and do cover the nakedness of publick Actions, which otherwise would not be diffinguished from private businesses. And therefore the neglect of such Ceremonies, as were civitatis legi- usually observed to ennoble their Actions, was as injurious to the safety of the Empire, and as evident a Demonstration of Faction and Disloyalque populi dominatio ty; as the allotment of Provinces to private Persons, or whatsoever else they broached, contrary Crefiphontto the fundamental rights of the publick Weal. Concerning which it is to be understood, that of disposing of no Man was capable of those Governments, but the Provinces fuch as had born the chiefest Offices and Places of Charge. For their manner was, that commonly upon the expirations of their Offices, the Confuls and Prætors did either cast Lots for the Sortiri Pro- Provinces, which they called Sortiri provincias: vincias. Com- or did otherwise agree amongst themselves how vincias. Lib. they should be disposed, and that they termed 43: Comparare Provincias. Livie toucheth both the one and the other; Principio insequentis anni cum consules novi, de Provinciis retulissent, primo quoque tempore, aut comparare inter eos Italiam & Macedoniam, aut fortiri placuit: In the entrance of the next Year, when the new Confuls had proposed the business of the Provinces; it was forthwith embraced, that they should either divide by agreement Italy and Macedonia betwixt them, or take them as their Lors fell. Howbethem, or take them as then booked. The was always neceffary) interpoled their Authority, and difpoled the same as they thought expedient. But fuch as had never bore Office of charge in the State, were no way capable of those Dignities, nor thought fit to command abroad, having never thewed their fufficiency at home.

For the manner of their fetting forward out of they first went into the Capitol, and there made build a Temple, or to do some other Work worthy good Fortune, if their defigns were hapre, the folemn making of Vows. And he that had made fuch a Vow, stood votireus, ty'd by Vow,

Paludati exeunt, it appeareth, as well by anci-

pily atchieved : which they called Vota nuncupa-

Rome, after they were affigned to imployments, it appeareth by infinite Examples of Histories, that until his business came to an issue : and after Macrob li 2, he had attained his defire, he was voti damnatus, bound to perform his Vow, until he had acquitted cap. 2. himself of his promise. Touching their habit expressed in this phrase, Paludati.

ent Sculpture, as Medals, that Paludamentum was a Cloak used and worn by Men of War, whether they commanded in chief, or as Lieutenants and Centurions; and was ty'd with a knot upon their left shoulder. Festus calleth all military Lib. 6. de lin- Garments, Paludamenta. And Varro giving a reason of that Name, saith; Paluda à Paludamentis, sunt bæc insignia & ornamenta Militaria. Ideo ad bellum cum exit Imperator, ac Lictores mutant vestem, & signa incinuerunt, Paludamuiau vestem, G jana internation, amma-tus dicitur proficifei: que, propterea quod con-fpiciuntur qui ea habent, G palam fiunt, Paludamenta dicta. Paludamenta are military Ornaments. So when the Emperor removes and perfection of a State dependent wholly of the the Serjeants change their Garment, he is then form; which cannot be neglected but with haz- faid to march Paludatus. Which Garments, in regard they are conspicuous which wear them, and fo are taken notice of, are called thence Paluda-Valorius, ii.

menta. The Colour of this Cloak was either 1. cap. 6. Purple or White. And therefore it was held a Prefage of Ill-fortune, when at Carra, a City in Mesopotamia, one gave Crassus a black Cloak in ftead of a White, as he went, to lose the Battle to the Parthians.

The Second OBSERVATION.

The Romans not contented with the spacious sandis va-cincuit of the Sun, bounding their Empire Bonibus de-with the East and the West, but for want of Re. Just Tora, gions and Countries fearching the vastness and depth of the Seas, did seldom acknowledge any we wrom other fovereignty, and leave a Party worthy their nec scridens amity, in any remote Angle of the then-known in amy remote Angle of the then-known Nordia. But if any Prince had been to fortunate, of Regme as to gain the Favour and Estimation of a Friend Milliam 6.4. or a Confederate to the State, it was upon special natu Popula and deferved respects, or at the instance of their que Rom. Generals abroad, informing the worthiness of appellar, infuth Potentates, and the Advantage they might met be, bring to the service of the Empire. Which ap-meritus 46, peareth by that of Livie concerning Vermina, lib. I. King Syphax's Son; that * no Man was at any King Syphan's Son; that "no Man was at any time acknowledged either a King or a Friend by the Senate and People of Rome, unless first he had right well deserved of the Common-weal.

The manner of this acknowledgement is like-Sequent I ne manner or this acknowledgement is like-Sequent wife particularly expressed by Livie in another diversity. Place, freaking of Scipio. The day following 10, dat. 3 (faith he) to put King Massinist out of his Grief and Melancholy, he ascended into his Tribunal, and haying called an assembly of the Souldiers, presented him before them: Where he first howard him with the Analysis of Charles of the Soundiers. noured him with the Appellation of King, accom-panied with many fair Praises; and then gave him a Crown of Gold, a Cup of Gold, a Chair of State, a Scepter of Ivory, and a long Robe of Lib. 1. debl.
Purple. To which agreeth that of Cafar: That Gal. ariorifus was by the Senate filled by the Name of King and Friend, and prefented with great and rich Gifts; which happened but to few, and was only given by the Romans to Men of great E: fpe appel defert. Howbeit, such as had Governments and landown Imployments abroad did oftentimes make profit Regum Re publick Sacrifices, and folemn Vows, either to of giving this Honour: whereof Cafar taxeth Juba, Sain Lentulus in the former Chapter. And in this fence was King Juba brought in question, to be called by the Senate a Friend and Affociate to the State of Rome.

The Third OBSERVATION.

Touching the Franchifes and Liberties of the Towns of Italy, and others in the Dominions of the Roman Empire, called Municipia; it is to be noted, that according to Gellius those were Municipes called Municipes, that being governed by their L. d.6. own Laws, and their own Magistrates, were nevertheless endowed with the freedom of Rome. And therefore Adrianus marvelled, that the Italicenses and Uticenses did rather defire to be Coloni, and so tied to the Obedience of foreign and strange Laws, than to live in a Municipal State under their own Rights and Customs; and as Feftus added, with the use of their peculiar rites Lib. In for matter of Religion, fuch as they anciently used, before they were priviledged with the immunities of Rome.

For the better understanding whereof, we are to observe, that there were Degrees and Differences of Municipal Towns: For fome had Voices with the Roman People in all their Elections and they were in, if their fufficiency were answera-Suffrages; and some others had none at all. For Gellius in the same Place faith, that the Cerites obtained the Freedom of the City, for preserving the holy Things of Rome in the time of the War with the Gauls, but without Voice in elections. cerites Tabu- And thence grew the Name of Cerites Tabula. wherein the Cenfors inrolled fuch as were by them for some just cause deprived of their Voices.

And the Tusculani, being at first received into the Liberties of the City according to the admisfion of the Cerites, were afterward, by the free Grace of the People, made capable of giving Voices.

The means of obtaining this freedom was first and specially by Birth: Wherein it was required (as may be gathered by Appius's Oration) that both the Parents, as well the Mother as the Father, should be free themselves. Howbeit Ulpian writeth, that the Son may challenge the Freedom of the State, wherein his Father lived and was free. So that the Father being of Camtheless Adrianus made an Act of Senate in favour of Issue: that if the Wife were a Citizen of Rome, and the Husband a Latine, the Children should be Roman Citizens, And the Emperour Justinian caused it likewise to be decreed that the Mother being a Free-woman, and the Father a Bond-man, the Son should be Free. Such as were thus born Free were called Cives originarii.

The second means of obtaining this freedom was by Manumiffion, or fetting Bond-men at Liberty: For in Rome all Men freed from Bondage were taken for Citizens; and yet rankt in the last and meanest order of the People.

The third means was by Gift, or Cooptation: And so Romulus at first inlarged and augmented Rome ; Thefeus, Athens ; Alexander Magnus, Alex-Paylor. Virg. andria, feated at the out-lets of Nilus; and Richard the First, London; by taking all such strangers into the freedom of the City, as had inhabited there for ten Years together. The Emperours were profuse in giving this Honour. Cicero flouts Cafar, for taking whole Nations into the freedom of the City; and Antony gave it to all that lived in the Roman Empire. Whereupon, as Ulpian witnesseth, Rome was called Communis Patria. Popular States were more sparing in this kind; as may be deemed by the answer of one of the Corinthian Embassadours to Alexander: We never gave the freedom of our City (faith he) to any Man but to thy felf and Hercules. And until Herodotus's time, the Lacedamonians had ne-

The Privileges of this Freedom were great; for the Citizens of Rome were held to be Maje-state plenos. Is the best Man of Gallia (faith Tully) om- to be compared with the meanest Citizen of Rome? presides of? And hence came that Law, requiring, That the Curo pro Life of a Cirizen should not be brought in questi-Life of a Citizen should not be brought in questi-De capute ci. on, but by the general affembly of the People. Verres having Condemned one Coffanus, a Roman Citizen in Sicilia, Tully urgeth it as a matter unsufferable: Facinus est (inquit) vinciri Civem Rosus cossier manum, scelus verberari, prope parricidium necari, posti sus qui dicam in crucem agi? It is a great Crime sus sero to bind a Roman Civico. on to bind a Roman Citizen, an hainous wickedness

A Cic. 3. de to beat him, little less than Parricide to kill him;

ver admitted any, but only Tifamenus and his ble accordingly, to become great in the State; and confequently, Commanders of the Empire.

CHAP. IV.

Cafar tafteth the affection of the Soldiers.

Æsar understanding of these things, called Bellorum O the Soldiers together, and acquainted them foci qui milwith all the injuries which his Enemies mortis Mefrom time to time had done unto him; cum, ait, excomplaining that Pompey was by their practice perti, decimo and means alienated from him, and drawn through anno, envy of his good fortune to Partiality against him; Luc. lib. 1. notwithstanding that he had always affected his Honour, and endeavoured the advancement of his Renown and Dignity: Lamenting likewise the precedent which this time had brought into the State, that the Tribunes Authority should be opposed sant was another of Puteolis, he judged the son to belong to Campania: According to that of by force of Arms re-established. For Sylla naving Canulcius, that the Children inherit the condition that the Children inherit the condition that the Children inherit the condition that the freedom of opposition:

The mould from to referre it to the But Pompey, who would feem to restore it to the Dignity from which it was fallen, did take away that Power which was only left unto it. The Senate never resolved of that Act, That the Magifixates should take a course for the safety of the Commonweal, whereby the People were necessarily fummoned to Arms, but in times of pernicious Whereof Laws, upon the violence of the Tribunes, or the West the mutiny and defection of the People, when the Tem-chiefett. ples and high places of the City were taken and held against the State: which Disloyalties of former Ages were expiated and purged by the fortune and disaster of Saturniuns and the Gracchi. But at this present, there was no such matter attempted, so much as in thought; no Law published; no practice with the People; no Tumult; no departure out of the City. And therefore he exhorted them, That forasmuch as under his leading and command, for nine Years together they had most happily carried the Government, fought many prosperous and victorious Battels, settled all Gallia Pluta properous and victorious batters, jettled all Gallia rimares and Germany in peace; they would now in the faith he had end take his Honour into their protection, and descoo foot, fend it against the malice of his Adversaries. and 300 The Soldiers of the thirteenth Legion which were horicon that present (for them only had he called out in the hips: which beginning of the troubles, and the other Legions were amounteth not as yet come cried out instantly. That they were on the just ready to undertake his desence against such wrongs, Legion. and to keep the Tribunes of the People from injury.

The First OBSERVATION.

A S Publick-weals and Societies are chiefly supported and maintained by Justice: So likewife, such as live in the civil community of the same, Cir. 1. official. and enjoy the benefit of a well-qualified Government, do take themselves interessed in the maintenance of Justice, and cannot endure the tyranny of wrongs; unless happily (as every Man is par-tial in his own cause) they be the Authors thereof themselves. The first duty of Justice, which is, which is notes, Note out quis notest, That no Man hurt another, for inputed, did Cafar make the theam of his Oration to his Xenophon opening and enforcing the malice of his Ad-Juffine perfection.

And making the State a party in his man manual man fufferings, through the oppression and defacing of the cui quite of the Tribuneship; which in times of liberty and the 1. de offwhat then shall I call the hanging of him? with just proceeding, was facred and inviolable.

Cæfar.

Rimini.

Qui non de. duty; holding themselves either bound to redress: fondit nee of them, or otherwise to be guilty of betraying their fifth fi pacit Parents, Country, Companions and Friends. Some er in vitu, report, that one Lelius, a Primipile of Cafar's quam siparen- Army, making answer to this Speech, gave affutes, and arm rance of the Soldiers good affection; which the cos, aut patri:
am, aut patri:
reft approved with a general acclamation. Howdefeat. Cie beit the Argument lay couched in a Sophifm, pretending Cafar's right, but concluding the ruin of the State.

The Second OBSERVATION.

S Econdly, we may observe, that as discord and diffension, rending assunder the bonds of civil Opulentis civitatibus vouenum sedi- community, are the bane of flourishing and tio, magna opulent Cities, and make the greatest Empires imperia mor- rational state of Mortality: So by the fame rule of Non Exercises of well-qualified Friendship, are as expedient, both neque Tiefan- for the fastening of the joynts of a publick State, regni funt, and for keeping the particular parts in due temper nti ion keeping the particular parts in due temper were amidia and proportion, as either Treature, or Armies, or Saloff, inbela any other thing required thereunto. Hence it is b. de that * Cicero laith, that we have as much infe of that * Cicero faith, that we have as much rule of Friendship, as of Fire and Water: And that he that should go about to take it from among Men, did endeavour (as it were) to take the Sun out of the Heaven; which by heat, light, and influence, giveth life unto the World. And as Men are emimaxime of the bus, principa nent in Place and Authority, and have use of matu, potestate ny Wheels for the motion of their several occasiexcellit, ita ons; fo have they the more need of amity and amicis maxcorrespondency, to second the multiplicity of Arift. Eth. 8. their defires, and to put on their businesses to their withed ends.

CHAP. V.

Casar taketh Ariminum; receiveth and answereth Messages from Pompey.

Æ (ar having sounded the minds of the Soldiers, went directly with that Legion to Ariminum, and there met with the Tribunes of the People that were fled unto him: Sent for the rest of the Legions from their Winter Quarters, and gave order they should follow him. Thither came young L. Cæsar, whose Father was a Legate in Casar's Camp. And after some Speech of the occasion of his coming, acquainted Casar, that Pompey had given him a Message in charge to be delivered unto him : Which was, That he defired to clear himself to Cæsar, lest he might peradventure take those things to be done in scorn of him, which were commanded only for the service of the State; the good whereof he always preferred before any private respect: And that Oxfar likewise was tied in honour to lay aside his indignation and affection to outpour to up aque no magnation and affection for the Commonwealths fake; and not to be fortanported with anger and distain of his Adversaries, as he seemed to be, less in hoping to be averaged or them, be should have the Publick Weal of his Comtry. He added somewhat more of the same subject, together with excuses on Pompey's behalf. Almost the self-same discourse, and of the self-same things, Roscius the Prator dealt with Cafar, and Said that he had received them in charge from Pompey. Which although they seemed no way to satisfie or remove the injuries and wrongs complained of; yet having got fit Men, by whom that which he wished might be imparted to Pompey, he prayed them both, for that they had brought unto him what Pompey

These Remonstrances were apprehended by the required, they mould not think it much to return his Soldiers, as matters specially concerning their defires to Pompey; if happily with so little labour they might accord so great differences, and free all Italy from fear and danger. That he had ever held the dignity of the Commonweal in high regard, and dearer than his own life. He grieved much that a benefit given him by the People of Rome, fould be fpightfully wrested from him by his Adversaries; that fix Months of his Government were to be cut off, and fo he to be called home to the City: Notwithstanding the People had commanded at the last creation of Magistrates, that there should regard be had of him, although absent. Nevertheless, for the Commonwealths sake he could be content to undergo Commonwealths Jake be could be content to unlarge the loss of that Honour. And having writ to the Se-nate that all Mon might fluit their Armies, he was so far from gaining the same, that contrarivife a Levy was thereupon made throughout all Italy; and the two Legions which were drawn from him under a pretence of the Parthian War, were still discourse, it is also true, that the mutual respects retained about the City, which was likewise in Arms. And to what tended all this, but his destruction? And yet notwithstanding he was content to condescend to all things, and to endure all inconveniences for the cause of the Publick weal. Let Pompey go to his Government and Provinces; let both the Armies be discharged; let all Men in Italy lay down their Arms; let the City be freed of fear; let the Assemblies of the People be left to their ancient liberty; and the whole Government of the State remitted to the Sengte and People of Rome. For the better accomplishment whereof, under well-advised and secure conditions, let an Oath be taken for due keeping of the same : Or otherwise, let Pompey approach nearer unto him, or suffer Casar to come nearer to him, that these controversies might happily receive an end by Roscius having this Message, went to Capua, Capua. accompanied with L. Cæsar; where finding the Con-Cicco, lib.; fulls and Pompey, he delivered unto them Cæsar; ad Artison, Fulls and Pompey. fuls and Pompey, be delivered unto them Cacar's ad Artican, Propellitions. They having confuted of the full 13. They having confuted of the full 13. They having confuted of the full 13. They have to the full 13. They have to be the to Caclar, whereof this was the effect; mass med at That he found return into Gallia, quit Ariminum the terminal and difinifs his Army: which if he did, Pompey of Levons. would then go into Spain: In the mean time, until the 25 of affurance were given that Cæsar would perform as January. much as he promised, the Consuls and Pompey would not forbear to levy Soldiers. The condition was too unequal, to require Cæsar to leave Ariminum, and to return into his Province; and Pompey to hold Provinces and Legions belonging to other Men: to have Cæsar dismis his Army, and he to raise new Troops: to promise simply to go to his Government, but to assign no day for his departure: Insomuch, that if he had not gone until Cxfar's time of Government had expired, he could not have been blamed for falfifying his promise. But for smuch as they appointed no time for a conference, nor made any shew of coming nearer, there could no hope be conceived of Peace.

The First OBSERVATION.

CASar lying at Ravenna, within his Government of Gallia, and understanding how matters past at Rome, according as Plutarch reporteth, Plutarch in commanded divers of his Centurions to go before vita Cafaria. to Ariminum, without any other Armour than their Swords; and to possess themselves thereof with as little Tumult as they could. And then leaving the Troops about him to be commanded by Hortenfius, he continued a whole day together in publick fight of all Men, to behold the fencing of the Sword-players. At night he bathed his Body, and then kept company with fuch as he had bidden to Supper; and after a while rose from the Table, withing every Man to keep his place, for

Lib. I.

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

fecretly commanded fome of his followers to artend him, in fuch manner as might give leaft suspicion, he himself took a Coach which he had hired; and making shew of going a contrary way, came to the little River Rubicon, which divided his Government from the rest of Italy, he stood confounded through remorfe of his desperate defign, and wift not whether it were better to return or go on: But in the end, laying afide all doubtful cogitations, he refolved upon a desperate attempt, importing as much as Fall back, fall edge: And passing over the River, never stayed running with his Coach, until he came within the City of ha navis in Coacis, until ne came within the City of pris, pries Ariminum; where he met Curio and Antonius, overcompela-Tribunes of the People, and shewed them to the me four-am, Soldiers as they were a state of the property.

disguised like Slaves in a Carrier's Cart.
It is faid, that the night before he passed over this River, he dreamed that he lay with his Moproduct, for in an unnatural fense; but of that he himself belofud. 2. maketh no mention. This City of Ariminum is ther in an unnatural fense; but of that he himself now called Rimini, and standeth in Romania, upon the Adriatick Sea, in the Pope's Dominion. The River Rubicon was anciently the bounds of Gallia; over which Augustus caused a fair Bridge to be built with this Inscription :

Soldiers, as they were driven to fly out of Rome,

IUSSU. MANDATU-VE. P. R. COS. IMP. MILI TIRO COMMILITO MANIPULA RIS-VE CENT TURME-VE LEGIO-NARI-VE ARMAT QUISQUIS ES HIC SISTITO VEXIELUM SINITO NEC CI-TRA. HUNC. AMNEM. RUBICONEM. DUCTUM. COMMEATUM. EXERCITUM-DUCTUM-COMMEATUM-EXERCIT UM-VE. TRADUCITO. SI. QUIS. HUJUSCE. JUSSIONIS. ERGO. ADVERSUS. FECIT. FECERIT-VE. ADJUDICATUS. ESTO. HOSTIS. P. R. AC. SI. CONTRA. PATRI-AM. ARMA. TULERIT. SACROSQUE. PENATES. E. PENETRALIUS. ASPOR-TAVEBET. SARCIO MURIOUS. TAVERIT. SANCIO. PLEBISCI. SENA-TUS-VE. CONSULT. ULTRA. HOS. FI-NES. ARMA. PROFERRE. LICEAT. NE-S. P. Q. R.

The fubstance whereof is; That it should be unlawful for any Man to come over the faid River Armed, under penalty of being adjudged an enemy to the Commonwealth, and an invader of his own Country.

The Second OBSERVATION.

he might have held his Government according to his own desire, or otherwise have drawn his Adversaries to buckle with the strength of those conquering Legions, and so brought the business to a short end, with as great probability of good success, as by any hazard of undertaking: It is to be understood, that in cases of this nature, which feldom admit any treaty of accord, he that striketh first, and hath the advantage of the forehand, is well entred into the way of Victory. For the Maji terre. Well entred into the way of the terred in in miscouries rule is of old, That if any Enemy hath a defign in hand, it is far more fafe to begin first, and by the prior we way of prevention to give the Onset on him, raway of prevention to give the Onfet on him, ramore, quam mer, quam
mer proper
mer prop And is. or behind-hand therein; befides the gain which we found attendeth this advantage. For he that flands for the same affected to deny what is just, and of right due, lacan lib. r.

he would inftantly come again. Howbeit, having doth nevertheless grant all things which the Sword requireth; and will not flick to supply all unjust refulals, with as great an over-plus of what may be demanded. For which caule, Casar staid not the coming of his whole Army, but began with those Forces which were ready at hand: And so preventing all defigns, he put his Adversaries to fuch a streight, that they quitted Italy for fear, and left Rome (with whatfoever was facred or precious therein) to the mercy of them whom they had adjudged enemies to their Country.

CHAP. VI.

Cafar taketh divers Municipal Towns.

Or which regard, he sent M. Antonius with Cata.

five Cohorts to Arctium: But he himself Halfalegish, stayed at Ariminum with two Legions, and being about there intended to inroll new Troops; and with 2500 men. feveral Cohorts took Pisaurum, Fanum, and Ancona. Pisaurum, In the mean while, being advertised that Thermus Pesard Ital. In the mean white, very according to the Pretor did hold Tignium with free Cohorts, and Famen fortified the place, and that all the Inhabitants were Tignium. well inclined towards him; he sent Curio thither with three Cohorts, which he had at Pisaurum and Ariminum. Upon notice of whose coming, Thermus (doubting of the affection of the Town) drew his Cohorts forth of the City, and fled. The Soldiers by the way went from him, and repaired homeward. Curio was there received with the great con-tentment and satisfaction of all Men. Upon notice whereof Cæsar conceiving hope of the favourable affections of the Municipal Towns, brought the Coborts of the thirteenth Legion out of their Garrisons. and marched towards Auximum; a Town held by Auximum. Actius, with certain Cohorts which he had brought Actius Varus. thither with him, who having fent out divers Senators, made a levy of Men throughout all the Country of Picenum.

Cæsar's coming being known, the Decuriones of Auximum repaired to Actius Varus, accompanied with great Troops of People: And told him that the matter concerned not him at all; for neither them-felves, nor the rest of the Municipal Towns, would sout their Gates against such a Commander as Cæsar was, that by great and worthy service had so well deserved of the Commonwealth: And therefore advised him to consider what might ensue thereof. and the danger which might befall him in particular. Varus being throughly wakened at this warning, drew out the Garrison which he had brought in, and so fled away : and being overtaken by a few of Cæsar's If this manner of proceeding be brought into first Troops, was compelled to make a stand; and dispute, and the reason required why Caslar there giving Battel, was sortaken of his Men. Some kept not himself in the Province of Gallia, where of the Soldiers went home, and the rest came to Cæfar. Amongst them was taken L. Pupius. Cen- L. Pupius. turion of a Primipile order, which place he had formerly held in Pompey's Army. Casar commended Metry settin Follipey's Army. Cacial commences Actius's Soldiers; fent Pupius away; gave thanks to them of Auximum; and assured them of a mindful acknowledgement on his behalf for this service.

The First OBSERVATION.

A Mongst other things which serve to inable our judgments, and do make Men wise to good fortune, that which is gathered from fimilitude or likeness of quality, is not the unsurest ground of our discourse; but oftentimes giveth more light to guide our paffage through the doubtfulness of great enterprises, than any other help of reason. For he that will attend an overture from every particular, and tarry for circumstances to accomplish all his purposes, and make no use of Inftances

Inflances to better his Advantage, Mall never wade far in bulineffes of moment, nor atchieve that which he defireth, which Cafar well obferved: For upon the accidental Discovery of Lentulus flieth in great fear out of Rome. Cafar the disposition of one Town, he thereby took occasion to make trial how the rest stood affected; and either found them or made them answerable to his Hopes.

Pefarò Ital.

Concerning these places taken by Cafar, it is to be understood, that Pilanrum is seated on the Adriatick Sea, and belongeth to the Dutchy of Urbine: A Town famous of old, by reason of the prodigious opening of the Earth, and fwallowing up the Inhabitants before the Battel of Actium, some few Years after it was thus Taken by Cafar.

Fanum was so called of a fair Temple which was there built to Fortune. Tacit. Annal. 10. ple of Fortune. It is a small Town on the same

Sea, and belongeth to the Pope.

Ancona is a famous Town upon the Adriatick Sea, feated upon a bow-like Promontory, which receiveth the Sea between two Fore-lands; and fo maketh one of the fairest Havens of all Italy, in Roma, One Peter in Rome; noting the Beauty of Saint Peter's Church: Una Turris in Cremona, One Tower in Cremona; the excellent Workmanship of a Steeple there: And unus Portus in Ancona, One Haven in Ancona; which is this Haven. The Emperor Trajan, to give it more shelter, and keep it from the fury of the Wind, railed the top of the Promontory in fashion of a Half-Moon, with a Mount made of great Marble Stones; and made it Theatre-wife, with descents is now under the Pope.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Lib. I. de

THis word Decurie hath a double understanding: For Romulus having 3000 Foot and 300 Horse, divided them into three Tribes, and every Tribe into Ten Curies, containing an Hundred Footmen and Ten Horsemen. Whereby Marcellinus concludeth, that Decuriones & Centuriones à numero cui in Militia praerant dicebantur ; they were called Decurions and Centurions from the number they Commanded in the Wars. But Lib. 2. cap. Vegetius is more particular in this point. A Company of Footmen (faith he) was called a Century or Maniple: And a Troop of Horse was called Turma of Ter-denos, containing Thirty Men, whereof the Captain was named Decurio. In which sence Casar speaketh; Ea res per fugi-tives L. Emylii Decurionis equitum Gallorum hostibus nunciatur: This business was bewrayed to the Enemy by the Fugitives of L. Æmylius, a Decurion of the French Horse. But in this place it hath another fignification: For the Romans, when they fent any Citizens to People and Inhabit a place, choic out every Tenth Man; fuch as were found most able and of best sufficiency to make and establish a publick Council; whom they called Decuriones; according as Pomponius and other Civilians understand it. So that these Decuriones were the Senate of that place.

CHAP. VII.

cometh to Corfinium.

Hefe things being reported at Rome, the City was fuddenly struck into such a Terror, that when Lentulus the Conful came to open the Treasury, to deliver out came to open the Iteality, to deliver out Momey to Pompey according to the Alt of Senate, he fled out of the City, and left the inner Chamber, of the Iteality open. For, it was reported (although that Caclar was near approaching, and that his Cavalry was hard at hand. Marcellus, the other Conful, together with most of the other Magistrates, followed after. Pompey departing the day before, was gone to those Legions which he had Exercitus Vespasiani ad Fanum Fortuna iter sistit; taken from Cæsar, and had lest in Apulia to Win-The Army of Vespasian made a Halt at the Tem- ter. In the mean while the Involment of Soldiers ceased within the City. No place seemed secure be-Capua. tween that and Capua. There they began first to affemble and affure themselves; Impresting for Soldiers fuch as by Julius's Law were fent thither to Lex Iulia Inhabit. And the Fencers which were there Trained and Exercised by Cæsat, for the entertainment of as well for largeness as for safety. From whence the People of Rome, were by Lentulus riseth that common saying, expressing the rare-set at Liberty, mounted upon Hosser, and Comness and singularity of three things; Unus Petrus manded to follow him. But asterwards, upon advice of his Friends, (every Man's Judgment dif-adowing thereof) he dispersed them here and there throughout Campania, for their better safety and

Calar diflodging from Auximum, marched throughout all the Country of Picenum, and was Picenum. most willingly received by all the Prafectures of those nagi muningy received by an one trajectures of trope Regions, and relieved with all necessaries which his Soldiers stood in need of. Insomuch as Commission oners were fent unto him from Cingulum, a Town Cingulum. and degrees to go to the Sea; together with an which Labienus had Founded, and built from the Arch triumphal in Memory thereof. The Town Ground at his own Charges, promifing to obey whatsoever he commanded: Whereupon he required Soldiers, and they fent them accordingly. In the mean time the Twelfth Legion overtook Casas; and with these two he marched directly to Asculum, a Town Asculum which Lentulus Spinther held with Ten Cohorts: Who understanding of Cæsar's approach, left the place; and labouring to carry the Troops with him. was forsaken by the greatest part of the Soldiers: was jorjanen by the greatest part of the Soldiers: And so marching with a few, happened by chance upon Vibullius Rufus, sent of purpose by Pompey into the Country of Picenum, to confirm and settle the People. Vibullius being advertised how matters went there, took the Soldiers, and so dismissed him of his Charge: Gathering likewife from the confining Regions, what Cohorts he could get from Pompey's former Involuments; and amongst others, entertained Ulcilles Hirus, flying with fix Coborts Ulcil Hirs-out of Camerinum, whereof he had the keeping. Camerinum These being all put together, made thirteen Cohorts; with which, by long Marches he made towards Do-Domitius mitius Ænobarbus, who was at Corfinium, telling Enobarb him that Crefar was at hand with two Legions. Domitius had raised twenty Cohorts out of Albania, Albania. Marsia, and Pelignia, adjacent Countries. Asculum Marsia. being taken in, and Lentulus driven out, Cæsar made enquiry after the Soldiers that had left Lentulus, and commanded them to be Inrolled for him. And after one days abode for the Provision of Corn, he marched towards Corfinium. Upon his approach thither, Domitius Sent five Cohorts out of the 2500 Men. Town, to break down the Bridge of the River, which was about Three Miles off. The Vanguard of Cæsar's Army encountring with Domitius's Soldiers, drawe them from the Bridge, and forced them to

Retreat into the Town : Whereby Cafar past over

The First OBSERVATION.

TT is well observed by Guicciardine, That Inmost on the model of the most I folency and Timidity are never found afunder, all fuch Motions, doth according to every Man's Nature, give the like scope to Passions of Contra-riery, and extend them both to an equidistant Citcumference: As if Courage shall happen to dilate it self to Insolency, then is Doubtfulness, in like manner inlarged to Cowardice; and will imbase Mens thoughts as low, as they did rise in height by infulting. For which cause it is advised by such as treat of Morality, that Men be well wary in admitting dilatation of Passions, or in suffering them to sly out beyond the compass of Reason, which containeth the measure of Æquability, commended by Cicero to be observed throughout the whole course of Man's Life. Lentulus the Consul may be an instance of this weakness, and learn others Moderation by shunning his Intemperancy. For in question of qualifying the Rage of these Broils, and forting of things to a peaceable end, his Arrogancy was incompatible with terms of Agreement, and overfway'd the Senate with heedless Impetuofity. And again, when his Authority and Confular Gravity should have fettled the diffracted Commons, and made good his first Resolution, his over-hasty flying out of the City did rather induce the People to believe, that there was no fafety within those Walls, not for fo small a time as might serve to have thut the Treasury at his Heels; and so he

Lib. I.

Concerning these words (Aperto fanctiore Arario, rendred the inner Chamber of the Treafury left open) it is to be noted, that Ærarium was their publick Treasury; and by the ap-pointment of Valerius Publicola, was made within the Temple of Saturn: Whereof divers Men the Temple of Smain.

Macrobius faith, That enus in ade as long as Saturn continued in Italy, there was no Saturni ba-bur, Festus. Theft committed in all the Country: And therefore his Temple was thought the fafeft place to keep Money in. Plutarch thinketh rather, That the making of the Treasury in that place, did allude to the Integrity of the Time wherein Saturn Reigned; for Avatice and Deceit was not then known amongst them. St. Cyprian is of an Opinion, That Saturn first taught Italy the use and Coinage of Money; and therefore they gave the keeping thereof to his Deity. Howfoever, it is manifest, That not only the publick Treasure was there kept, but also their Records, Charts, Ordinances and Edicts: Together with such Books as were, for their immeasurable Greatness, became as Abject, as before he shewed himself

Libri Elephan- called Libri Elephantini; containing all their Acts of Senate, and Deeds of Arms atchieved by the Commanders abroad, as also their Military Signa ex & Enfigns which they fetched always from thence rains when they went into the Field: And there like-fensing ad wife did luch Embaffadors as came to Rome Re-lin.lib. 4. gifter their Names, as Plutarch affirmeth. It was called Erarium of Es, fignifying Brass; for that the first Money used by the Romans was Lit. 3 cap. 33. of that Metal, until the Year of Rome 485. as Pliny witneffeth; when they began first to Coin pieces of Silver marked with the Letter X.

whereof they took the appellation of Denarium, as valuing Ten Affes of Brass, which before they his Legions, made a stand before the Town, and weighed 12 Ounces. Touching their order obser-Encamped himself under the Walls. weighed 12 Ounces. Touching their order obser-ted in their Treasury, for their disposing and laying up of their Moneys, we must understand, that as Bodies Politick require necessary and ordinary Treasure to be employed in such manner, as may best concurr with the publick Honour and Weal of the same; so there must be special Care to provide against unusual and extraordinary Casualties, which are not removed but by speedy and effectual Remedies. According to which providence the Romans disposed of their Treasure, and took the twentieth part of their Receipt, which they called Aurum vicesimarium, and reserved it Aurum vice apart in an inner Chamber; where it lay fo pri-fimaria vileged, that it was a Capital Crime to touch it, but in extream and desperate necessity: As in time of War with the Gauls, or in a Sedition and Tumult of the People. Livy affirmeth as much, where he faith, Cetera expedientibus que ad bel- Lib. 24. lum opus erant consulibus, aurum vicesimarium, quod in Sanctiore Eravio ad ultimos casus servaretur, promi placuit : Prompta ad quatuor milia pondo Auri. The Confuls furnishing all other things needful for the War, it was refolved that the vicefimary Gold should be brought forth and employed: Which faid Gold was referved in the inner Treasury, till such time as Affairs happened to be in a desperate condition. Accordingly, there was 4000 pound of Gold taken out.

The Second OBSERVATION.

SUch as affect Offices and Dignities in a State, must ever have means to court Sovereignty, according as may best suit with her Pelitia, either as the is espoused to a Monarch, or left in trust to a Multitude. Hence it was that the Romans, to gain the favour of the People, and to make way for their own ends, were very fumptuous in ferting forth Shews and Spectacles of divers forts and fashions; and especially of Gladiators or Fencers, as best fitting a Roman Disposition, and more pleating than others of any kind. Equidem (faith Pro Bulio, Tully) existimo, nullum tempus esse frequentioris populi, quam illud Gladiatorum, neque concionis ullius, neque vero ullorum Comitiorum; I verily believe, that there is at no time a greater concourse of People than is at the Fencing plays; neither at an Oration, nor at an Assembly of the State. And in another place; Id autem spectaculi genus erat, quod omni frequentia, atque omni hominum genere celebratur, quo multitudo maxime delectatur; That is a kind of thew, which is celebrated with the flocking together of all forts of People; it being a thing the multitude are extreamly delighted with.

Their manner was to keep great numbers of these Fencers, in some convenient and healthful Towns of Italy, as at Ravenna and Capua (which were as Seminaries of these People) and there to train them up in the Feat of Fencing, until they had occasion to use them in their Shews, either at their Triumphal Entries into the City upon their Victories, or at the Funeral Solemnity of And therefore fome Personage of Memory, or otherwise at their they were called, Bustuarii, Feafts and Jollities.

Quin etiam exhilarare viris convivia cade Mos olim, & miscere epulis spectacula dira.

The Death of Men made Mirth at Feasts of old, And Banquets then were grac'd with Fencers bold.

They Fought commonly Man to Man, at all advantage, and were feldom excused until one of used for their Coin; and every of the said Asses the two lay dead upon the place. Neither was Sil Ital.

Lib. I.

Tucan, lib. 1.

Parare &

querere ardu um: Tueri difficilius. Livy lib. 37-ftood liable to undertake another, and so a third, until he had foiled fix or feven Combatants. And if his hap were to prevail so often, he was then honoured with a Garland, wound about with Ribbands of Wool, which they called Lemnisci, Lemnifi. Ribbands of Wool, which they called Lemnifci, Spidatum future dense and received of the Prætor a great knotted Staff, tum jamrude. called Rudis; which he afterward carried about with him as an enfign of Liberty. These bloody The Romans Spectacles continued unto the time of Constantine never used the Great, and were by him prohibited, as likewife also by Arcadius and Honorius; and utterly Military Ser. abolished after the Reign of Theodorick, King of vice, but only in first the Goebs. Let him that would look further into Ac deforme the fashion of these shews, read what Lipsius insuper duxi. hath written concerning the same. That which lism, due mi- I observe herein is, the use which the State made lia Gladiate. rum: Sed pr hereof: For howsoever these Sights and Solemrum: Sag policiest. For individual times and some similar arm inities were fer forth for the compassing of private for date: ends; yet neverthelefs the Commonweal drew baselingsars.

Tac. 14th. 1. benefit from the same. For a multitude being of a fickle and mutable Nature, are no way so well fettled with contentment of the time, or kept from Novelties and Innovations, as with publick Shews and Entertainments; which are as ftays to their Affections, that they swerve not from the Government by which they live in civil Affociation. So we read how the Gracians Instituted, as popular Entertainments, their Olympian, Nemean, Isthmian, and Pythian Games; the Romans, their Apollinary, Secular, Gladiatory, and Hunting Shews, with Tragedies and Comedies: And all for the fatisfaction of the People. Wherein, how-foever the Gracians feem more Judicious, for Inventing fuch Games as might both exercise and entertain the People; yet the Romans failed not of the end aimed at in these Spectacles, which was, to inure them to Blood and Slaughter, and to make them dreadless in cases of Horror.

But to leave all Shews of this nature, as either too little for earnest, or too much for pass-time; it shall suffice to note, that these publick Entertainments are fo far expedient as they confift of Pleasure and Comeliness: For as their chiefest end is to pleasure and content the People; so their manner must be directed by Lawfulness and Honefty. In which respect, a Tragedy is more commendable than a Comedy; forafmuch as few comical Arguments do fympathize with Honesty.

The Third OBSERVATION.

TO be great and of a large proportion, doth not take away Casualties of inconvenience; nor can it give a privilege, to free things from Distemperature: Tall Men are as subject to Fevers, as others of leffer Stature; and great Empires as eafily diffurbed as the States of petty

O faciles dare summa Dees, eademque tueri, Difficiles!

O Gods easie to grant, but to preserve . Your Gifts as hard !-

It is easier to attain the end of high defires, than to keep it being got: And better is the affurance of feeking than of possessing. The Roman People that had over-awed the World with Arms, and left no Kingdom unfoiled with the fear of their Legions, were as much difmayed at a subjects Difloyalty, as was possible for a mean State to be amuzed upon an Alarm of any danger. And that City which fuffered no Enemy to approach he then quitted that had Slain his Companion, but Captive, was not trufted as able to give her own People safety.

> – Sic turba per Urbem Pracipiti lymphata gradu, velut unica rebus Spes foret afflictis patrios excedere muros, Inconfulta ruit.-

- So through the Streets With headlong madness ran the multitude, As if their case no other hope had left Of safety, than to quit their Native Walls.

The advantage is, That Kingdoms of great Command have great helps in cases of disturbance; but are otherwise as subject to apprehensions of diffruft, as those of lesser Power to resist.

CHAP. VIII.

Cafar goeth on with the Siege of Corfinium, and Taketh it.

Omitius being thus engaged, fent out skilful Men of the Country, with promise of great Reward, to carry Letters to Pompey, entreating and praying, that he would come and relieve him; for Cælat, by ne would come and relieve min; Jor Latat, by reason of the streightness of the passages, might, with two Armies, be easily state up: Which opportunity, if he negletted, himself, with above 30 Co-15000 Men horts of Soldiers, befides a great number of Senators or theresand Roman Knights, were in danger of running bouts. a hard Fortune. In the mean time he exhorted his . Tormen. Men to Courage and Resolution; placed his * Artillery on the Walls; assigned every Man his Quarter tery on the Watt; alligned every Main mis Rustier to be made good; promised in publick Assembly of the Soldiers, four Acres apiece to each Man out of his own Lands and Possessions, and the like proportion to the Centurions and Evocati. Mean while it was told Cæsar, that the Inhabitants of Sulmo, a Town diftant seven Miles from Corfinium, were desirous to receive his Commands, but that they were restrained by Q. Lucretius, a Senator, and Actius Pelignus, that kept the Town with a Garri-son of seven Cohorts. Whereupon he sent thither M. Antonius with five Cohorts of the Seventh Legion: Whose Ensigns were no sooner discovered by those of the Town, but the Gates were opened, and the Inhabitants and Soldiers came all out to Gratulate and Welcome Antonius. Lucretius, and Actius conveyed themselves over the Wall. Actius being Taken and brought to Antony, defired to be fent to Calar. Antonius returning the same day, brought Actius and the Soldiers that were found in Sulmo, to Cæsar; whom he took to his Army, and sent Actius away in Safety.

Cæsar, the three first days, made great Works to fortifie his Camp; caused store of Corn to be brought from the Towns next about him; and there determined to stay the coming of the rest of his Forces. Within the space of those three days the Eighth Legion came unto him, with 22 Cohorts newby enrolled in Gallia, together with Three Hundred Horse, which the King of Noricum had sent unto him. Upon the arrival of which Forces, he made another Camp on the other side of the Town, and appointed Curio to Command it. The rest of the apprinted Ollio to Communia it. 10 top of the time was spent in compassing the Town with a Rampier and with Castles. The greatest part of which work being finished, it chanced at the same time, that fuch as were sent to Pompey returned. The bocs toba fuch as were sent to Pompey returned. The bocs toba full testers being read, Domitius dissembling the truth financial gave out in the Council of War, that Pompey would industrial near her Confines, but in the condition of a come speedily to succour them: And therefore wished mulant matter could be no longer dissembled. For Pompey had writ back, that he would not hazard the cause, by drawing it into such terms of extremity : Neither was Domitius engaged in the keeping of Corfinium by his advice or confent : And therefore, if by any means he could, he should quit the place, and bring the Forces unto him. But the Siege was so freight, and the Works did so begind the Town, that there was no hope of effecting it. Domitius's purpose being known abroad, the Soldiers within the Town, about the beginning of the Evening, for sook their Stations, and drew themselves apart; and thereupon had conference with the Tribunes of the Soldiers and Centurions to this effect : That they were Besieged by Cæsar, whose Works and Foreifications were almost finished; their General Domitius (in hope and considence of whom they were engaged in that place) setting aside all matters whatsoever, was bethinking himself bow he might escape and sly away: And in regard thereof, they were not to neg-lect their own Safety. The Marsi at first began to differ from the rest upon that point, and possess'd aijer from the rejt upon that point, and pojiejs a themfelves of that part of the Town which feemed to be firongest: And such a dissension thereby grew amongst them, that they had almost gone to Blows. Howbest, understanding a while after (by Massengers which pass to and fro between them) of Domitius's purpose to fly away, whereof formerly they were ignorant, they agreed together, and with one consent brought Domitius out in publick; and sent some to Cæfar, to let him know, they were ready to open the Gates, to receive his Commandments, and to deliver Domitius alive into his hands. Upon advertisement whereof (albeit Cæsar found it a matter of great consequence to gain the Town with as much speed as he could, and to take the Soldiers into his Camp, lest either by large Promises and Gifts, or by entertaining other purposes, or otherwise through false Bruits or devised Messages, their Minds might happily be altered, as oftentimes in the course of War, great and eminent chances and alterations do happen in a small moment of time; yet for that he feared lest the Night-time might give occasion to the Soldiers, upon their entrance to Sack and Pilfer the Town) he commending those that came unto him, Sent them back again, and willed that the Gates and the Walls should be kept with a good Guard. He himself disposed the Soldiers upon the Work which he had begun; not by certain spaces and distances, as he had accustomed in former times, but by continual Watches and Stations, one touching another round about all the Fortifications. Moreover, he Sent the Tribunes and Captains of the Horse about, and willed them to have a care that there might be no Eruptions or Sallies, and that they should look to the private slippings out of particular Men. Neither was there any Man so heavy or dull, that suffered his Eyes to be skut that Night: For so great was the expectation of what would ensue, that no Man thought of any other thing, than of what would happen to the Corfinians, to Domitius, to Lentulus and the rest. About the fourth Watch of the Night, Lentulus Spinther spake from the Wall to our Soldiers that had the Watch, and signified that he would willingly have leave to come to Cæsar. Which being granted, he was sent out of the Town, attended such things as wore of use for the defence of the Town, but he himself conferring secretly with some of his samiliar Friends, consulted how he might escape away. But forasmuch as his Looks agreed not with his Words, and that his carriage seemed more troubled and timorous than usual, and likewise his secret Conferences with his Friends were more than ordinary, as also by his avoiding of publick Counsels and Assemblies as much as he could, the

with some of Domitius's Soldiers, who left him not until he came in fight of Cæsar. With him he dealt concerning his Life, and prayed him to Parden him; put him in Mind of their former familiarity, seknowledged the favours received from Cafar. which were very great; namely, That by his means, he was chosen into the College of Priests, that upon Collegium the going out of his Pratorship, he obtained the Pro-Pontiocum. wince of Spain, and in his fuit to be Conful, he was much affifted by bim.

Casfar interrupting his Speech, told him, That he came not from his Government to hurt any Man; but to defend himself from the Injuries of his Adversaries; to restore the Tribunes of the People to their Dignity, that were thrust out and expelled the City; and to put himself and the People of Rome into Liberty, which were oppress with the Partialities of a sew Factious Persons. Lentulus, being re-Affired upon this answer, prayed leave to return into the Town; and the rather, that this which be had obtained touching his own safety, might give hope to the reft: Amongst whom some were so affrighted, that he doubted they would fall into some desperate course. And having obtained leave, be departed. Caefar, as soon as it was day, commanded all the Senators and Senators Children, together with the Tribunes of the Soldiers, and the Roman Knights, to he brought out unto him. Of Senators there were L. Domitius, P. Lentulus Spinther, Vibullius Rufus, Sex. Quintilius Varus, the Treasurer, L. Rubrius; besides Domitius's Son, and many other young Men; with a great number of Roman Knights and Decurions, whom Domitius had called out of the Municipal Towns. Thefe being all brought forth unto him, were protected from the Insolencies and Injuries of the Soldiers. Moreover, he spake a few words unto them, concerning the ill requital on their behalf, for the great benefits he had done unto them: And so sent them all away in Peace.

The fixty Sestertia of Gold which Domitius had laid up in the publick Treasury, being brought unto him by the two chief Magistrates or Bailiffs of Cor-Dumvinisinium, he redelivered to Domitius; lest he should feem more continent in taking away Mens Lives than their Moneys: Although he knew that this Money was part of the publick Treasure, and delivered out by Pompey to pay Soldiers. He commanded Domitius's Party to be fworn his Soldiers. And that day removing his Camp, went a full day's march (after a stay of seven days about Corsinium) through the consines of the Marrucini, Frentani, and Larinates, and came into Apulia.

The First OBSERVATION.

AS it is true, that a Friend is not folely tied to Latins pater the respects of right, but doth give more advantage by offices of good endeavour, than by Regula. that which duty requireth: So is it dangerous for a Man to put his Sickle further into the Corn, than haply may deferve thanks of the Owner. Neither can it be cleared from Imputation of Stutistic vide-Folly, to attend another Man's business, with ha-twr, atheam zard and peril of our own Fortune. Howbeit, culo ware. the current and drift of things doth oftentimes fo Salust de engage both our Persons and Affections, either in tello Jugurth. the main action it felf, or in some circumstances of the same, that we cannot avoid the hazard of Rebuke, if our endeavours do not fort with his liking that is to approve them. Whereof Domitius may be an inflance; who, taking Confinium on the behalf of the State, was nevertheless disavowed in his Merit, and consequently brought into extremity of danger, for his over-forwardness in the Service of his Country. Such liberty hath fovereignty, either to take or leave, when the event shall not rife answerable to a good meaning.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Hen a party is fallen into an exigence, it hath no better remedy for relief than that of the Comick, Redimas te captum quam queas minimo; redeem your felf at as cheap a rate as you can. Which is not understood, that we should clear the Head, and leave the rest of the Members to misfortune: for that were to draw a double mischief on the whole body. But the Head is to escape with as little prejudice to the other parts, as by Wisdom and Vertue may be gained: And fo much the rather, left in feeking to purchase fafety with hazard of the other Members, it draw the whole destruction upon it self; as it sell out with Domitius: who going about to fly out of the Town, and to leave such Forces as by his means were imbarked in that cause, was justly made the moved to escape himself away by Night, and to Saluft de bello leave his Troops to such fortune as Jugarth upon advantage should put upon them; he answered, Etiamsi certa pestis adesset, mansurum potius, quam proditis quos ducebat, turpi fuga, incerta, ac soff-tan paulo pest morbo interiture vita parceret: Although the Plague were never so near and certain to befall him, yet he would stay by it, rather than by a base flight betray those under his command, thereby to fave his fickle life for a time, which it may be some disease or other would immediately after deprive him of. And therefore if a Commander shall at any time go about to betray his Forces, with hope of his own fafety, the iffue will bring out either his dishonour, or his

The Third OBSERVATION.

SUch as undertake great defigns, do likewife project the means of atchieving the fame, and do propound unto themselves such Principles to be observed, as they take to be special way-makers to the fortune they reach at; from which grounds they feldom or never fwerve. As appeareth by this of C.sfar: who aiming at the Sovereignty of to hold firm that Principle; and did forbear to gain a Town of great importance, with that speed which occasion and opportunity did afford him, and to take the Troops into his Camp, for the prevention of fuch chances and changes, as do happen in a small moment of time, left his Soldiers entring into the Town, after the flutting of the Evening, might take leave of the Night-time to make forfeiture of his mercy.

It shall therefore well beseem the wisdom of a Leader, to have always respect to the Principles of his Means, and to diftinguish between that which is fit and that which is more fit, in the native carriage of his bufiness.

The Fourth OBSERVATION.

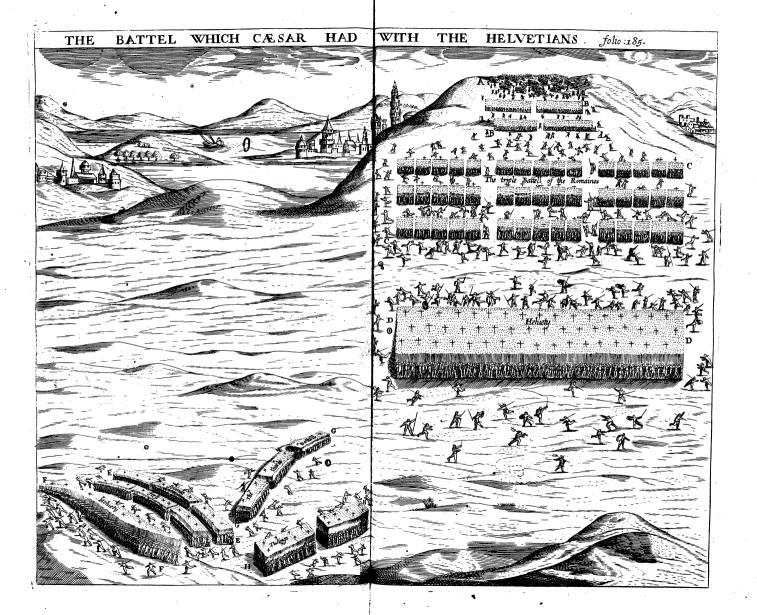

Oncerning this Collegium Pontificum, the Col-Concerning this congruent on note, that Numa, the founder of the Roman Commonweal, for the preventing of Partialities and Factions in that State, which at that time confifted of two Nations or Tribes, did break the whole body into many that all Minstrels or Trumpeters should be incorporated into one Brotherhood; and that in like manner, Goldsmiths, Carpenters, Dyers Shoo-makers, Coriers, Tanners, Bell-founders, Pot-ters, and all other Trades and Sciences, should have their peculiar body or Fraternity; appointing them Feafts, Assemblies, and Services, according to the worthiness of each Mystery, as Plutarch hath observed in the Life of Numa.

Valerius Maximus maketh mention of the Col- cap. de inflilege of Pipers or Minstrels. And Pliny, in like https://doi.org/10.1016/j.cep. ti. 14.34. manner, mentioneth the College of Coppersmiths. Lik. 24.
Cicero taketh notice of the College or company Fipit, ad of Merchants, which he calleth Collegium Mercuri- 24 fratren alium; for that of old time, the nimble-tongu'd tpift. 5. Mercury was believed in, as the Guider and Protector of Meschants. The Privileges and Cuftoms wherewith these Fraternities were endowed, are set down by Caius the Civilian. There are cer-h L. 1, 5, facrifice of their peace. Sulla deferved better to tain Colleges at Rome, faith he, incorporated by be followed by Men of adventure: For, being Act of Senate, and established with good Ordinances and Conftitutions, having certain things in common, in imitation of the Publick weal: And as Scavola further noteth, with power to make Laws, for the better Government of fuch Colleges films. and Societies; so the same be not contrary to the fundamental Laws of the State. After the same manner, the Priefts had their peculiar College or Corporation; and at the first institution were but four in number, and all of Patrician Families, unto the Year of Rome 454: At what time there were four of the Commons chosen, and added to the former number; whom Sulla increased to fifteen, as Dio witneffeth. And these were called Lit. 26. Collegium Pontificum, whereof this Pontifex Maximus was Prefident: one of the absoluteft Dignimus was frendent: one of the abloluteft Dignities of Rome, as being for term of life, and of greateft and Divine Authority. Which general diffribution of the Romans into Trades and Myfleries, doth not unfully bring into remembrance, that which is usual amongst the Turks, who by their Law are all bound to be of an Occupation; not excepting the Grand Signior himself. For he that now upholds the Ottoman Family, by the name of Sultan Acmet, is a professed maker of Acomety Rings, which the Turks do wear on their Thumb the Great when they shoot, to let the String go easily withthis of Cold? who animing at the Gotter to that Empire, and knowing no way so direct to lead him thereumo, as to climb up by the steps of Mildness, and to make his Advertaries debtors to all his Courtiers are of Trades and Occupations; Bullang and Coupations; Bullang and Mildness, and to make his Advertaries debtors to out hurting them: and his Father Mahomet was Bella, Nalle Mildness, and to make his Advertaries decours to his Clemency, he left afide his Maxims of War, and every Man is called by the Title of his Art: 30/15. As, he that was lately Visier Bassa to the present Ga Sultan, was called by the name of Natcash Bassa, the Visier Painter, being indeed the Sultan's Painter. Neither are they assamed to acknowledge

The Fifth OBSERVATION.

THe fifth thing which I observe out of these Passages at Corfinium, is, the restoring back of fuch Monies to Domirius, as were brought un-to Cafar by the Officers of the Town, and which he knew to be of the publick Treasure of the State. Which howsoever it may feem admirable to the hearers of these times, wherein there is but this one Rule for matter of Money, Unde habeas quærit nemo, fed oportet habere, No body asks how you come by it, but it must be had: Yet fuch as will lay a fure foundation of Honour, and thrive in the courses which they follow, must not fmall parts and fractions, making his division by be ignorant, that there is nothing more requisite Arts and Occupations; whereby he ordained, to gain opinion and reputation in the carriage of be ignorant, that there is nothing more requifite means that will fooner win a multimue, to believe means that will fooner win a multimue, to believe means that will fooner win a multimue, to believe means that will fooner win a multimue, to be the well with the well will be the well will be the well with the well and the well will be the well with the well will be the well wi tis pellation name nence and Continency: especially when they are superior Naula found in Princes and chief Commanders, that can assem re, con-other wife justific their actions with Sovereignty templestiam and uncontrollment. Nor, on the other fide, did ever Apollo give out truer Oracle than that, which faid. That there was no means to ruine Sparta but by Avarice.

In which fense (a) C. Pontius the Samnite wished, that the Gods had referved him to times where-Cicero. in the Romans would have been corrupted with Gifts: for then he would foon have feen an end of their Commonweal. And certainly that Empire could never have rowred fo high, nor continued firm fo many Ages, had not her foundation been laid by Men of admirable temper in this kind: Such as was Paulus Æmylius; who having facked Macedonia, and brought as much Wealth into the publick Treasury as gave an end to Tributes and Subfidies, was no way the richer (but in Honour) for all that he had taken. And fuch also was Scipio Africanus; that of all the Wealth of Carthage, brought nothing into his private House, but a high and triumphant Name, as a merit of his vertues and deeds of Arms: leaving behind him this Oracle, as a document to following times; That covetous Captains are good to none but to the Enemy. And to conclude, fuch was M. Curius; who having triumphed over the Samnites, the Sabines, and Pyrrius, refused a great mass of Gold, which was offered him by the Samnites: effective ing it more honourable to command them that had Gold, than to have Gold of his own. Howbeit, fuch is the frailty of humane nature, that for the most part, Men have always suffered their defire of Money to increase with their Wealth, although it were to their ruin and destruction. Which Cafar well discerned, as appeareth by that which he writ to Oppius, touching this accident: Hac nova sit vincendi ratio, ut misericordia & liberalitate nos muniamus; It is a new way of Conquering, to strengthen our felves by Mercifulness and Liberality.

The Sixth OBSERVATION.

UPon occasion of Casar's calling unto him, out of the Town, Senatores, senatorungue filios. Equitosque Romanos, the Senators, Sons of Senators, and Roman Knights, it shall not feem impertinent, to note the degrees and conditions of State whereof the Roman People confifted. For the better clearing whereof it is to be understood, that by that notable Transaction at Comitium, between Romulus and Tatius, it was agreed, That both those Nations should dwell together at Romulus's Town, which after his name, should be called Rome; and that the Inhabitants thereof fould be named Quirites, after the name of Ta-tius's City. Howbeit, specially they were divided into three Tribes, whereof they which were of Plutarch in Romulus's parry, were called after his name, Rhamwas Remail. nenses; those that came with Tatius, Tatienses; and the third Tribe Lucerences, of Lucus, a Grove: Forasmuch as they being neither of Romulus's retinue, nor yet of the Sabines, were nevertheless met together at that place, from divers parts, as at a Grove, where commonly Assemblies were made to offer Sacrifice, and to perform their heathenish Solemnities. Each of these Tribes were divided by Romulus into ten Curie; and to made the number of thirty any publick business, than to be clear of the least fulpicion of coverousness. Neither is there any means that will sooner win a multitude, to believe in those things which are fee abroach by publick Authority, than those two Virgin vertues, Abstinatority, than those two Virgin vertues, Abstinatority is the statement of the sta his own choosing, to make the number up an hundred; whom he established as his Council or Se-Serature. nate: By whose advice he resolved of all matters of consequence, either concerning Peace or War, as Dionysius Halicarnasseus noteth. Howbeit Plu-Lit. 2. tarch faith, they were feldom affembled but to understand the King's pleasure; and had no other pre-eminence in the Common-weal, saving they were the first that did know what was purposed. Howsoever, they were ft.led by the name of Senatores, quasi seniores, as thereby qualified to be admitted to Counsel: and in the same senie they were called Patres. The Senate being thus established, Romulus felected out of every of those Curic ten young Men, and so made up the number of three hundred, for a guard to his Person; who for their readiness and nimbleness were called Celeres, all mount- Equites: orde ed on Horseback: Whence grew their Ordo Eque-Equesting firis, or band of Roman Knights, which were the mean between the Senate and the People, and as a Seminary to supply the Senate; for out of them were the Senators taken. The rest, that were not Plebs, or of these two Orders, were comprehended under Populus. the name of the Commons, or Populacy. Whereby it appeareth that Rome confifted of three estates. Senators, Knights, and the Commons, according to that of Aufonius;

Martia Roma triplex; Equitatu, Plebe, Senatu.

Of three forts Rome confifts, Knights, Commons. Senate

Touching the number of Senators, it is further to be noted, that Tarquinius Priscus, to gain the favour of the People, took a hundred of the Commons, and added them to the Senate, who were called Senatores minorum Gentium. And Brutus Senatores having reduced it to a Commonweal, made them minorum up three hundred out of the band of Knights; and Gentium. from that time they were called Patres confcripti. Patres con-Neither were they at all times limited to that forpit, number: For the feditious Gracchi added three hundred more unto them; and Julius Cafar admitted unto the Senate all manner of Persons. In which regard Augustus (as Suetonius faith) Senato- Sueton, 35. rum affluentem numerum deformi & incondita turba (erant enim super mille, & quidam indignissimi) ad modum pristinum & splendorem redegit : Reduced the excessive number of Senators, which was become a deformed and shapeless company (for they were above a thousand, and divers of them unworthy Fellows) to their ancient way and fplendour.

Concerning a competency of Wealth, to make a Man capable of the place of a Senator, we may observe, that in the Reign of Servius the King, he that was worth a thousand Asses (which are about three hundred pound sterling) was eligible. But the Riches of the Empire increasing, a Senator's Wealth was rated at nine thousand pound, according to Suetonius; Senatorum censum amplia-Suam. 41 vit, ac pro oftingentorum millium summa duodecies H. S. taxavit, Supplevitque non habentibus. The Wealth of a Roman Knight was rated at three hundred threefcore, or thereabouts.

This Corfinium was the chief Town of the Pe-Corfinium. lignians, and flood in the centre of Italy, where sn all the Confederate People affembled when they be. 6. confulted of War against the Romans, for stiles. Appian de bell: Hilipan. Cic Cato Major.

Observations upon C Es A R's

called Bellum Sociale, Marsicum, and Italicum. There is now nothing remaining of that Town but the Ruines, as a Mark of the Place where it anciently flood, upon a Plain, commonly called Pentina, or Sant Peligno.

CHAP. IX.

Pompey goeth to Brundusium: C. far maketh means to treat with him.

Ompey understanding of these things which had past at Corfinium, departed from Luceria, and went to Canufium, and from thence to Brundusium; causing all the power he could to be raifed by new Musters and Inpower we count to we rayled by new wayters and un-rollments, arming Shepherds and Slaves, and non-ing them on Horfeback, of whom he made some three hundred Horse. In the mean time I. Manlius, the Prator, fled from Alba with fix Cohorts; and Rutilius Lupus, Prictor, fled from Tarracina with three Cohorts: Who descrying afar off the Cavalry of Cæsar, commanded by Bivius Curius, forfaking the Prator, turned their Ensigns towards Curius, and joyned with him. In like manner the days following divers other Cohorts came in as they marched, some to the Foct Troops, and some to the Horfe. Cn. Magius of Cremona, Master of the Works, and of the Munition in Pompey's Army, was taken on the Way and brought back to Cæsar: Whom he sent back again to Pompey, with com-mission to treat with him to this effect: Forasmuch as there had yet happened no opportunity of meeting or conference, he was now determined to feek him at Brundusium ; for it much imported the Commonweal, and every Man's safety in particular. that they two might conferr together. Neither could things be so well handled upon so great a di-flance of way, where the Articles of Treaty must be carried to and fro by a third Party, as when they met face to face to conclude of the conditions.

This Meffage being first given, he came to Brundusium with fix Legions; four Legions of old Soldiers, and the other raised by new inrollments, or made up as he came along the Country: For he had presently dispatched Domitius his Coborts from Corfinium into Sicily. At his coming, he found the Confuls gone over to Dyrrachium with the greatest part of the Army, and Pompey remaining at Brundusium with twenty Cohorts. Neither could be certainly be informed, whether he remained at Brundusium to make good the Town, whereby he might the casier be Master of the Adriatick Sea, and command both the utter Parts of Italy, and the Regions of Greece, and so to keep the War on foot on the one fide and on the other; or whether he flai-ed there for want of hipping. How four he would not endure that Pompey Bould think he could not be forced to quit Italy; and therefore refolved to flop up the mouth of the Haven, and to take away the use thereof : Which he went about in this manner. Where the mouth of the Haven, was narrow-Cafar before eft, he raifed great Mounts of Earth on either fide el Pomprat near unto the Shore; for there the Sea was scallow; Brundassen, Brundusum, near unto the deep, where no such the 23 day of but going further into the deep, where no such Edwary Au-Wood, right against the same Mounts of thirty Foot Square; and at the corners cast out four Anchors to fasten them that they might not be toffed up and down by the Waves. These Floats being thus placed, he then added other Floats of the same scantling, and covered them with Bavin and Earth, to their right of Burgess-thip, or Freedom of the City, the end Men might come readily upon them to de-which was then denied them: Which War was fend them. He armed them in Front and on each fide with Hurdles and Gabions : and on every fourth Float made a Tower of two Stories high the better to defend them from Violence of Shipping, and from

Against this work Pompey sent out great Ships of burthen, which he found in the Haven, armed of outsiden, which he found in the traver, armed with Towers of three Stories high, full of Munitan and all fort of Weapons, to binder and diffurb the fame. So that every day they fought afar off each with other, with Slings, Arrows, and other casting Weapons. Which Business Casar so carryed, as being willing not to let fall the conditions of Peace, if happily it might be effected. And albeit he reatly wondered that Magius, whom he had fent to Pompey, did not return again; and that this Treaty so often attempted, did binder much his designs: Yet he thought it fit by all means to persevere therein : And therefore fent Caninius Rebilus, one of bis Legates, an inward Friend of, and near allied to Scribonius Libo, to Speak with him; commanding pompey's Son bim to personale Libo to mediate a reconciliation, maried its and that Cæsar himself might speak with Pompey is and that Cæsar himself might speak with Pompey is limited by that thereupon both of them would yield to lay down their Arms upon equal conditions: The greatest part of which Honour would redound to Libo, if by his intercession the War might take an Libo having heard Caninius, went streight to Pompey; and within a while returning, told him, That forasmuch as the Consuls were absent, there could be nothing done touching an agreement. Whereupon Czesar resolved to let fall the matter of Treaty, which he had so often attempted, and to prepare for War.

The First OBSERVATION.

His Accident of taking Cn. Magius, hath I made known an Officer of great place and use in the Roman Army, of whom otherwise their Histories make little mention. For, howsoever there is found in these Commentaries many par-ticular Descriptions of admirable and incredible Works, fuch as may feem to be made rather by Works, such as may recan to be defined and the Giants and Cyclopes, than any labour of Man; yet profession or February or Profession of Control of the Contr there is no mention of any Prafectus Fabrûm, or Frafectus Mafter of the Works in any of Casar's Armies. Howbeit Vegetius, expressing their singular care to Lik 2. have in abundance all manner of Provisions requi- Cap. 11. fite for an Army, faith; That to every Legion did belong Carpenters, Bricklayers, Smiths, Painters, and other Artizans, skilful and fit to build Lodgings for their Winter Camps; to make Engines and Devices for War; fuch as were their contributed and belong the same of the portative or ambulatory Towers, Targets, Morions, Corflets, Bows, Arrows, Darts, and Piles, or whatsoever else might serve, either for offence or defence. Which Artificers were all known by the name of Fabri; and he that was chief, and had the command of them, was called Prafeaus Fabrûm. And in like manner Plutarch plutarchie sheweth that there was such an Officer; as also the Life of that the Place was given by the General; where Cicero he faith that Vibius a Sicilian refused to lodge Cicero, as he passed to Exile through Lucania; although that in his Confulship he had bestowed upon him the place of Prafectus Fabrûm. And albeit Cafar maketh no mention of any such Officer; yet Catullus doth it for him, in fuch biting Trimetres as will not be forgotten:

Quis

Quis hoc potest videre, quis potest pati, Nisi Impudicus, & Vorax, & Helluo, Mamurram habere, quod comata Gallia Habebat & ultima Britannia?

Who can this endure to fee, But must a wanton Glutton be, That Mamurra should have all Fetch'd from Britain and from Gaul?

Lib. 3

Of which Mamurra Pliny thus writeth; Cornelius Nepos, faith he, writeth that Mamurra a Roman Knight, born at Formia, and Mafter of the Works under Cafar in Gallia, was the first that covered all the Walls of his House, which he built in Mount Calius, with Leaves of Marble. Neither let any Man disdain the Authour as a mean Person; for this is that Mamurra, whom Catullus doth note in his Verses; whose House was far more stately than Catullus did express, by faying he had gotten all the Wealth of Gallia Comata. For the said Cornelius affirmeth, that he was the first in Rome that made the Pillars of his House of solid Marble, even hewn out of the Quarries of Cariftus, or Luna. Thus far goeth Pliny. Out of which may be noted, that exorbitancy in gaining doth produce the like course in spending; and howsoever such comings in may be close and secret, yet the iffings out will proclaim it in profule and lavishing manner: And therefore fuch as command in these places, and have such means to enrich themselves, had need to be clean-fingered. Casar writing to Oppius, mentioneth the taking of this Man, as a thing of some note. Cn. Magium, Pompeii Prafectum deprehendi scilicet, meo instituto usus sum, & eum ftatim missum feci : Jam duo Prafecti Fabrum in meam potestatem venerunt, & à me missi sunt : When I had taken Cn. Magius, a Master of the Works to Pompey, according to my usual manner, I let him go. So that there have two Mafters of the Works fallen into my Hands, and I have let them both freely go. Concerning the use of these manual Arts, and the prerogative they have in well-ordered States; it is to be noted, that without these, no City can conveniently be built, fortifyed, or furnished with And thereupon fuch Artizans have alwayes challenged a place of chief regard in the Commonweal. Whence it was that Ulyffes fcorned not Se Fabrum profiteri, to profess himself such Homer. Odyfi. 23.

The Second OBSERVATION.

The Maxime proprium, or most proper part of War is opposition; and that universal, rather than any other kind of repupancy: For there is no sympathizing condition between two Enemy Armies, otherwise than by mutual exchange of welle & molles, throughout the whole course of their designs; as may be here observed upon Cessar's Arrival as Brandssium. For finding Pompey to remain there after the departure of the Consuls, and not certainly informed of the reason of his stay; lest he should think he could not be forced to quit Itasy, Cessar went about to thrust him out headlong: Or otherwise if his purpose were to follow after the Consuls to Dyrrachium, Cessar's design then was to shut him in, and so to have followed the rule of contradiction, by which Soldiers are directed in their Archievements.

Concerning the Situation of Brundusium, which hath ever been famous for the commodiousness of the Haven, and the usual Port where the Remans took shipping for Greece, being but a hundred Italian Miles distant from Apollonia in Epirus; we are to note that the Town ftand-gradam Pearls of Earth, extended into the te breatait. Haven Peninsule-like from the main Land, re- causa Bren fembling the Neck and Head of a Stagg, and in Festus. that regard is called Brundusium, of Boeven, which fignifieth a Stagg: Which Langet hath many crooked Guts, or Inlets of the Sea, capable of great shipping; besides the two main Ports on either fide of the Town, which with the reit of the Haven, make the fafeft and faireft Road of that part of the World. The Mouth of the Haven where Cafar made his Floars, is very ftreight; and opposite thereunto, some three Miles distant into the Sea, standeth a small Island, to abate the Violence and Rage of the Waves. Now to besiege Brundusium, it was requisite to take away the use and benefit of the Haven : Which Cafar attempted with fuch rare and artificial Works of Mounts where the Sea was shallow, and of Floats where the Water was deep; and those made firm with Earth, and fenced with Hurdles and Turrets, that the Reader may difcern it, by the Description, to be a Master-piece of excellent invention.

The Third OBSERVATION.

IT is truly faid of old, That Peace is not dear at any rate. Which Antiochus well underflood, when he bought it of the Romans for twelve thousand Attick Talents, and five hundred Livy Lib. 8. and forty thousand Bushels of Wheat: Esteeming Dec. 4. it as the fovereign happiness of Man's fortune, and an extraordinary effect of those intelligent Spirits, which guide the motions of the Cælestial Spheres, to keep the Elements in a difagreeing Concord. and the Feet of Men in the Paths of Tranquility. Hence it is, that fuch as are Instruments of so great a good, and shall thereby happen to redeem a Nation from Horror and Confusion, have in all Ages been crowned with Honour and Renown, as the due reward of a Mediator of Peace. And therefore Casar, perswading Libo to negotiate a ceffation of Arms, and to work in Pompey a disposition to an Agreement, propounded the Honour which attended this Service, and the Merit of that Endeavour which brought back Peace into the Empire.

CHAP. X.

Pompey leaveth Brundusium, and shippeth himself for Greece.

He Work being half perfeited, and nine Caur.
Days Labour beflowed upon it; the Ships that had transferred the Confuls and the other part of the Army, returned from Dyrrachium to Brundufium: And thereupon Pompey began to fit himself for a departure; being induced thereunte either by the Works which Castar had begun, or by a resolution formerly taken to quit I-taly. And the better to retard Casar's projecution (left upon his sissuing out, the Soldiers Fould enter the Town) he mured up the Castar, and short the Entrances of the Streets and Passages, and therein situation of the Ways, and therein study flages, limb Cirches and Iranecks and covering the sum with sligher Huddes, levelled it with this and light Earth. Leaving onely two ways free, which went tunto the Haven, which he bedg d in with a sirven Passage.

ag a in with a strong Faitsado of huge sharp Piles.

These things being thus prepared, he commanded

Ee 2

the.

CHAP. XI.

Cafar dispatcheth Forces into Sardinia and Sicily. Cato's endeavour to keep Sicily for Pompey, Lbeit Cæsar well knew, that it much im- Cæsar.

the Soldiers to get on Shipboard, without Noise or Tu-mult; and left upon the Walls and in the Towers, here and there. Some of the readiest Slingers and Archers, to be called away upon a warning Sign, when the rest of the Soldiers were all shipped; appointing Gallies to take them in at an easie and safe Place. The Inhabitants of Brundusium, oppressed with the Injuries and Contumelies of getting aboard, gave notice thereof from the Tops getting abourd, gave notice thereof from the 1991 of their Houfes. Which being perceived. Cadar (not to omit any opportunity of atchieving his purpose) commanded Ladders to be prepared, and the Soldiers to take Arms. Pompey a little before Night weighed Anchour: And the Soldiers keeping guard on the Wall, upon the Watch-word given, were all called from their Stations, and by known Passages repaired to the Ships. Cæsar's Soldiers with Ladders got upon the Wall: But being admonished by them of Brundusium to take heed of the blind Ditch, they food still. At last they were brought a great compass about, and so came to the Haven; and with Skiffs and Boats, seized two Ships with Soldiers, which stuck by chance upon the Mounts which Cxfar had made.

OBSERVATION.

Plutarch in the Life of

Cocum Val-

 $\mathbf{F}^{ ext{Orasimuch}}$ as this manner of Pompey's departure from Brundusium, and the sleight he used to imbark himself and his Army without danger of Casar's entering the Town, is commended for one of the best Stratagems of War that ever he used; let us a little confider the parts thereof, which prefent themselves of two forts: The one confisting of the Works he made, to hinder and retard Cafar's entrance, if happily he should have knowledge of his departure; and the other in the clean-ly conveyance of his Men aboard, without noise or Tumult, and the femblance he made of keeping the Town, by continuing Watch upon the Walls, to the end there might be no knowledge taken thereof. The Works were of three forts. For first he mured and stopped up the ends and entrances of Streets and Lanes, which might give access to a pursuing Enemy. And to that end also, he funk Dirches, or Trenches, crofs the Ways and Paffages : Which he stuck full of sharp Stakes and Galthrops, and covered them with light and thin Hurdles, that the Enemy might not efpy them. And thirdly hedged in the Ways leading to the Port, with a ftrong Pallisado of huge sharp Piles. And so used both the Lyon's and the Fox's Skin, to avoid the danger which might have fallen upon him, if Cafar happily had found means to attach them, as they were incumbered in getting to their Ships, and disposing themselves to fly away. Which being an occasion that might have given him great advantage, was in this manner carefully prevented by Pompey. Howbeit, this his quitting Brundufium is centured but for a faulty resolution handfomely carried: For Cicero doth much blame him Gicer. Epift for abandoning Italy; calling it a Themisto-ad Atticum clean Policy, to perswade his Party to forsake their Country, and to leave the best of their pleasures, and the weakest of each Sex, to such misery and defolation, as moved pity in those that considered but the condition of the Dogs and brute Beafts; as it fell out at Athens, when Themistocles per-Country, and betake themselves wholly to sea, to pelled him to weigh Anchour and depart.

fight against Xerxes.

ported a speedy end of the business, to get Pompey and his Soldiers, did favour Caclar's Party; and understanding of this departure, whilf they were running up and down, and husted about the Transmarine Parts; yet doubting the lets, and the long time before it could be effected, for that Pompey had taken with him all the shipping he could get, and thereby left him for the present no means to follow after : It remained that he attended shipping to be brought from remote Parts, as out of Gallia, from Ancona and the Streights; which at that time of the Year, would require a long and troublesome passage. In the mean time, he thought it no way fit that Pompey's old Army, and the two Provinces of Spain should be settled and assured; (one of them being deeply engaged to Pompey for many great and ample Benefits:) Or that they should have time to raise new Troops, especially of Horse; or that Gallia or Italy should be sollicited or wrought from him ha or italy foould be follicited or wrought from him in is ablence. And therefore for the prefent, he reforded to desift from making any further pursuit after Pompey, and togo into Spain g giving order to the Dummytin of all the Municipal Towns, to provide Balifs. Shipping, and send it to Brundustum. He sent Valerius, a Legate, into Sardinia with one Legion; and Curio the Proprator, into Sicily with three Legions; commanding him, after he had possessed Sici-ly, to transport his Army into Africa. Marcus Cotta governed Sardinia, and M. Cato, Sicily, Tubero should by lot have held Africa. The Caralitani understanding that Valerius was to be fent unto them, before he had left Italy, of their own accord thrust Cotta out of the Town. Cotta a= mused thereat, and perceiving withal that the whole Province gave consent unto it, fled presently out of Sardinia into Africa. Cato prepared and new trimmed the Gallies in Sicily, giving order to the Towns to build new, and prosecuted his direction with great diligence. Moreover, by his Legates, be mustered and enrolled Citizens of Rome in Lucania and Brutia, requiring proportionable numbers of Horse and Foot from the Towns in Sicily. Which things being almost accomplished, understanding of Curio's coming, he complained in publich how he was abandoned and betrayed by Pompey; who without any providence or preparation, had engaged him-felf in an unnecessary War: And yet being demanded by himself and the rest in the Senate, answered confidently, that he was provided of all necessaries fit for War. And after he had thus publickly complained, he fled out of the Province : By which means, Valerius found Sardinia, and Curio Sicily, void of Government, and thither brought their Armies.

Tubero arriving in Africa, found Actius Varus commanding the Province: Who (as we have formerly shewed) having lost his Cohorts at Auximum, fled forthwith into Africa, and of his own Authority possessed himself of the Province, which he found without a Governour. He got together by new Enrolments two compleat Legions, which he raifed by his Knowledge and Experience of the People of that Country, by reason he had governed that Province as Prætor Some few Years before. Tubero arriving with his Fleet at Utica, was by Varus kept out of the Town and the Haven; neither would he suffer fwaded the Athenians to leave their Town and him to fet his Son ashore, which was sick, but com-

Cefar.

Hese things being ended, that the Soldiers might for the residue of the time be a little eased and refreshed, Caesar brought them back into the next Municipal Towns: he himself went directly to the City: And having called a Senate, he layeth open the injuries and

The First OBSERVATION.

Lib. I.

THis Chapter maketh the first period of this War, as it is taken from the beginning of these Civil Broils, unto Pompey's forsaking Italy, which was begun and ended in the space of 60 days: and also openeth the Gate to second resolutions, which are profecuted, as the fequel of the Hiftory will manifest: Containing likewise the reafons, why Cafar made not present pursuit after Pompey, as the hinges of the succeeding War, and the true causes of the consequents of the same. In the consideration whereof, albeit Casar underflood the advantage of him that profecuteth a receding Enemy, and the hopes which might be thereby conceived of a speedy end of that War; yet having no ready means to accomplish his defire, he thought it better to prevent fuch inconveniences as might happily have fallen out upon the fame: And so to keep his Party in a progress of their active thoughts, by clearing and affuring that Western part of the Empire, which Pompey had left unto him by his departure; rather than to leave an Enemy on his back, or to admit a cooling and languishment of their resolutions, through expectation of Shipping, to follow that course which otherwise had been without exception.

In the carriage whereof we may observe, that as upon the first breaking out of these troubles, they scambled for the Towns of Italy, and sought they reambled for the 1 owns of Italy, and lought to frengthen their parties by such as had no voice or prefamiliation in the grand Chapter of the Senate, but only information for the benefit of Municipal rights; so now part, Appian, being parted alunder, and the contagion of this burney attent owns, the property of the property of the senate of the contagion of this value is the property of the um gentium ripeneis, they made like hatte to fatten upon the populi, longo- remoter Provinces, wherein Cafar had the better ppac, ange tennue Hovinces, which regar had the octet que terains portion. For in his share were contained Italy, palcherima. Gallia, Britannia, Hispania, Sicilia; which being the prime Countries of Funds, were configurate. Gallia, Britannia, Hispania, Sicilia; which being the prime Countries of Europe, were consequently the flour of that Empire, for that Europe hath ever been taken for the principal and chiefest part of the World.

The Second OBSERVATION.

CEcondly, we may observe in Cato, the effects of a Stoical or formal Spirit, which are more valuable in the eafiness of Peace, than in the difficulties of War. For, howfoever he made shew of bestirring himself, in rigging and trimming up the Gallies of his Province, commanding more to be built, raising new Troops of Horse and Foot. and profecuting his commands with purpose of an exact account: Yet in the end, understanding of Curio his coming, he spent his fury in complaining of his Friends, and laying the cause of those animosities upon him, whom by election and confent he had formerly fet up, to make head against fuch, as otherwise may be supposed would have contained themselves in a better measure of mo-

CHAP. XII.

Cafar goeth to Rome; and, calling a Senate, complaineth of the injuries done unto him.

wrongs offered unto him by his Adversaries; sheweth them, that he never sought Honour in the State by extraordinary means, only he looked to have enjoyed the full time of his Confulfrip, and therewith to have been contented: Winch was no more than any Citizen might stand for. The Tribunes of the People had required, that consideration might be had of him in his absence, notwithstanding the opposition of his Enemies, and Cato his bitter resistance, spending the time, after his old manner, with long and tedious Speeches: which if Pompey (being Consul) had disliked, why did he suffer that to pass which was enacted? But if then he did allow and like of it, what reason had he to hinder him from enjoying a benefit which the People of Rome had befowed upon him? From that, he fell to speak of his Patience: which appeared, in that of his own accord he moved that either party might quie their Forces; which might have been very prejudicial to his Honour and Dignity: Declared what had been the malice and bitterness of his Adversaries, who refused to do that themselves, which they required of another Man; choosing rather to imbroil and confound the whole State, than to forgo the command of an Army: Spake at large as well of the wrong done unto him, by taking the two Legions from him, as also for their hard and infolent dealing, in putting the Tribunes of the People by their place and Authority.

He forgot not likewife to relate the conditions which he propounded; the conference which he de-fired, and would not be granted. In regard whereof, he prayed and required, that they would take the charge of the Commonweal, and give a helping hand to him for the Government thereof. But if they should upon any doubt or mistrust refuse to joyn with him, he would not much importune them, but would take it into his own hands; and in the mean time, let Commiffioners be fent to Pompey to treat of Peace. Neither did he respect what Pompey a little before had said in the Senate, That to whomsoever Embassadors were sent, to such seemed to be ascribed Authority and Pre-eminence; as, on the contrary part, such as sent them, manifested an apconsisting parts juich as jent tokent, manujesed an ap-prebenfino of fear; for shele were arguments of pu-fillanimity. For his part, as he had gone beyond him in deeds of Arms and noble Alls; Jo would he in like manner, endeavour to excell him in Juftice and

The Senators were well pleased that Embassadors should be fent: but there was no Man found that from or jens: our roote was no trust young trust would go; every Man refusing in particular, for fear of Pompey; who, upon his departure from Rome, had faid in the Senate, That he would hold him that stayed at Rome, in the same condition with them that were in Cæsar's Camp. So that three days were spent in debate and excuses; L. Me- L. Merellus. tellus, Tribune of the People, being drawn by Cæfar's Adversaries, to protract the time, and to hinder any matter which Cæsar skould propound unto them.

The First OBSERVATION.

First, we may observe, how irksome it is to humane nature, for him that hath tafted the fweetness of Authority, to forgo the reins of command, and again to inroll his name in the Lift of common duty; descending from the Throne of Soveraignty, to the condition of Obedience, and to lose his eminency in respectless equality: especially, if the Honour be Military, and of Martial nature. For that fasteneth on us with a stronger Fasicitasis & hold, than any other power; being less capable dividuum of moderation, and waited on with the eyes and Contubernium. expectation of present and future Ages. Whereby Men grow desperately jealous of the opinion of the World, and cannot endure to quit themselves of 4.

The

ticum.
Pintarch.

Observations upon CASAR's

that care, although they have attained to the full time of their deliverance: But to be supplanted in the midft of so glorious a Race, or to be pulled out of the Seat of Magistracy by an abortive miscarriage, is able to inrage an ambitious spirit fo far beyond the bounds of Modesty, that it will not spare any endeavour to confound the greatest Empire, with irrecoverable Calamities.

The Second OBSERVATION.

 $S^{\rm Econdly}$, we may observe the disposition of those Senators, that by their staying at ${\it Rome}$, became neutral in that Faction; and thereupon refused either to take Casar's commands, or to present themselves to Pompey, as Mediators of Peace. Plutarch hath two reasons why the Senators would undertake no fuch matter of Commission as was required by Cafar. The first is Pempeio pro this which is here expressed; every Man searing hostibus se ha- the displeasure of Pompey, who at his departure repub defust from Rome, had protested to hold them for Enefort; inferme mies that went not along with him: Whereas dos o nontri- Cafar censured their forbearance with better ad-nos partis, for nu- vantage to himself, and took their neutrality as mero futures an argument of becoming his followers. The other reason which Plutarch avoucheth, is the opinion which the Senators had of Cafar's double Eppl. ad At- dealing; as not carrying his heart in his mouth, but pretending that which he never meant. For they could not be perfuaded that his end was a cestation of Arms, or fuch a Peace with Pompey as should have kept on foot their ancient liberty; but fought rather pretexts of good meaning, to colour his defign of making Rome his Servant. Howfoever, we may not omit what is reported to have happened between him and Metellus, more than he himself speaketh of. For, going about to take Money out of the Treasury, he was there floutly refifted by this Metellus, of whom he complaineth; alledging the Laws and Acts of the State. forbidding any Man to touch that Money, but in fuch times of extremity as were therein expressed.

To which Cafar answered; That those Laws were only made for time of Peace: But now, Arms and War required another course of pro-· Non nift per ceeding. Nevertheles Metellus * would not suffer nofrum voisis him to break open the doors, until Cafar advised perceffa pare him to be gone if he loved his Life; for it was bunt Templa lates, multof easier for him to dispatch him than to speak it: que feres fine and so entred and carried away the Treasure. finguine facro, Whereupon growth that of Florus, Censum & Sparsa, rap patrimonium populi Romani ante rapuit quam Im-Lucan. lib. 3. perium; He carried away the Treasure and Patrimony of the People of Rome, before he got the Dignun te Cefaris ira, Nullus honor

And Appian, deriding the scrupulousness of the ancient Romans, that would not touch that Treafure but in extremity of War against the Celta or Gauls, faith, that Cafar might lawfully take it, for that he had vanquished and subdued the Gauls; whereby the Romans had no further cause to fear them.

CHAP. XIII.

Cafar leaveth the City, goeth into Gallia, and treateth with the Marfeillians.

Ælar perceiving their resolution, after he had Spent there in vain Some few days (that he might not lose any more time, and leave those things undone which he purposely intended) he left the City, and went into the ftood that Pompey had fent into Spain Vibullius Rufus, whom Cæfar had a little before taken at Corfinium and dismissed him: And that Domitius likewise was gone to take Marseilles, with eight Gallies, which he set out from Sicilia and Sardinia, and manned them with Slaves, Men infranchifed, and his own Husbandmen: Sending as Meffengers before, certain young Noble-men of Marseilles, with whom Pompey upon his departure from the City had ear-nestly dealt, that Cæsar's new favours might not put out of their remembrance the old benefits which he had done unto them. Those of Marseilles having received this Message, sout their Gates against Cæsar, called into the City the Albicans, barbarous and mountainous People (who of ancient time had held amity with them, and dwelt upon the Hills above Marseilles) brought Corn from all the adjacent Regions and Castles into the Town, set up Offices and Forges to make Arms, repaired both their Walls, their Navy, and their Gates.

Cafar called out unto him some fifteen of the chiefest Men of Marseilles, and treated with them. that the beginning of the War might not grow from that Town; who should rather follow the example of all Italy, than apply themselves to the will of any one Man: not omitting fuch other persuasions as he thought pertinent to a found resolution. These Men reported at Marseilles what Cæsar had delivered, and by the common confent of the Town returned this answer; That they understood, that the People of Rome was divided into two parts; neither was it in them to judge, or could they discern which of the two was in the right. The Leaders of these two Factions were Pompey and Casar, both Special Patrons and Benefactors to their City: Of whom, one had augmented the publick revenues of the State, and endowed it with the Lands and Territories of the Volcæ Arecomici, and the Helvij; the other, having conquered and subdued * Gallias, gave it unto them, By this whereby their Tributary Incomes were much augment-Gallias, is ed; and therefore, as they were equally bound to both fome place for their favours, so would they carry to both an equal near to respect, not aiding either of them against the other, Marseilles.

Woilft these things were in handling, Domitius arrived at Marseilles with his Shipping; and being received in, was made Governour of the City, and had the whole direction of the War committed unto him. By his appointment the Fleet was fent out into all Coasts; and such Ships of burthen as they found, they brought in: the Nails, Timber, and Tackling whereof, they took to mend and rigg out other Ships. What Corn foever was found in the City, was brought in publick keeping; reserving the overplus of Victual and Provision for a Siege, as occasion should require. Cæsar, provoked with these injuries, brought three Legions to Marseilles, determined to make Towers and Mantelets ready for an Assault, and to build twelve new Gallies at Arles; which were armed, rigged, finished, and brought to Marseilles, within thirty days after the Timber was cut down. Of thefe be made D. Brutus Admiral, and left C. Trebonius to follow the Siege.

OBSERVATION.

 $\mathbf{F}^{\mathrm{Rom}}$ the Marfeillians we may learn, that it is far easier to say well than to do well: For howfoever they were able to difcern the truth, and to give an answer to Casar, well-befeeming the fame and opinion of their literature and know- Augusta ledge, (being an Academy little inferiour to the num best, and in later times more frequented by the fina post Major Romans, for the study of Oratory and Philosophy, rum arisim than Athens, or any other fuch chief Seat of the seder. Toche further Gallia. Upon his arrival there, he under- Mules;) yet in their actions they disavowed all: 3. Ar or receiving them within their Gates.

Idem ecdem.

Province of Spain. Which being for refolved and deis desirt and in their errour the more appeared, in that the party termined, Petreius having commanded the Lustianiaff fervare jugrieved was not liable to their award, but rather think, they did no more than they were tied unto by former Treaties, and Leagues with the Empire (which they took to confift in Pompey's Party) whereof they were Loyal and zealous Confederates; as appeareth by their love, when Rome was taken by the Gauls: For having news thereof, and understanding of the composition which was to be made to raise the Siege from the Capitol, they provided all the Gold and Silver they could get, and fent it to Rome for that service. In regard whereof they were endowed with many Privileges and Immunities, both in the City, and eliewhere in the Empire Howloever, their hap being to respect more an exact observance of what had paffed, than the fatal succeeding course of things, drew upon them a sharp and buter War; whereof they could not be freed, but by fubmitting themselves to his mercy whom they had rejected. And thus we see verified that of the Poet;

Quicquid delirant Reges plectuntur Achivi.

Kings play the fools, and the poor people suffer.

Which implieth also how dangerous it is, for Men of Authority and Imployment to be subject to wilful Ambition. For as their service is of great importance to Government, when it is attended with well-qualified affections; fo are their motions as fearful, which are carried with the violence of exorbitant paffions: Especially, considering the means they have, either to mif-imploy the power of the State, or to give way to fuch inconveniences as may necessarily pervert all things but the ends they aim at: besides the aptress of a high spirit, not to doubt the truth of that saying which is artributed to Cafar, Si violandum est jus, regnandi gratia violandum est; If a Man would violate all Right and Law, he would do it for a Kingdom.

CHAP. XIV.

Cafar hasteth into Spain.

Hilft these things were prepared and put in order, he fent C. Fabius, one of his Legates, with three Legions, that had into Spain; commanding him with all speed and diligence to take the passage of the Pyrenean Hills, which were kept at that time with the Forces of L. Afranius: and gave order for the other Legions which wintered further off, to follow after. Fabius, according to his directions, made haste, put the Garrison from the passage, and by great journeys marched towards Afranius's Arm.

Upon the arrival of Vibullius Rufus, who (as it is formerly related) was fent by Pompey into Spain, Afranius, Petreius, and Varro, Pompey's Legates (of whom the one governed the nearest Province of Spain with three Legions; the other held the Country from the * Forest of Castile, to the River fa.

1 Guadian.

1 Ana, with two Legions; and the third commandtedo, catedo, cat illis, Ac Pe- that Petreius was appointed to bring his Legions taking upon them most unscasonably to arbitrate vectores, and joyn bimself with Afranius; and those differences, and to shew their opinion of the that Varro with his Power, should keep the further ans to levy Horsemen, and other Auxiliary Forces; to the particle was not made to then awain, but having and the like levy in the food along the graph a double honour to and Afranius likewife having made the like levy in the food and then by particular, now doing their rathness. And yet some Writers do rest of the barbarous Nations bordering upon the Occubent was not made the like levy in the son claim and the son can be compared to the compare an: Petreius came speedily through the Vectones to tel lu. 4. Afranius; and induced by the opportunity of the place, † A valuate by mutual confent, they refolved to keep the War on tertaid from foot near about Ilerda.

There were with Afranius (as formerly bath been of whom Sil.

shewed) three Legions, with Petreius's two, befides Daumatum

Targetiers of the nearer Province, and + Buckier - vivete p.cl. bearers of the further Province, some 80 Coborts, and Scuation both Provinces about 5000 Horse. Casar had sent Nornius. his Legions into Spain, accompanied only with fix Cetra, Cutum thousand Auxiliary Forces, and three thousand Horse, br ve Quis which had been with him in the former Wars. And facer-ceveran the Gauls at his request furnished him with the like nequeat? number; besides the noblest and valiantest amongst Evocati. them, of whom he had made particular choice to follow him in that War. To thefe were added the better fort of the Aquitani, and High-landers, borderers upon the Province in Gallia. He was advertised that Pompey was on his journey, coming through Mauritania into Spain, and that he would speedily be there with his Legions: And thereupon he borrowed Money of the Centurions and Tribunes of the Soldiers, and gave it to his Army, whereby he gained two points : For first, he ingaged the Captains by that lone to endeavour his good success; and secondly, bought the good affections of the Soldiers by largess and distribugood affections of the Sounders of the get the favour of the Cities near about him; which he laboured as Hesperios in well by Letters as Messengers: and bad already made ter Sic two Bridges over the River Sicoris, distant one from non ultimus another about four miles, and over these Bridges sent amnes, Saxo out is Men to Forage; for he had spent all that was queen pon to be found on this fide the River. The same thing, ampletitur and upon the same occasion, did the Leaders of Pom-nar positions. pey's Army; and oftentimes their Cavalry met and a encountred together. And as it hapned, that two Lucan lib. 4. encountred together. And as it happed, that two of Fabius's Legions going out to Forage according to their daily cufforn, and had paffed the River, the Carriage and the Cavalry following after, upon a fudden (by the over-pefering of Horfes, and fwelling of the water) the Bridge broke, and the reft of the Cavalry was scluded and cut off from the Legions. Which Petreius and Afranius perceiving, by the Hurdles and Planeus five Planks that came down the River ; Afranius present- Planitie ly by the Bridge which was adjoyning to the Town and ped his Camp, put over four Legions, and all his Cavalry, and went to meet with Fabius his two Legions. Upon whose approach, L. Plancus, that commanded the Lewintered about Narbone, before him gions, being constrained by necessity, took the upper ground, dividing his Men into two Battalions, and making their Fronts to stand two contrary ways, to the end they might not be circumvented by the Horsemen. And although the number were very far unequal, yet be valiantly withstood very violent charges of the Enemy. The Cavalry being thus ingaged, the Enfigns of two Legions were descried afar off, which Fabius had fent by way of the further Bridge, to second these other two; suspecting that which was come to pass, that the Commanders of the adverse Army would take the occasion and benefit of this accident, to cut off our party. Upon whose approach the Battel ceased; and the Legions on either side were brought back into their Camps.

The First OBSERVATION.

The first Observation may be taken from this design of Casar's upon Spain, being at that time under the Government and Command of uning crac- ont of Lustrania, shrough the Territories of the Pompey; the standing or falling whereof did respect it was, that when Cafar could not buckle with the Person of his Enemy, he used all means to beat down his Authority, as the next in degree to his Effence and Being, and most concerning his Honour and Reputation. For if he took from him those Provinces, which the State had commended to his Charge, and left him no interest in the obedience of fuch, whom he might in a fort challenge for his own People; what affurance could the other Parts of the Empire have in his Protection? or what could he elsewhere expect of that which these refused him?

The excellency of a General is that perfection of judgment commended by Aristotle, inabling Lib. Ethic. 4. him to discern, quid primum, or what is most material in that variety of undertaking, which fal-leth out in following a War. And if that cannot with any conveniency be attained, then to know the next point of importance; and fo consequently to diffinguish the degrees of difference, as they fland ranked in the order of judicious proceeding.

For the effectual profecuting of which defign, let us take a fhort view of their Forces on each fide, according as we find them mustered in this Chapter; that by the inequality of their Troops. we may judge of the want or sufficiency of their directions, Afranius, as it is faid in the Story, had three Legions, and Petreius two Legions, together with 80 Cohorts of Auxiliary Forces, supplied unto them by the two Provinces of Spain; which Cohorts equalled the number of eight Legions, and fo in all made thirteen Legions; and according to the usual rate at that time of 5000 in a Legion, amounted to 65000 Men: Together with 5000 Horse; which came to 70000 Men, Petrcius and or thereabouts. To confront so great an Enemy, Arranus Man, Cafur had five Legions, 12000 Auxiliary Troopers or thereatours. from the Gauls, and peradventure 1000 Evocati:

which, according to the former rate of a Legion, Cæfar 35000 did rife to 35000 or 40000 Men at the most. Whereby the one exceeding the other well near in a double proportion of strength, and yet failing in a double proportion of intelligit, and yet raining in correspondency of fuccess, calleth the verity of that Proverb in question, Ne Hercules contra dues, Hercules himself cannot deal with two. Besides, the inequality of the place where the trial was to be made, being wholly devoted to the greater Party, was a matter of no fmall confequence. For he that maketh War in a Country absolutely favouring the Enemy, and confronting his purposes, had need of more Forces than the adverse Party, or better fortune in his proceedings. And therefore Fabius, to prevent fuch milchiefs as might grow by that advantage, fought all means to draw some of the Towns to his Faction, and to make himself Friends for his better Support and Security; according to that which was faid of old, That War cannot be made without some

The Second OBSERVATION.

 $S^{\rm Econdly}$, We may observe the means he used to secure himself of the Loyalty of his Army, and wholly to engage the Soldier in his Fortune. For the Money he borrowed of the Tribunes and Centurions, was a special Tye of their Affections Rablais faith, to his Service: Forafmuch as no Man wisheth ill That the Cree to his service: Foralistical as no brain without his dittor wishest to him, by whose welfare and prosperity he hopeth all good to his to thrive; for so (wounding himself through another Man's Body) the hurt would fall upon his own Head: But rather desireth such an accomplishment of his hopes, as may make himself Partaker thereof. And on the other side, the much import the fuccess of that War: For which Largess he made unto the Soldiers did so oblige thereby ready to perform as much as Warlike Lelius had promifed in his own Person, on the Lelius behalf of the reft.

> Pettore si fratris gladium, juguloque Parentis Lucan. L. r. Condere me jubeas, plenaque in viscera partu Conjugis, invita peragam tamen omnia dextra.

Bid me to Stab my Brother, cut My Father's Throat, or rip the Gut Of my Big-bellied Wife (though loath) I'll do't.

The Third OBSERVATION.

THirdly, Let us confider the effects of diligence and provident Forefight, which do oftentimes redeem an Army from a dishonourable Overthrow; as may be learned from two circumflances in Fabius's directions. First, In that he Unitative mes trusted not to one passage over the River Sicoris, fdir mus. but made two several Bridges, as well for the conveniency as the better fecurity of his People. Secondly, Upon the occasion which the Enemy might take by the breaking of the Bridge, to diftress the Legions on the other fide of the Water, he presently sent out Succours to prevent such a Cafualty: Which albeit it might feem to have proceeded out of curious fuspicion, or idle fear, yet it fell out to be no more than was requisite yet it ten out to be no more than was required and expedient. Which may teach a General to a guident for the carrell even of possibilities, and to prevent p. p. ft., quafficient contingencies, with the certainty of industrious fearman equidirections; accounting always that which may times. Sence happen, to be as certain as any thing we most Epift. 24.

The Fourth OBSERVATION.

Oncerning Spain, we are to note, That the Spain.

Romans at first divided it into two Provinces, Citerior & Viwhich they called the Nearer and the Further; terior. or according to Strabo, the Outer and the Inner; Exteris & and they were separated asunder by the River Ibe-Interior, lis. 36 rus, now Ebro: And thence also they were called Cis Iberum, & ultra Iberum, Spain on this side Ebro, and Spain beyond. The Nearer Province, being the leffer, continued without alteration during the Romans Government, and was sometimes called Tarraconensis Provincia, of Tarraco. the principal Town of the fame. But the Further, in process of Time, was divided into two parts; the one called Betica, and the other Lufitania: And so the whole Region of Spain came to be divided into three Provinces. It was first entered by the Romans, by occasion of the notable Siege of Saguntum: Upon which, P. Scipic having subdued the Carthagnians, reduced Spain into a Province, and left it Governed by Proconfuls, unto the time of Cornelius Lentulus and Lucius Stertinius. Afterwards it was Governed by Anno V. C. Pro-Prætors, and fometimes by Prætors, accor-555. ding as the Empire came to be enlarged; and had thereby many Governments, for the Preferment of fuch as had supplied the better places of Dig-nity in the State. Nevertheless, in the times of Trouble the Governors had always Confulary Metellus Proconful, and Cn. Pompeius Quartor, Livy.

Cum Confulari potestate miss simt, were sent with confular Power. And at this time Pompey Governed it by two Deputies or Legates. Touching the form and figure of the Country, Strabo likeneth it to an Oxe-Hide; the Neck whereof joyneth to the Pyrenean Hills, which rise in Towers

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

Towers from one Sea to another, as limits and undone, he commanded to be finished in the Night. bounds between France and Spain; taking their name (as fome think) from Pyrene, the Maid that Hercules deflowed, whom Sil, Ital, mentioneth, lib. 3.

Lib. I.

Pyrene celfa nimbo fi verticis arce Divisos Celtis late prospectat Iberos; Atque æterna tenet magnis divortia terris. Nomen Bebrycia duxere à virgine colles. Hospitis Alcida crimen : qui sorte laborum Gerionis peteret cum longa tricorporis arva. Possessius Baccho, Sava Bebrycis in aula Lugendam forme fine virginitate reliquit Pyrenen - and a little after. Defletumq; tenent Montes per secula nomen.

The lofty Tower of Pren's cloudy head O'erlooks th' Iberi, whom it parts from Celes, For aye dividing those two spacious Lands. From Bebryx Daughter first these Hills tookname Ravish'd by Hercules: Who, as he went, The triple-bodied Gerion's Land to feize, Drunk at the time, and lodg'd in Bebryx's Court, Pyrene left to be bewail'd by Beauty, No more a Virgin———
And her lamented Name the Hills ftill keep.

But according to the opinion more generally received, they are so called of the Greek word Hug; for that Shepherds and Herdsmen set them once on Fire, as witneffeth Diodorus Siculus. And 18.5. In li- Aristotle, In Hiberia inquit combustis aliquando in de Moan-passoribus Sylvis, calenteque ignibus terra, mani-de asseulta- festum argentum dessuxisse: Cumque postmodum terræ-motus supervenisset, eruptis hiatibus, mag-nam copiam argenti collectam; atque inde Massilienfibus proventus non vulgares obeigiffe : He faith, That on a time in Spain the Shepherds having fet Fire on the Woods, the ground was so heated thereby, that plain Rills of Silver flowed from the Hills; and that afterwards, by reason of Earthquakes, several gapings being made in the said place, they gathered great plenty of Silver; which the Marseillians made no small benefit of. The Country of Spain is commended for many things, as may appear by divers Elogies: Amongst which, that of Claudianus the Poet is written, as though the Author had been a Pensioner to the Kingdom.

> Quid dignum memorare tuis Hispania terris Vox humana valet? primo lavat aquore folem India: Tu fessos, exacta luce, jugales Proluis, inque tuo respirant sydera fluctu. Dives equis, frugum facilis, pretiosa metallis, Principibus facunda piis. --

What noted thing in Spain can Man commend? As Indian Seas first drench the morning Sun, So his tir'd Steeds wash here when day is done: In Spanish Waves the wearied Stars take breath. Spain store of Horse, Fruits, precious Metals hath; Breeds Pious Princes. -

CHAP. XV.

C.cfar coming to his Army, advanceth forward, and Encampeth near unto the Enemy.

Ceder.

Ithin two days after Cælar eame into the Camp with Nine Hundred Horse. which he had kept with him for a Convoy. The Bridge broken by the Tem-

And having seen the nature and situation of the place, he left fix Cohorts to keep the Camp and the Bridge, with all the Carriages of the Army. And the next day, putting all his Forces into a tripple Battel, he marched towards Ilerda: And there standing a while in Arms, offered Battel in an equal. and indifferent place. Afranius brought out his Forces, and made a stand in the mid st of the Hill, under his Camp. Casar perceiving that Afranius at that time was not disposed to Fight, determined Prono tum of the Hill. And less the Soldiers spould be inter-polarocker rupted in their Works by the sudden Assaults and bibia circuit Incursions of the Enemy, he forbad them to fortifie agains foffs. it with a Rampier or Will, which mift necessarily Dem prime be different on feet and feet at one of feet cand d a Direct present to be made of fifteen foot in breath, in the from existent of the Camp, next unto the Enemy. The first and Lac. 1.4. Second Battel (according as was directed) continued in Arms; and the third Battel performed the Work behind them unfern, before it was understood by Afranius that Calar would Encamp in that place. Which being fin: shed he drew his Legions within the Ditch, and so stood in Arms all Night.

The next day he kept all his Army within the Ditch. And forasmuch as the matter to make the Rampier was to be fetched far off, he kept the like course for the finishing of the rest; allotting each side of the Camp to be Fortified by a several Legion, with a Ditch to be funk about of the same scantling: And in the mean time, made the other Legions to stand ready in Arms against the Enemy. Afranius and Petreius, to the end they might amuse the Soldier and hinder the Work, brought down their Forces to the foot of the Hill, and provoked them to Fight. Howbeit, Caefar intermitted not the Work, trusting to three Legions in Arms, and the Munition of the Ditch. The Enemy not making any long stay, or advancing further than the foot of the Hill, led back their Troops into the Camp. The third day Cæsar Fortified his Camp with a Rampier : and commanded the rest of the Cohorts and the Carriages which were left in the other Camps, to be brought unto him.

OBSERVATION.

TT may be observed for Cafar's Custom through-1 out the whole course of his Wars, to approach as near the Enemy as conveniently he could; that so he might the better observe his Passages, and be ready to take the favour of any opportunity, which either the nature of the place, or the motions of the adversary would afford him. Which was the rather his advantage, in regard of his dexterity and fuperlative knowledge in the use of Arms, together with the experience of his old Legions: Whereby he was able, not only to improve his own defigns to the utmost of an honourable Success, but to return the disgrace of any Attempt made upon his Army, upon the heads of them that were Authors of the same. For otherwife, his approaching so near an Enemy might have turned to his own loss; as being full of hazard, and subject to more Casualties than he that ftandeth further off. And therefore the rule is, That he that defireth to fit near his Adverfary, must be exceeding circumspect, and sure of some advantage, either from the place, or the overawing power of his Forces, or elfe out of his own Vertue, or by fome other means to overfway the inconveniences which attend fuch Engagements. As may appear by that which Frontinus observeth hence, touching the streight pest, was almost re-edified, and that which remained whereunto Cafar was fallen; being either to give Lib. 1. caps. Battel.

Lib, I.

Battel, which the Enemy refused; or to make way and retire; accustomed thereunto by frequenting Night he stole the making of a Ditch on the back of his Army, and retiring himself within the same, ftood in Arms all Night for his better fafety.

The use of such Ditches are of much Importance, and have oftentimes redeemed an Army from great extremities: And were so frequent upon all occasions with the Romans, that he that shall deny them to be good Ditchers, shall do them wrong. And not only they, but other Nations could tell how to make use of the Spade.

Pericles of Athens, being forced by them of Peloponnesus into a place that had but two Outlets of escape, sunk a Ditch of a great breadth thwart one of the passages (as though he meant to keep out the Enemy) and fet his Soldiers to break our the other way. The Peloponnejians thinking he could no way escape by the passage the help of Bridges which he had formerly provided) he escaped over the Ditch without rethese Trenches, especially when they sought handsome means to get themselves away: Whereof Sertorius may be an Instance; who, having the Enemy preffing him in the Rere, and being to pass a River, drew a Ditch and a Rampier at his back, in the fashion of an Half-Moon: Which Rampier he heaped with Wood and combuftible Matter, and so setting it on Fire, kept off the Enemy, and passed with ease over the Water.

Legates, having rashly entred with a small Power into a long and narrow passage, between two Hills, and finding himself pursued by great Forces of the Enemy, sunk a cross Trench between the two Mountains; and piling the Rampier with Wood, fet it on Fire, and so cut off the Enemy.

CHAP. XVI.

Cesar's Attempt to possess himself of a small Hill: What disadvantage he ran into, by missing of his purpose; what means he used to recover

Etween the Town of Ilerda, and the next Hill where Petreius and Afranius were Encamped, there was a Plain of about three camper, there was a limit of acoustines bundred Paces; in the midst whereof flood a little Mole, rifing higher than the reft: Which if Czefar could get and Jorisse, he hoped to cut off the Enemy from the Town and the Bridge, and from such Victuals and Provisions as were brought to the Town. Hereupon he took three Legions out of the Camp; and having put them into order of Battel, he commanded the Antelignani of one Legion to run before and possess the place. Which being perceived, the Cohorts that kept Watch before Afranius's Camp, were presently fent a nearer way to take that Mount. The matter came to Blows: But forasmuch as Afranius's Party came first to the place, our Men were beaten back; and by reason of new Supplies sent against them, were constrained to turn their Backs, and retire to the Legions.

The manner of Fight which those Soldiers used. was first to run furiously upon an Enemy, to Seize any place boldly, and with great Courage; not much good that place, from whence he could not Re- the Lusitanians, and other barbarous People, using treat but with danger. Whereupon, a little before that kind of Fight: As it commonly falleth out, that where the Soldiers have long lived, they get much of the usage and condition of those places. Notwith-standing our Men were much troubled thereat, as unaccustomed to that kind of Fight: For seeing every Man leave his Rank, and run up and down, they feared lest they should be circumvented, and set upon in Flank, and on their bare and open side; whereas themselves were to keep their Order, and not to leave their Places but upon extraordinary occasion.

Upon the Routing of the Antelignani, the Legion that stood in the Cornet left the place, and retreated to the next Hill; almost all the Army being affrighted, upon that which had happened beyond every Man's Opinion, contrary to former use.

Cæsar encouraging his Men, brought out the ninth Legion to second them; by that means compelling the Enemy (infolent of good success, and shrewldy where the Trench was cut, applied themselves pursuing our Men) to turn their Backs, and to retire wholly to the other place, where the Soldiers to the Town of Ilerda, and there to make a stand made shew of breaking out: Whereby (through under the Walls. But the Soldiers of the ninth Legion, carried on with endeavour, and going about to repair their loss, rashly followed the Enemy into these Trenches, especially when they sought whereon the Town stood: And as they would have made their Retreat, they were Charged afresh from the upper Ground. The Front of the place had an uneafie broken ascent, and was on each side steep; extended only so much in breadth, as would serve three Cohorts to Embattel in : Neither could the Cavalry come to help them. The Hill declined eafily from the Town about four hundred paces in length: And that way our Men had some conveniency of Re-In like manner, Herculeius, one of Sertorius's treat, from the disadvantage to which their desire had unadvisedly led them. The Fight continued in this place; which was very unequal, both in regard of the ftreightness thereof, as also for that they stood under the foot of the Hill, whereby no Weapon fell in vain amongst them. Notwithstanding, by Prowess and Valour they patiently endured all the Wounds they received. The Enemies Forces were supplied and re-newed, by such Cohorts as were often sent out of the Camp through the Town, that fresh Men might take the place of such as were wearied out. And the like was Cæsar fain to do, sending fresh Cohorts to that place to relieve the wearied.

After they had thus continually fought for the space of five hours together, and that our Men were much over-charged with an unequal multitude; having Spent all their Weapons, they drew their Swords, and ascended up the Hill to charge and assault the Enemy: And having flain a few of them, the rest were driven to make Retreat. The Cohorts being thus put back to the Walls, and some of them for fear having taken the Town, our Men found an easie Retreat. Our Cavalry did from a low ground get up unto the top of the Hill; and riding up and down between the two Armies, made our Soldiers to retreat with better ease: And so the Fight succeeded diversly.

About seventy of our Men were slain in the first onfet. And amongst these was slain Q. Fulginius, Capt. of the first Hastate Century of the fourteenth Legion; who, for his exceeding Valour, was preferred to that place from the lower Orders. Six hundred at least were Wounded. And of Afranius's Party were flain T. Cæcilius, Centurion of a Primipile Order, and Et victor four Centurions more, besides two hundred Soldiers. subducto four Centurions more, besides two numerica commerce. Marie per But such was the opinion of that days business, that pendic the hotter. Lucan lib. either fide believed they left with the better.

Afranius's Party was so perswaded, for that they long stood to handy-blows, and refisted the violence of any place bolars, and with given a conserve of the place which get the conserve of the respective features and dispersed fashion. If they chand to were the weaker: As also, for that they at first be throughly Charged, they thought it no Shame to give took, and held the place which gave occasion of that Fight; and in the first Encounter, compelled our Men to turn their Backs. Our Men in like manner thought they had the better, in regard they had maintained Fight for five Hours together, in a place of disadvantage and with an unequal Multitude: that they afcended up the Hill with their Swords drawn. and compelled their Adversaries to turn their Backs, and to retreat into the Town, mauore the disadvantage of the Place.

The First OBSERVATION.

IN this direction which Cafar gave, to take the little Hill between Ilerda and Afranius's Camp, we may observe the danger depending upon the mischieving of an Action. For the failing of a purpose in seeking to obtain that which would prove of great advantage, doth oftentimes draw Men into as great inconveniences. And as the end in every design pretendeth gain, so the means thereof do give way to hazard: From whence it confequently followeth, that fuch as are imployed in execution, had need to use all endeavour, not to fallifie the grounds of good directions, by negligent or inconfiderate Carriage; but rather to make good any want or defect, by ferious and wary profecution of the fame.

And the rather, for that it specially concerners their good that have the charge and handling of commands: For they first are like to feel the smart of any errour committed therein; or otherwise. Omnis Laus to have the honour of any fortunate fuccess, forvirtuis in as dinuch as Vertue hath all her praise from Action.

Concerning the use of running, we are to unhaif. Eth. derfland that the Romans (amongft other their exercises of Arms) had special practice of this.

Lib. 1 app. 3 available in four respects, according as Vegeland of ran- its bath noted. First, to the end they might charge the Enemy with greater Force and Violence. Secondly, that they might possess themselves with speed, of Places of advantage. Thirdly, that they might readily discover, as should be found expedient upon all occasions. And Lastly, to prosecute a flying Enemy to better purpose and esfect. And this, as Seneca faith, they practifed malaspase fect. And this, as Seneca faith, they practiced dearms, fips in peace; that being accuritomed to needless Lambs Highs, & bour, they might be able to discharge necessary for the first way. And *Livy, amongst the military experiments of the section of t That the first day, the Legions ran four Miles in Arms. And Suetonius affirmeth, that Nero, having appointed a Race for the Prætorian Cohorts, carried a Target lifted up before them with his own hand. And that Galba did more admirably; for being futed of purpose to make him-felf eminent, he directed a Field-race with a Target, himself running as fast as the Emperor's Chariot, for twenty Miles together.

The Second OBSERVATION.

The second thing to be noted in these special-ties, is, the bold Enterprize of Casar's Men, in charging the Enemy with their Swords drawn, against the Hill; whereby making them to give back, they had an easie and fafe retrear from the danger wherein they were engaged. Whereby Medici leviter we may observe, that difficulties of Extremity are Agramme le-wier curant desperate undertakings: According to the condiemem morbis, tion of Diseases and Distemperatures of the Body, Periodifies cm- which being light and easie, are cured with mild which being light and came, and doubtspites adhibe. and easie Potions; but being grievous and doubtspites adhibe. And easie Potions on the proper remedies. Which coguntur. ful, do require sharp and strong remedies. Which Regions. 111, do require marp and mong remembers. Which figurans were cut down. So that left the Enfigure April doth also in like manner appear throughout the figurans were cut down. So that left the Enfigure whole course of Nature, and particularly in Weights: For as ponderous and heavy Bodies are not moved but with a Counterpoise of greater Force; no more can Extremities of hazard be avoided, but by like perilous Enforcements.

And hence groweth the difference between true Valour and fool-hardy rashness; being but one and the fame thing, if they were not diffinguished by the fubject wherein they are shewed. For to run headlong into strange adventures, upon no just occasion. were to shew more levity than discretion: And again, to use the like boldness in cases of extremity, deserveth the opinion of vertuous Endeavour. As is well observed by Homer, in the Per- Hiad. 6. fon of Heltor, perswading the Trojans that fled away, to stand and make a head against the Grecians; This is the Time, faith he, confidering the danger wherein we are, to use that prowess and Courage which we boaft of.

And accordingly, Diomedes censured Glaucus in the same place, for offering himself to the Fury of the Grecians; Either thou art some God. faith he, or else but a lost and forlorn Man. Which may ferve to learn us the true use of Courage; that ordinarily is never more shewed than in misemployment.

The Third OBSERVATION.

Have already, in the Observations of the second Commentary of the Wars of Gallia, dif-The parts of a coursed particularly of the Parts of a Legion : Legion : Where it appeareth, that in Cafar's time a Legion confifted of five thouland Men, or thereabouts: and according to the fufficiency and experience of the Soldiers, was divided into three parts. The first and meanest of such as followed an Enfign, were called Haftati; the fecond, Principes ; and the third and chief fort Triarii: And according to this division, had their place and precedency in the Army.

Again, each of these three kinds was divided into ten Companies, which they called Maniples; and every Maniple was subdivided into two Centuries or Orders; and in every Order there was a Centurion or Captain. These Orders were diflinguished by the numbers of the first, second. third, and so consequently unto the tenth Orders, which were the last and lowest of each of these three kinds. So that this Q. Fulginius, here mentioned, was Centurion of the first and Prime Order of the Hastati: And T. Cacilius Centurion of the first Order of the Triarii, which by excellency was called Primipilus, or the Leader of the first Company of a Legion.

Now concerning their imbattelling, we are to note, that according to this former division of Hastati, Principes, and Triarii, upon occasion of Fight, they made a Triple Battel, one standing in Front to another; which we call the Vant-guard Battel, and Rere-ward. Whereof the Hastari were called Antesignani: Not for that they had Antesignani no Enfigns of their own, for every Maniple had an Enfign; but because they stood imbattelled before the Eagle, and other the chief Enfigns of the Legion. To which purpole is that of Livy, Pugna orta est, non illa ordinata per Ha-Lib. 22. statos, Principesque & Triarios, nec ut pro Signis Antesignanus, post Signa alia pugnaret Acies: The Fight began, not a regular Fight by Hastati, Principes and Triarii, nor in that Order that the Antefignani fought before the Enfigns, and another Battel behind the Enfigns. And again; Lib. 9. Cadunt Antesignani : Et ne nudentur Propugnatoribus Signa, fit ex secunda prima Acies : The Ante-

Cinga rapi-

auam mao-

Battel was made the first. Whereby it appear- frun the Weapons. erh that most of the chiefest Ensigns were with the Principes, which were called Subfignani, as the Triarii Postsignani.

Amongst other Benefits of these so particular divisions of an Army, that is not the least which is noted by Thucydides, Ut jussa Imperatoris brevi spacio ad fingulos Milites deferri possent; the Commands of the General are thereby fuddenly transmitted to every particular Soldier.

CHAP. XVII.

C.efar brought into great extremity by overflowing of two Rivers.

He Enemy fortified the Mount for which they contended, with great and strong Works, and there put a Garrison. In the space of those two Days that these things were in doing, there fell out upon a fudden a great Inconvenience, for such a Tempest happened, that the like Waters were never seen in those Places. And further besides, the Snow came down so abundantly from the Hills, that it overflowed the Banks of the River; and in one day brake down both the Bridges which Fabius had made: And thereby brought Cæsat into great extremity. For as it is formerly related, the Camp lay between two Rivers, Sicoris and Cinga; and within thirty Miles neither of these Rivers were passable, so that all the Army were of necessity couped up in that straightness: Neither could the Cities which had formerly ranged themselves with Cæsat's Party, furnish any supplies of Victual and Provision; nor such of the Army as had gone far for Forage, being hindered by the Ri-vers, could return to the Camp; nor yet the great

Convoys and Reinforcements, coming to him out of Italy and Gallia, could get to the Camp. The time of Year was very hard; for there was neither old Corn left of their Winter Provisions, nor that on the Ground was as yet ripe. The Cities and Towns near about were all emptied: For Afranius before Cæsar's coming had caused all the Corn to be brought into Ilerda; and that which remained, was fince Cæsar's coming all fpent. And for Cattel (which might have relieved this necessity) by reason of the War, they were removed by the borgone out to Forage, and to feek Corn, were by the light-armed Portugals, and the Buckler-bearers of the hither Spain, much troubled and molested: For these Men could easily pass the River, for a much as none of them used to go to War, without Bladders for that purpole. On the contrary part, Afranius abounded with all necessary Provisions : Great Quantity of Corn was formerly provided and stored up, much was brought in from all the Provinces round about, there was also great plenty of Forage in his Camp: For the Bridge at Ilerda afforded means of all these things without danger, and the Country beyond the River was whole and untouched, which Cæsar could not come unto by any means. The Waters continued for many Days together. Cafar used all means to reedifie the Bridges; but neither the swelling of the River would permit him, nor yet the Cohorts of the Enemy, placed on the Banks of the other side, Suffer him to go forwards with it : Which they might easily hinder, both in regard of the nature of the River and the greatness of the Water, as also for that they might easily cast their Weapons from along the

should be left naked of defendants, the second violently as it did) to do the Work, and to

The First OBSERVATION.

First we may observe, that the strength of a Multinude is not privileged a Multitude is not privileged from fuch cafualries as betide the weaknesses of particular Persons: but doth oftentimes undergo extremities, which can neither by Providence be prevented, nor removed by industry: and Are such as proceed not from the endeavour of the Enemy, but our of the circumftances of time and place; together with fuch accidents as are interlaced with the same. In respect whereof it was, that with the same. In respect whereor it was, that Cambyses told Cyrus, that in the course of War Sunt quantum and the same in the he should meet with some occasions, wherein he bus non adwas not to labour and contend with Men, but varfus homing with chances and things; which were not to be fed cum infin overcome with less difficulty than an Enemy; and resus: quas are the more dangerous, according as they give specification way to scarcity and want of Victual. For as it is discuss the school of Victual and Victu faid in the same place; Scis brevi finem habi- Lib. 1. de baff; turum Imperium fi Commeatu Exercitus careat: Cyri. You know that if your Army be once starved, your Empire can be but short-lived.

The remedies whereof are first. Patience: Which is as requifite in a Soldier, as either Courage or any other Ability; and in fuch cases keepeth an Army from discontentment and disorder, until means of better fortune. And fecondly, Good Endeavour, which availeth much in such Chances; Diligentia in the effect whereof will appear by that which Cafar committees retorn wrought, to redeem his Army from these Inconveniences.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Oncerning that which is here noted of the Spaniards, that made nothing of passing a River with the help of Bladders, which the Ro-Bladders spaniare with the help of Bladders with the Ro-Bladders spaniare with the spaniare spa mans were readier to wonder at than to imitate to the Spaniit is observed, that as People exquisitely fashioned ming out to a civil Life, by a firm and settled Policy of River. Government, are firm and real in the whole course of their proceedings, and accordingly do shew their punctuality, as well in their folemnities and private Carriages, as in their magnificent and stately Buildings. So on the other fide, barbarous and rude Nations, that live under general and flight Laws, are as flight and rude in their Actions; as dering Towns, and carried farther off. Such as were amongst other things, may appear in that the Spaniards thought it no fcorn to use the help of Bladders in paffing over a River, as a device coming next to hand; which the People of a wife and potent State would not have done, but by a fure and fubstantial Bridge.

The use of which Bladders, as it hath been ancient amongst People of that Nature, so it is continued in the fame manner by the Salvages inhabiting Greenland, and the North Parts of America; as appeareth by Discoveries made of late by the Molcovy Merchants, about the North-West Pasfage: From whence such as are imployed in those Voyages, have brought great and large Bladders or Baggs, made of Seal-skins, ingeniously devised to be filled and blowed with Wind, and tied behind at their Girdle, and at their Coller, to help themfelves in (wimming. And after the same easie fa-fhion, the Indians of Peru, as Josephus Acosta Lib. 6. writeth (instead of Wood and Stone) made their Cap. 14. Bridges over great Rivers of plaited Reeds, which they fastened to the Banks an each fide with stakes: or otherwife with Bundles of Straw and Weeds, by Bank, unto one place or Point Whereby it was very which Men and Beafts (if there be any credit in bard, at one and the same time (the River running so his Story) pass over with ease. Howbeir, as when the ancient Greeks would note a Man of ex- great concourse from all Parts to Afranius's House, tream infufficiency, they would fay, he could nei-ther read nor swim: So Casar seemed of the same opinion, by commending the Skill of swimming, as a thing of much consequence in the use of Arms. Whereof he made good experience in Egypt: Where he cast himself into a small Boat, for his better Safery; and finding it over-charged, and ready to fink, he leapt into the Sea, and swam to his Fleet, which was two hundred paces off, holding certain Papers in his left hand above the Water, and trailing his coat of Arms in his Teeth. that it might not be left to the Enemy.

CHAP. XVIII.

Afranius marcheth with three Legions, to cut off a Party. The Scarcity of Victual in Cafar's Army.

T was told Afranius of great Troops and Convoys that were coming to Casar, but were hindered by the Waters, and abode there by the River's fide : For thither were come Archers out of Ruthenia, and Horsemen out of Gallia, with with many Carres and Carriages, were besides of all forts, about fix thousand Men, with their Servants and Attendants; but without Order or any known Command: For every Man was at his own Liberty, travelling the Country without Fear, according to the former Freedom and out rear, according to the jurner precaum and Safety of the Ways. There were likewife many Toung Men of good rank, Senators Sons, and Knights of Rome; befides Embassadors from Sundry States and divers of Cæsar's Legates. All these were kept back by the River.

Afranius went out in the Night time with three Legions, and all his Horse, to cut off this Party; Legions, and au on knote, we can off the knot and fending his Cavalry before, fet upon them unawares. Howbeit, the Cavalry of the Gauls put themselves speedily in order, and buckled with them. And as long as it flood upon indifferent terms, they being but a few, did withfland a great number of the Enemy: But as soon as they discovered the Ensigns of the Legions coming towards them, some few of them being slain, the rest betook themselves to the

This small time of Encounter was of great consamper mag- sequence for the safety of our Men: For by this means norm prima they had opportunity to take the upper ground. There milonom, Swames ad were lost that day two hundred Archers, a few Horsetat: Nullog, men, and no great number of the Soldiers Boys. chessis ab together with the Baggage. Victuals by reason of see, toto of the present want, as also for fear of future Penury, as commonly it happeneth in such cases; makexigosam 17, as commonly of corporation in successions in some as a Bussel of Corn was worth fifty Isaan. 1.4. Pence. Whereby the Soldiers grew weak for want of Sustenance; and the Inconveniences thereof daiby more and more increased. For so great was the alteration which happened in a few days, that our Men were much afflicted with the extream want of all necessary Provisions: Whereas they on the other side, having all things in abundance, were held for Victors. Casar sent unto those States which were of his Party, and instead of Corn, gave them order to furnish him with Cattel; dismissed Soldiers Boys and fent them to Towns farther off; relieving the present scarcity by all the means he could.

Afranius and Petreius, together with their Friends enlarged these things in their Letters to Rome: Rumour and report added much hereunto; as that the War was even almost at an end. These Messengers and Letters being come to Rome, there was much congratulation and rejoycing for thefe things: And thereupon many went out of Italy to Pompey, Some to be the first Messengers of the News; others, that they might not feem to expect the event of the War, and so prove the last that came to that Party.

When the matter was brought to these difficulties and extremities, and all the Ways were kept by Afranius's Soldiers and Horsemen, and no Bridges could be made; Cæsar gave order to the Soldiers, to make such * Boats and Barks as he had in former Years Primum taught them the use of in the War of Britain: The cana talix madefacto Keels whereof were made of light fluff, and small vinine par-Timber, and the upper parts made with Wicker: and van Trimer timoer, and the upper parts made with vicket. and in Pupping, covored with Hides. Which being finished, he laded colog indus them upon Carres, and carried them in the Night ta juvence, Some twenty two miles from the Camp. And in those Vectoris pa-Barks transporting his Soldiers over the River, upon a tiens rumifudden we possess himself of a little Hill, which lay next amneminear unto the Water side: Which Hill he speedily for Lucan. 1.4. tifyed, before the Enemy had notice thereof. Afterwards he brought over a Legion to that Place, and made a Bridge from fide to fide in two days Space: And so the Conveys, which had gone forth for Provisions and Forage, returned back in safety; whereby he began to settle a course for Provision of Corn.

The same day he passed over the River a great part of his Cavalry, who falling unlocked for upon the Foragers (scattered here and there without fear or sufpicion) cut off a great number of Men and Cattel. Whereupon the Enemy sending certain Spanish Troops, bearing little round Bucklers, to second and relieve the Foragers, they divided themselves of purpose into two Parts; the one to keep and defend the Booty which they had got, and the other to resist and beat back the Forces Sent to charge them. One of our Cohorts, which had easily run out before the Army, was inter-cepted and cut off: The rest returned by the Bridge into the Camp in Safety with a great Booty.

The First OBSERVATION.

These Rutheni inhabited that part of Provence Rutheni where Rhodes now standeth: Amongst whom Saturnian are the had coding in a Locing or the Control longs. Cafar had ordinarily a Legion or two in Garri-flatione fon, for the better keeping of the Country in obe-Rutheni, dience, being a frour and Warlike People, and Lucan I is using Archery, as appeareth in this place. Which howsoever the course of time hath brought into utter contempt, yet let us not fcorn to take notice, that anciently it hath been used by such as performed the greatest feats of Arms: For Hercules had but two forts of Weapons to atchieve Labours of fo much variety; a Club for fuch Monfters as would conteft with his Valour, and Bow and Arrows for others that kept farther off. And in the Symphaliold War of Troy (if Homer may be believed) despendent Duke of Lycia, having a Stable of Bladd. Lib. 5. gallant Courfers, left them all at home, left he should not find means at Troy to give them their ordinary keeping; and came on foot with his Bow and Arrows, with fuch reputation of his deeds of Arms, that Aneas fought him out in a conflict to refift the rage and extream preffures of Diomedes. And on the contrary part, Teucer liad Lib. 7; relieved the distressed Grecians from a hot and desperate pursuit, by slaying with his Bow eight valiant Trojans before he stirred his foot.

Concerning the use of which Weapon, howsoever it may feem ridiculous (to fuch as under-ftand nothing but the course of the present age) to recall the long Bow to the service of a Battel; yet they may remember, that the Grey-Goose wing gave our Forefathers fueh advantage, that they wrought Wonders amongst all Nations for deed of Arms: Which we should imitate with eger, toto ceníu non Prodigus e-mit Exiguam C-Gr.

dus magis

Lib. I.

should be left naked of defendants, the second violently as it did) to do the Work, and to Battel was made the first. Whereby it appear- foun the Weapons. erh that most of the chiefest Ensions were with the Principes, which were called Subfiguani, as the Triarii Postsignani.

Amongst other Benefits of these so particular divitions of an Army, that is not the least which is noted by Thucydides, Ue justa Imperatoris brevi spacio ad fingulos Milites deferri poffent; the Commands of the General are thereby fuddenly transmitted to every particular Soldier.

CHAP. XVII.

C.efar brought into great extremity by overflowing of two Rivers.

He Enemy fortified the Mount for which they contended, with great and strong Works, and there put a Garrison. In the Space of those two Days that these things were in doing, there fell out upon a fudden a great Inconvenience, for fuch a Tempest happened, that the like Waters were never feen in those Places. And further besides, the Snow came down so abundantly from the Hills, that it overflowed the Banks of the River; and in one day brake down both the Bridges which Fabius had made: And thereby brought Cæsar into great extremity. For as it is formerly related, the Camp lay between two Rivers. Cinga rapi-Sicoris and Cinga; and within thirty Miles nei-Shorts and chiga; and whith the street of these Rivers were passable, so that all the Army were of necessity couped up in that straightness: Neither could the Cities which had formerly ranged themselves with Cæsar's Party, furnish any supplies of Victual and Provision; nor Such of the Army as had gone far for Forage, being hindered by the Rivers, could return to the Camp; nor yet the great Convoys and Reinforcements, coming to him out of Italy and Gallia, could get to the Camp. The time of Year was very hard; for there was neither old Corn left of their Winter Provisions, nor that on the Ground was as yet ripe. The Cities and Towns near about were all emptied: For Afranius before Cæsar's coming had caused all the Corn to be brought into Ilerda; and that which remained, was fince Cælat's coming all spent. And for Cattel (which might have relieved this necessity) by reason of the War, they were removed by the bordering Towns, and carried farther off. Such as were gone out of Forage, and to feek Corn, were by the light-armed Portugals, and the Buckler-bearers of the bither Spain, much troubled and molested: For these Men could easily pass the River, forasmuch as none of them used to go to War, without Bladders for that purpose. On the contrary part, Afranius abounded with all necessary Provisions: Great Quantity of Corn was formerly provided and stored up, much was brought in from all the Provinces round about, there was also great plenty of Forage in his Camp: For the Bridge at Herda afforded means of all these things without danger, and the Country beyond the River was whole and untouched, which Casar could not come unto by any means. The Waters continued for many Days together. Cæsar used all means to reedifie the Bridges; but neither the swelling of the River would permit him, nor yet the Cohorts of the Enemy, placed on the Banks of the other side, Suffer him to go forwards with it : Which they might easily hinder, both in regard of the nature of the River and the greatness of the Water, as also for that they might easily cast their Weapons from along the Bank, unto one place or Point Whereby it was very

The First OBSERVATION.

First we may observe, that the strength of a Multitude is not privileged from fuch cafualties as betide the weaknesses of particular Persons; but doth oftentimes undergo extremities, which can neither by Providence be prevented, nor removed by industry: and Are such as proceed not from the endeavour of the Enemy, but out of the circumftances of time and place : together with fuch accidents as are interlaced tagetner with men accureins as are interactive with the fame. In respect whereof it was, that Cambries told Cyrus, that in the course of War dam name he should meet with some occasions, wherein he sum made he some name of the sum o was not to labour and contend with Men, but versus homing was not to labour and contend with twent, but with chances and things; which were not to be fed cum in overcome with less difficulty than an Enemy; and reous: quas overcome with lets difficulty unan an entemy; and resur; qua-are the more dangerous, according as they give spectra-way to scarcity and want of Victual. For as it is difficult, faid in the same place; Scis brevi finem habi-Xenoph Lit. Lib. 1. dept. turum Imperium si Commeatu Exercitus careat: Cyri. You know that if your Army be once starved. your Empire can be but short-lived. The remedies whereof are first, Patience: Which is as requifite in a Soldier, as either Courage or any other Ability; and in such cases keepeth an Army from discontentment and disorder, until means of better fortune. And fecondly, Good Endeavour, which availeth much in such Chances; Diligentia in the effect whereof will appear by that which Cafar omnibus rele wrought, to redeem his Army from these Incon-plurimum we-

The Second OBSERVATION.

Oncerning that which is here noted of the Spaniards, that made nothing of paffing a River with the help of Bladders, which the Ro- Bladders sight mans were readier to wonder at than to imitate by the Spaniit is observed, that as People exquisitely fashioned and infa to a civil Life, by a firm and settled Policy of River. Government, are firm and real in the whole course of their proceedings, and accordingly do shew their punctuality, as well in their folemnities and private Carriages, as in their magnificent and stately Buildings. So on the other fide, barbarous and rude Nations, that live under general and flight Laws, are as flight and rude in their Actions; as amongst other things, may appear in that the Spaniards thought it no scorn to use the help of Bladders in paffing over a River, as a device coming next to hand; which the People of a wife and potent State would not have done, but by a fure and fubstantial Bridge.

The use of which Bladders, as it hath been ancient amongst People of that Nature, so it is continued in the same manner by the Salvages inhabiting Greenland, and the North Parts of America; as appeareth by Discoveries made of late by the Moscovy Merchants, about the North-West Pasfage: From whence such as are imployed in those Voyages, have brought great and large Bladders or Baggs, made of Seal-skins, ingeniously devised to be filled and blowed with Wind, and tied behind at their Girdle, and at their Coller, to help themfelves in swimming. And after the same easie fashion, the Indians of Peru, as Josephus Acosta Lib. 6. writeth (instead of Wood and Stone) made their Cap. 14. Bridges over great Rivers of plaited Reeds, which they fastened to the Banks an each fide with stakes: or otherwife with Bundles of Straw and Weeds, by which Men and Beafts (if there be any credit in hard; at one and the same time (the River running so his Story) pass over with ease. Howbeit, as when the ancient Greeks would note a Man of ex- great concourse from all Parts to Afranius's House, tream infufficiency, they would fay, he could nei-ther read nor fwim: So Cafar feemed of the fame opinion, by commending the Skill of swimming, opinion, by commending the Sam of immuning, as a thing of much confequence in the use of Arms.

Whereof he made good experience in Egypt:

Where he cast himself into a small Boat, for his better Safety; and finding it over-charged, and ready to fink, he leapt into the Sea, and swam to his Fleet, which was two hundred paces off, holding certain Papers in his left hand above the Water, and trailing his coat of Arms in his Teeth. that it might not be left to the Enemy.

CHAP. XVIII.

Afranius marcheth with three Legions, to cut off a Party. The Scarcity of Victual in Cafar's Army.

T was told Afranius of great Troops and Convoys that were coming to Cæsar, but were hindered by the Waters, and abode there by the River's side : For thither were come Archers out of Ruthenia, and Horsemen out of Gallia, with with many Carres and Carriages, according to the Custom of the Gauls. There were besides of all sorts, about six thousand Men, with their Servants and Attendants; but without Order or any known Command: For every Man was at his own Liberty, travelling the Country without Fear, according to the former Freedom and and divers of Cæsar's Legates. All these were kept back by the River.

Afranius went out in the Night time with three Legions, and all his Horse, to cut off this Party; and sending his Cavalry before, set upon them unawares. Howbeit, the Cavalry of the Gauls put themselves speedily in order, and buckled with them. And as long as it stood upon indifferent terms, they being but a few, did withstand a great number of the Enemy: But as soon as they discovered the Ensigns of the Legions coming towards them, some few of them being slain, the rest betook themselves to the next Hills.

This small time of Encounter was of great con-Im Comes This small time of incounter was of great con-imper mag-fequence for the safety of our Men: For by this means makes in sequence for exclusive of our reason. There makes they had opportunity to take the upper ground. There makes they had opportunity to take the upper ground. There we know a sequence of the sequence of the collins of the col ma: Nollog, men, and no great number of the Soldiers Boys. together with the Baggage. Victuals by reason of all these things waxed very dear, as well in regard of the present want, as also for fear of future Penuof the present want, as any on your of jumine Lean-ry, as commonly it happeneth in such cases; insomuch as a Bushel of Corn was worth sifty Pence. Whereby the Soldiers grew weak for want of Sustenance; and the Inconveniences thereof daily more and more increased. For so great was the alteration which happened in a few days, that our Men were much afflicted with the extream want of all necessary Provisions: Whereas they on the other fide, having all things in abundance, were held for Victors. Cafar fent unto those States which were Victors. Satisfy your units though states which were of his Party, and inflead of Corn, gave them order to furnish him with Cattel; dismissed Soldiers Boys and sent them to Towns farther off; relieving the present scarcity by all the means he could.

Afranius and Petreius, together with their Friends enlarged these things in their Letters to Rome: Rumour and report added much hereunto; as that the War was even almost at an end. These Messengers and Letters being come to Rome, there was much congratulation and rejoycing for these things: And thereupon many went out of Italy to Pompey. Some to be the first Messengers of the News; others, that they might not feem to expect the event of the War, and so prove the last that came to that Party.

When the matter was brought to these difficulties and extremities, and all the Ways were kept by Afranius's Soldiers and Horsemen, and no Bridges could be made; Cæsar gave order to the Soldiers, to make fuch * Boats and Barks as be had in former Years Primum taught them the use of in the War of Britain: The cana alix madefacto Keels whereof were made of light stuff, and small vimine par-Timber, and the upper parts made with Wicker: and vam T. zinus Timber, and the upper parts made with Wicker: and in Puppin, covored with Hides. Which being finished, he laded caefog induthem upon Carres, and carried them in the Night ta juvenco, fome twenty two miles from the Camp. And in those vectoris pa-Barks transporting his Soldiers over the River, upon a tiens tunisudden he possest himself of a little Hill, which lay natar amnem near unto the Water side : Which Hill he speedily for - Lucan 1. 4. tifyed, before the Enemy had notice thereof. Afterwards he brought over a Legion to that Place, and made a Bridge from side to side in two days Space : And so the Convoys, which had gone forth for Provisions and Forage, returned back in safety; whereby he began to settle a course for Provision of Corn.

The same day he passed over the River a great part of his Cavalry, who falling unlooked for upon the Foragers (Scattered here and there without fear or sufpicion) cut off a great number of Men and Cattel. Whereupon the Enemy sending certain Spanish Troops, bearing little round Bucklers, to second and relieve the Foragers, they divided themselves of purpose into two Safety of the Ways. There were likewise many Parts; the one to keep and defend the Booty which foung Men of good rank, Senators Sons, and Knights they had got, and the other to resset and beat back to From such as the Forces sent to charge them. One of our Cohorts, which had eafily run out before the Army, was intercepted and cut off: The rest returned by the Bridge into the Camp in Safety with a great Booty.

The First OBSERVATION.

Hese Rutheni inhabited that part of Provence Rutheni. where Rhodes now standeth: Amongst whom Salvaniar Cafar had ordinarily a Legion or two in Garri-fiation fon, for the better keeping of the Country in obe-Ruteni, dience, being a ftout and Warlike People, and Lucan, in this place. Which howsoever the course of time hath brought into utter contempt, yet let us not fcorn to take notice, that anciently it hath been used by such as performed the greatest feats of Arms : For Hercules had but two forts of Weapons to atchieve Labours of so much variety; a Club for such Monsters as would contest with his Valour, and Bow and Arrows for others that kept farther off. And in the Stymphaliold War of Troy (if Homer may be believed) dz. Pindarus Duke of Lycia, having a Stable of gallant Courfers, left them all at home, left he should not find means at Troy to give them their ordinary keeping; and came on foot with his Bow and Arrows, with such reputation of his deeds of Arms, that Aneas fought him out in a conflict to refift the rage and extream pressures of Diomedes. And on the contrary part, Tencer Hiad Lib. 76 relieved the diffressed Grecians from a hot and desperate pursuit, by flaying with his Bow eight valiant Trojans before he ftirred his foot.

Concerning the use of which Weapon, howsoever it may feem ridiculous (to fuch as underfland nothing but the course of the present age) to recall the long Bow to the service of a Battel; yet they may remember, that the Grey-Goofe wing gave our Forefathers such advantage, that they wrought Wonders amongst all Nations for deed of Arms: Which we should imitate with prodigus e-Cererem. Lucan. 1.4.

as much hope of fuccels, if we could handle our Ships for himfelf, and them he filled with Shepherds Bows in any measure as they did. Of this I have and Countrymen, which he had brought thither with Bows in any measure as they did. Of this I have already formerly treated.

The Second OBSERVATION.

An ill chance TT is a faying as true as it is old, that an ill hap cometh not alone, but is always attended with fuch confequents as will inforce other inconveniences; as may be observed by this extremity here mentioned. For the mischief was not bounded with the affliction which Calar suffered for want of needful provision, notwithstanding the weight was fuch as could not be born by ordinary patience: But the Enemy inlarged it to his further advantage, vaunting of it as a helples remedy, and making out dispatches to fend Victory to Rome. Which gave him yet further prejudice in the opinon of the World; and made those his Enemies, that formerly shewed no dislike of his proceedings. And thus every ill chance hath a tail of many other misfortunes; which if either providence or endeavour may prevent, it shall much import a Commander to avoid them.

The Third OBSERVATION.

AS Necessity maketh Men constant in their sufferings, so Custom giveth easiness and means of deliverance: according as may appear by this doct, confuction of Casar, which was wholly drawn from Sen. detran-former experience. For first the Boats here prequil. cap. 10. fcribed, were such as he used in the War of Britany; and as far as may be gathered out of the former Commentaries, were those he commanded to be built for his fecond Journey: which he would now imitate in regard of the flatness of their bottoms, and not otherwise. For it is not to be supposed, that those Barks were covered with Skins: unless peradventure he used some such as these upon occasion in that War, not expressed in the Story.

Herodotus in his Clio, describeth the like; The Boats (faith he) which come from Babylon, down the River Euphrates, are made by the Herdsmen of Armenia, of light Timber, in a round fastion, without Beak or Poup, and are covered with Skin, the hairy fide inward; and in these they take their paffage. Such as Fish for Salmon in the River Severne, use the like Boats in all respects, which they call Corracles of Corium; being all covered with Horse-skins Tanned.

Secondly, the means he used to pass over without impeachment from the Enemy, by carrying those Boats in the Night-time up the River to a place of fecurity, was fuch, the like whereof he had formerly practifed in Gallia, to pass the River Loire, being then guarded on the other fide by the Enemy. Whereby we see how much use and conrimuance doth inable Men, beyond others of imaller experience: According to that, Dies Diem docet, One day teacheth another; or, Older and wifer.

CHAP. XIX.

The Maffilians encounter with Brutus at Sea, and are beaten.

Hile these things were done at Ilerda, the Massilians (by the direction of L. Domitius) rigged and fet out 17 Gallies, whereof 11 were covered; befides many leffer Veffels which went along with them, to make the Navy seem the greater for the astonishment of the Enemy. In these they put a great number of Archers, and many Albicks, of whom we have him. The Navy being thus furnished, set forward with creat confidence towards our Shipping, whereof D. Brutus was Admiral, and lay at Anchor at an Island right over-against Marseilles. Brutus was having pick d the chiefest and valiantess. Men out of all the Legions, as well of the Antesignani as Centurions, put them aboard the Fleet, they themselves requiring to be imployed in that service. These Men had prepared Hooks and Graples of Iron, and had likewise furnished themselves with many Piles and Darts, and other forts of Weapons; and understanding of the Enemies coming, put to Sea, and encountred with the Massilians. They fought on either side very valiantly and fiercely: Neither were the Albicks much inferiour to our Men in Prowefs, being rough mountainous People, exercised in Arms, and having a little before fallen off from the Massilians, did now remember the late Contract and League they had made with them. The Shepherds, in like manner (a rude and untamed kind of People, stirred up with hope of liberty,) did strive to shew their Valour in the tresence of their Master.

The Massilians (trusting to the nimbleness of their Shipping, and in the skill and dexterity of their Pilots, did frustrate (in a deluding manner) the Shock of our Ships, when they came violently to stemm them. And forasmuch as they had Sea-room enough, they drew out their Navy at length, to compass and inclose our Men about: And sometimes they would single out one of our Ships, and fet upon them with divers of theirs together, or wipe off a side of their

Oars in their passage along by them.
When they came to deal at hand (leaving aside the Art and Skill of the Pilots) they took themselves to the stoutness and valour of the Highlanders. Our Men were fain to use worse Oar-men, and more unskilful Pilots; who being lately taken out of Ships of burden, did not well know the true names of the Tackling, and were much troubled with the heaviness and sluggismess of the Shipping; which being made in haste of unseasoned Timber, was not so nimble or ready for use. But as the matter came to handyblows, every fingle Ship willingly undertake two at once; and having grappled with either of them. fought on each side, entring valiantly the Enemies Ships, killing a great number of the Highlanders and Shepherds. Part of the Ships they funk, some they took with the Men, and the rest they beat back into the Haven. That day the Maffilians loft nine Ships, with those that were taken. This news was brought to Cæfar at Herda.

The First OBSERVATION.

Have formerly observed the manner of their Sea-fight, confifting of three parts. The first Sea-fight. was, their nimble and skilful managing of their Skips, either forcibly to affault, or to shun and bear off, as might fall for their best advantage: wherein the Maffilians, by reason of the skilfulness of their Pilots, had great confidence. The fecond was, their Fight before they came to Grappling, as well with great Engines, fuch as were their Balista and Catapulta, casting Stones and Logs of Wood one against another, as also with Slings, Arrows and Darts; refembling our great Artillery, and small Shot: For which purpose, their Ships were built with Fore-castles and Turrets, and other advantages of height, for their cafting-weapons. The third was, their grappling and forcible entry; wherein, fo rasmuch as the matter was referred to the arbitrement of Valour, the formerly made mention; encouraging them both by was referred to the arbitrement of Valour, the rewards and promises. Domitius required certain Legionary Soldiers carried the cause. Whence we may observe, that their Legions were the Nation) fent out to feek it in the Night. In Nurseries of their Valiant and Worthy Men, as the mean time the of Osca and Calaguris, well for the Sea as the Land; being fitted by the discipline of their Military exercises, to undertake any fervice subject to humane industry; whereof they gave an account worthy the School wherein they were instructed.

Lib. I.

Neither is it feen at any time, but that fuch Kingdoms as take care to train up their Men in Academies of vertuous Activity, do always keep their Honour at a high price; affording at all times Men of absolute and compleat carriage, both for defign and performance.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Have a little before shewed out of Livy, that the Antesignani were ordinarily taken for the Hastati; which being the easiest fort of Soldiers, according to the general division of a Legion, doth seem to contradict the passage in this Chapter, Sed delectos ex omnibus legionibus fortissimos viros Antesignanos, Centuriones Casar ei classi attribuerat; But Cesar having pickt the valiantest of the Antesignani out of all the Legions, put them into this Fleet as Centurions. For the better clearing whereof, we are to note, that as the Haftati, or first Battel of a Legion, were generally taken for the Antesignani (as standing before the Eagle and other the chiefest Ensigns, which were always amongst the Principes or second Battel;) fo every Maniple having an Enfign in the midst of the Troop, the Soldiers that stood in front before the Enfign were likewise called Antesignani, and were the best Soldiers in the Company: For the Centurion, standing always in the head of the Troop, was accompanied with the valiantest and worthiest Men; the rest filling up the Rear, conforted with the Lieutenant, who thereupon was called Tergi-ductor.

Whence we may admire the temperature and disposition of a Roman Army; being first generally divided into three Battels; whereof the meanest were in the Vanguard, to make trial of their ftrength, and to fpend the heat of their young blood in the first affront of an Enemy: The Veterani, or old Soldiers, being left in the Rereward, to repair any loss, which either force or casualty should cast upon their Leaders. And again, to counterpoise themselves, in such a manner as the weakest might not always go to the Wall, their private Companies were so ordered, that the best Men were always in front. Whereby they made fuch an exquisite temper, as kept every part of the Army in their full strength.

CHAP. XX.

Upon the making of the Bridge at Ilerda, the Enemy resolveth to transferr the War into Celtiberia, Pon Cæsar's making of his Bridge, Fortune fuddenly changed. The Enemy fearing the Courage and Valour of our Cavalry, did not so freely range abroad as they had wont to do; sometimes seeking Forage within a small distance of the Camp, to the end they might find a safe and easie retreat if occafon required; sometimes fetching a great compass about, to avoid the guards and stations of our Horsemen. And if they had received but the least check, or had but descried the Cavalry afar off, they would have cast down their burdens, and fled away.

At last they omitted Foraging for many days together, and (which was never used by any the mean time those of Osca and Calaguris, Osca. being in League together, sent Embassadors to Calaguis.

Cælar, with offer of their service, in such fort as he should please to command it. Within a few days the Tarraconenses, Lacetani, and Ausetani, together with the Illurgavonenses, which border upon the River Ebrus, followed after. Of all these he desired supplies of Corn and Provision: which they promised to furnish; and accordingly got Horses from all quarters, and brought Grain into the Camp. In like manner, the Regiment of the Illurgavonenies, understanding the resolution of their State, left the Enemy, and came unto him with their Colours:

and suddenly a great alteration of things appeared.

The Bridge being perfected, five great Cities and States being come in unto him, a course fettled for provision of Corn, and the rumour blown over of the fuccours and Legions, which Pompey was faid to come withal by the way of Mauritania; many other Towns farther off revolted from Afranius. and clave to Cæfar's party.

The Enemy being much affrighted and abashed at these things, Cæsar (to avoid the great circuit by which he continually fent his Horsemen about by the Bridge) having got a convenient place, re-folved to make many Trenches of thirty foot in breadth, by which he might drain some part of the River Sicoris, and make it passable by a Foord. These Trenches being almost made, Afranius and Petreius did thereupon conceive a great fear, lest they should be cut off altogether from Victual and Forage, forasmuch as Casar was very strong in Horse; and therefore they determined to leave that place, and transferr the War into Celtiberia, being the rather thereunto induced, for that of those two contrary Factions, which in the former War had flood for L. Sertorius, fuch Cities as were had upon for the Settorius, factorium and well fubdued by Pompey, did yet stand in aw of his Name and Authority: And such as from the beginning had continued firm unto him, did intirely love him, for the great benefits they had received from him; amongst whom Casar's name was not known. There they expected great succours both of Horse and Foot, and made no doubt but to keep the War on foot until Winter.

This Advice being agreed upon, they gave order to take up all the Boats that were on the River Iberus, and to bring them to Octogefa, a Town Octogefa. seated upon Iberus, twenty miles from the Camp. There they commanded a Bridge of Boats to be made; and transporting two Legions over Sicoris. made; and transporting fortified their Camp with a Rampier of twelve foot in height. Which being known by the Sceuts, Cæfar, by the extream labour of the Soldiers, con-Water: And at length brough the matter to that pass, that the Horsemen (with some difficulty) durst adventure over; but the Foot Troops, having nothing above the Water but their Heads, were fo hindred as well by the depth of the River, as the Swiftness of the stream, that they could not well get over. Notwithstanding at the same instant of time, news was brought of the making of the Bridge over the River Iberus, and a Foord was found in the River Sicoris.

The First OBSERVATION.

Irst, concerning the places here mentioned, the Reader may take notice that Ilerda (now lights. known by the name of Lerida) standeth upon the River Sicors, in the Province of Catalonia; and being feated upon a Hill, is inclosed round with a Wall of hewen Stone, in a pleasant and fertile Country, both for Corn, Wine, Oil, and Fruit: as it is graphically described by Lucan;

Surgit Ilerda manu ; placidis prælabitur undis Hesperios inter Sicoris non ultimus amnes : Saxeus ingenti quem pons amplectitur arcu, Hybernas passurus aquas. --

With a light rifing to a pretty height The rich ground (wells, on which by ancient Ilerda's plac'd : With gentle Waves slides by The Sicoris, none of Spain's meanest Streams. O'er it a Bridge of Stone with noble Arch, Subject to fuffer by the Winter Floods.

It was formerly an University, and at all times famous for Salt Meats and Pickled Fish. Whereunto Hwace alludeth when he tells his Book. That although it fell out that no Man would regard it, nevertheless it might serve at Ilerda to wrap Salt-

Aut fugies Uticam, aut unclus mittêris Ilerdam. Either to Utica thou'lt pass, Or to Ilerda in an Oily cafe.

Osca, now called Huesca, a Town likewise of Humane Bodies. Catalonia, in former time furnamed Vietrix, where Sertorius kept the Sons of the Grandees of Spain, as pledges of their Loyalty, under pretext of Learning the Greek and Latin Tongue, which he had there caused to be taught, in form of an Academy.

In this Town his hap was to be flain by Perpenna, as Paterculus recordeth the Story; Tum M. Perpenna prætorius, è proscriptis, generis clari-oris quam animi. Sertorium-inter canam Ætesca interemit ; Romanisque certam victoriam, partibus succession, parties and succession, parties excidium, fibi turpissimam mortem, pessione auctoravie facinore; Then M. Perpenna a Prætorian, one of the proscribed Party, of a more noble flock than Mind, flew Sertorius at Ætofca, as he was at Supper; occasioning by this wicked deed of his certain Victory to the Romans, ruine to his own Party, and a shameful death to himfelf. Which Ætosca is by all Men taken for this

The Inhabitants boaft of nothing more at this day, than that St. Laurence was a Citizen of their Calaguris, now Calaborra, is feated upon a Hill on the Banks of Iberus; the People whereof are famous for their constancy and faithfulness to Lib. 7. cap. 6. their Commanders, and especially to Sertorius: as appeareth by that of Valerius Maximus; Quo perseverantius interempti Sertorii cineribus, obsidionem Cn. Pompesi frustrantes, fidem præstarent; quia nullum jam aliud in urbe corum supererat animal, uxores suas, natosque ad usum nefariæ dapis verterunt : Quoque diutius armata juventus viscera sua visceribus suis aleret, infelices cadaverum reliquias salire non dubitavit. That they might demonstrate their Fidelity to the Ashes of Sertorius, to the very laft, by defeating Pompey's Siege, in regard there was no live thing else left in the City, they most inhumanely made their Wives and Children ferve them for Food; and that those which were in Arms might so much the longer with their own Bowels feed their Bowels, they stuck not to Salt up the pitiful remainders of the dead Carcasses.

Nevertheless Atranius took them in the end by continual Siege; amongst whom that Antiquity of Bebricius is very remarkable, which is yet extant near to Logronno.

DIIS. MANIBUS. Colle tumet modice, levique exerceit in altum Pingue folum tumulo, super hunc fundata vetusta ME. BEBRICIUS. CALAGURITANUS. DEVOVI. ARBITRATUS. RELIGIONEM. ESSE. EO. SUBLATO. OUI. OMNIA.

CUM. DIIS IMMORTALIBUS. COMMUNIA. HABEBAT. ME. INCOLUMEM.

RETINERE. ANIMAM.
VALE. VIATOR. QUI. HÆC. LEGIS.
ET. MEO. DISCE. EXEMPLO.
FIDEM. SERVARE. IPSA. FIDES.
ETIAM. MORTUIS. PLACET.
CORPORE. HUMANO. EXUTIS.

In English thus: To the Dii Manes (or Divine Gloft) of O. Sertorius, I Bebricius of Calaguris devote my self; supposing it a business of Conscience, he being gone, who had all things in common with the Immortal Gods, for me to feek to fave my own Life. Farewel Traveller, who read ft this, and learn of me to be faithful. Faithfulness is a thing plea-feth even the Dead, when they have put off their

Observations upon CESAR'S

In Memory of whose Fidelity, Augustus Cafar Sustaining took a Band of these People for a Guard to his Augusto. Person. In this Town was Quintilian the Rhe-Cohors Calogatorician Born; and being brought from thence to ritanorum. Rome in Nero's time, was the first that taught a publick School for Salary: as witnesseth Saint Hierome ; Quintilianus ex Hispania Calaguritanus Ad Eustin pyrimus Rome publicam Scholam tenuit, & Jalario Gracobonelfatus publico claruti. Quintilian a Spaniard of Calaguri first taught a publick School at Reme, and had a stipend allowed him.

Celtiberia was the Country lying along the Ri-Childric ver Iberus, Inhabited by People coming out of Gallia Celtica: Whereupon Lucan faith,

- Profugique à gente vetusta Gallorum Celta, miscentes nomen Iberis.

Some Celtick Fugitives from Gallia came, And with th' Iberi made a compound name.

Florus calleth them Hispania Robur. And Va-Lik 2.6.1; lerius Maximus affirmeth, That they were al-Lik 2.66 ways glad of War, as being to end their Life in Happiness and Honour; and lamented their ill Fortune to die in their Beds, as a miserable and shameful end.

His pugna cecidisse decus, corpusque cremari Tale nefas: Cœlo credunt, superisque referri, Impastus carpat si membra jacentia vultur.

- To die in Fight They count great Honour, know no Funeral Heav'n's theirs they think and the celestial Seats. Whose scattered Limbs the Ravenous Vulture

Their Arms and Weapons were of fingular Rarity: For besides the Water of Bilbo, which gave them an invincible Temper, they had also a peculiar fashion of working them, as witnesseth Dio-Lib. 6.09.9 dorus Siculus; hiding their Plates of Iron in the Earth, until the worst and weakest part were eaten out with Ruft, and of that which remained, they made very hard Swords.

The Second OBSERVATION.

He fuddain alterations of War are like the changings of Mens Minds upon small accidents; which are so forcible to shake our Resolutions, as made a great Philosopher to describe a Man by the property of mutabile Animal, or a changeable living Creature. And it is notably changeable fiving Creature. And it is notatily feen in this; That Afranius, in the compass of a few days, triumphed at Calar's Overthrow, and fled away for fear of his Power. Whence we may note the advantage coming to a Parry, when they shake off any eminent distress: For as the extremity thereof threatneth ruine and deftruction, so the alteration bringeth with it an opinion of Victory. And furely, fuch is the condition of all forts of Mifery, that when the Storm is over, and the bitterness of the affliction allay'd, good Times come redoubled upon the Patients; as though the viciflitude of things did inforce contrary effects. And therefore a Commander, knowing the advantage of fuch an opportunity, must endeavour to improve the same, as may best ferve to a speedy end

CHAP. XXI.

The Enemy fetteth forward, and is stayed by Cafar.

He Enemy thereupon thought it expedient for him to make the more hafte; and therefore leaving two Auxiliary Cohorts for the safe keeping of Ilerda, he transported all his Forces over the River Sicoris, and Encamped himself with the two Legions which formerly he had carried over. There remained nothing for Cæsar to do, but with his Cavalry to Impeach and trouble the Enemy in their March. And forafmuch as it was a great compass about to go by the Bridge (whereby it would come to pass, that the Enemy would get to Iberus a far nearer way) he passed over his Horsemen by the Foord. About the third Watch, as Petreius and Afranius had raised their Camp, upon a suddain the Cavalry shewed themselves in the Rere, and swarming about them in great multitudes, began to stay and hinder their passage. As soon as it began to be day-light, from the upper ground where Cæsar lay Encamped, it was perceived how the Rereward of the Enemy was hard laid to by our Cavalry, and how sometimes they turned head again, and were nevertheless broken and Routed: Sometimes their Ensigns stood suddainly still, and all their Foot Troops charged our Horse, and forc'd them to give way; and then turning back, went on their way again. The Soldiers walking up and down the Camp, were grieved that the Enemy fhould foe cape their bands, whereby the matter would confequently be fpun out into a long War: And went unto the Centurious and Tribunes of the Soldiers, praying them to befeech Casar not to spare them for any danger or labour; for they were ready and willing to pass the River where the Horse went over. Cæsar moved through their desire and importunity, albeit he feared to expose his Army to a River of that greatness, yet he thought it expedient to put it to Trial, and therefore commanded that the weakest Soldiers of all the Centuries should be taken out, whose courage or strength shewed a disability to undertake that Service: And these he left in the Camp with one Legion to defend the same, bringing out the other Legions without carriage or burden: And having set a great number of Horses and Cattel both above and below in the River, he transported ried away with the Stream, were succoured and taken up by the Horsemen; insomuch as not one Man pe-

The Army carried thus over in Safety, he ranged them in order, and marched forward with a threethem in order, and marched forward with a three-fold Battel. Such was the endeavour of the Soldier, that albeit they had fee a Circuit of fix Miles to the Foord, and had from much time in paffing the Cick in the River, yet by the ninth hour they did overtake the Accusion. Enemy that rofe about the third Watch of the Night.

As foon as Afranius and Petreius had discovered the Legions afar off (being terrified with the No-velty of that purfuit) they betook themselves to the upper Ground, and there Embastelled their Troops. In the mean time Cæsar refrested his Army in the Field, and would not fuffer them (being weary to give Battel: And as the Enemy tried again to go on in their March, he followed after and staied them, whereby they were forced to Encamp sconer than was purposed: For there were Hills a little before them, and for five Miles together, the passages were very difficult and narrow.

By which means (being advanced between the Hills) they hoped to be free from Cæsar's Cavalry, and by keeping the Passages to kinder the Army from following after; to the end they themselves might without peril or fear, put their Forces over the River Iberus : which by all means was to be effected. Nevertheless, being wearied with Travelling and Fighting all day, they put off the business to the next Morning.

Cæsar also Encamped himself on the next Hill; and about Midnight, some of their Party being gone out from the Camp, somewhat far off, to feet. Water, were taken by the Horsemen. By them Cæsar was advertised, that the Enemy with silence began to remove, and to lead their Troops out of their Camp. Whereupon he commanded the fign of rifing to be vala concisgiven, and the cry (dislodging and trussing up their mani, Baggage) to be taken up, according to the discipline and use of Soldiers.

The Enemy hearing the cry, fearing least they should be impeached in the Night, and forced to Fight with their butthens on their backs, or to be Shut up in those streight passages by Cæsar's Horsemen, stayed their Journey, and kept their Forces within their Camp.

OBSERVATION.

His passage over Sicoris, was in the same manner as he carried his Army over the River Loire, in the seventh Commentary of the War of Gallia; Vado per Equites invento, pro rei necessi-superiora Pa-tate opportuno, ut Brachia modo atque Humeri, ad di vada exer-found a Foord, indifferent convenient in regard impetum of the necessity they were put to, to the end that finendam. the Soldiery might have their Arms and Shoul-Livy. ders at liberty, and not be hindered by the Water of nequid from carrying their Weapons, he fo disposed his similar research that he healer the force of the Birms with this andeat from carrying their Weapons, ne to unpose and price analysis. Horfe, that he broke the force of the River with sada, Sparmind hie Army over in fafety.

gittin in ful-

The Horse that stood above brake the force of cos, & fashe the Water, and those that were below took up such Dat panas as were overcome with the Stream, and withal, moints agree, gave Courage to the Soldier to venture with bet- Lucan. 1. 4. ter affurance, feeing the paffage impaled in on each fide, to keep them from miscarrying. His attempt upon Sicoris, to abate the swelling pride of that River, by dividing it into many Streams, was in imitation of the first Cyrus, who taking displea-Hordo. Chil his Army over. Some few of the Soldiers being car- fure at the River Cyndes, next unto Euphrates

Lib. 4.

Sil. Ital.

Attollunt

phrates was divided first Crafus not finding the River Halis passable by a Foord, and having no means to make a Bridge, funk a great Trench behind the Camp, from the upper part of the River, and fo drew all the Wa-Alexander. Hered. Just ter behind his Army.

Vegetius hath a particular discourse of passing Lib. 2. c40. 7. an Army over a River, whether it be by Bridge or Boat, or by wading or swimming, or any other way: To which I referr the Reader.

CHAP. XXII.

Afranius feeketh to take the Streights between certain Mountains; but is prevented by Casar.

He next day following, Petreius went out fecretly with a few Horse, to discover the Country; and for the same purpose some went likewise out of Cæsar's Camp: L. Decidius Saxa was fent with a small Troop to view the situation of the Place. And either Party re-turned with the same report: That for sive Miles the way was open and champain, and afterwards campe gethe way was open and champain, and afterwards into sign over years and mountainous; and wolgeour furfaces are the state are took the fireights, might easily impeach the Enemy media tellus from going further. The natter was disputed in hine ardus
the Council of War, by Petreius and Afranius; the cliffic Continust colles, time of their fetting forward was debated. Most that quo of them thought it fit to take their Journey in the inter opaco Night; for by that means they might come to those Anfiacu la-Anfiacu la- treights before it were perceived. Others were of unce viz: streights before it were perceived. quibs hofte opinion, that it was not possible to steal out in the posito Fau. Night; as appeared by the cry of rising taken up the cibus, emitti. Night before in Cælar's Camp, upon their removing: And Cælar's Horsemen did so range abroad in the tem, Inque Night, that all places and passages were kept and feras gentes fout up. Neither were they to give occasion of Night Lucan.lib. 4. Fights, but to avoid the same by all the means they could; for a smuch as in civil diffention, the ordinary Soldier would rather suffer himself to be over one stered by fear, than continue firm in the Allegiance special of fear, toma continue from the day time, which be had fown mine: Whereas, in the day time, every Man hath shame and distinctive fear, together with the presence of the Centurious and Tribunes; with which respects a Soldier is restrained, and kept within the bounds of duty. And therefore the attempt was by all means to be undertaken in the day time : And although it fell out to some loss, yet nevertheless the Body of the Army might pass in safety, and possess that place which they fought for.

This opinion prevailing in their Confultation, they determined by break of day the next Morning to fet forward. Cæsar, having diligently viewed the Country, as foon as day began to appear, drew all his Forces out of his Camp, and marched forward in a great circuit, keeping no direct way. For the ways which led to Iberus and Octogesa, were taken up Ite fine ullo Ordine, ait, pass over great and difficult Vallies. And in many tign conver places, broken Rocks and Stones and 10 women time bellum, that they were necessarily forced to give their Weaplaces, broken Rocks and Stones did fo hinder them. Et facient that they were necessarily forces to give their Weapunger, vol. pois from hand to hand, the Soldiers lifting up one unquestioned another; and so they passed most part of the way.

minace.

Howseever, no Man thought much of the labour, for Lewen lith 4. that they hoped to give an end to all their Travel. if they could keep the Enemy from passing over the River Iberus, and cut off his Victuals. At the first, Afranius's Soldiers ran joyfully out of their Camp to fee the Army, casting out words of Derifion and Reproach, that for want of Victuals

Is its fame the greatest River of Assertia, drew it into three by they feemed to go back again: And the Communication than the communication that the communication is themselves did much approve their own manders themselves did much approve their own Counsel, that they had kept their Troops within the Camp. For that which confirmed them in their Opinion was, that they perceived they were come out without their Carriages : Whereby they hoped, necessity would not suffer them to continue long there. But when they saw the Troops by little and little to wind to the right hand, and that they perceived, how those that were in Front had fallen backward beyond their Camp, there was no Man fo dull, but thought it expedient presently to march out, and make head against them. Whereupon they cried to Arm; and all their Forces, excepting some few Cohorts which were left to keep the Camp, went out, and marched directly towards Iberus.

The whole business confisted in speed and celerity, which of the two should first take the Streights, and possess the Hills. Cæsar's Army was hindered by the difficulty of the way: And Afranius's Party was retarded by Cafar's Cavalry. The matter was come to that upfhot, that if Afranius's Party did first get the Hills, they might haply quit themselves of danger; but the Baggage of the whole Army, and the Cohorts left in the Camp could not be faved: For being intercepted and secluded by Cæsas's Army, there was no means to relieve them.

It fell out, that Cafar first attained the place; and being come out from among those great Rocks into a plain Campagne, put his Army in order of Battel against the Enemy.

Afranius seeing the Enemy in Front, and his Rereward hardly charged by Cæsar's Cavalry, got the advantage of a small Hill, and there made his stand: And from thence sent four Cohorts, bearing round Bucklers unto a Mountain, which in all Mens fight was higher than the reft; commanding them to run as fast as they could, and possess that Hill, in-tending to follow after with all his Forces, and altering his course, to get along the ridges and tops of the Mountains to Octogesa.

As the Cohorts were advanced forward by an blique Circuis, Casar's Cavalry perceiving their intent, fet upon them with fuch violence, that they were not able any time to bear their Charge, but were furrounded by them, and all cut in pieces in the fight of both Armies.

The First OBSERVATION.

DEtreius and Afranius, in their Council of War. resolved by all means to shun Night Encounters, as a thing full of hazard and uncertainty, prelia effe and apt for looseness and disobedience: For the vitanda quo Night, being neither a discoverer of Errors, nor perenniss yer a diffinguisher either of Actions or Persons, diffensione, but wrapping up both the Vertuous and the Faulty timori magi in her Mantle of Obscurity, doth not admit of quam religi directions to follow an opportunity, or to help a confuserity miftake; but rather giving way to Impunity and at locem licentious Confusion, leaveth no hope of what is multum per wished: Whereas the light is a witness of every omnimon or omnimon. Mans demeanour, and hath both Honour and lis afferte. Rebuke to make duty respected.

Neque in the form which Causes, Curio (as it followeth in ce in sign the next Commentary) in his Harangue before flaggistim.

that untimely Expedition against King Juba, thus Tast Hat. rejected their advice that would have had him lib. 2. fet forward in the Night; At etiam ut media nocte proficiscamur addunt: Quo majorem credo licentiam habeant qui peccare conantur: Namque hujusmodi res aut pudore aut metu tenentur, quibus rebus nox maxime adversaria est. Fur-Devision and Reproach, that for want of Victuals ther than this, they advise us to set out in the they fled and returned to Ilerda; for the way they middle of the Night: That so (Ithink) those Men beld was quite contrary to that they intended, where- who have a mind to do mischief may take the

Lib, I.

And that the danger may appear as well by effect as by discourse, let the Reader take notice of that Battel by Night, between Antonius Primus on the behalf of Vespasian, and the Vitellian Legions, near unto Cremona; whereof Tacitus hath this description; Prelium tota Nocte variarum, anceps, atrox; his, rursus illis, exitiabile. Nibil Animus, aut Manus, ne oculi quidem provisu juvabant, &c. The Fight was doubtful and bloody the whole Night, now this Party going to the worse, by and by that. A stout heart or a valiant hand availed little, neither could the Eyes fee before them either advantage or disadvantage. And thus are all Night-works condemned, wherein either Order or Honour are of any moment.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Have already noted, in the former Commenta-I ries, the use of exact and particular discovery of the Country, where a Party is engaged: Than which nothing doth more advantage a Commander to expedite the happy Issue of a War. For by that means he is not only able to judge of any motion which the Enemy shall offer, and to give fure Directions to frustrate and make void the fame; but also to dispose himself according as shall seem expedient for his safety. Wherein, if a place of fuch consequence as is here mentioned shall by defign be aimed at, this History sheweth how much it importeth either Party to obtain it : And therefore Casar had reason to make his paffage through Vallies and Rocks, rather than rus, confulted together of other courses. There were to lose Victory, for want of labouring in an uneafie way.

This Lucius Decidius Saxa, or Didius Saxa, imployed in this Discovery, was afterward advanced by Cafar to be Tribune of the People; whereat Tully was fo much offended. How can I omit (faith he) this Docidius Saxa, a Man brought from the furtheft end of the World , whom we see Tribune of the People, before we ever saw him a Citizen.

CHAP. XXIII.

Casar refuseth to fight upon an advantage offered, contrary to the opinion and defire of all Men.

Here was an opportunity then offered of doing something to purpose; neither was Cæsar ignorant thereof. Such an Overthrow given before their Faces, did confequently fo discourage them, that it was thought they would not endure a charge; especially being compassed about with the Cavalry, in an indifferent and open Place, where the matter was to be decided by Battel. Which was on all fides instantly desired at Casar's Hands: For the Legates, Centurions, and Tribunes of the Soldiers, came joyntly unto him, defiring him to make no doubt of giving Battel, for all the Soldiers were very ready and forward thereunto; whereas the contrary Party had shewed many Arguments of Fear and discouragement. First, in that they did not succour their Fellows. Secondly, inasmuch as they had not budg'd from the Hill. which they had took for a retreat. Neither had they withstood the Charge and Incursion of the Cavalry, but had throng d pell-mell together, and con-fusedly mingled their Ensigns one with another, greater liberty: For in the day-time they would And if he feared the inequality and difadvantage of be restrained either through Shame or Fear, to both the Place, he might take some other of more indiswhich the darkness of the Night is a great Adverwhere he was, but must depart from thence for want Cæsar was in hope to end the matter without either blow or wound of his Men; forasmuch as he had cut off the Enemy from Victual. And why then should he lose a Man, although it were to gain a Victory? Why should he suffer his valiant and welldeserving Soldiers, to be so much as burt or wounded? Or why should be put the matter to the ba-zard of Fortune? Especially, when it no iefs concerned the Honour and reputation of a Commander to vanquisk an Enemy by direction and advice, than to subdue them by force of Arms? being moved withal with a tender commiseration of such Citizens of Rome, as were consequently to be hazarded or flain in the Fight; whereas he defired to work out his own ends with their Safety.

This opinion of Calar's was difallowed by most Men: And the Soldiers would not flick to Speak plainly among ft themselves: For a smuch as such an occasion of Victory was overslipt, that when Cælar would have them, they would not fight. He notwithstanding continued firm in his opinion; and fell a little off from the Enemy, to lessen and abate their fear and amazement. Petreius and Afranius, upon the opportunity given them, withdrew themselves into their Camp. Cæsar having possess d the Hills with Garrisons of Soldiers, and Skut up all the Passages leading to Iberus, encamped himself as near as he could to the Enemy.

The Commanders of the adverse Party being much afflicted that they had absolutely lost all means of Provision of Victual, and of gaining the River Ibetwo ways left open; the one to return to Ilerda, and the other to Tarracon. And while they were considering of these things, it was told them, that fuch as went out for Water were very much preffed by our Cavalry. Whereupon they placed many Courts Guard, as well of Horse, as Auxiliary Footmen, interlacing the Legionary Coborts amongst them; and began alfo to raife a Rampier from the Camp to the Watering-place, that the Soldiers might safely, without fear, fetch Water within the Bounds of their Fortification. Which Work Petreius and Afranius divided between themselves; and for the perfecting of the same, had occasion to go far off from the Camp: By means of whose absence the Soldiers taking liberty of free Speech one with another, went out; and as any Man had an Acquaintance or Et quamvis Neighbour in each others Camp, they fought him out. nullo macu-and first, they all gave thanks to all our Party, that laus languis and fift, they all gave thanks to all our varity, that the they had spared them when they were terrified and Que possit amazed the day before: In regard whereof, they ac-fecific, timet. knowledged to hold their lives by their favour: And Lucan Lib.4.

And having proceeded thus far in their communication, they require assurance for the Lives of Afranius and Petreius; lest they skould seem to corceive mischief against their Generals or betray them in feeking their own fafety. Which things being agreed upon, they promifed to come with their Ensigns to Calar's Camp; and thereupon sent to Cælar some of the Centurions of the first Orders, as Deputies to treat of Peace.

afterwards enquired how they might safely yield themselves to their General, complaining that they had not done it in the beginning, and so have joyned their Forces with their ancient Friends and

In the mean time, they invited their Friends on either side into the Camps, insomuch as both fusedly mingled their Ensigns one with another, their Lodgings seemed but one Camp. Many of no Man either keeping his place or his Colours, the Tribunes of the Soldiers, and Centurions came to Cælar, recommending themselves to his favour : And the like did the Grandees and chief Princes of Spain, whom they had commanded out, to take party in this War, and to remain with them as Ho-Hopitis ille stages and Picages. These inquired after their old vocatille pro- Acquaint ances and ancient Hofts, by whom each Man pinqui : Ad might have access to Casar with some commendamonet hunc tion. In like manner, Afranius's Son dealt with monet nunc fors purcili-bus zess: touching his own and his Father's Life. All things touching his own and his Father's Life. All things founded of Joy and mutual Congratulation : Of them Nec tomanus Jounded of Joy and mutual Congrammation: Some cast qui non that bad escaped such imminent dangers; and agnoverat that of us, that seemed to have effected such great matters without Bloodshed. Infomuch as Casar (in all can. lib. 4.

su effe pareft.

Mens Judgment) reaped great Fruit of his accusto-med Clemency and Mildness; and his Counsel was generally approved of by all Men. OBSERVATION.

THis Chapter containeth a passage of that note and eminency, as the like is not read in any Story. For if we fearch the Records of all Natinim tihi ma. ons, from the very Birth of Bellona unto times of later Memory, it will no where else appear that a General spared an advantage to purchase a victorious Name, by the bloodshed and ruin of his Enemy; especially contrary to the will and defire of his Army, that had undergone fuch difficulties and hazards, to give an end to that War; contrary to his Knowledge and late experience of the mutability and change of time and formine; con-trary to the furest rule of War,

----- Dolus an Virtus, quis in Hofte requirit?

Valour or Craft, who cares which in a Foe?

and contrary to the use of Arms, which were always bent against an Enemy to subdue him.

This is the Fruit of that other part of Military Knowledge, which Men do rather admire than attain unto, no less concerning the honour of a fewer had any of Carlar's Soldiers, feward cause them Que mode Commander. *Conflict of the recover are Coldied To the Leading of Carlar's Soldiers, feward cause them Que mode Non minus Commander, * Consilio superare quam Gladio, To of Imperatoris, capito suovercome by Counsel and good Direction, sucher powe, quam than by the Sword, and was a main step to raise him to the Empire. For howfoever the Soldier (to prevent further labour) flood hard for Blood, not respecting that of the * Comick, Omnia prisexperire verbis, quam Armis [apientem decet; A wife Man frould try all fair Words before he brings the business to Blows: Yet if Cafar had been so injurious to Nature, as to have left them to their own desires, and suffered their Fury to have violated the Law of Humanity more than was requisite for Victory, they would aftercundic indul- wards have loathed themselves, and cursed their ga. Nicetas. Swords for fuch unfeafonable Execution; and may be doubted, would have revenged it upon his head, before the time came to strike the fatal stroak of the eversion of that State. Casar esteemed it also a part of divine Power, to fave Men by Troops, De clementia, according to that of Scneca; Hac divina Potentia est, gregatim, ac publice servare : It is a divine Power that faves Men by Troops and all at once. And therefore he chose rather to displease the Soldier Ingent Villa- for the prefent; than to lose that honour which attendeth the sparing of home bred Blood: Whereum sargui- of foreign Enemies are not altogether so capable.

CHAP. XXIV.

Petreius breaketh off the Treaty, and new sweareth the Soldiers to the Party.

Franius being advertised of these Passages, Cafar. left the Work which he had begun, and withdrew himself into the Camp; prepared (as it seemed) to take patiently whatsoever Should befall him. But Petreius was no way dismayed shereat : For having armed his boushold Family, he went flying with them, and a Pratorian Cohort of Buckler-bearers, together with some few stipendary Hurle of the barbarous People, whom he was wont to Huse of the barbarase People, whom he was wone to keep about him as a quarte to his Perform, and came Juddenly and unlooked for to the Rampier; brake off function me the Soldiers Treaty; thrust our Men off from the plenibused Camp, killing tuch as he could apprehend. The refs Separase & gos together, and affrighted at the fundemness of the method than the property of the property danger, wrapt their Coats about their left Arms, and pacem, Luc. with their Swords drawn, defended themselves from the Backler-bearers and Horsemen : And trusting to the nearness and propinquity of their Camp, they took Courage and got lafely thisher, being proceed by the Cobores that had the Guard at the Camp Gates.

This being done, Petreius went weeping about to the Maniples, calling the Soldiers, and befeech-ing them not to leave and forfake him, nor yet Pompey their General, that was absent, nor to deliver them over to the cruelty of their Adversaries. Prefently thereupon a great Concourfe of Soldiers was about the Pratory, requiring that every Man might take an Oash not to abandon or betray the Army or their Generals, nor yet to enter into private consulta-tion thereof without consent of the rest. He himself first took an Oath to this effect, and caused Afranius to take the fame. The Tribune, of the Soldiers and Centurious followed in order: And after them, the Soldiers were brought out according to their Centuries, and were fworn the fame Oath.

to be brought out: And being brought forth, eye flew compensions the best properties the best properties the best properties the best published before the Pratorian Pavilion. But recedime most Men concealed fuch as were with shem, and in Luc. lib. the Night time fent them out over the Rampier. Whereby it came to pass that the Terrour wherewith the Generals had affrighted them, the cruelty they had flewed in panishment, together with the vain Religion of the new Oath, had taken away all hope of yielding for the present; and quite changing the Sol-diers Minds, had reduced the matter to the some course of War. Caesar for his part, caused diligent enquiry to be Hoc siquidan made of such Soldiers as came into his Camp during folo civiles the time of the Treaty, and sent them away in timine selling the time of the Treaty, and sent them away in Dux cause Safety. But of the Tribunes of the Soldiers and Cen- meliorismis turions, many of their voluntary accordremained with Luc. lib. 2. him: Whom afterwards he held in great honour; and advanced the Centurions, and fuch Roman Knights as were of the better rank, to the place and dignity of Tribunes.

The Afranians were forely laid unto in their foraging, and watered likewise with great difficulty. Many of the Legionary Soldiers had store of Corn, being commanded to take Provision with them from Ilerda for twenty two Days. But the Buckler-bearers and Auxiliary Forces had none at all, baving but small means to provide and furnish themselves, and their Bodies not being used to carry Burthens; for which cause, a great Number fled daily to

The First OBSERVATION.

THat every Man is the Maker of his own Fortune is evidently feen in the feveral Carriages of these two Generals. For Afranius gave way to the Soldiers Treaty, and refolved to fuffer whatfoever that Transaction should cast upon him. But Petreius, opposing himself to their defires, raifed new troubles, had further defigns, and another Fortune. Wherein forasimuch as the event of things rifeth according as they are first directed, either by weak or ftrong resolutions; it better suteth the temper of a Soldier (howsoever the success fall out with our defires) rather to be stiff in what he wisheth, than to make his own easiness the ready means of his Adversaries happiness.

The Second OBSER VATION.

TErtue at all times hath had this privilege in the difference and degrees of State and condition, to make a Noble Man's Word equal to a Common Man's Oath : But the integrity of former Ages, had a more general prerogative. avouching every Man's Promise for the strict-ness of an Oath. Hence it was that the Romans, upon their Enrollment for a War, gave but their Promise to the Tribune of the Soldiers. to keep fuch Ordinances as their Militia required: Until at length that the Corruption of time (falfifying the fimplicity and truth of Words) did enforce them to give an * Oath, as the fureft bond of Faith and Obedience: As is noted by Livy at large; the Soldiers (faith he) which was never before that time practifed, were fworn by the Tribunes to appear upon fummons from the Confuls, and not to depart without leave. For until then, there was nothing required of them but a folemn Promise (which the Horsemen made by their Decuries, and the Foot Troops by their Centuries) not to leave their Colours by flight, or through fear, not to fortake their rank, unless it were either to affault an Enemy, to take up an offensive Weapon, or to save a Civizen; which be-ing at first but the offer of a free Mind. Was now by the Tribunes required by obligation of an Oath. The form of this Oath was diverfly varied, as appeareth by Aul. Gel. and more specially in the times of the Emperours: For Caligula made this addition to the Soldiers Oath, that they should hold neither their Lives nor their Children dearer unto them than the Emperour Caius and his Sifters. Concerning the respect had of this Mili-tary Oath, that which Tully reporteth of Cato is of excellent note. Popilius having charge of the felves. Province of Macedonia, had (amongst other Roman Youths) Cato's Son, a young Soldier in his Army; and being occasioned to difmis a Legion. discharged likewise young Cato, being one of that Legion. But he defirous to bear Arms in that War, continued ftill in the Army: Whereupon Cato writ from Rome to Popilius, requiring him. that if he fuffered his Son to remain in that War, he would by any means fwear him again; for being discharged of his first Oath, he could not lawfully fight against the Enemy.

Ever fince Constantine the great, the Soldiers were fworn by a Christian Oath, as Vegetius noteth, to obey all things the Emperour should command them, not to leave their Warfare without Licence, not to shun Death for the service of the Publick Weal. And at this day, amongh other Nations, an Oath is given to the Enemy. And then continually they were in great the Soldier upon his enrollment, to this effect; bazard and danger: And fill as they approached all Men, and against all, without exception of Persons; and if they know any thing concerning his service, to reveal the same incontinently; not to leave their Colours, without leave either of the General or his Lieutenant.

The ancient Romans did charge their folemn and publick Oaths with many Ceremonies: As appeareth by that form which was uted in ratifying Treaties and Transactions; Their Heralds killed a Hog, and cried out withall, that the like would happen to him that first falsified his faith.

Polybius reporteth, that he that read the Oath whereby the Romans and Carthaginians fware Lib. 3. their accord, had the Hair of his Head tied up in Histor. an extraordinary manner: The Parties invocating their Jupiter, to grant all prosperity to him that without fraud or deceit did enter into that Agreement. But if (faid he that took the Oath) I shall either do, or purpose otherwise, all the rest being safe and sound, let me alone (in the midft of the Laws and Juffice of my Country in my own habitation and dwelling, and within my proper Temples and Sepulchres,) perish most unfortunately, even as this Stone flieth out of my hand. And (as he spake those Words) he cast away a Stone.

I do not find the use of a Military Oath in our Nation. Howbeit the common form of our Oath is as ceremonious and fignificative as any other whatfoever: which may be observed by the 3 parts it containeth, as I have feen them allegorized in fome Antiquities. For first the Book being always a part of holy Writ, implyeth a renunciation of all the promises therein contained. Secondly, the touching it with our Hands, inferreth the like defiance of our Works, never to be successful or helping unto us. Thirdly, the kissing of the Book importern a vain mis-spending of our Vows and Prayers, if we falfifie any thing thereby averr'd.

CHAP. XXV.

The Endeavour which Afranius used to return to Ilerda; but failed in his defign.

He matter being in this extremity, of two Cafe. means which were left unto them, it was thought the readier and more expedient. to return to Herda. For having left there behind them a little Corn, they hoped to take some good course for the Sequel. Taracco was farther off, and thereby subject to more Casualties concerning their Paffage. In regard whereof they resolved of the former Course, and so dislodged them-

Cæsar having fent his Cavalry before to incumber and retard the Rere-guard, followed after himself with the Legions. The hindmost Troops of their Army were constrained (without any intermission of time) to fight with our Horsemen. And their manner of Fight was thus. Certain expedite Coborts. free of Carriages, marched in the rere of their Army, and in open and champaign places many of these Cohorts made a stand to confront our Cavalry. If they were to ascend up a Hill, the nature of the place did easily repell the danger wherewith they were threatned; for a smuch as such as went before, might easily from the higher ground protect them that sollowed after: But when they came to a Valley or Descent, that those that were in the former Ranks could not help them in the Rere, the Horsemen from the upper ground, did cast their Weapons with great ease and facility upon Well and lawfully to serve the King, towards near unto such places, they called to the Legions, and

Terentius

Jature ininam facit &

cap. 26.

rem bezanti. Agricola.

willed them to make a stand with their Ensigns, and vour; that if the opposition of foreign malice so by great force and violence repelled our Cavalry. fo by great force and violence repelled our Cavalry.

Who being retired back, they would fuddenly take a running, and get all down into the Valley. And presently again, being to ascend into a higher ground, they would there make a stand. For they were so far from having help of their own Cavahy (whereof they had a great number) that they were glad to take them between their Troops, (being much affrighted with former Encounters) and so to shelter and protest them: Of whom if any chanced (upon occasion) to stray aside out of the rout the Army held, they were presently attacked by Casar's Horsemen.

The Fight continuing in this manner, they proceeded slowly on their way, advancing forward but by little and little; and oftentimes stood still, to fuccour and relieve their party, as then it fell out. For having gone but four miles on their way (being very hardly laid to, and much pressed by our Cavalry) they took to an exceeding high Hill; and there putting themselves into one front of a Battel, fortified their Camp, keeping their Carriages laden upon their Horfes. As foon as they perceived that Cæsat's Camp was set, and that the Tents were up, and their Horses put to Grass; they rose suddenly about Mid-day, upon hope of some respite, by reafon of our Horse put out to feeding, and went on their journey.

Which Casar perceiving rose and followed after, leaving a few Cohorts to keep the Carriages : And about the tenth hour, commanding the Foragers and Horsemen to be called back, and to follow after instantby the Cavalry returned, and betook themselves to their accustomed charge. The Fight was very sharp in the Rere, insomuch as they were ready to turn their backs. Many Soldiers, and some of the Centurions were flain. Cælar's Troops pressed hard upon them, and threatned the overthrow of their whole Army; insomuch, as they had neither means to chuse a fit place to incamp in, nor to proceed forward in their march. Whereby they were necessarily inforced to make a stand, and to pitch their Camp far from any Water, in an unequal and disadvantageous place. But Cæsar for-bare to meddle with them, for the same reasons that have been formerly declared; and for that day, would not suffer the Soldiers to set up their Tents, that they might be the readier to follow after, at what time foever, by night or by day, they should offer to break away.

The Enemy having observed the defect of our Camp, imployed all that night in advancing their Works, and in casting their Camp with an opposite front to our Army. The like they did all the next day: But so it sell out, that by how much their Camp was brought farther on, and the Fortification grew nearer to finisking, by so much farther off they were from Water: and so remedied one evil with a worse mischief. The first night, none of them went out of their Camp to fetch Water : and the next day, they led out all their Troops together to Water, but sent no Man out to Forage. Whereby Cæfar, finding them oppressed with many inconveniences, chose rather to force them to a composition, than to fight with them.

The OBSERVATION.

IN this troublesome and confused retreat, which these Commanders undertook, to regain the advantages that formerly they had quitted at Ilerda, we may observe the difficulties attending a from the preffures of a strong confronting Enemy. For the frailty of humane fortune is always for lets from the native weaknesses of its own endea- then returned both into their Camps, current of our defires, there is little hope of better fuccess, than that which the ordinary condition of extremity doth afford: Which is, to hazard the peril of a Wound, in feeking to avoid the fmart of a Rod; and to fall into Scylla, upon a defire we have to shun Charybdis: according as it Incidit in befell this party. Wherein let us farther note the purs view advantage which a Commander hath, either to take Carplaine or leave, when he is able to over-mafter the Ene-my in Cavalry: For the Horsemen serving an Army Royal, by making discoveries, by Foraging, by giving refcue upon a fudden, by doing execution, and retarding an Enemy in his march, if (over-awed by the Cavalry of the Enemy) they cannot perform these services as is requisite; the contrary party is the ftronger by fo many advantages.

CHAP. XXVI.

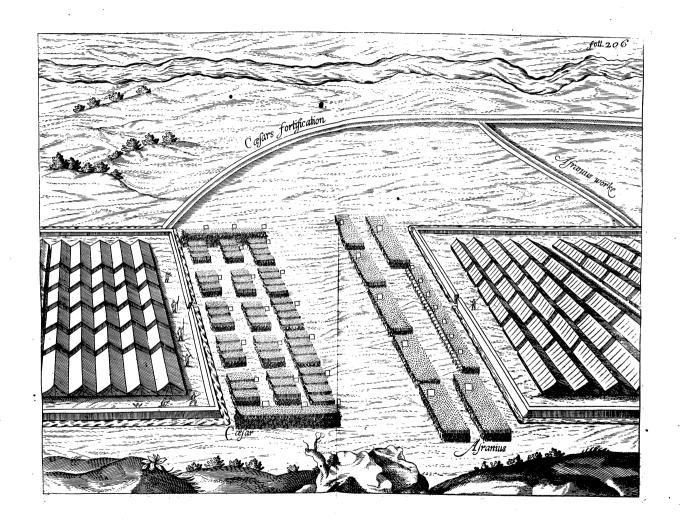

Cafar goeth about to inclose the Enemy, and he to hinder Cafar.

Ombeit Cæsar laboured to inclose them about Casa: with a Ditch and a Rampier, to the end he might with better ease hinder their sudden Sallies and Eruptions, to which he thought the Enemy would necessarily betake themselves.

The Enemy being streightened for want of Forage, and to the end also they might be the readier to escape away, caused all their Horses of Carriage to be killed: and in these Works and Consultations were Rulea: and in these events and conjunations were two days spent. The third day, a great part of Cæsar's Works being already perfested, the Enemy (to hinder the business intended concerning the Fortifications) about two of the Clock in the Afternoon Hora octave, made the Alarm, brought out the Legions, and im-figno date. battelled themselves under their Camp. Casar cal-leth back the Legions from their Work; and commanding all his Horse to troop together, putteth his Army in Battel. For having made such a shew of unwillingness to buckle with the Enemy, against the will of the sottier and opinion of all Men, he found himself subject thereupon to much inconvenience: Howbeit he was resolved (for the reasons already Telatenejus (pecified) not to strike a Battel; and the rather at miles, air, ferthis time, for that the space between his Camp and rumque ruthis time, for tong the processor when he am and aris show the Enemies was so little, that if he had put them he renulu to slight, it could not have much availed him, for conter will be gaining of a perfect and absolute Victory. For their Camps were not above two thousand four false, we had greder; whereof the Armies took up two parts, and the iti real gather where the for incurfion and affault. So that, if provides the had given Battel in that nearnefs of the Camp, Luca, it. they would have found a speedy retreat upon their overshrow, For which cause he resolved to stand upon his defence, and not to give the Onfet, and charge them first.

Afranius had put his Army in a double Battel: The first consisting of five Legions; and the Auxiliary Cohorts, which he usually served in the Wings, were now placed for succours, and made the second

Cæsar's Army was ordered in a tripple Battel: The first was of four Cohorts, a piece of the five Legions: the second, of three; and the third again of three of each Legion, following in order. The Archers and Slingers were in the midst, and the Cavalry on the sides. Being thus both imbattelled, they seemed weaker party, when they would free themselves to obtain their several ends: Casar, not to fight unless he were forced to it; and the Enemy, to binder Cælar's Fortification. But the matter being drawn out yoaked with incumbrances, and hath so many in length, they stood imbattelled until Sun-setting: and

The First OBSERVATION

Ontra opinionem enim militum, famamque om-Contra opinionem enim minimi, magnum detrimentum afferebat, Having made a shew of unwillingues to buckle with the Enemy, against the will of the Soldier, and the opinion of all Men, he found himself subject to much inconvenience, faith the Hiftory. Whence we may observe two points. First, that a Commander in striking a Field, must partly be directed by his Army: For he may neither fight against the liking of the Soldier, nor withhold them from fighting when they are willing to embrace it, if other circumftances do indifferently concurr therewithal. For when Men are commanded to do what they would do, the matter is throughly undertaken, and the iffue is commonly answerable to the readiness of their defires: But being reftrained in their affections, and put besides their aptness of their voluntary disposition, there groweth such a contrariety between the Generals Order and the Soldiers Obedience, as will hardly fympathize to beget good

And if a Leader of that fame and opinion, and fo well known to his Army, as Cafar was, grew into diffafte with his Soldiers, upon fo good causes which he had to shun a Battel; what hazard that Commander runneth into, who feldom or never gave argument of his resolution in this kind, may be conceived by this paffage. The second thing which I note, is, that a General must learn especially to difguise his intents, by making shew of that which he meaneth not. For albeit the more Catais men. Pretences as with Deeds: Yet forafmuch as the * condition of Princes, contrary to the manner of ma for con-private Persons, requireth such a direction of bu-hauppend; sines, as may rather suit with Fame and Opinion, season defined, as may rather turt with Fame and Opinion, was foreigt, than with particular ends; it behoveth them to was foreigt, than with particular ends; it behoveth them to was protein used fuch gloffes, as may take away all perulant form duit, and finither interpretations, howfoever their course for the property of the perulant form duit, and finither interpretations, howfoever their course for the green may aim at other purpose. And certainly, it is mine. It is mine. the generality of reoper are occur pain with facing as Majet, of dictional hard observed. But concerning Cafar, Makes pain, that which Ephicrates faid of himself, having imment of quello battelled his Army to fight, That he feared nothing the vote si more, than that his Enemy knew not his Valour; when your may more properly be faid here. For there was a fittle more than a Furlong: But that altered more or lefs, as place and occasion required.

Line, before they came to composition, but that they The Liv. knew not Cefar. For as the * Eagle is able to mount aloft in all feasons and temperatures of Appella proce the Air; fo was his Sword freeled to make way through all refiftance.

The Second OBSERVATION.

begun; and the Enemy, to try whether they might find a Foord in the River Sicoris, and so get over. Which being perceived, Castar all Editions runneth thus; Acies erat affamiana activities of the River Sicoris, support of the River Sicoris, and support Rejor V. Bill. in subsidia locum alaria of the Cavalry, and disposed them in Gaard along cobortis obtinebat: Castar triplex, sed primam aciem quaterne cohortes ex V. legione tenebane. Has subsidiarie erona, & rusqual tale totidem, flow without Meat sour days together, being their Hosses adjusted to the civil gue legions, subsequently and the subsequently subsequently and the subsequently subsequently and the subsequently subsequently and the subsequently subseque to the other parts of this History. For first, how Whereupon Afranius his Son was given in Hostage shall we understand those words, Acies Afraniana to Czesar; and so they presented themselves in a duplex, legio V. & III. in subsidin; Afranius his place of Casar's appointing. Army was in a double Battel; the fifth Legion, and the third for fuccours? Shall we take the meaning to be, that the first Legion stood in front, and the other flood for fuccours behind? Or shall we take it with Faernus; Acies Afraniana duplex: ex legione prima, & tertia, in subsidiis locum alaria cohortes obtinebant; Afranius, Ec. out of the first Legion and the third, the Cohorts which use to be in the Wings were put in place of the fuccours? But neither by the one or by the other, is there found more than two Legions: whereas there is express mention of five, befides the Cohorts of the Country. And therefore, as not knowing other more probable, I have translathe Text thus: Acies erat Afraniana duplex, le-gionum quinque: & in substitute locum alarie co-mina Rohortes obtinebant : Afranius had put his Army in a double Battel: The first confisting of five Legions; and the Auxiliary Cohorts, which usually ferved in the Wings, were now placed for fuccours, and made the fecond Battel, The first Battel confifted of five Legions; and the second, of the Spanish and Auxiliary Forces.

The like help must be lent to Casar: for otherwife, the Text doth afford him but few Cohorts. ftanding thus, Primam aciem quaterne cohortes, ex quinta legione, tenebant. Has ternæ, & rursus aliæ, &c. The sirst Battel was of sour Cohorts out of the fifth Legion: then followed three: and then as many others, &c. For undoubtedly Cafar had five Legion equal to Afranius; but being far inferiour unto him in Auxiliary Troops, was driven to a more artificial division, to help his weakness in that point. And therefore, as the same Critick hath mended it, we are to read, Quaternæ cohortes ex quinque legionibus, four Co-horts out of the five Legions: Which bringeth forth this sence; In the first Battel were five times four Cohorts, in the fecond, five times three Cohorts, and as many in the third Battel. And by the addition of fue cujulque legions, of every one of the Legions, it appeareth, that every Legion was fo divided into three parts, that it had four Cobours in the first Battel, three in the fecond, and three in the laft.

Concerning the space which their Armies imbattelled, took up, it appeareth, that the whole di-ftance between their Camps contained two thoufand foot; whereof either Army took up one third, being 666 foot, or an hundred and eleven paces,

CHAP. XXVII.

The Treaty of Peace.

He next day, Cæsar went about to finish Cæsar. and end the Fortification which he had begun; and the Enemy, to try whether they

Lib. I.

And in the hearing of both the Armies, Afranius about to take their Army from them, and retain fasks to this effect; That he was not to be effended, them in pay for himself, which he might easily do; neither with him nor with the Soldier; for being but that they should not have means thank bead faithful and obedient to the General Cn. Pompeius; but now, having made sufficient proof of their Duty, they had also throughly suffered for the same, having endured the extremity of want in all necessary Provisions: Infomuch as now they were shut up as Women, kept from Water, kept from going out, op-prest with a greater weight of Grief in Body, and of disconour in their Reputation than they were able to bear; and therefore did contess themselves to be vanquished and overcome: Praying and beseeching, that if there were any Mercy left, they might not undergo the extremity of Fortune. And this he de-mini of oran-

To which Cæsar answered; That these terms of complaint and compassion could be used to no Man Dignum de more unproperly than himself: For whereas every neada, cesar, Man else did his duty; he only, upon sit conditions of Time and Place, refused to Fight with them, to the end all circumstances might concurr to a Peace : Albeit his Army had Suffered much Wrong, in the Death and Slaughter of their Fellows, yet he had kept and preserved such of their Party as were in his Power, and came of their own accord to move a Peace; wherein they thought they went about to procure the Safety of all their Fellows. So that the whole course of his proceeding with them consisted of Clemency. Howbeit their Commanders abborred the name of Peace, and had not kept the Laws either of Treaty or Truce: For they had caused many simple Men to be Maffacred and Slain, that were deceived by a shew of Treaty. And therefore it had befallen them, as it happeneth for the most part to perverse and arrogant Persons, to seek and earnestly to desire that which a little before they had foolishly con-

> Neither would be take the advantage of this their submission, or of any other opportunity of time, either Jaumijion, or of any other opportunity of time, extreer to augment his Power, or to strengthen his Party: But the only required, that these Armies might be discharged, which for many Tears together had been maintained against him. I ex matiper were those fix Legions for any other cause fur into Spain, nor the feventh Enrolled there, nor so many and so great Navies prepared, nor such experienced and skilful Commanders selected and appointed, (for none of these needed to keep Spain in quiet;) nothing hereof was prepared for the use and behoof of the Province, which (by reason of their long continuance of Peace) needed not any such assistance. All these things were long ago provided in a readiness against bim: New forms of Government were made and ordained against him; That one and the same Man Should be resident at the Gates of Rome, have the whole superintendency and direction of the City bufiness; and yet notwithstanding, hold two Warlike Provinces for fo many Years together, being absent from both of them.

Against bim, and for bis Ruine, were changed fending Men at the end of their Pratorship or Confulfhip, to the Government of Provinces, as was always accustomed; but in lieu of them, were chosen some that were allowed and authorised by a few. Against him the Prerogative of Age did nothing pre-vail: But whosoever they were that in former Wars had made good proof of their Valour, were now instantly; for it could not be provided by any assucalled out to Command Armies. To him only was rance, that it would continue firm, if it were dedenied that which was granted to all other Generals; ferred until another time. After sime dispute on that when they had happily brought things to an end, they might dismiss their Army, and return home with Honour, or at the least, without Diskonour.

against him. And therefore, as it was said before, they should go out of the Provinces, and discharge their Army; if they did fo, he would hurt no Man: But that was the only and last means of Peace.

OBSERVATION.

Here is not any one Vertue that can challenge Prerogative either amongst Friends or Enemies. than Fidelity. For which cause it is, that Men are more firict in matters committed to their Trust for the behoof of others, than they can Multa, on well be, if the same things concerned themselves. nunqua And yet nevertheless there is a Quaterue in all ceremus, se endeavours, and feemeth to be limited with fuch comus carge apparency, as true affection may make of a good CicetoLalin meaning: And was the ground which Afranius took to move Cafar for a Pardon; Non effe aut ipsis aut militibus succensendum, quod sidem erga Imperatorem Cn. Pempeium conservare voluerint: Sed satis jam fecisse officio, satisque supplicii tuliffe, &c. That he was not to be angry, either with him or the Soldiery, for being faithful to their General Cn. Pempeius; but that now they had fufficiently done their duty, and as throughly fmarted for the same, &c. which he delivered in a Stile suiting his Fortune. For, as Cominaus Qui vines hath observed, Men in fear give reverent and hatmi humble words; and the Tongue is ever conditi-guam. Plus oned to be the chiefest witness of our Fortune.

On the other fide, Cafar produced nothing for his part, but fuch Wrongs as might feem valuable to make good those Courses which he prosecuted. As first, Injuries done by them, and that in the highest degree of Blame against his Soldiers, that went but to feek for Peace. Injuries done by their General, in fuch a fashion, as spared not to evert the fundamental Rights of the State, to bring him to Ruine and Confusion. Whereby he was moved to endeavour that which Nature tieth every Man unito, Propellere injuriam, to repel an Injury from himself: And having brought it to Beliam its Influe normalistic and marring crought it to Below it these terms wherein it now flood, he would give selfutions, assured to the World, by the Revenge he there as mill did took, that he entred into that War for this only selfut cond, that he might live in Peace: And so required Co. But. 6 no more but that the Army should be dismissed. offic.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The execution of the Articles agreed upon.

He Conditions propounded were most ac-Calar. ceptable and pleasing to the Soldiers, as might appear by them: For being in the condition of vanquished Persons, and the ancient Rights and Cultoms of Magiltacy, in thereupon expediing a hard measure of Fortune, to fending Men at the end of their Pratorship or Combe rewarded with liberty and exemption of Arms, was more than they could expect: Infomuch as where there grew a Controversie of the time and place of their dismission, they all generally standing upon the Rampier, fignified both by their Speeches and by their hands, that their defire was, it might be done each side, the matter was in the end brought to this Issue; that such as had Houses and Possessions in Spain, should be discharged presently, and the rest thosperinus All which things he nowisisfianding both had, at the River Varus. It was conditioned, that no wish or the and would suffer patiently; neither did he now go Man should be injured, that no Man skeuld be fired conviced to the contract of the at the River Varus. It was conditioned, that no vides pe to against his Will to be sworn under Casar's Com-

Cæfar promised to furnish them with Corn, until they came to the River Varus: Adding withal, that whatfoever any one had loft in the Time of the War, which should be found with any of his Soldiers, should be restored to such as lost it; and to bis Soldiers be paid the value thereof in Money. If any Controversie afterward grew amongst the Soldiers, of their own accord they brought the matter from time to time before Cæsar. As when the Soldiers grew almost into a Mutiny for want of Pay, the Commanders affirming the Pay-day was not yet come, Petreius and Afranius required that Cafar might understand the cause: And both Parties were contented with his Arbitrament.

A third part of the Army being dismissed in these two days, he commanded two of his Legions to march before their Army, and the rest to follow after, and continually to Encamp themselves not far from them; and appointed Q. Fusius Calenus. a Legate, to take the charge of that business. This course being taken, they marched out of Spain to the River Varus, and there dismissed the rest of their

OBSERVATION

The River Varus divideth Gallia Narhomensis from Italy; and was thought an indifferent place to discharge the Army, whereby there might be an end made of that War. Wherein if any Man defire to see a parallel drawn between Cafar and the other Leaders for matter of War, it shall Resum a fuffice to take the iffue for a square of their dire-events, fath chions; being drawn to his Head within forty Lib. 2. Civil. days after Cafar came within fight of the Enemy, as Curio noteth in his Speech to the Soldiers.

Cato feeing the prosperous fuccels of Cafar 2gainst Pompey, said there was a great uncertainty n the Government of their Gods; alluding peradventure to that of Plato in his Politicks, where he faith, that there are Ages, wherein the Gods do govern the World in their own Persons; and there are other times, wherein they altogether neglect the same: the World taking a course quite contrary to that which the Gods directed. But Lucan spake from a furer ground, where he faith, Victrix causa Diis placuit, sed victa Catoni. The Conquering cause pleas'd Jove, the Conquered Cato.

And thus endeth the first Commentary.

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

a General, and an Army, is to fuffer themselves to be surprised by fear; by reason that fear is always attended with fatal consequences: Therefore the Leaders of People, and Commanders of Armies ought to foresee it, and to provide most carefully against in. We have three notable Examples upon that Subject in this Book. The first, when Cafar cross'd the Rubicon, for he was declar'd an Enemy to the Publick before that. Pompey promises that by flamping with his foot upon the Ground he will raife Armies to Combat him: That at his approach his very Soldiers will deliver him up to him: He does not judge him worthy of the leaft confideration: Those that dare name him are banished from Rome; and finally, he is treated like a Criminal of low efteem. Nevertheles, upon his first Motion, in order to declare a War, and notwithstanding he behav'd himself at Pizaro as he had done at Rimini, not having the are encouraged or daunted by his Looks. fourth part of his Army with him; every body is furprized, Pompey and the Confuls fly, the care of raffing Men is laid afide, and they abandon Rome: The caule of this great alteration proceeds from that Pompey had never imagin'd that of the Cavalry, before they laid all their Colours Cafar should have dar'd to undertake so great a defign, relying upon the presumption which his Vertue and his good Fortune had given him; which made him apply himself more to maintain his Party in the City, than to provide for his defence: So that when he found that things went otherwise than he had publish'd them, he was aftonish'd. Therefore it was no great wonder that ignorant People who fix all their affurance or fear on the good or ill countenance of the Person in whose hands they have plac'd their

He worst thing that can befal a Nation, Fortunes, should do the like. Whereupon I say, that in affairs of fuch confequence, it is necessary, in imitation of Cafar to confider maturely before hand, all the worst events that can happen, in order never to be furpriz'd. But being once engag'd, we must arm against them all, and have constancy enough to persist to the end.

The second example is, when Domitius Ænobarbus finding himself out of hopes of being fuccour'd by Pompey, refolv'd to fly from Corfinium, where he was Befieg'd; but by the alteration of his Countenance; by the faintness of his Words, not fuiting his prefent Condition, and by the omiffion of those Cares that were necessary for the common defence, discover'd to his Soldiers what he defign'd to conceal from them; fo that preventing his Flight they deliver'd him up to Cafar. This is a fine Lesson to inform a General, that he ought to appear most chearful in the greatest Perils; by reason that his Soldiers

The third is, When Cafar discover'd the Terof the Cavalry, before they laid all their Colours down in a heap: that they neither kept their Ranks nor Diffances, and that they did not remove from a Camp, in which they could not fubfift for want of Water. And the Armies do not draw fo near one another in these days by reason of their Cannon: Nevertheless, experienced Captains improve these considerations very usefully. I have seen Henry the Great pur-fuing Eight Hundred Horse with less than two, judging that they would not Fight because they confounded themselves, and did not observe their Diftances, which happened exactly according to mention a dispute between Afranius and Petreius. his Prediction.

Altho' retiring by Sea, out of a Befieg'd City, does not feem very difficult, yet the Precautions Pompey us'd in retiring from Brundusium, sav'd him. For confidering that he had to deal with People he abandon'd, and with a vigilant Enemy, he had been ruin'd unless he had Wall'd the Gates, and ftopt all the Avenues of Brundusium, excepting only two conceal'd ones, which led his Men to the Port; by reason that as the last were retiring from off the Walls, the Inhabitants receiv'd Casa's into their room. Therefore in all forts of Retreats, it behoves a Captain to use his utmost Cares, to do it with fafety, and to avoid Confusion: And when he does it by choice, he fue an Army in the Night, because it is very ought to do it fo foon and fo fpeedily, that he difficult to avoid falling into force Ambush or may not be oblig'd to Fight. In this place I will other.

the one being defirous to retire by Night, the other by Day. Those who were for removing in the Night, alledg'd that they should reach the Mountains, and the places of fafety, before it could be perceived by their Enemies. The other were of Opinion that having to do with Cafar, who was firong in Horfe, they could never feal away from him without Fighting; and in that case it was better to do it in the Day-time, than in the Night, which always occasion'd disorders in Retreats. For my part I hold the first Opi-nion to be the best; For besides that it is very dangerous to retire before an Enemy in the Daytime : A prudent Captain feldom engages to pur-

The Second COMMENTARY of the CIVIL WARS.

The Argument.

His Commentary hath three special Parts. The first containeth the Siege of Marseilles: The strange Works, and extream endeavours to take and to keep the Town. The second expresseth the vain Labour which Varro, Pompey's Lieutenant, undertook after that Afranius and Petreius were defeated, to keep the Province of Andaluzia out of Casar's Power and Command. And the third part confifteth of the expedition Curio made into Africa; and endeth with his Overthrow.

CHAP. I.

The preparations for the Siege, as well within as Turrets which were kept by our Soldiers with great without the Town.

THilst these things were doing in Spain, C. Trebonius the Legate, being left to Besiege Marseilles, had begun in two places to raise Mounts, to make Mantelets and Towers against the Town: One next unto the Port where the Ships lay; and the other in the way leading from Gallia and Spain into the Town, just upon the creek of the Sea, near mno the Mouth of the Rholne. For three parts of Marfeilles are in a manner washed with the Sea: And the fourth is that which giveth passage by Land; whereof that part which belongeth to the Castle by reason of the nature of the place, and fortified with reason of the number of the place, and forested acts
a deep Dirch) would require a long and difficult Siege. For the perfecting of those Works, Trebonius had commanded out of all the Province, great store of Horses for Carriage, and a multitude of Men; requiring them to bring Rods to make Hurdles, and other materials for the Work: Which being prepared and brought together, he raised a Mount of fourscore Foot high.

But fuch was the Provision which of ancient time they had stored up in the Town, of all Equipage and Necessaries for the War, with such Provision of Munition and Engines, that no Hurdles made of Rods or Osiers were able to bear out the force thereof. For out of their great Balifte, they feet Beams of twelve Foot long, pointed with Iron, with fuch force as they would pierce through four courses of Hurdles, and stick in the Earth. Whereby they were forced to roof their Gallery with Timber of a foot square, and to bring matter that way by hand to make the * Mount. A Testudo of sixty Foot in length was always carried before, for the levelling of the Ground made of mighty strong Timber, covered and armed with all things which might defend it from Fire and Stones, or what eife should be cast upon it. But the greatness of the Work, the height of the Wall, and Towers, together with the multitude of Engines, did retard and hinder the proceeding thereof.

Moreover, the Albici did make often Sallies out of the Town, fetting Fire to the Mounts and to the facility and ease, forcing such as sallied out to return with great lofs.

OBSERVATION.

HAving described in the former Commentaries these Engines and Works here mentioned, the Reader may please (for his better satisfaction) to review those places; as also farther to note, that the word Artillery was brought down to Artillery deconfifted of those two primitives, Arcus and Telum. Telum. And according as diversity of Art and Wit found means to fit these to use and occasions, so had they feveral and diftinct Names; whereof I find chiefly these, Balista, Catapulta, Tolenones, Scor-piones, Onagri. Of each of which there are divers and several forts; as first, of the Balista, fome were called Centenaria, others Talentaria, according to the weight of the Bullet or Weapon they shot. Of the rate and proportion whereof Vitruvius, and his Learned Interpreter Daniel Barbarus, have made accurate description. Again, Lik 10. c. 17. fome were made to floot Stones; as appeareth by that of Tacitus, Magnitudine eximia, guarta-decime Lib. 2. Hift! legionis Balifta ingentibus faxis hoftilem aciem pro-Balifta Peruebat; the Balista of the fourteenth Legion being traria. an exceeding great one, beat down the Army of the Enemy with huge Stones: And others, to shoot Darts and Piles of Timber, headed with Iron; as is manifested by this place. Moreover, the manner of bending of these Engines made a difference: Some being drawn up with a Wrench or Scrue, and some with a Wheel; some having long Arms, and others having fhort: But the Strings were generally either all of Sinews, or of Womens Hair, as ftrongeft and fureft of any other kind. Of these Vegetius preserveth the Balistic, Lit. 4, 6.29. and the Onagri, as unresistable when they were skilfully handled. The word Onagri, as Ammianus Marcellinus noteth, was of a later Stamp, and imposed upon those Engines which former time called Scorpiones; and was taken from the nature of wild Affes, that are said to cast Stones back- to be made at Arelate, and had mended them fince the Asia.

Observations upon CASAR's

by Viginerius, in his Annotations upon Onofander. Which is likewise shewed by that which Mr. Cambden hath inserted in the description of Bedfordshire, concerning the Siege of Bedford-Caftle, in the time of Henry the Third, out of an Author that was present; Ex parte orientali fuit una Petraria veterem contriverunt; & unum Mangonellum ex parec Australi. &c. On the East side was placed one Engine to cast Stones, and two Mangonels, which continually plaid upon the Tower; and on the West side two Mangonels, which beat down the old Tower; and one Mangonel on the these out of use, it were to no purpose to insist longer upon them.

CHAP. II.

The Marseillians prepare themselves for a Sea-fight.

N the mean time L. Nasidius being fent by Cn. Pompeius with a Navy of sixteen Ships (amongst which, some few had their Beakhead of Iron) to the succour and supply of L.

Domitius and the Marseillians, he passed the streights of Sicily, before Curio had intelligence thereof: And putting into Messana, by reason of the suddain Ter-ror of the principal Men, and the Senate that took themselves to slight, he surprised one Ship in the Road, and carried her away, and so held on his course to Marseilles. And having sent a small Bark before, he certified Domitius and the rest of his coming; exhorting them by all means, that joyning their Forces with his Supplies, they would once again give Fight to Brutus's Navy.

The Marseillians, fince their former Overthrow, bad taken the like number of Ships out of their Arfenal, and new rigged and trimmed them, and with great Industry surnished and manned them for that Service : For they wanted neither Oar-Men, Mariners, Sailors, nor Pilots, fit for that purpose. To these they added certain Fisher-Boats, and senced them with Coverings, that the Oar-Men might be Safe from casting Weapons : And these he filled with Archers and Engines. The Navy being thus furnished and prepared, the Marseillians (incited and stirred up with the Prayers and Tears of old Men, Women, and Maids, to give help and defence to their City in time of extream danger; and to Fight with no less Courage and Confidence than formerly they had accustomed) went all aboard with great Courage: As it cometh to pass through the common fault of Nature, whereby we put more confidence in things unseen and unknown, or otherwise are more troubled thereat: According as it then happened. For the coming of Nasidius had filled the City full of affured Hope and Courage: And thereupon, having a good Wind, they left the Port, and came and found Natidius at Taurenta (a Castle belonging to the Marseillians) and there sitted themselves for a Fight; encouraging each order again to a Valiant carriage of that Service, and confulting how it might be beft performed.

The right Squadron was given to the Marfeillians, and the left to Nasidius. And to the place repaired Brurus, having encreased the number of his Ships: For shofe fix which he sook from she Marfeillians, ward with their feet at the Hunters, with such last Fight, and sitted them with all necessaries for ward with their recty at the raumers, with fuch tags ergor, and justed them with an necessaries jor violence, that oftentimes they dashed out their Men of War. And thereupon exhorting his Soldiers to contemn the Enemy as a Vanquifted Party, In the time of Barbarism, all these Engines baving already Foiled and Overthrown them when were generally called Mangonella: As appeareth they were in their Strength, they fet forward against them with great Assumace and Courage.

Out of the Camp of C. Trebonius, and from all those hope places they might easily perceive and see in the City, how all the Youth which remained in the time of stemy the Linita, out on an Autuser una.

Avon, and an energies, which experies and other, did from the publick Places of Guard, and G duo Mangonella, que quoridie turrim infestabaus; from the Town Walls, freste out their hands to G ex parse occidentis duo Mangonella, que turrim wards Oleaven, or otherwise run to their Churches and Temples, and there profitating themselves be-fore their Images, did defire Victory of their Gods. Neither was there any of them all that did not think the event of all their Fortunes to confift in that days Service : For the chiefest of all their able Men, and South fiele, &. But our Powder laving blown all out, and entreated to go abourd, to the end, that if the best of all forts and degrees were by name called any disaster or mischance should happen, they might fee nothing further to be endeavoured for their fafety; and if they overcame, they might rest in hope. to fave their City, either by their own Valour, or by Foreign help.

OBSERVATION.

Ommuni fit vitio natura, ut invifis, latitantibus, atque incognitis rebus, magis confidamus, vehementiusque exterreamur, ut tum accidit; It cometh to pass through the common fault of Nature, &c. In cases of hazard, things brought unto us by report do more abuse our Judgment, either in conceiving too great hopes, or yielding too much to diffruft, than any matter prefent can move or enforce: For these perturbations attending upon our Will, are enlarged more according to the quality of our defires, than as they are to the quality of our deures, man as cary and directed by courfe of Reason; and so draw Men good meeting the cash you believe what their wishes do re- me volunt, it wishes the courselve last.

quire, or otherwise to reject an as unterly not.

The uncertainty whereof, and the disppointment enturing those deceivable apprehensions, hath brought the hope of this Life into very slight account, being reckoned but as the Dream of him that is awake; and as Pia fraus, or a charitable Delufion to import us through the hard chances of this World, and to keep Man's Heart from breaking: For every Man's help is hope; which never afforderh prefent Relief, but affwageth the bitterness of Extremities, by

- Dabit Deus his quoque finem,

Virgil, lib. 2.

God once will put an end to these things too.

CHAP. III.

The Fight, and the Marseillians Overthrow.

He Fight being begun, the Marseillians Casar. were wanting in no point of Valour: But bearing in mind such Exhortations as a little before had been given them by their Friends, they fought so resolutely, as though they meant not to Fight again; or as if any one should chance to miscarry in that Battel, he should make account that he did but anticipate, for a small moment of time, the fatal end of his Fellow-Citizens, who (upon taking of the Town) were to undergo the same Fortune of War. Our Ships putting on by be had added unto the other which Caelar had caused little and little, were glad to give may to the nimbleness

Cafar.

ed that our Men had found means to grapple with any of their Ships, they presently came on all sides to their rescue. Neither did the Albici shew themselves backward when the matter came to hands, or were they inferiour to our Men in Courage or Valcur. Moreover, out of the leffer Ships were cast infinite numbers of Darts, and other Weapons, wherewith our Men busied in fight were suddenly wounded.

In this conflict, two of their Triremes having spired Brutus's Ship (which by her Flag might casily the discerned) came violently against him from two contrary parts: But the danger being foreseen, Brutus did so prevail through the swiftness of his Ship, that he a little out-ftript them; whereby they coming with their full swinge, did so encounter one another, that they were both very much shaken with the blow : for the Beak-head of one being broken off, the Watest was ready to come in on all sides. Which being ob-Served by some of Brutus's party that were near about, they set upon them (being thus diffressed) and quickly sunk them both.

The Ships that came with Nasidius were found of no use, and therefore quickly left the Fight; for there was not offered there unto them either the fight of their Country, or the Exhortations and Prayers of their Kinsfolks and Allies, as motives to hazard their lives in that Quarrel: fo that of them there was none wanting. Of the Ships that came out from Marseilles, five were sunk, and four taken. One escaped with Nasidius's Fleet, which made towards the hither Spain. One of them that remained was fent before to Marseilles; who coming us a Messenger before the rest, and approaching near unto the Town, all the multitude ran out to hear the News: Which being once known, there was such a general mourning found by infight and industry of Men, that the Tower and desolation, as though the Town were instantly to and defolation, at though the Town were inflantly to might be of great ufe, if it were raifed to any be taken by the Enemy. Notwithflanding, they left height; which was accordingly performed in this not off to make ready fuch necessaries were required. fite for defence of the same.

OBSERVATION.

This was the second Fight the Marseillians made, to keep the Sea open for the aid and relief of the Town; being otherwise streightly besieged by Land, and yet that was not so tenderly cared for as their shutting up by Sea; the free passage whereof brought in all their profit in time of Peace, and their fuccours in times of War: for which regard it was, that they commended to their Gods the fuccels of that enterprise, with as much devotion, as Tears, Vows and Prayers could express.

The benefit a Town befieged receiveth from an open in-let by Sea, cannot be better manifested. than by the fiege of Oftend; for by that occasion especially, it indured the most famous siege that was in Christendom these many years. This L. Nasidius was rather a constant Friend to the cause, than a fortunate Admiral: For afterwards, he refused not to take the like overthrow for Pompey the Son, at Leucades, as he did now for the Father. And furely it falleth out (whether it be through the uncertainty of Sea-faring matters, or that Men have fairer pretences at Sea, to avoid occasions of hazard, than are found at Land, or that Pauca digna nascuntur in Mari, few things of value come from Sea, according to the Proverb, or for what other cause, I know not) that there are few of those which fought Honour in this kind, who have attained the least part of their defires. King of Al- And yet nevertheless, some there are of famous gen in the memory: As * Barbarussa, a terrour of the Le-and Mobility of their Shipping, which by the skill of for his great Exploits upon the Turk: together pilots were well managed. And if it happen with divers of our own Nation; as namely, Sir Francis Drake, who for skill and fortune at Sea. is held matchable with any other whatfoever; besides, Mr. Candish, for Voyages to the South, and Sir Martin Frobisher, for discoveries to the North.

Howbeit, these later times have advantage without comparison of former ages, through the invention of the Sea-compass with the Needle; which was found out little more than three hundred years ago, by one Flavus, born in the Kingdom of Naples; without which, no Ship can shape a course in the Ocean, and to which nothing can be added, more than to find a perfect and ready direction for longitudes.

CHAP. IV.

The Works which the Legionary Soldiers made against the Town.

Twas observed by the Legionary Soldiers, that Cafes. had the charge of the right part of the Work, that it would much advantage them against the often Eruptions and Sallies of the Enemy, if they built a Tower of Brick under the Town Wall. instead of a Hold or Receptacle : which at first they made low and little, only for the repelling of sudden assaults. Thither they usually retreated: and from thence, if they were over-charged, they made defence, either by beating back, or prosecuting an Enemy. This Tower was thirty foot square, and the Walls thereof five foot thick: But afterwards (as Use and Experience is the master of all things) it was

When it was raised to the height of a Story, they fo framed the Floor, that the ends of the Joysts did not jett out beyond the sides of the Tower; lest any thing might be thrust out, on which the fire which the Enemy should cast might take hold: and then paved that Floor, with as much Brick as the Mantelets and Gabions would suffer to be laid. Upon this Tarrace thus made, they laid crofs Beams along the sides, as a foundation to an upper Story, for the top and covering of the Tower. And upon these Beams they raised cross Timbers, thwarting each other for the sides of the Tower, and coupled them at the top with fide Reams.

These cross Timbers were longer, and bore further out than the Square of the Tower; that there might be means to fasten Coverings and Defences, against the blows and darts of the Enemy, whilst the Works men were finishing the Walls and Sides of that Building. The top or upper Story of this Tower they likewise paved with Brick and Clay, that no fire might fasten on it; and laid Mattresses on the top thereof, to the end the Floor might not be broken with any Weapons shot out of Engines, nor the Pavent shivered in pieces with Stones cast out of Catapults.

Moreover they made three Nettings or Mats of Hawsers, equal in length to the sides of the Tower, and four foot in breadth. And upon those three sides which confronted the Enemy, they sastened them upon Poles to hang before the Tower: which kind of defence they had in other places tried to be of proof, and not so be pierced with any Weapon or Engine. And as one part of the Tower came to be covered, finisked, and fortified against any violence of the Enemy, they carried their Mantelets vant Seas; Andreas Auria, of Genua, renowned and defences to the rest unfinished. The top which Tower they framed upon the first Story, and Wherein first it may be noted, how in these and then raised it up with Wrinches or Scruez, as far as the like attempting endeavours, one thing draws on another, according as practice maketh overture And so covered with these shelters and Safeguards, they built up the sides with Brick; and then again scruing up the top higher, they fitted the place to height of a Story, they laid the Joysts of the Floor in Such fort, as the ends thereof were hid and covered with the Wall or sides that were of Brick; and · fo from that Story they proceeded to another, by feruing up the top, and raising their Netting. By which means they built very safely six Stories, without any wound or other danger at all; and left Windows and Loop-holes in the fides, for the putting out of Engines in fuch places as they thought convenient. When by means of that Tower, they were in hope to defend the Works near about it, they then made a Musculum or Mouse of sixty foot in length, and of two foot Timber Square, to convey them Safely from this Tower of Brick to another of the Enemies, and to the Town Wall: whereof this was the form. They cut two side Groundsils of equal length, and made the space between them to contain four foot; upon them they erected little Columns of five foot high, and joyned them together, putting Braces of an easie sleping in such distances, as the Rasters were to be placed to bear up the Roof: and fastening them both at the Ridge, and at the Eavings, with Plates and Bolts of Iron. They Lathed the Roof with Lath of four fingers broad: And so the Building being made with a Gable-ridge handsomly fashioned, the top was laid all over with Clay, to keep the Mouse from burning; and then covered with Tiles, which were fenced with Leather, to the end they might not be washed away with Pipes or Gutters of Water, which might be laid to fall upon them. And left those Hides should be spoiled, either with Fire or great Stones, they laid Mattreffes upon

This Work being wholly finisked near unto the Tower, through the help and means of defensive Mantelets and Gabions; suddenly before the Enemy was aware, with a Ship-Engine and Rollers put under it, they brought it so near a Tower of the Enemies, that it joyned to the Wall thereof. The Townsmen being upon a sudden appalled thereat, brought the greatest Stones they could get, and with Levers tumbled them down from the Wall upon the Mouse: but the strength of the Work did not scripk at the blows, and whatfoever fell upon it, flided down the floping of the Roof. Which when they perceived, they altered their purpose, and got Pots of Rosin and Pitch, and setting them on fire, threw them down upon the Mouse; which tumbling down from the Roof, were removed away with long Hooks and Poles. In the mean time, the Soldiers that were within the Moufe, pulled out the lower Stones that were in the foundation of the Tower. This Mouse or Mantelet was defended by our Men out of the Brick Tower, with Weapons and Engines: and by means thereof the Enemy was put from the Wall and the Turrets, so that they could not well defend the same. Many of the Stones being sapped out of the foundation of the Tower, part thereof suddenly fell, and the rest leaned as though it would not stand long after.

OBSERVATION.

Porasmuch as it requireth the labour of an industrious Pen to shadow out the effects of Induftry; I will only produce the evidence of these to Maisteries: For our understanding growing by degrees, hath no intuitive faculty to difcern perfection, but by little and little worketh out exactbuild the fides higher: And as they came to the ness; making every Morrow Yesterdays Scholar, priory peller as Reason findeth means of discourse from causes or die Aulus Gelto effects, or from effects to causes.

And fo this Tower, made at first but for a retreat of defence, gave occasion to let them see the like or better use thereof in the offensive part, if it were raifed to a height convenient for the fame : which they performed with as much Art as the wit of Man could use in such a Work. For having made the first Story, they then made the Roof, for the shelter and fafety of the Soldier: And scruing it up by little and little, they built the fides, having fenced the open space with Netting, for avoiding of danger; arming it with Brick and Clay against Fire, and with Mattreffes against Stones and Weights. And then again they proceeded to the making of that Mantelet or Musculum, which gave them paffage to the Wall; building it with ftrong, or rather strange Timber, of two foot fquare, framed fo artificially with Braces, and ridging Rafters, and those so fitted, as neither Fire, Water, Weapon, nor Weight, could prevail upon those Braces they laid Rafters of two foot square, against it. And thus they laboured to gain their own ends, and bought Fortune with immeasureable endeavour.

CHAP. V.

The Marseillians get a Truce of the Romans, and break it deceitfully.

He Enemy being then much appalled at the Casari fudden ruin and fall of the Tower, and greatly perplexed at so unexpected a mis-chief; and withal struck with a fear of the wrath and indignation of the Gods, and of the fack and spoil of their City; they came all unarmed, thronging out of the Gates, wearing Holy Attire upon their Heads, and stretching out their submissive incrmes can Hands to the Legates and the Army. Upon which infulis. novelty, all Hostility ceased for the time, and the Soldiers withdrawing themselves from the assault, were carried with a desire of hearing and understanding what would pass at that time.

When they came to the Legates and to the Army, they cast themselves all down at their feet, praying and befeeching that things might be suspended until Cæsar's arrival. They saw plainly that their Town was already taken, their Works were perfected, their own Tower demolished; and therefore they delisted from making any further defence: There could be no let to hinder them from present spoil and sacking, upon Cæsar's arrival they skould refuse to obey his Mandates. They shewed further, that if their Tower were absolutely overthrown, the Soldiers could not be kept from entering the Town in hope of Pillage, and would thereby bring it to a final defiruction.

These and many the like things were uttered by them very movingly (as Men learned and eloquent) with great lamentation and much weeping, whereby the Legates (moved with commiseration) withdrew the Soldiers from the Fortifications, put off the assault, and left a small Guard to keep the Works. A kind of Truce being through pity and commiferation thus made and concluded, Cælar's coming was expected; no Weapon was cast; either from the Town Wall, or Works, to thew the power it hath in humane from our fide: insomuch as every Man left off his actions, rather than by any maimed or shallow care and diligence, as though all had been ended. For discourse, weaken the force of so great an Engine. Cassar had by Letters given straight charge to TreLib. II.

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

bonius, not to suffer the Town to be taken by affault, lest the Soldiers (moved through their Rebellion and Contempt, together with the long Travail they had sustained) should put all above fourteen years of age to the Sword: which they threatned to do, and were then hardly kept from broaking into the Town; taking the matter very griewusly, that Trebonius seemed to binder them from effecting their purposes. But the Enemy, being People without faith, did only watch for time and opportunity, to put in practice their fraud and deceit.

The First OBSERVATION.

Vestitus ut` tegit corpus, ita detegit

IT is a faying of an ancient Writer, that as our Attire doth cover the Body, fo it doth uncover the nakedness of the mind. Whereupon it is, that Men have found means to fute themselves upon occcasion, according to the disposition of their inward affections, as they are either dilated with joy, or contracted with forrow, lifted up with weal, or humbled with affliction. And accordingly these Marseillians, in token of their humility and fubmiffion, came out, wearing an Attire here cal-11 Anid. led Infula; which Servius describeth to be a kind of Coife, made after the form of a Diadem, with two Pendants on each fide, called Vitta.

Those which the Romans used of this kind, were fashioned like a Pyramid: the point whereof did fignifie the * Elements, ascending upwards in The Fire and fuch a pointed fashion; and by the two Pendants or Bands, were denoted the Water and the Earth. They were made wholly of Wool, as Festus writeth, Infula funt filamenta lanea, quibus Sacerdotes. hostie, & templa velabantur; Infula are certain Ornaments and Tappets made of Wooll, wherewith the Priests use to be clad, the Sacrifices to be covered, and the Temples to be hanged: to shew humbleness and simplicity, whereof Wooll is an Hieroglyphick; for no kind of Beasts have more need of aid and fuccour than Sheep: And thereupon it was, that all Suppliants were attired with Treffes of Wooll. Or otherwife, as some will have it, that the Habit of the Petitioner might call to remembrance the flexible disposition, which is well-befeeming those that have power and means to give help and relief: according to the use of Marrob lib. 1. Heathen ages, wherein the Images of their Idols Saturnal. c.8. had their Feet tied with Cords of Wooll; to shew the mildness and easiness which upon devout supplications was found in divine Powers, whereof Wooll was a Symbolum.

The Second OBSERVATION.

or Greea fate the Marfeillians being an ancient Progeny of the Greeks, notwithstanding the long descent Flaces of Time, and alteration of Air, did keep a touch of the natural disposition of that Nation, as well of meromo. or the natural diplotition of that Nation, as well use diputes, in fuch fitnines Eloquence, as were familiar unmignerious to them above other People, as in *fubtility and duplicity of dealing. Which patfage of the Mannalium fillums is obleved by †Tully, as a matter enforting in the part of the duplicity of the duplicity of the duplicity of the matter of the duplicity of the duplicity of the matter of the duplicity of mim it pre- cing the due praises of Eloquence, and the use it freedunguem hath upon all occasions to draw consent, with the prasentia ma- sweetness of a well-tuned Tongue, above that propriate man tweetness of a west-tuned roughes, above that give regions, which may be attained either by Engines or a few Valent throng hand. Wherein, if we should go about to statement L compare the * force of Arms with the power of a mention. recording to the control of the cont Ut in crvilbus bable Reasons to second that faying, which hath comitions millum antefer of true judgment.

rentser, in mi-litaribus nego-Cedant arma toga, concedat laurea lingua; tiis comites vicarii.

Or at least, to make a resemblance of Plutarch's two Wraftlers, of whom one being always caft, did nevertheless perswade the other that he cast him; and fo, howfoever he became foiled, yet left the place with an opinion of Victory: And is always more eafily effected, when it is attended with cunning and deceit, according to that of Vilerius Maximus, Efficacissima vires perfidie, meneiri & fallere, The main strength of perfidiousness is ly-James, a ne main mengin or permutationes is sy-ing and deceiving. But, as it is observed by Phi-lip de Comines, The * example of one sole acci-ration of the deceiving of the deceiving of the large of the deceiving of the dec this may ferve to teach fucceeding times, not to experiencia, trust to words, whereof there is no hold; but to Part. ratifie fuch compositions with irrevocable performances.

The Third OBSERVATION.

THirdly, we may note, how far the anger of a Roman Army was extended, upon such provocations as are here mentioned, viz. Ad interficiendos pueros, to the flaying of all the Males above fourteen years of age: For, from that stage of life, they accounted all in the rank of Men: according to the inftitution of Tarquinius Prifcus, Macro, lib. 1. who in his triumph of the Sabines, made a special Satur. cap. 6. Oration in the praise of his own Son, that had affaulted and struck the Enemy in those Wars, being then but fourteen years of age; and thereupon gave him liberty to wear Man's Apparel. which was that Toga pretexta (edged or faced with Purple) whereof their Hiftories make to often mention.

But to define precifely hereof, were to miftake the fury of the Soldier. For howfoever the rule is certain from the Law of nature, that no finite cause can be infinite in effect, or that a mortal hate should have a boundless revenge: Yet occafion made it variable, and as irregular as that of Alexander; who fometimes faved all, and at o- Quinta ther times (as at the taking of Tyre) faved none Cur. lib. 5. at all, but such as had taken the protection of the Temple. The inhumane cruelty of the Turks exceedeth all former Hostility in this kind: For they never fave any out of commiferation, but for private use; and do rather chuse to destroy Mankind, than fuffer it to live for any other purpose than their own.

CHAP. VI.

The Marfeillians taking advantage of the Truce, confume with fire all the Roman Works: which are afterwards re-edified.

Fter a few days, when our Men were grown Cacler. remis and careless, suddenly about high Noon, as seme were gone one way some another, and others wearied with continual labour had given themselves to rest, the Weapons being cased and laid up; they rushed out of their Gates, and coming with the Wind that then blew hard, they fet our Works on fire: which was fo carried and differfed with the Wind, that the Mount, the Mantelets, the Teftudo, the Tower and the Engines, were all on fire at once, and were burned down and confumed, before it could be known how it came.

Our Men astonished at so sudden and unthoughtof an accident, caught up such Weapons as were next at hand; and others running speedily from the Camp, fet upon the Enemy, but were hindered from following them as they fled, by Engines and Arrows from the Town Wall, They, on the other fide, being Let Arms to Gowns, the Bay-leaf yield to th' retired under the protection of the Wall, did at their easse burn down the Mouse and the Brick Tower: and to a refusal. As appeareth by this passage of the someony Months labour was, through the perfusionsness.

Marseillians; who being brought into hard terms, of the Enemy, and the force of the Tempes, consumed and brought to nothing in a moment of time. The Marseillians attempted the like the next day after, having opportunity of the like Tempest; and with greater confidence sallied out, and threw much fire upon the other Mount and the Tower. But as our Men the day before (expetting nothing less than to be surprized in that sort) had negletted more than ordinary their usual Guards; so being now made wifer by that which had happened, they had made all things ready for defence: by which means, having Slain a great number, they drave the rest back into the Town, without effecting any thing.

Trebonius began again to re-edific such Works as were ruinated and consumed with fire, and that with Eft ira natura greater elacrity of the Soldier than before. For when comparatum, they faw their great labours and endeavours fort to comparatum, toly has told great labours and endeavours for to to homies no better fuccefs, and the Truce broke by the Treachery molethe, sin of the Enemy, it was a great gall unto them to have ci posses, see their Valour thus derided. And forasmuch as there rant, si vide- was nothing left in all the Country for the raising of ant rerus a Mount, all the Trees being already cut down, and wit non re-brought far and near to make the first Mount, they begin a Mount of a strange and unheard-of fashion, raised with two Side-walls of Brick, being six foot thick apiece, and joyned together with Floors. The Walls were of equal distance, to the width of the former Mount, which was all of folid matter: and where the space between the Walls, or the weakness of the Work did require it, there were Piles driven between, and Beams and Planks laid athwart for the strengthening thereof. The Floors, made between those Walls, were laid with Huedles, and the Hurdles were covered with Clay.

were covered with Clay.

The Soldaes' heing thus sheltered on both sides with a Wall, and defended in front by Mantelets and Gabinns, did safely, without danger, bring whatsoever was necessary for that Building, whereby the Work was carried on with great speed; and the loss of their former continual labour was in a short time recovered again, through the admirable dexterity and valour of the Soldier. To conclude, they left Gates in the Walls, in such places as were fittest for Sallies.

in the evalus, in such places as were sussess for Sautes.
When the Enemy perceived, that what they hoped could not be repaired again in a long time, was with a few days labour re-edified and finished, whereby there was no place left to practife deceit, or to fally ont with advantage, neither was there any means left by which they could prevail, either by force of Arms to hurt our Soldiers, or by fire to confume our Works; and understanding likewise, that by the same manner of fortification, all that part of the Town manner of forestication, air total pair of toe town which had passage and access from the firm Land, might be encompassed with a Wall and with Towers, that their Soldiers should not be able to stand upon their Works; and perceiving withal, that our Army no less affected to Casa: Neither was he ignorant had raised a Counter-mure, against the Wall of their of the duty of a Legate to whose rough and Selving and Se confront our Men (upon equal terms) from their Walls, were, and what was the affection and disposition of all and from their Turrets; they descended to the same the Country towards Calar.

Articles of surrender and submission, as were for.

This was the subject of all merly agreed upon.

The First OBSERVATION.

they expected no further fuccour,) as also by the fiege laid so close by Land, (where they were so violently assaulted, that their Towers of defence made paffage for the Romans to enter upon them;) did nevertheless (upon ceffation of those inforcements) alter their purpole, and entertained new hopes: which maketh good that faying; - Timeo Danaos & dona ferentes,

I fear the Greeks, even when they bring their gifts.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Secondly, we may observe that a will, forward to undergo labour, doth never stick at any relative production or is at all disrayed with the loss of period, and any pains: but is rather redoubled in Courage and when the state of the state o any pains: but is rainer redoubled in Courage and vincere or just Industry; especially being edged on with a define virtue of Revenge. Which (if Homer may have credit) Folyanus. doth always add a third part to a Man's ftrength; liad s. as appeared by Diomedes, being hurt in the Shoulder with one of Pindarus's Arrows: For revenge whereof, he exceeded himself in a sesquiterce proportion of Valour, and flew more Trojans by a third part than otherwise he could

How loever, as there is nothing so hard, but is Nini tem m. subject to the endeavour of the Mind: so there is desam, quad nothing so easie, as to disposles our selves of that ministrate ment care which is requisite in these imployments. It for these Remans, that through the greatness of Appian de their Spirits had made such first and second works, bello as the memory thereof will last with the World, Hispanico. were surprized when they lay in the Interim, as it were unbent, in as great remissness and neglect (howsoever drawn unto it by deceit) as if they had been able to do no fuch matter as is here reported. And therefore it behoveth a Commander, to keep his Armyalways feafoned with labour; forassuch as Exercitus labore proficit, otio consenescit, vegins. An Army thrives by Employment, but grows old by Idleness.

CHAP. VII.

Varro raiseth great Troops to maintain Pompey's Party in Spain; but to no purpose.

Arcus Varro, in the further Province of Cafar. Arcus Vatro, in the further Province of Spain, having from the beginning under-flood how things had paffed in Italy, and diffrufting how matters would fucceed with Pompey, did oftentimes give out over friendly Speeches of Cæfar: That Pompey had by way of prevention gained him to his Party, and honoured him with a Lieutenancy, whereby he was obliged in duty to him; howbeit, in his particular disposition he stood na raised a Counter-mure, against the Wall of their Town, and that Weapons might be cast by hand unto them; that the use of the state o

This was the Subject of all his Speeches, without any shew of inclining either to the one or to the other. But afterwards, when he heard that Cæsar was ingaged at Marfeilles, that Petreius's Forces were joined Hence we may observe, that a General cannot be too secure of an Enemy, that stands upon termis to surrender up a place. For the action bewith Afranius's Army, that great aids were come unterriis to surrender up a place. For the action being but voluntary by constraint, if haply the conpey's cause; as also what had after happened constraining force be removed, then that doth cease cerning the want of Vittuals at Ilerda, (all which which is voluntary; and so it cometh by consequent things were writ with advantage unto him by Afranius;) he then upon that alteration changed his Mind according to the Times, and levied Soldiers in all Parts of the Province: And having raifed two compleat Legions, he added unto them some thirty Cohorts of the Country Soldiers, to Serve for Wings to the Army, and gathered together great quantity of Corn, as well for the supply of the Marseillians, as for the Provision of Petreius and Afranius.

Lib. II.

Moreover, he commanded them of Gades to build and provide ten Gallies; and ordered further, that many other should be made at Hispalis. He took all the Money and the Ornaments out of Hercules's Temple, and brought the same into the Town of Gades, and in lieu thereof sent six Cohorts out of the Province to keep the Temple. He made Caius Gallonius (a Roman Knight and a familiar friend of Domitius, and fent by him thither to recover Some matter of Inheritance) Governour of the Town. All the Arms (as well private as publick) were brought into Gallonius's House. He himself made many bitter invoctives against Caclar; affirming in publick that Caclar had been several times worsted, and that a great number of the Soldiers were revolted from him, and were come to Afranius : which he knew to be true, by certain and approved Messen-

The Roman Citizens residing in that Province being much perplexed and affrighted thereat, were thereupon constrained to promise him 190 thousand Sesterces in ready Money, for the service of the Common-Weal, besides twenty thousand weight of Silver, together with one hundered and twenty thousand Bushels of Wheat, Upon those Cities and States which favoured Cafar's Party, he laid greater impofitions: For such as had let fall Speeches, or declared themselves against the Common-Weal, he consisted ted all their Goods, and put a Garrison upon them; giving judgment himself upon private Persons, and giving judgment himself upon private Persons, and constraining all the Province to swear Allegeance to him and to Pompey.

And being in the end advertised what had happened in the hither Province, he prepared for War, with a purpose to dispose thereof in this manner: His resolution was to keep two Legions with him at Gades, with all the shipping and the Corn: For knowing that the whole Province did intirely affect Cortos. Coals have the whole each to him. Cæsar's Cause, he thought it best and easiest for him (having made good Provision of shipping and Corn) to keep the Island.

The First OBSERVATION.

Blerve first, how dangerous it is for such as ftand neutral between two Parties (bearing no affection but to their own ends) to declare themselves, upon such appearances as commonly happen in the flux and reflux of a War: For if their judgment fail as Varro's did, they are then orced to redeem their Errour with more offices of partiality, than can afterwards be excused; and so run into a further degree of enmity, than the party for whom they fuffer. And certainly whether it be that neutrality refuseth to take part with the right, (which in matter of controverse must needs ftand on one fide,) or whether it favoureth of an ill nature, to flew no fympathizing affections with fuch as otherwise have correspondence with them, or for what other cause I know not; but sure it is, that Neutrals, attending nothing but their own advantage, are of no better efteem than the Bird whereof Leo Africus writeth; which when the King of Birds demanded Tribute, would always rank himfelf amongst the Fish, and when the King of Fishes required his service, would always be with the Birds; or than the Weathercock, whereof there is no other use, than indicare regnantem, to shew what Wind rules.

The Second OBSERVATION.

 $T^{ ext{He Island of }\it{Gades}}$, was known to the Romans by the name of Tartesson:

Hic Gades Urbs est dicta Tartessus prius. Here Gades stands, of old Tartessus call'd. The Town of Gades was endowed, as Dion witneffeth by Julius Cafar, with the Liberties and Privileges of Rome. To which effect Pliny writeth; Oppidum babet Civium Romanorum, quod appellatur Augusta Urbs Julia Gaditana, This Island hath a Town of Roman Citizens, which is called Augusta Julia Gaditana. It was a Town of great Fame, as appeareth by that of Juba King of Mauritana, who made ambitious fute, to have the title of Duumviri, or two Men of the Town; as Festus noteth in his Description of the Sea-Coast:

At vis in illis tanta, vel tantum decus. Ætate prisca, sub side rerum suit; Rex ut superbus, omniumque præpotens, Quos Gens habebat forte tum Maurusia, Octaviano Principi acceptissimus, Et literarum semper in studio, Juba, Interfluoque separatus Æquore, Illustriorem semet Urbis istius Duumviratu crederet -

Such was their Power, fuch their grace, Of old, while faith was yet in place; King Juba, the most powerful Prince The Moors had either then or fince, In favour with Octavian And every way a learned Man, Divided from this place by Sea. Thought it would greater Glory be To be Duum-vir of the Town.

In this Island stood Hercules's Temple; to which as well Romans, as other noble Adventurers of all Natious, made often repair, to perform their Vows upon Atchievements of deeds of Arms; Which folemnity was not omitted by Hannibal, before his expedition into Italy.

Amongst other Altars in this Temple, there was one dedicated to Penury and Art; fignifying that Art driveth away Penury, as Hercube put to flight and subdued Monsters. Those of Asia and the Mediterrane Parts, took this Island to be the furthest end of Navigation: For the Atlantick Sea admitted no further Passage, for want of a Loadstone to direct them in that Vastness. And therefore Pindarus saith, that it is not lawful for wife Men nor Fools to know what is beyond the streight of Gibraltar, the Josephus A. Way in the Ocean being a thousand Leagues costa hath ob broad. In this Town of Gades was born L. Cor-ferved that the nelius Balbus, who at his death gave a Legacy to Sea hath no nelius Balous, who at his death gave a Legacy of Part above one the Roman People, twenty five Pence per Poll; thunfand together with Junius Brutus Collumella, that writ Logna from the Land. fo excellently De re Rustica.

Et mea quam generat Tartessi Littore Gades. And which my Gades yields on Tartes Shore. It is now called Cales, and was facked by our English, An. 1596.

Hispalis, furnimed Romulensis, from the Roman Hispalis, Colony that was planted there, is feated upon the Sevill. River Batis, in a very pleasant and fertile Country. and especially for Oiles. The Town is now the Staple for the West Indies, and a very Nursery of Merchants. Arias Montanus, that great Theologian, was born in this City.

Cx far?

The Third OBSERVATION.

Oncerning these hundred and ninety thousand Sefterces, the Learned cannot fatisfie themfelves with any congruent interpretation thereof. For if we take them in the Neuter, for feven Pound ten Shillings apiece, it amounteth to 1492000 Pound, which is thought too much : If in the Maiculine, it will rife not to above 1400 Pound, which is deemed too little, and therefore the Criticks do mend the place and read H-S Centies Nonagies, a hundred times ninety H-S. which bringeth out 142500 Pound: And is thought agreeable to the meaning of the Authour.

CHAP. VIII.

The Province and the Legions Revolt from Varro. Cafar fettleth Spain, and returneth to Marfeilles.

Lbeit Casfar was called back into Italy, for many great and important Causes, yet he was refolved to leave no spark or appearance of War remaining behind him in Spain ; for that he knew Pompey's Deserts to beginning fint two Legions into the further Spain, under the Conduct of Q. Cassius, Tribune of the People, he himself made forward by great Journeys, with fix hundred Horse; sending an Edict before him, to summon the Magistrates and Chief Men of the Ciries and Towns, to appear before him by a day at Corduba. Upon publication of which E-dict, there was no City in all that Province, that sent not some of their Senate by the Day appointed to Cor-

The Princes and States being affembled, of their own accord they shut the Gates against Varro, set Watch and Ward upon the Walls and in the Towers, and retained with them two Cohorts, called by the name of Colonica (which came thisher by chance) name of COIONICE (which came thither by chance) for the sight keeping of the Tomn. At the self-same time, the Inhabitants of Carmona (which is the stronges Town of all the Province) cast out the three Cohorts that were by Varto put into their Cittadel, and skut them out of the Town. Whereby Varro was the rather moved to make haste to Gades with his Legions, lest be should be hindered and cut off, either in the way, or in his Passage over from the Continent : Such and so favourable was the General affection of the whole Province towards Cæsar. And being somewhat advanced on his Journey, he received Letters from Gades, That, as foon as it was known there of the Edict which Cæsar had published, the chiefest of the Gaditans agreed with the Tribunes of the Soldiers which were in Garrison, to expell Gallonius out of the Town, and to keep the City and the Island for Cæsar. Which being resolved upon, they sent him Word to leave the Town of his own accord, while he might do it without danger; and if he re-fused they would then take such further Order as they should find expedient. Gallonius moved with fear dislodged himself, and went out of Gades

Thefe things being divulged abroad, one of the two Legions, known by the name of Vernacula, took up their Enfigns, went out of Varro's Camp

Citizens of that Convent did fo well like of, that every Man was very desirous to entertain them in their Houses. Whereat Varro being much astonished, altered his Journey towards Ilipa Italica, as he gave it out; but lipa Italica, foon after was advertised by some of his Friends, that lipa Italica. the Gates were stut against him. Whercupon, being circumvented and hindered from all other addresses, he fent to Cæsar, to advertise him that he was ready to deliver up the Legion to whom soever he should please to appoint. To which purpose he sent him Sex. Cæfar, commanding the Legion to be delivered to him.

Varro having given up his charge, came to Cæfar at Corduba, and there gave him a true account of the Carriage of his Office. The Moneys remain-ing in his Hands he delivered up, and gave an Inventory of the Corn and Shipping which were in any Place provided. Cæsar, by a publick Oration made at Corduba, gave thanks generally to all Men. As first to the Roman Citizens, for the endeavour they used to be Masters of the Town. Secondly, to the Spaniards, for driving out the Garrisons. To them of Gades, that they traversed and prevented the Projects of the Adversaries, and had restored themselves to liberty. To the Tribunes of the Soldiers and Centurions, that were come thither to keep the Town, for that by their Vain Spain'; for that he knew Pompeys Defends and men was affured and confirmed. He remines be fuch, as had gained him many Followers and men was affured and confirmed. He remines Dependants in the hither Province. And therefore fuch Levies of Money, as the Roman Citizens had promifed Varro for the publick Service. He lour and Magnanimity the Resolution of the Townsrestored the Goods confiscated of such as had spoken more freely than was pleafing; and gave divers Rewards both publick and private: The rest he sa-tissted with hope of good Time for the suture. And having stayed there two Days, he went to Gades: Where he gave order that the Moneys and Monu-ments which were transferred from Hercules's Temple to a private House, should be carried back again duba: Neither was there any Roman Citizen of note to the Temple. He made Q. Cassius Governour that presented not himself there at that time. of the Province, and lest with him four Legions. He himself in a few Days space, with those Ships which M. Varro, and those of Gades (by his Commandment) had made, came to Tarraco; for there the Embassadours of almost all the hither Province did attend his coming. And having received them with private and publick honour, in the same fashion as formerly he had used, he left Tarraco, and came by land to Narbone, and from thence to Marseilles : Where he received first advertiscment of the Law made at Rome, for creating of a Dictator; and that himself was named thereunto, by M. Lepidus. Prator.

The First OBSERVATION.

T is one of Cafar's Peculiars, recorded by Suetonius, that he never left behind him any fpark or fuspicion of War, left it might be said he did not throughly conquer where he came. For he that doth a bufinels to halves, hath as much more to do before it be done : And the remainder in matter of War, groweth commonly to a greater head than that which first gave occasion of Arms; like Fire which is smothered for a time, to break out afterwards with greater Fury. And therefore that he might not be thought to provoke an Enemy rather than subdue him, he neglected all occasions, how important foever, which might draw him into Italy; to the end he might fettle Spain in a Peace answerable to an absolute Victory. Which he easily effected, having over-maftered the chiefest of the Party, and (he binglef flanding by and looking on) and retired themselves to Hilpalis; and there sate altogether mistaken in the marter. The Fame down in the Market-Place, and in common Porwhereof to prevailed with the rest, that rather ches, without hurting any Man. Which the Roman than they would stand out, they for sook their Commanders. And having thus removed all oc- Kinsman, Anneus Lucanus, the Divine Poet, of casions of force, he then proceeded to take away all doubtfulness, which might accompany a new reconcilement, by flewing fuch respects as well beseemed ancient desert.

Lib. II.

For first, he made a publick acknowledgement of their general love and affection towards him: And then taking notice of particular Services, engaged them further with Honours and Rewards; righted fuch as were oppressed by the Adverse Party; remitted all Levies and Taxations (to shew the difference between his and the Enemies favour) and filled all Men with hope of good Times: As knowing that fair words, accompanied with large Promifes, are powerful Inftruments to work out whatfoever is defired. And so he took a little more time to settle those Provinces without further trouble; as believing in the Proverb, that What is well done, is twice done.

The Second OBSERVATION.

M. Varro here mentioned, made more profession of Knowledge and Arts, than any other of his Nation, being thereupon ftiled by the name of Doctus or Learned; and yet in the judgment of Learned Philosophers, was fitter to Per-fwade than to Teach. Tully being deprived of publick Offices, handled Philosophy a little in his own Language: Pliny and Seneca, less than Varro or Tully. But what are these to Aristotle or Plato? Or rather, what hath Learning to do with a Roman General? Whose Knowledge consisted in their Military Discipline, and in the powerful means of Victorious endeavour. Wherein Varro was as Ignorant, as was Don Raimundus, the Eleventh King of Arragon, in managing of Arms; who taking his Sword in one hand, and his Buckler in the other, held the Horse Bridle in his Teeth. Howbeit, if Qui minus facit, minus peccat, He that does leaft, offends leaft, were a good Excuse, it were fitting to make him blame-less, that deserved so well of Learning above all others of that Empire. But forafmuch as his Actions appear fo far inferiour to that which is conceived of his Understanding, let that be acknowledged which is true, that Confiderate agere pluris est, quam cogitare prudenter; Considerate Action is more worth, than wife thinking.

This Ilipa Italica was the chief Town of the Turdetani in Andaluzia; and is conjectured by the Ruines yet remaining, to ftand over against Tarraco is that which is now called Tarragon; a Colony of Scipio's planting, whereof the Pro-vince taketh Appellation; which is extended (as Pliny witneffeth) from Catalonia to Navarre and Castile, along the Alpes. Blaise de Vigenere reporteth, that in the Year 516. there was a Council held at Tarraco by ten Bishops; wherein it was decreed, that Sunday should always begin presently after Evening Prayer (or their Vespers) on the Saturday. From whence it is, that the Spaniards do not work at all after that time; and do Eat upon Saturdays at Supper, the Head, the Feet, and the Entrails of fuch Flesh as is killed in the Shambles (together with other pretty Bits which they call Morfillss) without Prohibition or scruple of Conscience. In this Town of Tarraco was born Paulus Oforius, that Noble Orator. Corduba, Corduba, otherwise called Colonia Patricia, was held the next of worth and dignity to Seville; but for excellent Wits to be preferred above all the Towns of Spain: For here first were born the two Seneca's, the Father, the Rhetorician, and whom Martial writeth:

Duosque Senecas, unicumque Lucanum Facunda loquitur Corduba. One Lucan and two Seneca's Brave Corduba doth flew.

Besides of later Times, Avenzoar, Avicenna, and Averrois, as excellent a Philosopher, as the other was a Physician: of whose Works

Fama loquetur Anus. - Fame when the's old will speak.

And from hence come those Cordovan Skins, so much in request.

The Third OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the Office of a Dictator, whereunto Cafar was named by the Prator Lepidus, we are to observe, that the Dictatorship was the greatest place of Dignity in their Government, as Polybius noteth. The Consuls, faith he, having each of them but twelve Lictors apiece, that carried bundles of Rods before them, as Enfigns of Lib. 3. Magistracy, the Dictator had always twenty four; to shew that the Sovereign Power divided between the two Confuls, was then reduced to one fole Command. The occasions of establishing a Dictator were divers; howbeit, it was commonly to take order in some great matter of consequence, which fell out to be extraordinary, and required the Command of one Man. And as it is in the Fasts or Records of the Capitol, either Reipub. regend. causa, to govern the Common-wealth, as was this first Dictatorship of Casar: Or otherwise, M. Fabius Ambustus Diet. seditionis sedanda causa, M. Fab. Amb. was created Dictator to quiet a Sedition; and at another time, Cn. Quintius Varus Dictator, clavi figendi caufa, to strike in the Nail; which was one of the Superstitions they used in time of Pestilence, and so divers the like. Of all which there is this form expressed by Tully; Si quando duellum gravius, discordieve civium crescunt, unus ne amplius sex pe legibus.
menses, nisi senatus decreverit, idem juris quod duo consules teneto, isque ave sinistra dictus Magister Populi esto: If at any time either a great quarrel happen, or discord arise amongst the Citizens, then let one Man have the same Power that the two Confuls have, for fix Months, and no longer, unless the Senate shall otherwise decree; and let this Man (in an ill hour) be termed the Master of the People.

But foraimuch as Magister Populi was a harsh and odious name to the People, they called him by a more modest name, Dictator: whereof Varro giveth this reason, Distator quod à Consule dicebatur, cujus disto audientes omnes essent; He was called Dictator because he was named to that Office by the Conful, whose Orders they were all to be obedient to. And as none could name a Dictator but the Conful, (for Cafar was named by the Prætor in an extraordinary time;) so none could be named to that place, but fuch as were or had been Confuls: Confulares legere ita lex ju- Livy, lib. 20 bebat de Dictatore creando lata; the Law for the creating a Dictator commands to choose consular Men only. To which may be added, the circumftance of Time, which was always in the Night; Nocte deinde silenti, ut mos est, Papirium Dictatorem dixit, he named Papirius to the Dictatorship (as the custom is) in the dead of the Night. The Dictator had fovereign Power, but limited the Son, the Philosopher; together with their for time, which was commonly fix Months;

r. Philip.

narchs: And thereupon Cicero adjudgeth Sylla's Dictatorship to be a meer Tyranny, and so doth Plutarch Cafar's; because both were prorogued beyond the time prescribed by the Law. Casar held this Dictator's Place but eleven days, and then left it off: But afterwards had it for his Life. and so came to be stiled Dictator perpetuus, perpetual Dictator.

CHAP. IX.

The Marseillians give up the Town.

He Marseillians being much opprest, and almost worn out with all forts of inconveniences, brought to an extream exigent of Victual, Defeated and Overthrown in two Fights at Sea, broken and cut in pieces oftentimes in their Sallies out, afficted with a grievous Peftilence through long southing up and alteration of vetere Pani- Diet (for they lived of nothing but of old Panick and musty Barly, which was long before laid up in publick for this purpose;) their Tower being Over-thrown, and a great part of their Wall down, out of hope of any succours from the Provinces, or of other power of Cafar; they ferioufly determined (without fraud) to give up the Town. But a few days before, L. Domitius understanding their Resolution having got three Ships (whereof two he assigned to his familiar Friends, the third he took himself, and taking the opportunity of a troublesome Storm) put to Sea: Which being perceived by the Ships that by Brutus's Commandment did continually guard the Garrison. Mouth of the Haven, they weighed their Anchors, and made after them, Notwithstanding, that wherein Domitius was held on her course, and by the help of the foul Weather got out of fight. The other two being afraid of our Ships, returned back into

> The Marseillians, according as was commanded, brought their Arms and Engines out of the Town, drew forth their Shipping, both out of their Haven and their Arsenals, and delivered up their publick. Treasure. Which things being accomplished and performed, Cæsar willing to save them, rather for the name and antiquity of the Town, than for any Merit of theirs, left two Legions there for a Garrison, and sent the rest into Italy. He himself took his way towards Rome.

OBSERVATION.

HEnce we may observe, That when Men re-fuse to be led by reason, as the best means to guide them to convenient ends, they are commonly constrained by the commanding Warrant of Necessity, to undergo the same thing upon harder Conditions. As it happened to the Marfeillians, who not regarding the Army then prefent, and ready to take a strict account of their a neutral State) chose rather to be shut up with a Siege, that of all Miseries is accounted the maxime mi-ferabile, claudi worst; and therein so carried themselves, as they tage. And if the Conqueror had not took all occasions to shew his Clemency, they might happily have paid dear for their contempt. But where either defert or other Motives wanted, there nomen & vetuftas, their Name and Anti-whereby they are specially distinguished from Mo- own ends: Which, as near as the course wherein he was engaged would afford him, were always levelled at the general applance of his Actions; taking that to be no little help to work himself in maxima into the fovereignty of the State: Observing it mina licens, the rather in cases of great and happy success, 46. Saluft. which are ever more reftrained than leffer For-Servare pre-tunes. Howfoever, it cannot be denied but that prism of ex-Clemency is a property of excellent Honour: tunns. Which Cafar shewed in faving the Town.

CHAP. X.

Curio transporteth two Legions into Africk.

Bout the same time, C. Curio set Sail Casfer. from Sicily to pass into Africk: And making no account at all of Actius Varus's Forces, he carried with him but two Legions of the four which were delivered him by Casar, together, with five hundred Horfe. And after he had been at Sea two Days and three Nights, he arrived at a place called Aquilaria, diffant twenty two Miles from Clupea; where there is a very commodious Road for Ships in Summer, Sheltered on each side with two large and eminent Promontories. L. Cæfar, Armies, which they knew were come into the hands and the Son, attended his coming at Clupea with ten Gallies; which being taken from the Pirates in the late Wars, and laid a ground at Utica, were repaired and new trimmed by Varus: But being afraid of the great number of his Ships, he forfook the Sea, and ran his Gally on Shore; and leaving her there. fled by Land on Foot to Adrumetum, a Town kept by Confidius Longus, having one Legion only in

The rest of Cæsar's Navy, seeing their Admiral sty away, put into Adrumetum. M. Rusus the Treasurer pursued him with twelve Ships, which Curio had brought with him out of Sicily, to wast the Ships of Burthen; and finding the Gally left upon the Sand, he Towed her off, and returned to ___ Quit Curio with his Navy. Curio fent Marcus before Ragrada les with the Ships to Utica; and he himself set for- tus agit finz ward thither by Land with the Army, and in two fulcator days Journey came to the River Bagrada; where he arense. Law. left C. Caninius Rebilus, the Legate, with the Legions, and went himself before with the Cavalry, to view a place called Cornelius's Camp, which was held very fit and convenient to Encampin, being a direct ridge of a Hill, scoting out into the Sea, steep and broken on each side, and yet skelving by a little more gentle descent on that side which was next Utica, being diftant from thence (if the nearest way were taken) a little more than a Mile. Rut in that shortest cut there rose a Spring, in that part which was furthest off from the Sea, and so made a Marish or Bog; which whosever would avoid, must fetch a compass of six Miles to go to the

A view being taken of this place, Curio beheld afar off Varus's Camp, joyning to the Town-Wall, at the Gate called Bellica, marvelloufly Fortified Answers (which with good excuse doth command through the strong situation of the Place, having the Town on the one fide, and a Theatre which stood before the Town on the other; and by reason of the great Circuit of building which it contained, made worst; and therein to carried themselves, as they great circum by constaining motor is contained, make the first of Stone unremoved to make good their refusal: But for want of better helps, brought their forved further, great store of Carriages, which by Fraud to play a part, to their greater disadvanreason of this studdain Alarm, were brought out of the Country towards the Town : For the intercepting whereof he sent the Cavalry. And at the same instant, Varus likewise had sent out of the Town, 600 Numidian Horfe, and 400 Foot, which King Juba, (a few days before) had fent to Utica, fo quity was sufficient to make Cafar constant to his the strengthning of that Party. This Prince had acquaintance with Pompey, by reason that his Fa- in, was famous for three things. First, It was ther lodged with him, and bare a spleen to Curio, for the Law which he preferred when he was Tribune of the People, for the confiscation of Juba's Kingdom. The Cavalry on either side met together, and the Numidians were not able to abide the Charge of our Men; but about an bundred and twenty being Slain, the rest betook themselves back to the Camp at

Lib. II.

In the mean time, upon the arrival of our Gallies, Curio commanded it to be proclaimed, that such Victuallers and Ships of Burthen as were in the Bay at Utica (being in number about two hundred) and would not presently come to the Cornelian Camp, should be held and taken for Enemies. At which Proclamation, upon an instant of time, they all weighed Anchor, and came to the place whither they were commanded: Whereby the Army abounded with all necessary Provisions. This being done, he returned to the Camp at Bagrada; and by the acclamation of the whole Army, was saluted by the name of Imperator.

OBSERVATION.

THis Chapter beginneth with the third part of Africk: Concerning whom it is to be observed, that in the beginning of these Broils, no Man was more Enemy to C. of ar, nor made more bitter Invectives to the People against him, than he did in his Tribuneship; but afterwards he fell off, and was gained by the voluptuous Inticements of M. Antony, together with a huge mass of Money which Cafar fent him. Whereupon he played the Turn-Coat, and with might and main Elegani ora-commonalty by his eloquent and perfwasive two auditores: Speeches; the lively force whereof is able to stir Omata enim up affection in Stones. For which cause it is, antio vel la- that * Velleius Paterculus noteth, That no Man plen movere that Venerus Paterchus notices in the brought a more burning or dangerous Fire-brand ple. Epith brought a more burning or dangerous Fire-brand did arrian lib.; to the kindling of those Civil Wars, than did cap. 23. Curio; being a Man of an excellent Discourse, audacious, prodigal of his own and of other Mens, fubtle, ingenious, extream Vitious, and always well-spoken, to the ruine of the Publick-Weal. Which sweetness of words came unto him by Inheritance, as Pliny witnesseth; Una familia Cu-Lib.7.cap.41. rionum, in qua tres continua serie oratores extiterunt; In the one Family of the Curiones there were three noted Orators one after another. Of whole monstrous Prodigality the same Author hath made a very large Account. And out of dous meantus these over-weaning Humours it was, that he bede bello Juwhich altereth as the Moon, and keepeth no confrant shape whereby it may be known. Concerning the dismembring of an Army lightly, and upon heedless Rashness, Cyrus giveth grave Advice, in the beginning of the fixth Book of Xenophon. To which (for the prefent) I referr the Reader.

Clupea was a Town in Africk, named by Pliny, Oppidum liberum, or a free Town, and feated upon the Promontory of Mercury, in the Territories of old Carthage. It was so called, because it carried the form of a Target retorted; and for the same cause it was called Aspis:

Sil. Ital. In Clypei Speciem curvatis turribus Aspis.

Aspis with Turrets bowing like a Shield.

reputed the place where Antous the Gyant dwelt. which Hercules slew, by strangling him in his Arms, that he might not touch the Earth, from which it is faid he received fresh strength. Secondly, P. Cornelius Scipio, that subdued Africk, made that place his chief Camp of strength: And so it came to be called Cornelius's Camp. And laftly, for this Expedition which Curio made, to lose two Legions and himself withal, as unwilling to fee the Morrow, after fuch a loss; for, Vita eft avidus, quisquis non vult, mundo secum Seneca Tragperennte, mori; He loves Life indeed, that is not willing to die when the World falls.

CHAP. XI.

Curio marcheth to Utica. His Cavalry put to Flight great Troops coming from King Juba. His Army strangely possessed with an idle fear.

He next day he brought his Army to Utica, Casar. and Encamped himself near unto the Town. But before the Fortification of his this Book, containing Carries pallage into food Centinel gave notice of great Forces of Horse ick: Concerning whom it is to be observed, and Foot, coming towards Utica, from King Juba: Camp was finished, the Horsemen that And at the same time a great Dust was seen rise in the Air, and presently the first Troops began to come in fight. Curio astonished at the Novelty of the thing, fent his Horse before, to Sustain the first shock, and to stay them: He himself calling the Legions with all speed from their Work, Embattelled his Army. The Cavalry encountring with the Enemy (before the Legions could be well unfolded and put in order) did put to flight all the King's Forces that came marching without fear or Order; and slew a great number of the Foot Troops; but the Horse, making hast, got almost all safe into the Town, by the way of the Sea-shore. The next Night after two Centurions of the Nation of the Marsi fled from Curio with twenty two of their Soldiers to Actius Varus.

These Centurions, whether it were to please Varus, or otherwise speaking as they thought (for what Men wish, they easily believe; and what they think they hope others do think the same;) did considently affirm, that the Minds of the whole Army were altogether alienated from Curio; and that it was very expedient that the Armies should come in fight, and find means to speak together. Varus being perswaded to that Opinion, the next day, early in the Morning, drew his Legions out of the Camp: The like did Curio; cither of them putting their Forces in Order, upon a small Valley which lay between both their Armies.

There was in Varus's Army one Sex. Quintilius Varus, who (as it is formerly declared) was at Corfinium; and being let go by Cæsar, went into Africk. It fortuned that Curio had carried over those Legions, which Cæsar had formerly taken at Corfinium : So that a few Centurions being flain, the Companies and Maniples remained the same. This occasion being so fitty offered, Quintilius (going about Curio's Army) began to besecch the Soldiers that they would not forget the first Oath they had taken to Domitius, and to him their Treasurer; nor bear Arms against them, that had run the same Fortune, and endured the same Siege; nor Fight for those who (by way of Reproach) had called them Fugitives. To these he added some Promises, to put them in hope of a good Recompence, out of his own Liberality, if they would follow him and Actius.

Having delivered this unto them, Curio's Army This Promontory, which Curio chose to Encamp flood Mute, and declared not themselves by obsidione. Egefippus.

ther fide drew back to their Camp. Notwithstanding, Curio's Camp was afterwards possessed with a great Fear and suspicion : Which was quickly augmented, by divers Reports raised upon the same. For every Man forged Opinions and Conceits; and out of his own Fear, added something to that which he had heard of another. Which when it was spread from one Authour to many, and one had received it from another, it seemed there were many Authours Nulla fides of the same thing. For Civil War is always com-pierts viii pounded of such Men, as hold it lawful to do and fol-qui cattra se-qui Cattra te-quantur, ve. low what and whom they please. nalesquaa Those Legions which a little before were in the nus: ibi fas, Service of the Enemy, did willingly embrace what was offered them; for old acquaintance had made them forget what Benefits Cafar had lately bestowed on them: Being also of divers Countries and Nations, and not all of the Marsi or Peligni, as those the Night before, which were their Cabin-Mates, and Fellow-Soldiers: Whereupon they took occasion, to publish abroad in worse Terms, that which others had vainly given out; and some things were coined by those that would feem most diligent in doing

The First OBSERVATION.

Biceve first, from the revolt of these Centurions, that a Fellow or two of rank and fathion falling from a Party, do gain easie credit to their advertisements, by averring any thing which the Enemy defireth. Whence it is, that forafmuch as Fugitives can little otherwife avail. (one Man being but as no Man,) they feek favour and reputation with the Party they fig unto, by their advice and discovery, and consequently, the remuneration of Espial; which according to Livy lib. 10. the prefident made by Fabius to the Spies of Clufine, is worth a Man's labour.

And herein Revolters (especially those of judgment) are very dangerous Inftruments; not only in weakening or making frustrate such designs as may be contrived against an Adversary; but also in discovering the secrets of their own Party, and disclosing of that which is absolute and well, until it be made known. For there is no fubfifting thing so perfect, but hath always some part or o-ther open, and to give an easie Passage to destruction : According to that of the Poet.

Omnia sunt Hominum tenui pendentia Filo. All Human things hang by a flender Thread.

And therefore it is no small means of preserving each thing in being, to make shew of Strength, and conceal weaknesses, as the Registers of assured Ruin. For which cause it is, that Fidelity is Fides Funda- commended as the Foundation of Human Sona: perfidia fecret imperfection vero ejustem Bane of the same.

The Second OBSERVATION.

which metamorphoseth a Troop of Men into a feared : And the rather because Fear in this The Sparmans forme Trefantas, begetteth oftentimes a main cause well known into its already, that are spoken of additions of district throughout all the Party: Which, as the Revolt and Alienation of the Army and Trefantas it spreadeth abroad, is so delivered from one to (which for mine own Part, I think either to any fign, either one way or other: And fo ei- another, as the Reporter (not believing whathe telleth) addeth always femewhat to make the Hearer believe what he could not himfelf. And fo weak Minds do multiply the vain apprehension of idle Humours, in fuch a fashion, as there is of idle Humours, in tuch a tainion, as there is more hurt in fearing, than in the thing which is plan in metaendo of mali, Epaminondas was more fortunate than all others into qued tiin this kind: For * while he led the Thebans as meur. Gir their Commander, they were never taken with ad Torquaany fudden affrightment, nor poffeft with any Physich Panick Terrour, to bereave them of their Senses, or falsifie the truth of their Understanding; being all (as it feemed) of the fame Mind with the General, who accounted no death fo honourable as that which came by War. Howbeit fuch is the frailty of Human Nature, and so strange are Turbant Ha the frailty of Human Nature, and to strange are mines, non the Convulsions of the Mind, that a Comman-rest Sed queen der must expect to meet with times, wherein his derebusha Men will fland in danger of nothing fo much forespinion, as their own infirmity: Being troubled rather Epick. Enwith flrong apprehensions, than for any danger of the thing feared.

CHAP. XII.

Curio disputeth the matter in a Council of War.

Or which causes a Council of War being Casar. called they began to deliberate what course was to be taken. There were some Opinions which thought that it was very expedient to affault and take Varus's Camp, for that there was nothing more dangerous than Idleness for the Breeding and Increase of such imaginations as the Soldiers had conceived. Others said, It were better to try the fortune of a Battel, and to free themselves by valorous Endeavour, rather than to be for saken and abandoned of their own Party, and left to undergo mist grievous and extreme Torments. There were others which thought it fit, to return about the third Watch of the Night to Cornelius's Camp; that by interposing some respite of Time, the Soldiers might be better settled, and confirmed in their Opinions; and if any Mischance further happened, they might (by reason of their Store of shipping) with more ease and Safety re-turn back to Sicily.

Curio misliking both the one and the other, faid, That there wanted as much good Resolution in the one Opinion, as abounded in the other: For these entered into a Consideration of a dishonourable and unbefeeming Flight; and those were of an opinion to fight in an unequal and disadvantageous Place. For with what hope (Saith he) can we assault a Camp so fortified, both by Nature and Art ? Or what have we gained, if with great Loss and Damage, we shall go away and give it over? As though things well and hap-Tam boni measum faci ciery: And perfidious Treachery, divulging the pily atchieved did not get to the Commander great quan malie active teams are prefided for the pily atchieved did not get to the Commander great quantation are in prefided. Ceret imperfections thereof, is the Plague and good Will from the Soldier; and things ill car-evenus ried, as much Hate. Concerning the removing of in Imperation our Camp, what doth it inferr but a shameful res referible. Retreat, a Despair in all Men, and Aliena-lent Dio tion of the Army? For it is not fit, to give occa-lib. 8. A Sthere is nothing more dangerous in an A. flow to the Prudent and well-adviced, to imagine my than Fear; to there is nothing fooner that they are diffruffed; nor on the other fale, bred to diffruft a Multitude, than this Paffion, to the ill-difficied, that they are reducted or Which intelantoporoccia a ricop of archim to a fearer and the control of country of the Herd of Deer. For hence it appearent, that one kind will give them more Liberty to do ill and Thersfites is able to leaven a whole Army; and abase the Endeavour of good Men in well dean idle conceit bred in the weak Thoughts of serving. And if (faith he) these things are be altogether false, or at least, less than in Opinion they are thought to be) is it not better to diffemble and hide them, than that they should be strengthened and consurmed by us? Ought we not, as we do hide the Wounds of our Bodies, to cover the Inconveniences of an Army, left we Should minister Hope or Courage to the Adversary? But some there are that advise to set forward at Midnight; to the End (as I imagine) that fuch as are desirous to offend, may perform it with more Scope and Licentiousness. For such Disorders are repressed and reformed either with Shame or Fear; to both which the Night is an Enemy. And therefore as I am not of that Courage, to think without Hope or Means that the Enemies Camp is to be affaulted; so on the other side, I am not so fearful, as to be wanting in that which is stiring: But am rather of opinion, that we try all things before we yield to that; and do affure my felf, that for the most part, we are all of one Mind concerning

Lib. II.

OBSERVATION.

A S in matter of Geometry, Rectum est Index fui & Obliqui, a streight Line manifesteth both it felf and a crooked Line, being equal to all the parts of rectitude, and unequal to obliquity: So is it in reason and discourse. For a direct and well-grounded Speech carrieth such a native equality with all its Parts, as it doth not crooked, concerning the fame matter; and is of that consequence in the variety of projects and Opinions and fo hardly hit upon, in the lame discourse of common reason, that Plato thought conflime de directie of continuous reason, care more acquire, reason que it a piece of divine Power, to direct a Path free inter homites from the crookedness of Errour, which might divinifiamen, lead the streight and ready Way to happy Ends. watio aqualis And the rather, forasmuch as in matter of debate, there are no Words to weight, bate, there are no Words to weight, bate, there are no Words to weight, bate bataneed with others of equal Confiderations from those that point-Variam fem.

Variam fem.

tion: As here it happened, from those that pointmenten.

ing at the Cause of this Distemperature, conmentem. Luc. lib. 4. victed Idleness for the Authour of their variable and unfettled Minds; and, as * Xenophon hath observed, very hard to be endured in one Man, much worse in a whole Family, but no Way fufferable in an Army; which the Romans called Exercitus, ab Exercitio from Exercise. For remedy whereof, they propounded Labour without hope of Gain, and fuch fervice as could bring forth nothing but Loss. Others, preferring Security before all other Courses (as believing luce, nifiquan. with Livy, that Captains should never trust Foriso, nifiquentum entitles tune further than necessiry constrained them) upon dishonourable Terms. Which unevenness of Opinions Curio made streight by an excellent Maxim in this kind; thinking it convenient to firange and new Religion, that you should neghold fuch a Course as might neither give honest Men cause of distrust, nor Wicked Men to ill-affected to do worse. And thus winding himfelf out of the Labyrinth of Words (as knowing that to be true of Annius the Prætor, that * it more importeth occasions to do than to say; being an easie matter to fit Words to things unfolded and resolved upon;) he brake up the Council.

CHAP. XIII.

Curio calleth a general Affembly of the Soldiers; and speaketh unto them, concerning their Fear and Retraction.

THe Council being risen, he gave order for Castar. a Convocation of the Army; and there called to remembrance what they had done for Cæsar at Corfinium : How by their Favour and Furtherance, he had gained the greatest Part of Italy to be on his side. For by you (Saith he) and by your Endeavour, all the rest of the Municipal Towns were drawn to follow Calar: And therefore not without just cause did he at that time repose great assurance in your affections towards him: and the adverse Party conceived as great Indignation and Spight against you. For Pompey was not forced away by any Battel; but being prejudiced by your Act he quitted Italy. Casar bath recommended me, whom he held near unto himself, together with the Provinces of Sicily and Africk (without which he cannot defend the City and Italy) to your trust and fidelity. There are some which sollicite and perswade you to revolt from my Command: For what can they wish or desire more, than to make it but one work, to bring us both to ruine and overthrow, and to engage you in a most detestable Wickedness? Or what worse Opinion can they conceive of you, Nemo iisathan that you should betray those Men, that pro- micus effe only approve it self to be levelled at that which is fels themselves wholly yours; and that you might bus much again that you might bus maken fels themselves whony yours; and the state of them-aliqued expectar De-

Have you not understood what Cæfar hath might. done in Spain ? Two Armies beaten ; Two Generals defeated; Two Provinces taken; and all within fourty Days, after he came in view of the Encmy? Those whose Forces were not able to make resistance when they were whole and entire, how is it possible they should hold out being beaten and discomsitted? You that followed Casar when the Victory stood doubtful; now Fortune hath adjudged the Cause, and determined of the Issue of the War. will you follow the vanquished Party, when you are to receive the reward of your Service? They gave out, that they were forfaken and betrayed by you, and do remember you of the former Oath you took. But did you for sake L. Domitius, or did he for sake you? Did not be thrust you out, and expose you to all Extremity of Fortune? Did he not feek to fave himself by Flight, without your Knowledge or Privity? Were you not preserved and kept alive by Cæsar's Clemency, when you were abandoned and betrayed by bim ?

How could be tie you with the Oath of Allegiance, when (having cast away his Sheaf of Rods, and laid down his Authority) he himself was made a private Person, and became captivated to the Command of another Man's Power? It were a lect that Oath, wherein you stand now engaged; and respect the other, which was taken away by Capitis dithe maji that there came of unitating nor whach when the sure of t to preach of my Merits towards you; which as yet vitate mutaare less than my Will, and unworthy your expecta- tatus eft, aut tion: And yet Soldiers have always used to seek aliam adop-Reward upon the shutting up of a War; which tans: & qui what Event it will have, make you no doubs liber alert And why should I omit the diligence which I have users: & qui aircady used, and how the Business hath hitherto in bostum already used, and now the numbers waste districted members proceeded? Doth it offend you, that I transport nit & coi ted the Army over in Safety, without Lofs of aquaigning any one Ship? That at my coming, I beat and interdictum.

l.s .de legibus.

In forme

Adversaries? That twice in two Days, I overcame them only with the Cavalry? That I drew two hundred Ships of Burthen out of the Road and Port of the Enemy? and have brought them to that Extremity, that they can be supplied by Provision nei-ther by Sea nor by Land? All this good fortune, and virtuesines these Commanders rejected and forsaken, will you rather embrace again the Ignominy you received militaris, vir. at Corfinium, or your Flight out of Italy, or rus, Author the Surrendring up of Spain, or the prejudicial tis, felicies. Success of the War of Africk? Truly, for mine Curoproles own part, I was desirous and content to be cal-bianilia. led Cæsar's Soldier: But you have stiled me with Latars sonaer: But you have fitted me with the Title of Imperator. Which if it repent you I do willingly quit my felf of your Grace, and return it back unto you: And do you in like manner restore me to my Name again, lest you should feem to give me Honour which might turn to my reproach.

The First OBSERVATION.

IN the handling of this Accident, the difference cometh to be observed between a Council of War, and a Concio, or Convocation of the Soldiers. The first was more particular, confisting of some choice Men, and those the most eminent in the Party. Is qui non universum Populum, sed partem aliquam adesse jubet, non Comitia, sed Consilium edicere debet; he that calls together only a part of the People, and not the whole, calls a Council, not a general Affembly. Their Convocation or Preaching was more general, the whole Army being convented together, to be fitted by perswafion and discourse to follow the resolution taken by a Council; and was properly called Adlocutio, and fometimes Conventus: Cicero perlectam Epistolam Cæsaris in Conventu Militum recitat; Cicero read the Letter from Cafar in a Conventus, or general Meeting of his Soldiers. The Parties called to a Council, were according as the General vallued the Occasion: For sometimes the Legates and Tribunes were only confulted; and now and then the Centurions of the first Orders together with the Captains of Horse, were called to their affiftance; and oftentimes, all the Centurions. But howfoever, Curio refolved out of his own judgment, as great Commanders commonly do; and is specially observed by Pierre Matthieu, of the French King; who ever loveth to hear the opinion of his Captains, but always finds his own

The Second OBSERVATION.

A Mongst other strains of this discourse, it is acknowledged, that Rome could not stand without Sicily; and the reason was, for the plenty of Corn which it brought forth: For Sicily was always reputed as the Granary or Barn of Rome and accordingly cared for by the Senate, as a place without which their City could not continue. The grain of that Island is hard, like horn, and cannot well be broken and ground into Meal, until it be wet with Water, and then dried in the Shade, rather than in the Sun: By means whereof it yieldeth fo exceedingly, that it is ac- pel them. counted twenty in the hundred better than any other Wheat; especially, for that it will keep long in their Vaults and Caves under the Earth, and feldom or never take heat, being of it felf fo hard and dry.

The gluttonous use of Flesh hath made Men ignorant of the Vertue and Strength of Corn, which the Romans better understood; for their dispersed at the first Onset the whole Fleet of the Legions never fed on Flesh, as long as they could get Corn. Peccora, quod secundum poterat esse Lib. 1 civil inopiæ Subsidium, they fetched in Cattel, as the Bd. 2. fecond Way to help their Want, faith Cafar.

And in another Place; Ut complures Dies Mili-Lik, 3. tes Frumento caruerint, Peccore è longinquioribus vicis adacto extremam Famem sustentarent; the Soldiers having for many Days been without Corn, they were fain to fuftain their extreme hunger with Cattel which they had fetched afar off-And in the same place, Quod minor erat Frumenti Copia, Pecus imperabat; because there was but little Corn, he gave order for Cattel. And again, Non illi Hordeum cum daretur, non Legumina recusabant. Pecus vero, cujus rei summa erat in Epiro Copia, magno in honore habebant. They refused neither Barley nor Pulse when it was offered them; but Cattel, whereof there was good ftore in Epirus, they prized at an high rate.

By which places it appeareth, that they never fell to Flesh but when they wanted Corn. Which is doubtless a firmer Nutriment, less excremental, and of better Strength, than any other Food whatfoever; as containing the prime substance of Meat and the Spirit of Wine: For Aqua Vito is as well made of Wheat, as of the Lees of Wine. Flesh is good to make Wrestlers of a gross and heavy Constitution, as Plutarch noteth: But the Roman Soldier stood in need of an effectual and Sinewy Vigour, able to undergo Carriages, fitter for a Mule than a Man, together Muli Mariwith fuch Works as later Ages do rather hear than believe; and was attained by feeding only upon Bread

The Rabbines and Thalmudists do write that the Giants of the Old World first fell to the eating of Flesh, making no difference between a Man and a Beaft; but grew fo execrable, that they made Women cast their Fruit before their time, to the end they might eat it with more Tenderness and Delicacy. Which is also said to be practised by the Cannibals, upon the first Discovery of the Indies. Viginere reporteth, that he knew some great Men in France so luxurious, that they caused oftentimes Does ready to fann to be killed, and the young Ones took out alive, to be made Meat for Monstrous Appetites. But there is no indifferent Parallel to be drawn between the Sobriety of the ancient Roman Sol- Ebrication dier, and the Gluttony of these Times; far exceeding that of Agamemnon, which Achilles Homer. noted with Words of high Reproach, calling lised. 1. him Hogs-head of Wine, Eyes of a Dog, and Heart of a Deer.

The Third OBSERVATION.

THirdly, from this elaborate and well-couched Speech, we may note that Eloquence is a Elequentia very beautiful Ornament to Princes, and great principlus Commanders; besides the use it hath to lead a maximum ornaments. Multitude to fuch Ends as is wished: For Cic. 4. de fini fmooth Words prevail where Force booteth but. not. According to that of Cicero, Cum Popa-List. lum persuaders posse dissidiums, cogi Fas esse semil. Epist. non arbitremur; If the People will not be perfwaded, let us not think it fit to go about to com-

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

Army to flight.

C. Gr.

He Soldiers, moved with this Oration, did oftentimes interrupt him in his Speech; fignifying with what grief they did endure the suspicion of Infidelity. And as he departed from the Assembly, every Man exhorted him to be of a good Courage, and not to doubt of giving Battel, or to make trial of their Fidelity and Valour. By which means, the minds and disposition of all Men being changed, Curio resolved (out of a general confent) as soon as any occasion was offered, to give Battel.

The next day, having brought out his Forces, he made a stand, and imbattelled them in the same place where he stood in Arms the day before. And Varus likewise drew out his Troops; whether it were to solicite the Soldier, or not to omit the opportunity of fighting, if it might be afforded in an indifferent place. There was a Valley (as we have formerly declared) between the two Armies, of no very hard or difficult ascent; and either of them expected who allicuit accest; and essert of some expects of food first come over it, to the end they might fight in a place of more advantage: When upon a sudden, all Varus's Cavalry that stood in the left Wing of the Army, together with the light-armed Soldiers that stood mingled among st them, were seen descending into the Valley. To them Curio Sent his Cavalry, together with two Cohorts of the Marrucini. The Enemies Horsemen were not able to endure the first encounter of our Men; but having loft their Horses, fled back to their Party. The light-armed Men that came out with them, being left and forsaken, were all slain by our Men, in the view and sight of Vatus whole Army. Then Rebillus, Cælar's Legate (whom Curio for his knowledge and experience in matter of War, had brought with him out of Sicily) faid; Curio, thou feeft the Enemy affrighted : why makest thou doubt to use the opportunity of time? Curio, without making any other answer, than willing the Soldiers to remember what they had affured unto him the day before, commanded them to follow bim, and ran foremost himself. The Valley was so cumbersome and difficult, that in gaining the ascent of the Hill, the foremost could hardly get up, unless they were lifted up by their followers. Howbeit the Enemy was so possessed with fear, for the flight and slaughter of their fellows, that they did not so much as think of resisting; for they took themselves all to be already surprised by the Cavalry : So that before any Weapon could be cast, or that our Men could approach near unto them, all Varus's Army turned their backs, and fled into their Camp

In this flight, Fabius Pelignus (a certain Soldier of one of the inferiour Companies of Curio his Army) having overtaken the first Troop of them that fled. Sought for Varus, calling after him with a loud voice; as though he had been one of his own Soldiers, and would either advise him, or say something else to bim. And as he, being often called, looked back, and stood still (inquiring who he was, and what he would,) he made at Varus's Shoulder (which was unarmed) with his Sword, and was very near killing him: howbeit he avoided the danger, by receiving the blow upon his Target. Fabius was instantly inclosed about by such Soldiers as were near at hand, and flain.

In the mean time, the Gates of the Camp were pestered and thronged with multitudes and Troops of fuch as fled away, and the passage was so stopped, that more died in that place without blow or wound, than perished either in the Battel or in the flight. Neither wanted they much of taking the Camp; for many left not running until they came to the Town. But the nature of the place and the fortification of the Camp, did hinder their access; and Curio bis Curio bringeth out his Troops, and putteth Varus's Men coming out, prepared only for a Battel wanted fuch necessaries as were of use for the taking of the Camp. And therefore Curio carried back his Army, with the loss of no one Man but Fabius. Of the Adversaries were stain about fix hundred; and many more wounded, who all upon Curio his departure, besides many other that seigned themselves burt, left the Camp for fear, and went into the Town. Which Varus perceiving, and knowing also the astonishment of the Army, scaving a Trumpeter in the Camp, and a few Tents for shew, about the third Watch, he carried his Army with filence out of the Camp into the Town.

OBSERVATION.

T is a part of Wildom, and oftentimes a main Loco Japientia help to Victory, to attend the advantage of an eli-a Enemies rashness, and to see if his folly will not stutium make way to his overthrow. Whereof Curio made operirigood use: for he kept his Army in the upper ground, until the Cavalry of the Adversary were loosely fallen into the Valley; and then set upon them, and cut them all in pieces. The fight whereof ftartled the whole Army, and kept Curio in fafety, upon the like difadvantage, in the cumbersome passage of the same Vale: by means whereof he put to slight the whole Forces of the Enemy, and made a great flaughter in the party. Wherein I may not forget that trick of a Roman fpirit, whereby the Author becometh memorable to posterity, in calling after Varus by name, to make him the facrifice for both the Hoafts. Whence we may observe, that when a Battel is joyned pell-mell, no Man can be affured in his own Valour, nor share out his Fortune by the length of his Sword; but is oftentimes subject to weakneffes of contempt, and vanquished by such as cannot be compared unto him but in fcorn.

I have heard it reported, that at the Battel of Eureux, Maturine (that known Woman in France) took Prisoner and disarmed a Cavalero of Spain: Who being brought before the King, and by him demanded whose Prisoner he was, or whether he knew the party that had forced him; answered, no; but that he knew him to be a gallant Man of Arms. Whereat the King smiled: And the Gentleman, understanding what Fortune he had run, was as much difmayed as a Man poffibly could be, that confidered, Quod ferrum aquat, in bello, robustioribus imbecilliores, The Sword equalleth the weakest to the strongest.

CHAP. XV.

Curio leaveth Utica to meet with King Juba. His Cavalry overthroweth the Forces led by Saburra; which leadeth him on to his overthrow.

He next day Curio prepared to befiege Celar.
Utica, inclosing it about with a Ditch and a Rampier. There were in the Town a multitude of People imacquainted with War, through the long Peace they had injoyed: and the Inhabitants stood very affectionate to Cæsar, for many benefits they had received from him. The rest of the multitude consisted of divers sorts of Men, much terrified and affrighted by the former Encounters: Whereupon every Man Spake plainly giving up the Town, and dealt with Pub. Actius, that their Fortunes and Lives might not come in danger, through his pertinacy and wilfulness.

to keep and defend the Town. Which News did also reported to Curio: whereunto for a while he gave no credit; such was his considence in the success of things. And now withal, came Letters and Messengers into Africk, of that which Cæsar had so fortunately atchieved in Spain: so that being absolutely assured with all these things, he was perswaded the King durst attempt nothing against him. But when he found by assured discovery, that his Forces were within twenty five miles of Utica, leaving his Works already begun, he withdrew himself into Cornelius's Camp; and began there to fortifie his Camp, to get Corn and other Provisions, and to furnish it with all necessaries material for a defence: and fent presently a dispatch into Sicily, that the two Legions, and the rest of the Cavalry might be sent unto him.

The Camp wherein he lay was fitly accommodated to hold out the War, as well by reason of the nature of the place, as the artificial fortifying thereof, the nearness of the Sea, and the plenty of Water and Salt; whereof there was great quantity brought thither, from the Salt-pits near adjoyn-ing. No fluff could be wanting, through the great flore of Wood which was about the place, nor yet any Corn, for the plenty that was to be found in the adjoyning Fields: And thereupon, by the ad-vice and approbation of all Men, Curio resolved to attend his other Forces, and to draw out the

These things being thus disposed by the consent and liking of all Men, he heard by some that lately came out of the Town, that Juba was called back, by occasion of a War happened upon the confines, and that by reason of the controversies

226

While these things were a doing, there came reported by the Fugitives. For the King is not Messengers from King Juha, signifying, the King come; but hath sent some small Forces, which was at hand with great Forces, and willed them cannot make their party good with a few Horfemen: And therefore hasten to take the spoil with much encourage and confirm the wavering and Honour and Renown, that we may now at length affrighted minds of the Enemy. The same was begin to think of rewarding your Merits.

OBSERVATION.

T is observed by Marcellinus, that when mis-Videmus infi fortune cometh upon a Man, his Spirit grow-pass in finite fortune to method a man, his Spirit grow-pass in finite fortune to method a man, his Spirit grow-pass in finite fortune to method a man finite fortune to metho toftune cometh upon a man, his spirit grow pais injutentieth fo dull and benumbed, as his fenfes feem but fait, be to be difinified of their charges. Which ap betar finfail bominum of peared here in Curio: who having taken a pro-cotundi. vident and fure course, such as was approved in Amm. Marevery Man's judgment, and befeemed well the cellin. wisdom of a Commander, did nevertheless, contrary to all fense and discretion, forgothe same, and cast himself upon the hazard of that which Fugitives had vainly reported. Concerning which, as it is noted, that Incredulity is hurtful only Solin increduto the unbeliever; fo this passage proveth, that its next ret for a Commander to be too light of belief, is in redulitar, a danger to the whole Party, and bringeth hillo de viz. many to ruine, that had no part in that Creed. Cafar, in the relation hereof, noteth three special things in Curio, that carried him headlong to this difafter, and may ferve as marks to avoid the like difafter.

The first was, Juvenilis ardor, his youthful courage and heat: which is always attended with ftrong affections, futing the quality and temperature of the Body, being then in the prime height of ftrength, and accordingly led on with violent motions; whereas Age goeth flowly and coldly Hebetions forward, and is always surer in undertaking, than quam acution hot-spur Youth. And albeit no Man in cold res at plant. blood could better advise than Curio, or foresee roman edit with better providence; yet his youthful boldness minipratic over-swayed his discourse, and drew all to a miss. Thursdidness of the curious country of the curious countr chief, in despight of his wisdom. The second was, Superioris temporis proventus, the happy iffue of former proceedings: which of all other conditions is to be suspected, and needeth Gods affiftance more than any other fortune; for that no Man fooner erreth, or is more uncapable dis maxime that no Man 100ner erretti, or is more unexpanse dis maxine of Order, than fuch as are in profesery. And dessimple therefore Plato refuled to make Laws for them of rendes lib. Cyrone; as a matter of great difficulty, to give Cyrone; Ordinances to Men that were in happiness. And mederation doubtless, such is the exorbitancy of our Nature, dividuem that nothing better informeth it than Croffes; contubernium, which are as Instructions and Warnings, for the preventing of ruining Calamities. Wherein Curio was not beholding to Fortune at all; that dandled him in her Lap for a while, to cast him out at blanda funlength headlong to his ruin. It had been much ris Deceptor better, she had exchanged a frown with a favour, mais, bets rather than to have given him much good toge-pit. ther, and referve an irrecoverable diffrace for Luc lib. 4.

The third was, Fiducia rei bene gerenda: which Imprudenti The third was, require to the government which impresses favoureth more of Folly than any of the former; emplaced, it being always an argument of an imprudent formen is Man, to affure himself of good fortune. For some de Prefumption, being ever accompanied with Neg-beneficits. ligence, is subject to as many Casualties, as those Incauta sim that go unarmed upon extremity of danger. And ferming the these were the three things that miscarried Curio, negigent.

Our of which we may observe with Xenophon, Egssip, ilb., et al., and the last of the las that Ingens & arduum opus est recte imperare, Cyti. it is a weighty and difficult matter to command and dissentions of the Leptitani, he was detained at home in his Kingdom; but that Saburra his Lieutenant was sent with some competent Forces, and was not far from Utica. To which reports giving too light and easie credit, he altered his · Callicrati- purpose, * and resolved to put the matter to trial des cum La of Battel: Whereunto his youthful heat, the great-cedemonio ness of his Courage, the success of former time, fufferbello and his confidence in the managing of that War, renter the data of the standard of the standar tit ad extre-incamped under the command of Saburra: But the War in length.

mum omnia: King followed after with all his Forces, and lay temere cum continually within fix miles, or thereabouts. The Horsemen sent before; and making their confligens, Journey in the Night, fet upon the Enemy at un-niorum opes awares, and not thinking of their approach: for corruerunt the Numidians Lodge, scattered here and there in a barbarous manner, without any Government or Order. And surprising them thus oppressed with sleep, and scattered upon the ground, they slew a great number of them: the rest, in great terror and amazement, escaped by flight. Which service being thus executed, the Cavalry returned to Curio, and brought the Captives unto him. Curio was and volugal the Capitoes also min. Callo was gone out about the fourth Watch of the Night with all his Forces, having left five Cohorts for a Gar-rison to his Camp: And having marched six miles, he met with the Cavalry, underftood what was done, and inquired of the Captives, who was General of the Camp at Bagrada. They answered, Saburra. He omitted for haste of his way to inform himfelf of the rest: But turning himself to the next Ensigns, said, You see, Soldiers, that the confession of the Captives doth agree with that which was

CHAP. XVI.

Lib. II.

Curio purfueth the Enemy, with more haft than THe Principles and Maxims of War are algood Success.

Hat which the Cavalry had exploited was certainly a matter of great Service; espe-cially the small number of them, being compared with the great multitude of the Numidians: And yet notwithstanding, they spake of these things with greater Ostentation than the Truth would bear; as Men are willing to divulge their own Praifes. Besides, they shewed much spoil which they had taken; Captives and Horses were brought out; that whatfoever time was omitted, feemed to be a let and hindrance to the Victory: By which means, the desires and endeavours of the Soldiers were no way short of the hope which Curio had conceived. Who commanding the Cavalry to follow him, marched forward with as much halte as he could; to the end he might find the Enemy distracted and astonished at the Flight and Overthrow of their Fellows. But the Horsemen having Travelled all Night, could by no means follow after. Whereby it happened that some stayed in one place, Some in another: Yet this did not hinder or dis-

Juba being advertised by Saburra of the conflict in the Night, sent instantly Two Thousand Spanish and French Horse, which he kept about him for the Safety of his Person, and such of the Foot Troops as he most trusted, to succour and relieve him: He himself, with the rest of the Forces, and forty Elephants, followed foftly after. Saburra suspecting by the Horsemen coming before, that Curio himself was at hand, Embattelled all his Forces; Commanding them, that under a pretence of counterfeit Fear, they should Retreat by little and little; himself, when occasion served, would give them the sign of Bat-tel, with such other directions as should be expedient.

courage Curio in his hopes.

Curio was strengthened in his former hope, with the opinion of the present occasion. For sup-posing the Enemy had sled, he drew his Forces from point the upper ground into the Plain; wherein, after he bad marched a good space (the Army having Travelled sixteen Mile) he made a stand. Saburra gave the fign to his Men of beginning the Battel, led on his Army, went about his Troops to exhort and encourage his Soldiers. Howbeit, he used his Footmen only for a shew a far off, and sent the Cavalry to give the charge. Curio was not wanting to his Men; but wished them to set all their confidence in their Valour. The Soldiers (howsoever harrassed and wearied) and the Horsemen (although but a very few, and those spent with Travel) yet wanted no courage or desire to Fight. But these being but two hundred in number (for the rest Stayed by the way) what part of the Army Soever they charged, they forced the Enemy to give way: But they could neither follow them far as they fled, nor put their Horses to any round or long career.

At length, the Cavalry of the Enemy began from both the Wings to circumvent our Army, and to gall them behind: And as our Cohorts iffued out from the Battel towards them, the Numidians (through their nimbleness) did easily avoid the shock; and again, as they turned back to their Ranks, enclosed them about, and cut them off from the Battel: So then acoust, and the total of the second of the hazard of adventure.

OBSERVATION.

ways to be held firm, when they are taken with their due circumstances: For every Rule hath a qualified flate, and confifteth more in Cautions and Exceptions, than in authority of Precept. It is true, that nothing doth more advantage a Victory, than the Counsel of Lamachus, the third Duke of the Aslenians; which Thucyd. was, to fet upon an Enemy when he is affrigh- lib. 7 ted and diffracted; for fo there is nothing to be expected on his behalf but Despair and Confusion. But either to be mistaken therein, or otherwise to make such haste to observe this Rule of War (as Curio did) that the best part of the Army fhall lie by the way, and the reft that go on shall be so spent with Labour as they are altogether unfit for Service, and yet (to make the matter worse) to bring them into a place of disadvantage, to encounter a ftrong and fresh Enemy, is to make the circumstances oversway the Rule, and by a Maxime of War to be directed to an Overthrow: Neglecting altogether that which is observed by Sextus Aurelius Victor, Satis celeriter fit, quicquid commode geritur, that which is well done, is done foon enough.

CHAP. XVII.

Curio Defeated and Slain. Some few of the Army get passage to Sicily: The rest yield themselves

He Enemy was oftentimes reinforced by Casar. fuccours from the King, our Men had fpent their strength, and fainted through wearines: Such as were Wounded, scould neither leave the Battel, nor be conveyed into a place of safety. The whole Army being encompassed about with the Cavalry of the Enemy (whereby despairing of their safety, as Men commonly do, when their Life draws towards an end) they either lamented their own Death, or recommended their Friends to good Fortune, if it were possible that any might escape out of that danger: All parts were filled with fear and lamentation.

Curio, when he perceived the Soldiers to be fo affrighted, that they gave ear neither to his Exhortations nor Entreaties, he commanded them (as the last hope they had of Safety) that they should all fly unto the next Hills, and thither he commanded the Ensigns to be carried. But the Cavalry fent by Saburra had also possessed that place before; whereby our Men began to fall into utter despair, and partly were slain as they fled by the Horsemen, or fell down without Wounding. Cn. Domitius, General of the Horse, standing with a few Horsemen about him, perswaded Curio to save himself by flight, and to get the Camp; promising not to leave or forsake him. But Curio considently replied, that he would never come in Cæsar's fight, having lost the Army com-mitted unto him; and thereupon fighting Valiantly,

A few Horsemen saved themselves from the fury of the Battel; but fuch of the Rereward as stayed by the way to refresh their Horses, perceiving a far off the Rout and Flight of the whole Army, returned Curio in the Camp, exhorted his Men not to be difcouraged. They prayed and befought him, they might be transported into Sicily. He promised them they should; and to that end gave order to the Ma-others, that Varus was at hand with the Legions, and that they saw the dust of the Army marching towards them; whereas there was no fuch matter at all: Others suspected the Enemies Navy would speedily make to them; insomuch as every Man shifted for himself: Such as were already on Ship-Board made haste to be gone. Their departure gave occasion to the Ships of Burthen to follow after.

CHAP.

A few small Barks were obedient to the Command: But the Shore being thronged with Soldiers, fuch was the contention, which of all that multitude should get aboard, that some of the Barks were sunk with press of People, and the rest, for fear of the like Casualty, durst not come near them. Whereby it happened, that a few Soldiers, and Masters of Families (that through favour or pity prevailed to be taken in, or could swim unto the Ships) were carried back, safe into Sicily. The rest of the Forces, sending by Night some of the Centurions as Embassadors to Varus, surrendred themselves unto these Soldiers before the Town, cried out presently, that they were part of his Booty: And thereupon gave order that a great number of them should be Slain, and selecting a few of the rest, sent them anto his Kingdom: Varus complaining in the mean while, that his Faith and Promise was violated, and yet durft not resist it. The King rode into the Town attended with many Senators, amongst whom was Ser. Sulpitius, and Licinius Damasippus: And remaining there a few days, gave such order for things as he thought fit, and then returned to his Kingdom with all his Forces.

OBSERVATION.

Latis A Nd this was the period which Divine Power maning of Curio's reduce Criteria and the Criteria and the Criteria and the Criteria as they were lost e're they were aware: Like a dam-Lucai. Tempest at Sea, that swalloweth up Vessels in fters of Ships, that the next Evening they should the same place, where a little before they swam Edom wis labring all the Skiffes to the Shore. But such was most proudly, and in the like irrecoverable man friedring. So oring all the skilles to the source. Due june was mon product, and in the lace incorrection man frience, & the alfonishment and terror of all Men, that fome inc. For War is not capable of a fecond from recording awe out, that Juba's Forces were already come; one fault being enough to ruine an Army, and to the first the first production of the first production of the first production. disable Curio for ever doing the like : Of whom bis peccare. Lucan hath left this Memorial;

> Haud alium tanta civem tulit indole Roma, Aut cui plus leges deberent recta sequenti. Perdita nunc primum nocuerunt secula, postquam Ambitus, & luxus, & opum metuenda facultas, Transverso mentem dubiam torrente tulerunt; Momentumque fuit mutatus Curio rerum, Gallorum captus Spoliis & Cafaris auro.

> So Vertuous Citizen Rome never bred; Whilst right, the Laws a Friend like him ne'er

> But the bad Times first took him from his hold: Ambition, Riot, and the force of Gold In a wrong ftream foon drew his wavering

> Of great concern which way foe'er inclin'd, Fetch'd off with Gallick Spoils and Cafar's Gifts.

The next day after, Juba seeing the Cohorts of His Body lay unburied, as a witness of Numi-Natio condian Hate (which is always extream, like the effue Curis heat of the Country) and of Juba's particular Revenge, for tendring an Edict to the People, to Confiscate his Kingdom.

To conclude this Commentary; The loss either Party sustained unto this Stage of the War, was in these particulars: Pompey was driven out of Italy, lost Marseilles, and both the Provinces of Spain; Casar received this loss in Africk, besides that in the Adriatick Sea, where Antonius mifcarried, whereof he maketh no mention in these Commentaries. And, as when Jupiter weighed Home Minds the Fortune of the Greeks and the Trojans in a pair of Balances, it fell out the Greeky had more ill luck than the Trojans; to the Fortune of these Parties being weighed, by the relation made thereof, it falleth plainly out, that Pompey had

And thus endeth the Second Commentary.

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

T is a Maxim held by all, and neglected by the greatest Difficulties, and have obtain'd glo-Book : Trebonius had reduc'd those of Marfeilles to the utmost extremity by a wonderful Labour, when, during a Truce he had granted them out of Mercy, his Soldiers neglecting their Guards, invited them to break it; and he saw all those Works burnt in one Hour which had been divers Months a raifing. Which ought to teach us never to deviate from the severity of Military Difcipline in War. Altho' the Soldiers grumble at it, it is better to give them any other fort of fa-tisfaction, and when they fee their Captains sharing with them in all the perils and farigues of War, they go through them chearfully. For we read that several Captains, by an exact observation of Military Discipline have surmounted King Juba's coming, of taking a good resolutimany, that it is necessfary to keep a better rious Victories: And that feveral others have Guard during a Truce than at all other been fiamefully beaten for having defpised it: Times. We have a notable Inftance of it in this But there are no Examples that the objervation But there are no Examples that the observation of the faid Discipline ever caus'd the loss of a Battle, or the ruine of an Enterprise.

A great Courage without Experience is more capable of committing a great fault in War, than an indifferent one. For the first is commonly attended with prefumption, and not so capable to hearken to Advice as the other; especially when it has met with fuccess in the beginning of a War. Curio is a famous Example of it. From being a Tribune of the People he became General of an Army; and indeed he committed feveral remarkable Faults. For after having had the good Fortune to beat his Enemies, and to shut them up in Utica, and upon the news of on to retire into his Camp, which was on the Sea-fide, and well Fortified, and provided with Juba to beat him with ease. Which proves, that all things, there to expect the remainder of his neither Courage alone makes a good Captain Army; upon the very first Advice he receives that the Reinforcement is inconfiderable, and that it is not commanded by Juba in Person, without staying for a confirmation, without confidering, and without believing any body, he quits his first Resolution, goes out to Fight him: After his Cavalry had met with fome Parties of Juba's, of which they brought some Prisoners to him; he enquires who Commands them, and they answering that it was Saburra, he concludes that Juba is not there. Thus he confirms himself in his first Error, and marches so fast and so far that he finds himself twenty five Miles distant from his Camp,in a Country he did not know, with part of his fo fast, and to know whither one is going; than

Lib. II.

Juba to beat him with ease. Which proves, that neither Courage alone makes a good Captain (tho it contributes very much towards it) nor yet the reading of Books, nor Eloquence; but that it requires a long Experience, and to have feen Defeats as well as Victories. For he that has never been engaged in them can never imagine what it is, the bravest Soldiers sometimes committing the basest Actions on these occasions; as it happen'd in this, in which tho' the refidue of that Army was retir'd in a well Fortifi'd Camp, and not Artack'd: They Embark'd themfelves with fo much Confusion and Disorder, that a confiderable part of them were Drowned. Therefore I conclude, that it is better not to go Men (the rest not having been able to follow him) to be oblig'd to sly shamefully, or to Perish.

T be

The Third COMMENTARY of the CIVIL WARS.

The Argument.

The former Books contain the Drifts and Defigns which these famous Chiefs attempted and prosecuted, while they were asunder. And now cometh their Buckling at hand to be related; together with the judgment which the War gave of the Cause in question, on Casar's behalf.

CHAP. I.

Cafar giveth Order at Rome, for matter of Credit and Ufury, and other things.

Hear the Dictator, holding the Assembly for Election of Magistrates, Julius Cælar and Publius Servilius were created Confuls: For in that Year he was capable by Law to be chosen thereunto. These things being ended, for a fmuch as he found that credit was very scant throughout all Italy, and that Money lent upon Trust was not paid; he gave order that Arbitrators should be appointed, to make an estimation of Posfessions and Goods, according as they were valued be-fore the War; and that the Creditors should take them at that rate for their Moneys. For this course be thought to be fittest and most expedient, as well for the taking away of any fear of composition, or new assurances for the quitting and abolishing of all Debts (which do commonly fall out upon Wars and civil Broils) as also for the keeping and preserving of the Debtor's credit.

In like manner he restored the ancient course of Appeal, made by the Prators and Tribunes to the People; as also certain courses used in suing for Magistracy (which were taken away by a Law made in Pompey's Time, when he kept the Legions about him in the City;) and likewise reformed such Judgments in Suits and Tryals of Law, as were given in Cases, when the matter in controversie was heard by one when the master in controvers was hears oy one Judge, and the Sentence pronounced the same day by another Judge. Last of all, whereas divers shood condemned for offering their service nanto him in the beginning of the Civil War, if he should think it sit to accept thereof; and holding himself as much obliged num them, as if he had used it: He thought origes unto them, as if he had used it: He thought it best expedient for them to be acquitted by the People, rather than by his Commandment and Au-thority; least he should either seem ungrateful, in not acknowledging their Deserts; or arrogant, in assuming to himself that which belonged to the

The First OBSERVATION.

CASar, as he was Dictator, holding the affembly for the choice of Magistrates, himself the Year of Rome 705. which was just Ten Years after his first Consulship; whereby he became capable thereof, by the Law published by Sylla, wherein it was provided, That no Man flould be chosen to an Office, within Ten Years after he had supplied the same. In this Year happened all these things which are contained in 1500 c nappened all their things which are contained in this Third Commentary; as Patereulus noteth in thefe words; C. Cefar and P. Servilius being Confuls, Pempey was milerably Madfacred after three Confulthips and three Triumphs; and was Slain, the day before his Birth-day, being Aged 53 Years. The Choice day was regularly the first of January: And the Assembly was called Comitium Centuriatum.

Touching the difference of these Affemblies, the Parties present thereat, the manner of the choice, and other circumstances appertaining, the Reader may receive Information at large by Lib. 6. de coRoffius. Only it is to be remembred, that Comitia miliis. Centuriata were never holden without confent of the Senate. And forafmuch as the chief part of them were with Pompey, Lucan taketh exception at this Creation.

-- Mærentia tečta Lib. t. Casar habet, vacuasque domos legesque silentes, Clausaque justitio tristi fora. Curia solos Illa videt Patres, plena quos urbe fugavit.

Sad Roofs and empty Houses Cafar found. The Laws were filenc'd, and the Courts shut up. No Fathers met in Senate, only they, Who, when the Town was full, were forc'd

The Persons that were Suiters for the Consulthip were called Candidati; who oftentimes used Anno Urb. extraordinary means to attain the same. This 701. moved Pompey to make a Law, That no Man should sue for publick Offices by Bribes, or other corrupt Courles; and it was called Lex de Ambitu, which indeed was but renewed: For the Ling lib. 7. fame was set on foot, Anno Urb. 395. by Perilius, in set. Tribune of the People; and renewed again by Pub. Cornelius Cethegus, Anno 572. and within a while after made Capital, as far as Banishment concerned the Party. Coponius was fo Conwith P. Servilius Isauricus were made Confuls, in demned, having bought a Voice with an Lit. 7.

2 Offic.

*Four Gallons * Amphora of Wine. The Law which Pompey an Aspick, which, upon the Insusion of her Ve-Accuser two hours to lay open the matter, and

The Second OBSER VATION.

The fecond thing I observe, is the difficulty of taking up Money upon Credit, in time of Trouble or Wars: Which Cefar expresses in these terms; Cum sides tota Italia effet augustior, In regard Credit was very scant throughout all Italy. The word Fides hath ever been taken for a real performance of any Promife or Agreement, which Tully calleth the Foundation of Ju-Lib. 1. office. And the very prop of a Commonweal; res vehementi- taking the Etymon to grow, Quia fiat quod dictum, ns rempnb. because that which was spoken is done. Accorcontrol grammer ding to that of Nomius Marcellus; Fides nomen drans three. Sextans two. Unciavia, one in the folia. is infinity of the control of the contro feems to have its appellation, when that's done which was spoken. And for that Men commonly are Covenant-keepers, not fo much by the perfection of their Nature, as out of strictness of Law, it falleth out, that where there are no Laws, there is no Performance; and consequently, little or no Credit either given or kept in time of War, because Silent leges inter arma, Laws are silenc'd in time of War.

Cafar, to provide for this inconvenience, ap-In the Life of pointed Commissioners to rate every Man's Lands and Possessions, as they were valued before the Wars, and to satisfie the Creditors with the same. Which Plutarch explaineth in this manner; That the Creditors should take Yearly two parts of the Revenue of their Debtors, until such time as they had paid themselves; and that the Debtors should have the other third to live withal. Whereof it feemed he had fome light, by a Precedent in the Confulship of Valerius Publicola, which is extant in Livy; Novi consules fancbrem quoque rem levare aggressi, solutionem æris alieni in publicam curam verterant, quinque viris creatis, quos mensarios, ab dispensatione pecunia appellarunt: The new Confuls intending to ease the People in point of Ufury, made the payment of Debts a part of the publick Care, and created five Men to that purpole, who were called Mensarii, from their disposal of those Monies.

This general Acquittance for Debts, the Romans called Novæ Tabulæ; in this respect, as Calius Rhodiginus hath it, Quod cum pecunia creditæ obæratis condonantur, novæ mox co-oriuntur Tabule, quibus nomina continentur nova; in regard that when the Debt was remitted to the is ordinary amongst our Bankrupts, compounding for so much in the Pound with their Creditors, upon new Affurance, and other Security, which they called Nova Tabula; agreeing to that of Tully: Tabulæ vero novæ quid habent argumenti, nisi ut emas mea pecunia fundum, eum tu habeas, ego non habeam pecuniam? What elle mean thele new Tables, but that you shall buy a piece of Ground with my Money, and keep it to your self, himself of Men and Munition, and neither War Ground with my Money, and keep it to your felf, whilft I go without my Money?

Concerning matter of Usury, which was the neter entium, ground of this Milchief, Tacisus noteth it, as an Athens, Pontus, Bithynia, Syria, Cilicia, Phoedigiordisold and deadly Difease, and the cause of many The factor of the control of the con now made, was very strict, as † Dio noteth: For nom, putteth the Patient into a heavy Slumber; it was ordained. That upon producing of Witnesses and in a short time, bringeth all a Man's Subnesses the Process should end in a day, giving the stance to Death and Destruction. And thereupon it is called Fanus à fatu, from the fertile Lie Detender three to make Answer; and the and ample encrease of Money. For, as Basil Judgment instantly followed. The rigour of moteth, The Labourer lofeth the Seed, and contented himself with the East and contented the seed, and contented himself with the East and contented himse the Ufurer will have the Fruit, and yet not lose the Seed. Whereby there must needs grow great Increase. The Law of the Twelve Tables was, Ne quis unciario fanore amplius exerceto, That no Man for the future take upon Use One in the Hundred.

The highest rate was Centesima Usura; when the hundredth part of the Principal was paid every Month to the Creditor, and was twelve per Cent. The next was Usura deunx, when the Debtor paid eleven in the Hundred for a Year. The third Dextans, which was ten per Cent. Dodrans nine. Bes eight. Septunx usura seven. Semis six. Quincunx sive. Triens sont. Quadrans three. Sextans two. Unciaria, one in the of Usury: For, being demanded, Quid maxime Tuly 2.05 in re familiari expediret? Respondit, bene pascere: Quid secundum ? Satis bene pascere : Quid tertium? Bene vestire : Quid quartum? Arare. Et cum ille qui quesierat dixisset, Quid fenerari? Quid bominem, inquit, occidere? What was the most exminem, induit, occurre: what was the most expedient thing in Housholdry? answered, Good Diet: What the second? Enough good Diet: What the third? Good Cloaths: What the fourth? Ploughing: And when he that que-ftion'd him thus, faid, What think you of taking Use? he replyed, What is it to Kill a Man? Pecsonia que Oler ne replycu, what is it to rain a main receive que Allowing (as it feemeth) no means of getting renderating Money, but those which Aristotle took to be times ome most agreeing to Nature: Which is from the but sh, frait Fruits of the Earth, and the Increase of our Cat. distus & anited tel; with such other courses as are answerable Republib. 1

CHAP. II.

A particular view of Pompey's Forces.

N the accomplishing of these things, as also ce-Casar lebrating the Latin Holy-Days, and holding the Affemblies of the People, having spent eleven days, he gave over his Dictatorship, left the City, and came to Brundussum. For he had commanded seven Legions, and all his Cavalry to repair thither. Howbeit, he found no more Shipping ready than would hardly Transport Fifteen Thousand Legionary Soldiers, and Five Hundred Horse; the Debtor, new Tables were made, wherein new mant of Shipping feeming to binder him from Names were put; and is nothing elfe, but what bringing the War to a speedy end. Moreover, is ordinary amongst our Bankrupts, compounding those Forces which were Shipped, were but weak; in regard that many of them were lost in the Wars of Gallia, and lessened likewise by their long Journey out of Spain : Besides that, the unwholsome Autumn in Apulia, and about Brundusium, had made the whole Army ill disposed, being newly come > nor Enemy to trouble him, had got together a great Navy out of Asia from the Cyclade Isles, Corcyra, Commentaries of the Civil Wars. Asia and Syria, and of all the Kings, Dynasties, crifice was a white Bull, kill'd and offered by Tetrarchs, and free States of Achaia; and had likewise compelled the Corporations of those Provinces to contribute the like Summ. He had Enrolled nine Legions of Roman Citizens : Five which be had transported out of Italy; one old Legion out of Sicily, which being compounded and made of two, be called the Twin; one out of Creet and Macedonia, old Soldiers, who being discharged by former Generals, had resided in those Provinces; and two out of Asia, which Lentulus the Conful had caused to be Enrolled. Besides, he had distributed amongst those Legions, under the name of a supply, a great number of Thessaly, Bocotia, Achaia, and Epi-

Amongst these he had mingled Antony's Soldiers: And besides these, he expected to be brought by Scipio out of Syria, two Legions. Of Archers out of Crete, Lacedæmon, Pontus, and Syria, and the rest of the Cities, he had 3000; six Cohorts of Slingers, two Mercenary, and 7000 Horse. Where-of Deiotarus had brought 600 Gauls; Ariobarzanes 500 out of Cappadocia; Cotus out of Thracia had sent the like number, under the leading of his Son Sadalis. From Macedonia came 200 Commanded by Rascipolis, a Captain of great Fame and Vertue. From Alexandria came 500, part Gauls, and part Germans; which A. Gabinius had left there with King Ptolomy, to defend the Town. Pompey the Son had brought with the Navy, 800 of his Shepherds and Servants. Tarcondarius, Caftor, and Donilaus, had fent Three Hundred out of Gallogræcia; of whom, one came himself, and the other sent his Son. Two Hundred were sent out of Syria, by Comagenus of Antioch, whom Pompey had presented with great Gifts: Most of which were Arbalestriers on Horseback.

To these were added Dardans and Bessi, partly for Pay and Entertainment, and partly got by Command or Favour; besides Macedonians, Thessalians. and of divers other Nations and Cities: Insomuch and by avers order various and ciries: informaces as he filled up the number formerly spoken of. He provided great quantity of Corn out of Thessay, Asia, Crete, Cyrene, and the rest of those Regions. He determined to Winter at Dyrrachium, Apollonia, and all the Maritime Towns, to keep Cæsar from passing the Sea: And to that end, he had laid and dispessed his Navy all along the Sea-Coast. Pompey the Son was Admiral of the Egyptian Ships; D. Lælius and C. Triarius, of those that came out of Asia. C. Cassius Commanded them of Syria; and C. Marcellus, with C. Pomponius, the Ships ifficient for the place: Which made him keep of Rhodes. Scribonius Libo and M. Octavius his House all that Year. Whereupon came this had charge of the Liburian and Achaian Navy.

Howheit M. Bibulus Commanded in chief in all Sea causes; and to him was left the Superintendency of the Admiralty.

The First OBSERVATION.

Laine Feria. Concerning these Latina Feria, it is to be noted, that the Romans had two sorts of Feri.e, or Holy-Days; the one called Annales, which came alweys to be kept on a certain day, and thereupon were called Anniversarii, or Yearly: The other, Conceptive; which were Arbitrary, and folemnized upon fuch days, as the Magistrates and Priests thought most expedient, whereof these Latina Feria were chief; and were kept on Mount Albane, to Jupiter Latiar or Latialis, for the health and prefervation of all the Latin People, in League and Confederacy with the People of Rome, and were folemnized in remembrance of the Truce between those two Nations: During which Feast, the Romans held it unlawful to make any War. The Sa- leave the Confuls, and the Flesh distributed to the Inhabitants of Latium; according to an ancient Treaty of Alliance between them, Engraven for a perpetual Memory in a Column of Brass. The particulars whereof are expressed at large tions. Rom. by Dionysius Halicarnasseus.

The Second OBSERVATION.

The second thing coming to be noted, is the view taken of Pompey's Forces: Which are nine compleat Legions, besides the Supplies here particularly mentioned, fent from fuch as bare affection to that Party; and, by indifferent Calculation, might amount in all, to near about Threescore Thousand Men, together with the favour of the Country, where the tryal was to be made by the ftroke of War.

In which Mufter were the Soldiers of C. Antonius; whose Misfortune these Commentaries have either willingly forgot, or fome other chance hath wip'd it clean out. Howbeit Florus hath it recorded, that Cafar having fent Dolg- Lib 4. cap. 2. bella and Antonius to feize upon the Streights. and entrance of the Adriatick Sea, the one took hold of the Coast of Sclavonia, and the other near unto Corfu: When upon a fuddain came Octavius and Libo, Pompey's Lieutenants, and with great Forces (they had aboard their Ships) furprized both the one and the other; whereby Antonius was constrained to yield up fifteen Com-panies, which were these Soldiers of Antonius here mentioned.

Rascipolis, or Rascupolis, was a Thracian of great Fame, that followed Pompey; and his Brother Rascus betook himself to Casar, upon an appointment made between themselves. For finding in the Country where they dwelt, two Appianits 4. great Factions in opposition, and doubting which Party to take, they divided themselves, as the best approved part of Neutrality: And held likewise the same course, in the War between Brutus and Octavius, continuing unto the Battel of Philippi. Upon the iffue whereof, Rafeus demanded no other Reward for his Service, than the Life of his Brother: Which was eafily granted.

This Bibulus, Pompey's High-Admiral, was Fellow-Conful with Cafar, in the Year of Rome 694. but Cafar fo out-ftript him in the managing of things, that he much suspected himself, as in-

Non Bibulo quicquam nuper, sed Casare factum: Nam Bibulo fieri confule nil memini.

Cafar did all, nought Bibulus did do: Of Conful Bibulus no act I know.

CHAP. III.

Cafar paffeth over into Greece, and returneth his Shipping to Brundusium. Offavius Besiegeth

Efar, upon his Arrival at Brundusium. called the Soldiers together; and shewed them, that forafmuch as they were almost come to an end of all their Labours and Dangers, they would now be content to leave willingly behind them their Servants behind them their Servants and Carriages in Italy, and go aboard clear of those incumbrances, to the end, the greater number of Soldiers might be taken in; and that they should expect the supply of all these things from Victory, and his Liberality, Every Man cried out, That he skould command what he would, and they would willingly obey it.

The second of the Nones of January, he weighed Anchor, having (as is formerly shewed) shipped seven Legions. The next day he came to Land at the Promontory of Ceraunium, having got a quiet Road amongst the Rocks and places of danger. For doubting how he might safely venture upon any of the known Ports of that Coast; (which he suspected to be kept by the Enemy) he made choice of that place which is called Pharfalus; and there arriving in Safety with all his Ships, he landed his Soldiers.

At the same time, Lucretius Vespillo and Minutius Rufus (by order from Lælius) were at Oricum, with eighteen Ships of Asia: and M. Bibulus was likewife at Corfu, with one hundred and ten Ships. But neither durst those come out of the Port, although Casar had not in all above twelve Ships of War, to wast him over; amongst which, he him-self was imbarked: Neither could Bibulus come foon enough, his Ships being unready, and his Ma-riners ashore; for that Cæsar was descried near the Continent, before there was any bruit of his coming continent, before there was any vital of the conting in all those Regions. The Soldiers being landed, he fent back the same Night the Shipping to Brundu-fium; that the other Legions, and the Cavalry might be brought over.

Fusius Calenus, the Legate, had the charge of this service, and was to use all celerity in transporting over the Legions: but fetting out late, and omitting the opportunity of the Night Wind, they failed of their purpose in returning back. For Bibulus being certified at Corsu of Cæsar's arrival, bulus being certified at Corlu of Cælar's arrival, and hoping to meet with some of the Ships of burthen, met with the empty Ships going back to Brundustum: And having taken thirty of them, he wreaked his anger (conceived through grief and emission) and set them all on sire, consuming therein both the Masters, and the Mariners; hoping by the rigour of that punishment, to terrifie the reft.

This being done, he possest all the Coasts, from Salonæ to Oricum, with Ships and Men of War; appointing Guards with more diligence than for-merly had been used. He himself, in the depth of Winter, kept Watch a Ship-board, not refusing any labur or duty, nor expeding any succeur, if he bappened to meet with Cæsar. But after the departure of the Liburnian Gallies, M. Octavius, with such Ships as he had with him, came from Illyricum to Salonæ; and there having incited the Dalmatians, and other barbarous People, drew Hista from Cæsar's Party. And finding that he could not move them of Salonæ, neither with promise nor threatnings, he resolved to besiege the Town. The place was strong by nature, through the advantage of a Hill; and the Roman Citizens (there inhabiting) had made Towers of Wood to fortifie it within: But finding themselves too weak to make refiftance (being wearied out and spent with Wounds) they fell at length to the last refuge of all; which was to enfranchize all their Bond-slaves, above the age of fourteen Years; and cutting their Womens Hair, they made Engines thereof.

Their resolution being known, Octavius incompassed the Town about with five Camps: and at one instant of time began to force them by Siege, and by Assault. They being resolved to undergo all extremities, were much pressed through want of Corn; and thereupon sending Messengers to Casax, sought help of him. Other inconveniences they endured as they

And after a long time, when the continuance of the Siege had made the Octavians remis and negligent (taking the opportunity of the Noon time. when the Enemy was retired aside, and placing their Children and Women on the Wall, that nothing might feem omitted of that which was usual) they themfelves, together with fuch as they had lately infranchiled brake into the next Camp unto the Town. Which being taken, with the same violence they see upon another; and then upon the third, and so upon the fourth, and in the end, upon the fifth; driving the Enemy out of all the Camps: and having flain a great number, they forced Octavius, and the rest remaining, to betake them to their Ships; and so the Siege ended. For Octavius despairing to take the Town, the Winter approaching, and having re-ceived such losses, retired to Pompey at Dyrra-

The First OBSERVATION.

T hath been generally conceived, that there is little or no use of Women in times of War, but that they are a burthen to fuch as feek Honour by deeds of Arms; and do better fute the licentioulnels of Peace, than the dangers of Warfare. Whereof Andromache is made an inftance; from liad. 6. that which Homer reporteth of her Tears, Sighs, and Prayers, to withdraw Hector from those valorous Exploits, which he undertook for the defence of Troy. And therefore they are by Ovid wished to handle the Distaff and the Spindle, and leave the Wars, as fitter for Men, than the weakness of their Sex.

---- columque I cape cum calathis, & stamina pollice torque : Bella relinque viris -

Go take thy Basket on thy Head, And at the Diftaff twift thy Thread. Leave Wars to Men -

Nevertheless it cannot be denied, that howso-ever the tenderness of Women doth require a paffive course of life, under the shelter of a safe roof, rather than in the bleak ftorms of active endeavour; yet there have been fome Viragoes, that have over-topped the pride of Men in points Juff. lib. 1. of War: amongst whom, Semirams may lead Herode lib 1. the reft; together with Tomyra, Cyrus's Miftres Sigifin. Bar. by Conquet. As also Zenobia, that fubdued the in Molern Perflan; and Helena, Queen of the Ruffer. Besides other noble Spirits, that could answer such as rold them News of the death of their Sons in Battel, That they had brought them into the World for that only purpose. Which do prove, as well a real, as a potential aptness of that Sex, to the use and practice of Arms.

And if any Man (as unwilling to afford them fo much worth) will know wherein they avail the fortune of a War, he may take notice, that 2 and bonglish even in Expeditions (wherein they are most sub- si quam un ject to exceptions) they always give acceptable mentum? affishances to their Husbands, both in their Provi-Tac 1:3. fions, and otherwife; and are fuch Companions, Annal as can hardly be left at home, without danger of cufficile rate of the control of the co greater hazard.

But in places befieged, Women do not only conjugia. afford Hair to make Ropes, if need require (as it fell out in this Siege) but are able to cast pieces of Mill-stones upon the Enemy, with better fortune Judg. 9fometimes than any other Man: and have thereby flain the General, to the raifing of the Siege, and faving of the City.

But to take inflances of later times: It is not be forgotten, that when the Arch-Duke Mat-Field, as those in Garrison. to be forgotten, that when the Arch-Duke Matthias (after the death of Count Mansfield) commanded the Christian Army, at the siege of Stri-Anno 1595. gonium; while the Turks, within the Caftle, were making Works for a retreat, the Women (in the mean time) made good the breaches; and there bestowed fuch store of Wild-fire, that the Italian Squadrons (commanded by Aldobrandine) being joyned poldron to poldron, to press into the Breach, seemed all of a fire at once, and were forced to fall off with great terrour and confusion.

Lib. III.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Town affaulted by a warlike Enemy, is not A kept or freed with Charms or Spells; or as the Inhabitants of Tomby, in the East-Indies, drave away the Portugals, with Hives of Bees, when they were possessed of the Walls: but with fuch valour as may over-mafter the Enemy, and extend it felf to the taking of five Camps, if need require; which was performed by these Inhabitants of Salona.

CHAP. III.

Cafar fendeth to Pompey, touching a Peace, taketh in Oricum, Apollonia, and other places.

T is before declared, that Vibullius Rufus (one of Pompey's Lieutenants) was twice taken by Cæsar, and dismissed; once at Corsinium, and a second time in Spain. Him did Cæsar deem (in regard of the favours which he had shewed him) to be a fit Person, to be sent with a Message to Pompey; and the rather, for that he understood, that he was in good account and credit with him.

The summ of his Commission was, to tell him, That it beseemed them both to give an end to their blant ab-That it beseemed them but to give an end to their simus cele-wissunes, to lay down their Arms, and not to tempt simus cele-wissunes. Fortune any longer, either fide had been sufficiently sunpostune afficient with loss and damages: which might serve sunpostune afficient with loss and damages: which might serve sunpostune afficient might serve and Example to avoid other incomfor Instruction and Example to avoid other inconoriences. He for his part was driven out of Italy, with the loss of Sicily, Sardinia, and the Provinces of Spain, as also of one hundred and thirty Cohorts of Roman Citizens in Spain and taly. Himfelf was afflicted with the death of Curio, with the loss of the African Army, and with the furrender of the Soldiers at Corfu. And therefore they should have regard of themselves, and of the Commonwealth.

They had good experience by their own loffes. what Fortune could do in War. This was the only time to treat of Peace, whilst either Party stood confident in his own strength, and seemed of equal might and power. But if Fortune should chance to Sway to one fide, he that thought he had the by the Tribunes of the Soldiers, and Centurions, better end of the Staff, would never hearken to any conditions of Peace, nor content himself with a reasonable part, because his hope would give him all.

Concerning the Articles of Treaty, forasmuch as they could not agree thereof themselves, they ought to feek them from the Senate and People of Rome. In the mean while, it was fit that the Commonwealth and themselves should rest satisfied, if (without further delay) both of them did take an Oath in the presence of their Armies, to dismiss their Forces within three days next following; to lay down Arms, and fend away their Auxiliary Troops, wherein they fo relied; and consequently, to depend upon the judgment and decree of the People of Rome. For affurance whereof on his behalf, he Vibullius, having received these instructions from Cæsar (thinking it no less requisite to advertise Pompey of Cæsar's arrival, that he might consult of that, before he delivered what he had in charge) posted Night and Day, taking at every Stage f Horse; that he might certific Pompey this Casiar was at hand with all his Forces.

Pompey was at that time in Candavia and went out of Macedonia to Wives he spillonia, and at Dyrrachium. But being treubled at the News, he made towards Apollonia by great jour-neys, lest Cæsar should possess himself of the Maritime Cities.

Cæsar having landed bis Forces, went the next day to Oricum. Upm his approach, L. Torquatus, who commanded the Town under Pompey, and had there a Garrison of Parthians, Sourting the Gates, went about to defend the place, commanding the Gracians to take Arms, and make good to Walls. But they refusing to fight against the Power and Authority of the People of Rome, and the Townsmen endeaveuring of their own accord to receive Cæfar in; he opened the Gates, defouring of all other fuccours, gave up both himself and the Town to Caesar, and was entertained by him in safety. Oricum being taken in by Cacfar, without any further delay he went to Apollonia.

His coming being heard of, L. Straberius, the Governour, began to carry Water into the Cittadel, to fortifie it, and to require pledges of the Inhabi-tants. They, on the other fide, denied to give any, or to stut their Gates against the Consul, or of themselves to take a resolution contrary to that which all Italy and the People of Rome had thought convenient. Their affections being known, he secretly conveyed himself away. The Apollonians fent Commissioners to Casar, and received him into the Town. The Bellidenses followed their example, and the Amatini, together with the rest of the confining Ciries. And to conclude all Epirus fent unto Cælar, promifing to do what he commanded. But Pompey understanding of these things, which were done at Oricum and Apollonia, fearing Dyrrachium, posted thither Night and Day. Howbeit, upon the report of Cæsar's approach, the Army was fo aftonished, that for haste on their way, they left almost all their Ensigns in Epirus and the confining Regions: and many of them (casting away their Arms) seemed rather to slie, than to march as Soldiers.

As they came near to Dyrrachium, Pompey made a stand, and caused the Camp to be intrenched; when as jet the Army was so affrighted, that Labienus stood out first, and took a solemn Oath, Never to forfake Pompey, but to undergo what chance soever Fortune had allotted him. The same Oath took the Legates; being seconded and by all the Army, that took the like Oath.

The First OBSERVATION.

U Num est tempus (saith Cæsar) de pace agendi, dum uterque sibi considit, & pares ambo videntur; The only time to treat of Peace is, whilst either party is confident of his ftrength, and both feem of equal might and power. Which may ferve for an excellent Rule, to point out the fitteft and seasonablest time for composition between two opposite Parties. For as in quantities, equality begetteth equality, and disparity a like unevenness of nature; so in other things, as namely in Treaties of Agreement, the Conditions do commonly rise to either Party, according as they stand balIn Timeo.

lanced in the Scale of Equality; or otherwise, as the difference of their means shall allot them. For if that be true in the Extremity, which Curtius Lage a vitte hath, That Laws are given by Conquerours, and ribus discuss accepted upon all conditions, by them that are two, accipions subdued; it doth consequently follow in the two a will in. Mean, that Men find dealing proportionable to their fortune. To which purpole is that of Plato, where he saith, That Peace and Quietness consist in equality; as Trouble and Motion are always inequalitate, in equality; a femper consti- in inequality.

The Second OBSERVATION.

IT appeareth here by the fright and aftonishment of Pompey's Army, that the course he took to abandon Italy, was out of no good advice or direction. For whereas he might with far more honour, and no less hope of success, have contested with Cafar, in the place where the War brake out, and kept him to a task which should have held him from the Conquest of Spain, or such other atchievements as he eafily wrought in the absence of his Adversaries: It fell out, that his departure into Greece forted to no other end, than by time to abate the edge of the forwardest Courages, and to fuffer a numerous Army to be daunted with noise and clamours of continual Victories, gotten upon a part of themselves; and then to give occasion to the Conquerour to come in the tail of Fame, and take them difarmed of expectation, to their great amazement.

CHAP. V.

Cafar taketh up his Lodging for Winter. Bibulus diftreffed at Sea for want of Provisions, seemeth defirous of a Treaty: which being carried on the other fide with good caution, breaketh off again.

Esar understanding that his passage to Dyrrachium was thus intercepted, did forbear his haste, and incamped himself upon the River Aplus, in the confines of the Apollonians; that by the means of his Guards and Forts, such Cities as had well deserved of him, might be in Safety: and there determined to Winter, in Tents of Skin, and to attend the coming of his other Legions out of Italy. The like did Pompey, pitching his Camp on the other fide of and foreign aids. Calenus having (according to Cæsar's directions) imbarked the Legions and Cavalry at Brundusium, and taken in as many as his Shipping would contain, he fet Sail: But being gene a little out of the Port, he received Letters of Advice from Cæsar, that all the Havens and the Sea-coast was kept with the Enemies Fleet. Whereupon he made again into the Haven, and called back all the Ships: Only one, holding on her course, without regard of the command, carrying no Soldiers, but belonging to private Men, arwho spared neither bond nor free, of as many as were of age, but put all to the Sword. Whereby it happened, that in a moment of time, by great chance the whole Army was faved.

Bibulus, as is before declared, lay at Oricum with his Navy. And as he kept the Sea and the in any of those Countries: For all the Sea-coast was kept by Guards and Watches set along the Shore, that he could neither Water, get Wood, nor much as he was brought into great straits mently urged for the Truce. But Calar perceiving and exigence, for want of all necessaries; and was constrained (besides all other Provisions) to setch his Water and Wood from Corfu. And one time amongst the rest it happened, that the Weather being foul, they were forced to relieve themselves with the Dew which in the Night-time fell upon the Skins, that covered the Decks of the Ships. All which extremities they patiently endured; and would by no means be brought to leave the Ports, or abandon the Sea-coaft.

But as they were in these difficulties, and that Libo and Bibulus were come together, they both of them spake from a-shipboard to M. Acilius and Statius Murcus, Legates of whom one was Governour of the Town, and the other had the charge of fuch Guards as were along the Shore) figni-fying, that they would willingly talk with Cæsar of matters of great consequence, if they might have leave. For a better shew and affurance whereof, they intimated something concerning a Composition. In the mean time they earnestly desired there might be a Truce: For the thing they propounded im-ported matter of great weight, which they knew Cælar exceedingly affected; and it was thought that Bibulus was able to work somewhat to that purpose.

Cæsar at that time was gone with one Legion to take in some Towns farther off, and to set a course for provision of Corn, which was brought fparingly unto him; and was then at Buthrotum, opposite to Corfu. Being certified there by Letters from Acilius and Murcus, of that which Libo and Bibulus had required, he left the Legion, and returned himself to Oricum. At his arrival thither, they were called out to treat. Libo came forth, and excused Bibulus, for that he was exceeding cholerick, and had besides conceived a great anger at Cæsar, about the Ædility and Prætorship: And in regard of that, he did soun the Conference, lest a matter of that utility and importance should be disturbed by his intemperate carriage. Pompey, he faid, always was defirous that matters might be accorded, and that Arms might be laid aside: but they of themselves could do nothing therein; forasmuch as by the general resolution of Council, the Superintendency of the War, and the disposition of all things were referred to Pompey. Howbeit, when they understood what Casar required, they would fend instantly a dispatch unto Pompey, and be a means that he should accom-plish all things with good saturaction. In the mean time let there be a Truce; and until an the River Aplus; and there affembled all bin Troops answer might be returned from him, let neither Party offend one another. To this he added somewhat concerning the Cause in question, the Forces and Aids. To which Casar did not think it sit at that time to make any answer : nor do we think there is cause now to make mention thereof.

Cæsar required, that it might be lawful for him to fend Embassadors to Pompey without danger; and that they would undertake, that such as he sent, might be well intreated, or take them into their charge, and bring them safely to Pompey. Concerning the Truce, the course of the War fell out to be so caring no Soldlers, out belonging to product the rived at Oricum, and there was taken by Bibulus; ried, that they, with their Navy, did keep his Ships who spared neither band nor free, of as many as and succours from coming unto him; and he, on the other fide, did prohibit them from landing, or taking in fresh Water: And if they would have that granted unto them, let them cease guarding of the Coast; but if they would continue that, then would he continue the other. Notwithstanding, he thought the Treaty of Ports from Cæsar, so was he kept from landing accord might go on, albeit these were not omitted; for he took them to be no impediment thereunto. They would neither receive Cæsar's Embassadors, nor undertake for their safety; but referred the whole matter bring his Ships to land upon any occasion: Inso- to Pompey: only they instanced, and very wehethat all this speech tended only avoid the present totam urbem tuendam esse commission: ob earum danger, and to supply themselves of such wants where- rerum laborem & solicitudinem fructus illos datos, with they were streated, and that there was no condition of Peace to be expected, he began to think of prosecuting the War.

The First OBSERVATION.

Lib. III.

A S in contracting with a Party, it is duely to be cared, that War be not shrowded under the fair name of Peace: so a Truce demanded by an Enemy, is to be handled sparingly and with fuspicion: as a thing never commonly required, but when necessity doth move them thereunto; and not to be granted, but as it may inferr the like advantage. But to yield to a suspension of Arms, advantageous to an Enemy, and no way gainful to them that confent unto it, is neither allowable by Reason, nor Casar's Example. And if occafion prove it requifite, it must be but for a little time: For a Prince Armed in the Field, that shall entertain a Truce for any long feafon, shall fee his Army confumed both in Courage, and in the parts thereof, which will fall afunder of themselves; and was the means, by which Lewis the Eleventh put by Edward the Fourth King of England, from going on with a War that might have given him the possession of the Crown of France. Whence it is, that fuch as feek a Peace, defire no more than a ceffation of Arms, for fome reasonable time, as an introduction inforcing the fame.

Concerning Leagues, we are to note that there Fedus Pacie, are found three differences. The first is, a League of Peace: which by the Apostle's rule, should extend to all Men, Habete pacem cum omnibus, have Peace with all Men; and by example of holy Patriarchs (Isaac with Abimelech, Facob with Laban) may lawfully be made with Heathen Princes; being as the Golden Chain, that tieth Fadus Com- all the Nations of the Earth in peaceable community. The fecond is, a League of Entercourse, or Commerce; which is likewise by the same Patriarch, fending for Corn into Egypt, and Solomon's entercourse with Hiram King of Tyre, together with divers other Examples, allowable with Infidels. For Nature being rich in variety of Commodities, doth therefore divide her works amongst the Kingdoms of the Earth, that there might be a mutual entercourse of exchange be-fadus mutus tween the parts of the same. The third is, a League of Mutual Affiftance; fuch as Jehofaphat made with Achab: and it is hardly fafe with any Prince; but no way allowable with Infidels. Touching the Persons to be offered in a Treaty, it is to be observed from Bibulus, that no Man, whose presence may either give offence, or whose intemperance may any way interrupt a course forting to a happy iffue is fit for any fuch imployment.

The Second OBSERVATION.

There were in Rome certain Officers called Addites, ab Addibus, as having the care of Houses and Buildings, both publick and private, that they might be built and maintained in such manner as was agreeable to the ordinances of that State, together with other things whereof they had the charge. Nunc fum designatus Ædilis (saith Cicero) habeo rationem quod à Populo Romano acceperim, mihi lucos fanctissimos, maxima cum ceremonia, Cereri Liberoque faciendos: mihi Floram Matrem populo plebique Romana, ludorum celebritate placandam: mibi ludos antiquissmos, qui primi At length, it was answered from the other Party, Romani sunt nominati, maxima cum dignitate ac that A. Varro did offer himself for a Conference dos: mibi sacrarum Ædium procurationem; mibi sides might come and go in safety, and deliver antiquiorem in senatu sententile dicende locum, togam pratextam, fellam curulem, jus imagins, ad memoriam posteritatemque prodendam. Now that I am appointed to bear the Office of Edility, I reckon with my felf what charge I have receirection with my fert what charge I have recet-ved from the People of Rome: viz, to fee to the The publication folemnizing with highest Ceremony of the most an of their holy Plays consecrated to Ceres and Bacchus; to feeden Plays the pacifying of Flora towards the People with was cried in celebration of Plays due to her; as likewise to the Convenite ad performing of those most ancient Plays, in honour lader spectarof Jupiter, Juno, and Pallat, with the greatest dot, questioner iplendour and Religion possible: to have a care queen, ne of facred Houses, and in general of the whole speciatures City, &c. Wherein it is to be noted, that thele of. Sueton: Shows and Plays, were always made and fet forth in Claudio. at the charge and costs of the Ædiles: and thence it was, that the allowing or difallowing of all Play-Books belonged unto them. Moreover, they had the charge of all the publick Buildings and Notentern a-Works of the City, together with the provision missm capers of Victual and Corn. And for the missing of this difficile. Office, was Bibulus angry with Cafar, and would fadis & did. not be regained upon any condition.

CHAP. VI.

Bibulus dieth. Cafar useth means to procure a Treaty of Peace; but prevaileth not.

Bibulus being kept from landing many days to-gether, and fallen into a grievous fickness, through cold and extream labour (and having no means of help, nor yet willing to forgo his charge) could no longer withfland the violence of the difease. He being dead, there was none appointed to take the whole charge, but every Man commanded his own Fleet. The Hurly-burly being quieted which Castar's fudden arrival had moved, Vibullius with the affiftance of Libo, together with L. Lucceius and Theophanes, to whom Pompey was wont to communicate matters of greatest importance, resolved to de-liver what Cæsar had recommended unto him: and entring into the relation thereof, was interrupted by Pompey, forbidding him to speak any farther of that matter. What use or need have I (saith he) either of my Life, or of the City, when I shall be thought to enjoy it by Cæsar's favour? Neither can the opinion thereof be removed, until the War be ended; that of my felf I return back into Italy, from whence I am Cæsar understood this, from those that were present when he spake it: and yet notwithstanding, he endeavoured by other means to procure a Parley of Peace. For the two Camps of Pompey and Cæfar were only Separated by the River Apfus, that ran between them; where the Soldiers had often Conferences, and by agreement amongst themselves, threw no Weapon during the time of their Treaty. Whereupon he sent P. Vatinius, a Legate, to the River bank, to utter such things as did chiefly concern a Peace; and to ask oftentimes with a loud voice, whether it were not lawful for Citizens to Send to Citizens, touching a treaty of Peace; being a thing permitted to the Thieves of the Pyreneian Mountains: or at least, to move that Citizens (hould not in Arms contend with Citizens. And having spoken much very respectfully, as well concerning his own welfare, as the fafety of all the rest, be was heard with filence by the Soldiers on both fides.

religione, Jovi, Junoni, Minervaque effe facien- the next day; so that the Commissioners on both freely their Opinions: For which a certain time was petuous Violence: But to direct their Undertakings then appointed. The next day great Multitudes of either fide presented themselves at the Place af-signed; and great was the expectation thereof, every Man seeming to incline to Peace. Out of which Troop steps forth T. Labienus, and spake softly touching the Peace: And at last, entered into De-bate with Vatinius. In the middle of their Speech were Weapons suddenly cast from all Parts : Which he avoided, being covered and defended with Weapons. Notwithstanding many were wounded; and amongst others, Cornelius Balbus, M. Plotius, L. Tiburtius, Centurions, besides many other Soldiers. Then faid Labienus, Leave off therefore to Speak of any Composition : for unless Calar's Head be brought. there can be no Peace.

OBSER VATION.

THis small piece of the Story containeth di-vers notable Passages of Extremity, in the Carriage of Pompey, and others of his Party. As first (to take them as they lie) that of wilfulness in Bibulus: Whom neither Sickness, nor despair of help could move to intermit the task he had undertaken; but chose rather to suffer unto death, in approving his Zeal to the Cause, than to give himself a breathing time for the saving of his Life: And may ferve to admonish any other Bibulus, to value his Life above that which a stiff and wilful Opinion may lead him unto, beyond the Measure of honourable Endeavour, or what else may any way be justly expected; left in Fragina fapit, striving to do much, he happen to do nothing. For that cannot be understood to be well done in another Man's behalf, that is not well done in

> The Second is, Pompey's Resolution; being so extreme, as no composition, or other thing whatfoever, could give him fatisfaction, but only a victorious End of that War. Our Proverb faith, Better a lean Agreement, than a fat Remedy. And the Casualties of War may move an experienced Commander, to embrace a fafe and quiet Peace; as knowing, that he that goeth about to vex another, shall have his turn of suffering the like uneafyneffes: And as War beginneth when one Party lifteth, so it endeth when the other that would require it. pleaseth.

Eneid. 6.

-----facilis descensus Averni :

-The Way to Hell is eafie: But to come back, and to recover Life, This is a Task indeed -

And therefore let no Commander, how great foever, refuse all Peace, but that which is bought by extremity of War; left the Event (whereof there can be no affurance) fall out as it happened to Pompey: But rather with the use, let him learn the end of Arms; which is, to make streight that which is crooked, and out of discord and disfention, to draw means of a happy Peace.

To which may be added that other of Labiewhom nothing would fatisfie but Cafar's Head. It cannot be denied, but that he strook at the themselves, with Words full of Wind; yea, and more than that, to follow their Defigns with im-to a fuccefsful Iffue, and to remove by Industry or Succession for Providence, such hindrances as happen to traverse tuna, Esperientiam Lau their Hopes, is granted but to a few; and now fourier. denied to Labienus, notwithstanding this Brava-Varro, or do. And therefore let such Commanders as Gellio. are in good Opinion and Efteem with their General, be well wary of embarking their Party in any Cause, farther than may beseem the Wisdom and Experience of judicious Leaders; as believing in that of Metellus to King Bocchus: Salust.

Omne Bellum sumi facile, caterum acerrime desinere : non in eiuldem Poteltate initium eius & Finem esse: incipere cuivis etiam ignavo licere: deponi, cum Victores velint. Every War is eafily begun, but hardly so soon ended: The Beginning and the End of it are not in the same Man's Power: Any poor spirited Fellow may begin a War; but it shall end when the Conquerous pleaseth, and not before.

CHAP. VII.

Calius Rufus movet h Sedition in Italy, and is flain.

T the same time. M. Coelius Rufus the Caefar. Prator at Rome, undertaking the Business of Debts, in the beginning of his Magiftracy, placed his Seat by the Chair of C. Trebonius Prator of the Town; promising to be assisting to any Man, that would appeal unto him, concerning Valuation and Payment to be performed by Arbitratours, according as Casar had ordained. But it came to pass, as well through the Equity and Indifferency of the Decree, as through the lenity of Trebonius (who was of Opinion, that those Times required an easie and mild Execution of Justice) that none were found, from whom the beginning of the Appeal might grow: For to pretend Powerty, or to complain of particular misfortune, and of the Calamity of those times, or otherwise to propound the difficulties of felling their Goods by an outcry, was every Man's Practice; but for any Man to acknowledge himself to be in debt, and yet to keep his Poffessions whole and untouched, was held to be a very strange impudency: So that there was no Man found Moreover, Coelius carried a very hard Hand to such as should have received benefit thereby. And having made this entrance (to the end he Sed revocare gradum, superasque evadere ad auras, might not seem to have undertook a shameful or Hoc Opus, hic Labor est disconest Cause) he published a Law That there mign not jeem to nave unaer took a pramejn or dishonest Cause) he published a Law That there should be no Interest paid for any Menies let out up-on Consideration, for thirty six Days of the time agreed on. But when he perceived that Servilius the Consul, and the rest of the Magistrates did oppose themselves against him therein, and finding it not to fort with his Expectation (to the end he might incite and stir up the Humours and Spirits of Men) he abrogated that Law, and instead thereof made two others. The one, which cut off the yearly Rents that Tenants were accustomed to pay their Land-Lords, for the Houses they dwelt in: And the other, touching new assurances, and the abolishing of old Debts. Whereupon the Multitude ran violently upon C. Trebonius, and having hurt dinus, as far in Extremity as either of the former; vers that stood about him) pulled him out of his

Of these things Servilius the Consul made relation Root; for his Head was the Head of that War. to the Senate: Who thereupon decreed, that Coelius ROOT; for instread was the read of that was to the scenare; prior thereupon neutren, then the But to fay it, rather than to do it, was no argument of Labienus's Worthiness. For as Polybing means of that decree, the Conful interdifted him the noteth, it is common to most Men to magnifie Scrate; and also drew him from the * Speaking-Place, * Rotal as he went about to make a Speech to the People. Cœlius moved with Shame and despight, made as by great Gifts and Rewards had gained to his Party the remainder of the Company of Fencers, he joined himself with him: And then sent him before to Thurin, to excite and stirr up the Shepherds to sedition; be himfelf going to Caffiline.

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

At the same instant, his Ensigns and Arms being Stayed at Capua, besides his Family suspected at Naples, and their Attempt against the Town perceived; their other designs being discovered, and their Partizans shut out of Capua; fearing some danger, for smuch as the Inhabitants had took Arms, and held him as an Enemy, he let fall his former determination, and brake off his Journey.

In the mean while, Milo, having fent Let-ters to the Municipal Towns, that what he did, was by the Authority and Commandment of Pompey, according as he received it from Bibulus, he applied himself to, and sollicited such as were in Debt: With whom prevailing nothing, he brake up divers Prisons, and began to assault Cosa and Thurin: And there he was flain by Q. Pedius the Prator, with a Stone which he cast from the Wall.

Coelius going on (as he gave out) towards Ca-far, he came to Thury; where when he had moved divers of the Inhabitants, and promised Money to the French and Spanish Cavalry, which Cæsar had put there for a Garrison, he was in the end slain by them. And so the beginning of great Matters, which put all Italy in Fear and Trouble, by the indirect Practices of the Magistrates, and the Iniquity of the Times, had a speedy and easie end.

OBSERVATION.

T is to be noted, for the better understanding these Passages, that of those which were chofen Prætors, the two chiefest remained at Rome. The one, to administer Justice to the Citizens, which was called Prator Urbanus; who in the absence of the Consul, had the superintendency of the Affairs of the State, assembled the Senate, received Packets, made Dispatches, and gave Order in all things: Which Place was now inpplied by Trebonius. The other was called Pretor Peregrinus: Whose Office was, to order the Causes and Suits of Foreigners and Strangers: Whereunto Calius was chosen; and being of a turbulent and unquiet Spirit, took occasion upon this rent in the State, to raise new Commotions, fit for his own Purposes; as having learned what Ariftotle teacheth, That all things which are already ftirred are more easily moved, than meta facil: KS other natures that are yet in quiet. And thereupon, having power by his Office to decide causes of Conventur. De troversie, he removed his Tribunal, and placed it ter came hard on, and yet neither the Shipping hard by where Trebonius fate, to the end he might oppose the Decrees he made, for the prizing of Goods to fatisfie Creditours, and draw the People to appeal unto him; publishing withal certain dangerous Edicts, on the behalf of those that were in Debt.

This Calius was Cicero's Scholar for Oratory; and in the opinion of Quintilian was thought woran example of a wilful Magistrate.

Touching Rostra, which I have translated the Speaking-place, it was a part of their Forum, where the Confuls and other Magistrates spake unto the People: Wherein was built a Chair or Pulpit, of the Beak-Heads of Ships, which the Romans took from the Antiatii, and thereupon took the name of Rostra; memorable amongst other things, for though he would go to Casar; but sens Messengers that Antony set Tully's Head between his two fecretly to Milo, condemned to Banishment for killing Hands, in the Chair where he had often spoken Hands, in the Chair where he had often spoken Clodius. And having recalled him into Italy, that most eloquently, and with as many good Words,

CHAP. VIII.

Libotaketh an Island right over against the Haven of Brundusium; and is beaten off by a Stratagem.

Ibo departing from Oricum, with his Caffar. Fleet of fifty Ships, came to Brundusium, and took an Island, which lieth over against the Haven, as a Place of great importance, by which our Army must necessarily come forth; thereby shuting in all the Ports, and Parts of that Shore: A also surprizing by his sud-den coming, certain Ships of Burthen, he set all on fire, saving One laden with Corn which he took along with him. Whereby he put our Men into a great Fear; and landing certain Soldiers and Horse-men in the Night-time, he dislodged the Cavalry that were there in Garrison: And so prevailed, through the advantage of the Place, as he writ to Pompey, that he might draw the other Shipping on Shore, and new trim them, for he would undertake, with his Fleet alone, to hinder those Forces from coming Antonius was then at Brundusium; who trusting to the Valour of the Soldiers, armed out threescore Skiffs belonging to great Ships, and fencing them with Hurdles and Planks, put certain choice Soldiers in them, disposing them in several Places along the Shore: And further commanded two Triremes (which he had caused to be made at Brundusium, for the Exercise of the Soldiers in rowing) to go out to the Mouth of the Haven.

Libo perceiving these to come out somewhat loofely, and hoping to intercept them, fent out five Quadriremes to attack them : Which were no fooner come near unto our Ships, but the old Soldiers that were aboard, fled back into the Port.

The Enemy, carried on with a defire of taking the knemy, carried on which a differ of each of them, prefled after fomewhat rafilly, and unadolfed by: When at length, upon a Signal given, the Skiffs came fuddenly out from all Parts, fet upon them, and at the first Shock, took one of the Quadriremes, with all the Oar-Men, and Soldiers in her, the rest they compelled to fly away shamefully. To which Lofs this was farther added, that they were kept from Water, by the Cavalry which Antonius had disposed along the Coast: through neces-sity whereof (as also by reason of the Ignominy received) Libo departed from Brundusium, and gave over the Siege.

Many Months were now past, and the Winnor the Legions came from Brundusium, to Cafar. And some Opportunities seemed to be omitted, for that the Wind was good oftentimes; which Caesar thought they would have taken. And the longer they stayed there, the streighter was all the Coast guarded and kept, by such as commanded the Fleet; being now in great hope to hinder their Passage. Which they did the rather endeavour, bethy to have lived longer, if he had been of a stai-ed and settled Carriage: But now must stand for Pompey, for that they did not impeach Cæsar's coming at first : Which he did to make them the more careful, to binder those Supplies. And in attending so from day to day an opportunity of Passage it would wax worse and worse, the Winds growing more easie and gentle.

OBSERVATION.

BY how much easier it is to keep the Out-let of one Port, than to Guard the Coast of a large Country: By fo much was Libo more likely to Country: by 10 minen was Livo more nearly to any new converge were the try one tangen from prevail, in feeking to flut up the Haven of Brimdufum, to hinder these Supplies from coming undid Otacilius Craffius, Governour of Liffus, 20 to Cosfar, than the other, that went about to about to take with Skiffs, and other little Ships, Guard all the Maritime Parts of Epirus, to keep which he had prepared for that purpose; and withthem from Landing, after they were at Sea.

I neerte funt res Braics. Thucyd.

Cæfar.

But fuch is the uncertainty of Enterprises of War, that albeit our course be rightly shapen, yet is doth often fail of leading us to that which is defired. For, howsoever he was possessed of this Island, that lay thwart the mouth of the Haven, and had thrust out the Guard of Horsemen, and fo became confident of blocking up the Port: Yet there was means found by the adverse Parry, Ships that came against them, and spent with Seato give him such an Assault, as made him quit sickness, upon Oath made not to receive any burt, the place with more Dishonour, than could be recompensed by any thing he got.

CHAP. IX.

Landing.

Esar troubled at these things, writ very Skarply to them at Brundusium, not to omit the opportunity of the next good Wind. but to put to Sea, and to shape their course to Oricum, or to the Coast of Apollonia; because

They, according to their accustomed Courage and Valour (Marcus Antonius and Fufius Calenus directing the business, and the Soldiers themselves berecting the buffuels, and the Soldiers themselves being forward thereunto, as reffings no danger for Cxfar's fake) having got a South Wind, weighed Anchor, and the next day passed by Apollonia and Dyrrachium: But being dislovered from the Continent, Quintus Coponius, Admiral of the Rhodian Navy, hyng ar Dyrrachium, brought his Ships out of the Haven. And as he had almoss (upon a stack Wind) overtaken our Men, the same South Wind) were aken to the lime stiff to which waser Wind began at length to blow stiff, by which means they escaped. Tet did not he desift from pursuing them; but was in hope, by the Labour and Industry of the Mariners, to overweigh the force of the Temusing the favour of Fortune, were nevertheless afraid of the Enemies Navy, if the Wind should chance to flack: And having got the Port called Nymphæum, three Miles bejond Liffus, they put in with their Ships.

This Port lay sheltered from the South-West Wind; but was not fafe from a South Wind; howfoever, they accounted an ill Road less dangerous than the Enemies Fleet: And yet they were no forner put in, but the Wind (which had blown Southerly for two days together) did now most happily come about to the South-West.

And here a Man may see the suddain alteration of Fortune; for they which of late stood in fear of a dangerous Road, were now by that occasion, received into a fafe Harbour : And those which threatned danger to them, were forced to bethink themselves of their own safety. So that the time thus changing, the Tempel Javed our Party, and did, and to make an Oath the Broaker of un-fink theirs. Insomuch as fixteen of the Rhodian worthy Ends, is abhorred by God and Man, and Ships were all shaken in pieces, and perished with accordingly succeedeth, Shipwrack; and of the great number of Oar-Men and Soldiers, part were dasked against the Rocks and slain, and part were taken up by our Men: All which Casar fent home in Safety. Two of our Ships coming floort, and overtaken with the Night, and not knowing where the rest had taken shore, al, treated with them of yielding themselves, promising Life and safety upon that condition.

One of the Ships carried Two Hundred and Twenty Men, of the Legion made of young Soldiers; in the other were less than Two Hundred old Soldiers. And here a Man may see, what assurance and safety consisted in Courage and Valour of Mind: for the new made Soldiers, terrified with the multitude of did yield themselves to Otacilius: Who being brought all unto him, were, contrary to his Oath, most cruelly stain in his sight. But the Soldiers of the old Legions (howsoever afflicted with the inconvenience of the Tempest, and noisements of the Pump) did not slack any thing of their ancient Valour: For having drawn out the first part of the C.c.far's Supplies pass over into Greece, and take Night in conditions of Treaty, as though they meant to yield themselves, they compelled the Masser to run his Ship a-store; and having got a convenient place, they there spens the rest of the Night. As soon as it was day, Ocacilius sent Four Hunthe Coaft, with ethers of the Garrifon, to affault and take them: But they Valiantly defending themthere they might run their Ships on Grounds. And felects, flew divers of them; and fo got to our Men-these places were freelf from Guards, by reason they in fastey. Whereupon, the Roman Citizens re-could not risk far from the Perts. given them to be kept and guarded) received in Antonius, and assisted him with all things needful.

Otacilius, fearing himself, fled out of the Town, and came to Pompey.

Antonius fent back the greatest part of the Ships that had brought over his Troops (which were three Legions of old Soldiers, one of new Soldiers, and Eight Hundred Horse) to transport the rest of the Soldiers and Horse, that remained at Brundusium: Leaving the Pontones, which are a kind of French Shipping, at Liffus; to this end, that if haply Pompey, thinking Italy to be empty and unfurnified, should carry over his Army thither, Casar might have means to follow him : And withal, fent Meffengers speedily to Cafar, to let him know where pest, and followed them, notwithstanding they were the Army was Landed, and what Men he had brought past Dytrachium with a large Wind. Our Men over.

The First OBSERVATION.

Dolus an virtus quis in hofte requirit, It is no Eneid 2 matter whether the Enemy does his business by Valour or Subtilty; it is not so justifiable by the Laws of true Vertue, as that of Achilles, who professed to hate that Man more than the Gates of liad. Hell, that promifed one thing and purposed another. Neither do the Jurists conclude otherwise; having, for the more apparency of Truth, drawn it to a Question, An perfidia in perfidum uti, Jus fit, whether it be lawful to break Faith with a fit, whether it do inwing to dream ration with a Faith-breaker; alledging Labienus's practice against Comius of Arras, together with that which thrim that 3a admitteth no Answer, that their Example standed the 8dls Gabral as a Precedent, to deal with them as they deal with others. But to falfifie Religion, as Otacilius

The most remarkable Instance in this kind is, Coast swarmed with the Enemies Shipping: that (which is to be wished were forgotten) of Lewis King of Hungaria, who having concluded the honourablest Peace, that ever Christian Prince had before that time made with any of the Turkifo Sultans, and confirmed the fame by an Oath taken upon the Holy Evangelift; did, nevertheles, at the perswasson of Julian, a Cardinal (who took upon him, by Power from the Pope, to disannul the League, and absolve him from the Oath) break the Peace, and gave Battel to Amurath at Varna (where the Infidel took occasion impiously to Blaspheme, in calling for Vengeance on fuch, as in their Deeds had denied the Godhead of their most facred and blessed Lord) and was there flain, to the utter ruine of his Kingdom, and the reproach of the Christian Name. Neither did the Cardinal escape the Vengeance, which his Treachery had drawn upon that Royal Army: But being there Wounded unto Death, was found lying in the High-way, by Gregory Sanofe, ready to give up the Ghoft; and feemed but to flay to take with him the bitter Curies of fuch as paffed by, flying from the Battel, as the due Reward of his perfidious Absolution.

The Second OBSER VATION.

Audaes fir. IN case of difficulty and hazard (as Casar noteth) there is always great help in a good Courage. For, whether it be that good hap attend th a Vaprif. For, whether it be that good nap attend in a vamove all opposition, or what other cause there is besides; but thus it falleth out, that such as enteret gerendum, tain a noble Resolution, are ever sasest in extremity of Peril; and, instead of loss, get Honour and Renown.

Brasidas found a Mouse amongst dried Figgs, which Bit him fo that he let her go, and thereupon faid to those that frood by, That there was nothing so little, that could not save it self, if it had a Heart to defend it felf against such as affaulted it. And herein we may observe that to be true, which the Poet hath delivered; Seris venit usus 6 Maams, ab annis, Time and Practice do much avail to perfect this Courage in the Minds of Men of War; as knowing aforehand the weight of such Labours, and having encountered the like Dan-gers, even to the Redeeming of themselves from Nangarm ita the Jaws of Death. Whence it is that the Comick Noting arm is a way of a series of a serie nined to any course of Life, but that Time and Experience do always teach him what he knew Quin restants, not before: Whereas others that go rawly to Sumerasus, not Defore: Whereas others that go rawly to miss, forgow work, are so daunted with the unufual looks of boren and. War, as they (forgetting the profession of Arms) Trem. Adelp. do run headlong into the danger they seek distillments avoid; being able to give no other account of seed with the strength of the seek of the and but a few Men.

The Third OBSERVATION.

PLutarch, Valerius Maximus, Appian, Suetonius, and Lucan, do all write, that Cafar, impahas the tient of the stay of his Forces at Brundusium, Embarked himself in a small Frigate of twelve Oars, en of Human difguifed in the habit of a Slave, and put to Sea to fetch his Legions; notwithstanding all the he foreseeing, avoided. their Ey.s to hips they had in Deltay.

But meeting with a contrary Wind, which would not fuffer him to get out of the River Anius, the Mafter commanded the Mariners to cast about, and get to Shore. Whereupon Csefar discovering himself, encouraged him to go forward, for that he carried Cafar and his Fortunes.

The Mafter forgetting all danger, made out again to get to Sea; but was by force of the Tempest driven to return, to Casar's great Grief. And albeit there is no mention made hereof in these Commentaries, yet the authority of so many grave Authors is not to be contemned.

CHAP. X.

Cafar hasteth to meet with Antonius, and preventeth Pempey.

Æfar and Pompey had both intelligence Cafar. almost at one instant of time, of Antonius's Fleet; for they saw them pass by Apollonia and Dyrrachium, and directed their Jour-neys along the Coast after them: But they understood not for a while where they were Landed. Howbeit, having notice thereof, either of them took a contrary resolution. For Cæsar purposed to joyn with Antonius, as foon as possibly he might: And Pompey resolved to hinder their meeting, and by Ambushments (if he could) to set upon them at

The same day, either of them drew their Army out of their standing Camps, upon the River Aplus: Pompey secretly, and by Night; Casar openly, and by Day : But Cafar had the greater circuit to fetch, and a longer Journey to go up the River, to find a Foord. Pompey having a ready way, and no River to pass, made towards Antonius by great Journeys: And when he understood that he came near unto him, chose a convenient place, and there bestowed his Forces; keeping every Man within the Camp, and forbidding Fires to be made, that his coming might be the more hidden. Whereof Antonius being pre-Sently advertised by the Greeks, he dispatched Mes-Jengers to Cæsar, and kept himself one day within his Camp. The next day Cæsar came unto him. Upon notice thereof, Pompey left that place, least be should be entrapped between two Armies, and came with all his Forces to Asparagus (which appertained to them of Dyrrachium) and there, in a convenient place, pitched his Camp.

OBSERVATION.

WHere two Armies are in a Country, and one of them hath fuccours coming to reinforce them, each of those Parties are, by the example of these glorious Commanders (careris paribus) to make towards those Succours: The one, to cut them off; and the other, to keep them standing. And to that end, as it fuited Pompey's Condition to go fecretly; howfoever Cafar noteth it, as a touch to his Valour: So on the other fide, it flood not only well enough with Cafar's Party to go openly, but also was an Argument of his Courage and Magnanimity, and might raise him estimation in the opinion of the Greeks. The difadvantage which Pompey could take thereby, was the danger to be enclosed with Armies; which to affift Pompey.

CHAP. XI.

Bout this time Scipio having sustained divers Loffes near the Mount Amanus, did, nevertheless, call himself by the name of Imperator; and thereupon commanded great Summs of Money to be Levied of the Cities and Potentates of those Quarters: Taking from the General Receivers of that Province, all the Monies that were in their hands for two Years past, and commanding them to disburfe (by way of Loan) the receipt for the Year to come; and required Horsemen to be Levied throughout all the Province. Having gathered these together, be lest the Parthians, being near Enemies unto him (who a little before had flain M.Craffus the General, and Besieged M. Bibulus) and drew the Legions out of Syria; being fent specially thither to keep and settle that Province, much amused through fear of the Parthian War.

At his departure some Speeches were given out by the Souldiers, that if they were led against an Enemy they would go; but against a Citizen and Con-ful they would not bear Arms. The Army being brought to Pergamus, and there Garrisoned for that Winter in divers rich Cities, he distributed great

In the mean time, he made bitter and heavy exactions of Money throughout all the Province : For he put a Tribute upon Slaves and Free-men by Pole, Columnatia fet Impositions upon the Pillars and Doors of Houses, jet impolitions upon the truals and Doors of Lought, as also upon Grain, Oar-Men, Arms, Engines, and Carriages; and whatsoever had a Name was shought fit to yield Money by way of Imposition; and that not only in Cities and Towns, but almost in every Village and Castle: Wherein he that carried himself most cruelly, was held both the worthiest Man, and the best Citizen.

The Province was at that time full of Officers and Commanders, peftered with Overseers and Ex-actors: Who, besides the Money Levied by Publick Authority, made their particular Profit by the like Exactions, For they gave out, they were thrust out of their Houses and their Country, and in want of all Necessaries; to the end they might with such Pretences, cover their wicked and hateful courses. To this was added the hard and heavy Usury, which oftentimes doth accompany War, when all Monies are drawn and exacted to the Publick; wherein the forbearance of a day was accounted a Discharge for the whole. Whereby it happened, that in those two Years, the whole Province was overgrown with Debts. And yet for all that, they stuck not to Levy round gave out was by way of Loan, according to a Decree of Senate; commanding the Receivers to advance the like Summ by way of Loan, for the Year to

Moreover, Scipio gave Order, that the Monies which of old time had been Treasured up in the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, should be taken out, with other Images of that Goddess. But as he came into the Temple (having called unto him many of the Senators that were there present) he received a Dispatch from Pompey, That Casar had passed the Sea with his Legions; and that, setting all things apart, he should hasten to him with his Army. These Letters being received, he dismissed such as he had called unto him, and began to dispose of his Fourney into Macedonia, setting forward within a few Scipio's Preparation in Asia, to come into Greece. days after: By which accident the Treasure at Ephefus was faved.

OBSERVATION.

T is Seneca's Conceit, that Iron, being of that Propter day.

excellent use in things pertaining to Man's rum & dr. Life, and yet so much undervalued to Gold and gentum nua-Silver, will admit of no Peace, as often as there fact Roman is question of Money; but raileth continual Com-Lib.14 Epith. motions and Extremities, as a Revenge that the Ferrum communications World doth misvalue it : And fell out as true in arise influence world doth hillyaute it: And lets out as true in one opposition, these days, that months of are of baser Disposition. For what greater Vio. Profile man, lences in the State of Rome, than those concerning its manifestic manifestic in manifestic manifesti Tributes and Impositions? A particular whereof Epideus. may be made out of this Chapter. For first, we find a Tribute by Pole, without respect of State or Condition; which they called Capitatio. Capitatio. And then a fecond, as grievous as that, being a Tax laid upon every Door in a House, which they called Offiaria: Whereof Tully maketh mention, in the Eighth Epiftle of his Third Book. And laftly, Another upon every Pillar in a Man's House, which they called Columnaria: mentioned likewise by Cicero, Columnarium vide ut nullum Columnaria Largesses and Gifts; and for the better assuring of debeamus, See that we owe no Tax-Money for 31 ad Janthe Soldier unto him, gave them certain Cities to our Pillars. Alciatus understandeth this to be that we read in Dionysius Halicarnasseus, That when Treasure failed at the Siege of Modena, they laid an Imposition upon every Tile that was found on the Senators Houses in Rome, which gave the Triumvirate occasion to make the Tiles as heavy to the rest of the Roman Citizens: And this, saith he, was called Columnaria.

Some Popes, out of their occasions, have gone far in this kind, and found means to lay Impositions upon all things pertaining to the use of Man Infomuch as Pasquill begged leave to dry his Shirt In the Papage in the Sun, before there were an Imposition laid of Six Quinupon the Light. The Rule is diverfly given in Fifu ripul, this behalf, That the Fisk doth not (well above tien; qued or his proportion. Alexander is commended for originate and making his Subjects the Keepers of his Trea-ning to Sex. fure. And Claudianus giveth Honorius this Aurelius

Nec tua privatis crescunt araria damnis.

Thy Chefts fill not by loss of private Men. In Parenet

Bafilius adviseth that Money thus raised, be not at any time dipped either in the Tears or in the Blood of the People. But Tully draweth it to And yet for all that, they fluck not to Levy round a more certainty, by making Necessity the square Summs of Money, not only from the Citizens of of such Commands. Da operam, (saith he) ut 24 os of such covery Corporation and particular City: Which they effe parendum; Do your endeavour to let all see, that they must obey necessity if they mean to be fafe. And so the opening of private Mens Purses, is but to keep them thut and fafe, from fuch Enemies as would confume all; according as Scipio Plutarch. once answered, when the Romans blamed him for spending their Treasure. Howsoever, Scipio knew well what he did, in getting into his hand fuch store of Treasure; for War cannot any way be maintained, but with plenty of Money: Nei-ther can any State continue, if the Revenue which supporteth the Common-weal be abated; as Ta- niarum abuncitus hath well observed, Dissolvitur imperium, fi danta Dion. fructus quibus respub. sustinetur diminuanour.

CHAP. XII.

C.efar fendeth Forces into Theffalia, Ætolia, and Macedonia, Scipio cometh into Greece.

Cæfar.

Lib. III.

Æsar being joyned with Antonius, drew that Legion out of Oricum, which he had for-merly lodged there to keep the Sea-Coast; and thought it expedient to make Trial of the Province, and to advance further into the Country. And whereas Embassadors came unto him out of Thessalia and Etolia, assuring him, That if he would send Forces to protect them, the Cities of those Provinces would readily obey what he Commanded: He sent L. Caffius Loginus, with the Legion of young Soldiers, called the Seven and Twentieth, and Two Hundred Horse into Theffalia; and C.Calvisius Sabinus, with Five Cohorts and a few Horse into Rtolia; exhorting them especially, to take a course for Provision of Corn in those two Provinces, which lay near at band. He sent likewise Cn. Domitius Calvinus with two Legions, the Eleventh and the Twelfth, and Five Hundred Horse into Macedonia: Of which Province (for that part thereof which is called Que libera Frank or Free) Menedemus, a principal Man of that Country, being sent as an Embalfador, had professed exceeding great forwardness on their behalf. Of these, Calvisius, upon his coming, was entertained with great affection of the Ætolians: And having cast the Garrison of the Enemy out of Caledon and * Naupactum, became Master of all Ætolia. Cassius arrived with the Legion in Thes-falia; and finding there two Factions, was accordingly received with contrary Affections.

Egelaretus, a Man of ancient Power and Authority, favoured Pompey's Party: And Petreius, a Man of a most Noble House, endeavoured by all means to deserve well of Casar. At the same time also came Domitius into Macedonia: And as Embaffadors began to come thick unto him from divers States of that Province, it was told him, That Scipio was at hand with the Legions, and came with great Fame and Opinion of all Men: Which is oftentimes a Fore-runner of Novelties. He, making no stay in any part of Macedonia, marched directly with great fury towards Domitius: and when he came within Twenty Miles of him, turned his course fuddenly to Cassius Longinus, in Thessalia: Wnich he did so speedily, that news came together of his coming, and of his Arrival. For, to the end he might March with greater Expedition, he left M. Favonius at the River Haliacton (which divideth que velint to keep the Carriages of the Legions: Where he fibi candida nafid, ad Ha-commanded them to build a Fort. nigra & fol-cand Axium he being aftenified (understanding of Scipio's com-he being aftenified (understanding of Scipio's coming, and seeing the Horsemen whom he thought to be his) made towards the Hills which enclose Theffalia. and from thence marched towards Ambracia. And as Scipio made haste to follow after, Letters overtook him, fent from Favonius, that Domitius was at hand with the Legions, and that he could not hold the place wherein he was left, without Scipio's Horsemen in a place, where our Men had formerly

Upon the receipt of which Letters, Scipio altered orb is Purpose and his Journey; and leaving Cassius, made haste to help Favonius: So that continuing his Journey Night and Day, he came unto him in very good time. For as the Dust of Domitius's Army approaching, was seen to rise, the foreWhereby it happened, that as Domitius's Industry did help Caffius, fo did Scipio's Speed fave Favonius.

OBSERVATION.

Cafar being now ready with his Forces to proceed against Pompey, the first thing he did, was to make tryal of the Provinces of Greece, and to get their favour and affiftance, for his better furtherance in contesting his Advertary. For as an Army standeth firm by two special means, first, in themselves, as they are able to relist any opposing force; and secondly, through the favour of the Country, wherein they are engaged: So on the other fide, their Overthrow either proceedeth from their own Weakness, or otherwise, when the Provinces adjoyning do refuse such mutual Respects, as may relieve the Wants of a confuming multitude. And therefore, having got all the Forces together which he looked for, or could any way expect, he fent out to try the affection of the Country, and to alter that in a moment, which Pompey had been fettling for a Year together, and then refolved to Attack him

And doubtless, if Scipio had not by chance interrupted their course, upon his coming out of Afia to aid Pompey, they had as eafily got all Theffalia and Macedonia, as they did Atolia: And were nevertheless so ordered and disposed, as they got more Honour of Scipio, than he could win of them.

CHAP. XIII.

The Paffages between Domitius and Scipio.

Cipio abode two days in his standing Camp, Casar. upon the River Haliacmon, which ran between him and Domitius's Camp. The third day, as foon as it began to be Light, he paffed his Army over the River by a Foord, and Encamped himself. The next day in the Morning, be Embattelled his Forces before the front of his Camp. Domitius, in like manner, made no difficulty of bringing out his Legions, refolving to Fight.

And whereas there lay a Field of fix Miles between both the Camps, he led his Troops Embattelled under Scipio's Camp; who nevertheless refused to move any jot from his standing: Yet, for all that, Domitius's Soldiers were hardly kept from giving Battel; but especially a River lying under Scipio's Camp, with broken and uneasse Banks, did binder them at that In Macedonia Macedonia from Theffalia) with Eight Cohorts, time.

Scipio, understanding of their alacrity and defire to Fight, suspecting it might happen, that the next liacencem. At the same time, the Cavalry of King Cottus, day he should be forced to Fight against his Will, down to the happen with the Confines of Thessalia, or with great dishonour keep himself within his different factors. Camp, having, with great expectation in the beginning gone on rashly, and unadvisedly, was now dishonoured with a reproachful end. For in the Nighttime he role, without any noise or warning for the trussing up of the Baggage, and passing the River, returned the same way he came: And in an eminent place, near unto the River, he pitched his Camp.

A few days after he laid an Ambuskment of accustomed to Forage. And as Q. Varus, General of the Horse in Domitius's Army, came out according to his ordinary use, they set upon him at a sud-dain. But our Men did valiantly sustain the onset; and every Man betaking himself speedily to his Rank, they all together of their own accord, charged the Enemy: And having slain Fourscore, they put the rest runners of Scipio's Army were likewise discovered, to flight, with the loss only of two of their Men.

Mm 2

OBSERVATION.

instifiable by the Rules of War, is no small advantage to the prosperous Carriage of the same. For albeit Scipio was great in his own ftrength, and as great in the opinion and expectation of Men: Yet when he found fuch an alacrity in the Enemy, to give and take Blows, and a defire to tended, as he rather chose the fortune of a safe which the World in Opinion had given to his Army, to his own reproach and disadvantage. Whereas on the other fide, to be found for the or indisposed to Fight upon any occasion, doth the reft. invite an Enemy to attempt that, which otherthe refolution of their Adversary, and the means they have, either to take or leave at their pleafure.

CHAP. XIV.

Domitius draweth Scipio to a Loss, by an Ambushment. Young Pompey's Attempt upon Oricum

Fter these things, Domitius hoping that Scipio might be drawn to Fight, he made as though he were in great Want and Scarcity of Corn: And thereupon, rifing from the place wherein he was Encamped, with the War, and having marched three Miles, he lodged all his Army, with the Cavalry, in a convenient and Scipio being ready to follow after, fent his Horfemen, and a great part of his Light-armed Soldiers, forward, as the first Troops came within the Ambushment (suspecting somewhat by the Neighing of the Horses) they fell back again. Those that followed after, Seeing the former Troops So Suddainly to retire, food ftill.

Our Men finding themselves discovered, and thinking it in vain to attend the reft, having got two Troops of Horse within their reach, they contented themselves with them; amongst whom was M. Opimius, the General of the Horse. The rest of those two Troops they either put to the Sword, or took alive, and brought them to Domitius.

Cæsar, as is before skewed, having withdrawn the Garrisons from along all the Sea-Coast, left only three Cohorts at Oricum, for the defence of the Town: And to them he committed the custody and Safe keeping of the Gallies, which he had brought out of Italy; whereof Acilius the Legate had the Charge, being left Governour of the Town. He, for the better security of the Shipping, had drawn all the Fleet into a back Angle, behind the Town, and about from place to place, as shall be found conthere fastened them to the Shore: And in the mouth of the Haven had sunk a great Ship, and set another by her, upon which he built a Tower, to keep the entrance of the Port ; and filled the same with Soldiers, to defend the Haven from any suddain Attempt.

Upon notice whereof, Pompey's Son, being Admiral of the Egyptian Fleet, came to Oricum, and and other circumstances may vary, as shall seem Ship; and affaulted the other Ship, fet by Acilius for the defence of the Haven, with Ships wherein he had made Towers, which stood by counterpoize, that IT appeareth here, that to shew a readiness and he might Fight with advantage of height, supplying resolution to Fight, upon such grounds as are continually fresh Men; and attempting also from the Land fide, to rake the Town by Scaling-Ladders. as by Sea with his Navy, to the end he might diftract and dismember the Forces within.

In the end, with extream Labour and multitude of Weapons, he overcame our Party, and took the Ship, having cast out such as had the Guard; who enterrain seriously all occasions of giving Battel; fled all away with Skiffs and Boats. At the same he was so far from prosecuting what he had prethe other side of the Town, in the nature of a Penin-Retreat, and consequently, to turn the advantage fula, he conveyed over four small * Gallies, with Rollers * Biremes. and Levers, into the inner part of the Harbour, lying behind the Town; infomuch, as setting on each side upon the Gallies tied unto the Shore, empty and unmost part unwilling to hazard the tryal of a Field, furnished, he carried four of them away, and burned

This being done, he left D. Lælius, whom he had wise he would not; and giveth them Courage taken from the Egyptian Fleet, to keep the Passage, to beat him from all his Purposes, as knowing that no Victuals, or other Provisions, might be brought that no Victuals, or other Provisions, might be brought into the Town, either from Bullis or Amantia: And he himself going to Liffus, found thirty Ships of Burthen, which Antonius had left within that Haven, and set them all on Fire. And as he went about to take Liffus, the Soldiers which Cæsar had put there for a Garrison to the Town, together with the Roman Citizens, and the Townsmen thereof, did so well defend the same, that after he had continued there three days, and loft a few Men in the Siege, he left the place without effecting any thing.

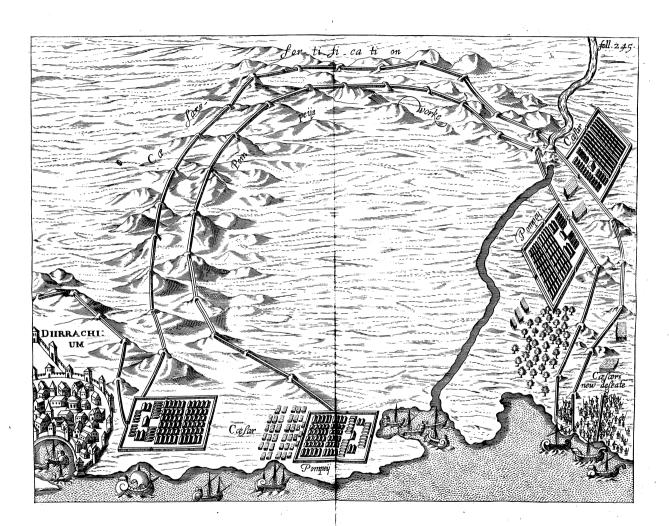

OBSER VATION.

 Λ^N Ambushment is easily at all times laid: But to do it fo that it may not be suspected, and in fuch manner that the Enemy may fall into usual cry of removing, according to the custom of the danger thereof, is that which is to be aimed at therein. And therefore, to give the better colour to fuch Defigns, the trick hath been to pretend Fear (and fo flight) or want of Corn, or fomewhat elfe, to draw the Enemy to follow after with more boldness and resolution. And so to discover what way Domitius took; who marching to have it well done, there must be two Deceits to affift each other; as in this of Domitius: To make shew of removing, through Scarcity and Want ; and then to lie in wait for an advantage: According to that of the Spaniard, A un Traydor, Opporte Infidos Alevosos. For the prevention of such Snares um disciplina of Deceit, the Rule is generally given by Ono- state that the Rule is generally given by Ono- state that the state of the sta fander, That the departure or falling away of an cap, so Enemy, is always to be suspected.

And for the more fecurity therein, experienced Commanders have been careful before they ftirred their Army, to make exact discovery, even to the place where they intended to lodge. For as in Phyfick, it is the greatest part of the Cure, to know the Difease: So in matter of War, the danger is almost over, when it is perceived whence it may grow.

The manner observed in Discoveries, hath ufually been to fend the Parties out in three Companies or Troops; The first, confisting of a small number, to beat the way at ease, and to range venient: The fecond Company being fomewhat ftronger, to fecond and relieve the first, if there be occasion: And the third, able to engage a good number of the Enemy.

And after this manner Cyrus disposed of his forerunners; as appeareth in Xenophon. But this being subject to the consideration of Time and Place, 5 Cyropad. with many Haulsers and Hooks weighed up the sunk expedient to the Wisdom of the General CHAP.

Catari

CHAP. XV.

Cafar marcheth towards Pompey; offereth him Battel; and cutteth him off from Dyrrachium.

Fter Cæsar understood that Pompey was at Asparagus he marched thitherward with his Army: And taking by the way the Town of the Parthinians, wherein Pompey had put a Garrison, the third day he came to Pompey in Macedonia, and lodged himself fast by him. The next day he drew out his Forces; and putting them in order, presented him Battel. But when he found that he would not accept thereof, he drew back his Army into the Camp, and bethought himself of some other course. For the next day, taking a difficult and narrow Way, he set forward with all his Forces towards Dyrrachium hoping either to draw Pom-pey to fight, or to force the Town, or at least to cut him off from all Convoys and Munition, which was there stored up for the whole provision of the War; as afterwards it came to pass. For Pompey being ignorant at first of his purpose, inasmuch as he took a contrary way, thought he had been driven thence through scarcity and want of Corn. But being afterwards advertised by the Scouts what course he took he rose the next day, in hope to meet him a nearer way. Which Casar suspecting, exhorted the Soldiers to endure a little labour with patience. And resting a small part of the Night, in the Morning he came before Dyrrachium, even as the first Troop of Pompey's Army was discovered afar off; and there incamped himself.

Pompey being cut off from Dyrrachium, when he could not accomplish his purpoles, fell to a second resolution, and fortified his Camp in an eminent place, called Petra: From whence there was an inmora collem different passage to the Ships, and sheltered likewise incola Pe. the Haven from certain Winds. Thisher he comrum. Lucan. manded part of the Ships to be brought, together with Corn and provision of Victual from Asia, and fuch other Countries as were in his obedience.

Cæsar, doubting that the War would prove long and tedious, and despairing of an succour of Victuals and sections, and aejpairing of an succour of victuals from the Coast of Italy, for that all the Shore was (with great diligence) kept by Pompey's Party, and that the Shipping which in Winter he had made in Sicily, Gallia, and Italia, were stayed and came not to him; he dispatched L. Canuleius a Legate into Epirus, to make provision of Corn.

And forasmuch as those Regions were far off, he appointed Storebouses and Magazines in certain places, and imposed carriage of Corn upon the Country bordering about them. In like manner, he commanded what Grain soever should be found at Lissus, Rethenia, or any other place, to be brought unto him, Parthenia, or any other place, to be brought unto him, which was very little, forafmuch as the Country thereabout was rough and mountainous, and afforded no Corn, but that which was brought in from other places; as also, that Pompey had taken order in that behalf, and a little before had ransacked the Parthinians, and caused his Horsemen to carry away all the Grain, which was found amongst them.

OBSERVATION

The first thing that Cesar did, after their approach near one unto another, was to offer Battel; as the best Arbitrator of the Cause in question, and most fitting the custom of the an- fest, throughout the whole inward circuit, was, that mam is pa. Cient Romans. But, for almuch as the endeavours our Men might not enter in upon them, nor circumof such as are in action, are always ordered by him that is the Sufferer; and that Pompey refused to accept thereof, knowing himself to be much the inside a less compass to fortifie.

ftronger in Forces, better accommodated, having a far greater Party in the Country, and the Sea wholly at his command (which advantages were like to end the business, without hazard of a Battel;) Cafar bethought himself of some other Project, which might take away the scorn of that refulal, by undertaking fuch things as much imported the flate of his Adversary. For in such cases, when an Enemy will not fight, somewhat must be done to cast dishonour, or greater inconveniences, upon him; or at least, to make overtures of new opportunities. And therefore he took a course, either to draw Pompey to fight, or to force the Town wherein all his provisions of War were stored up, or otherwise to cut him off from the same. The least of which was a sufficient acquittance of any difgrace, which the neglect of this offer might feem to inferr; having thereby occasion to use that of the Poet, Jam Sumus ergo pares, now we are even.

CHAP. XVI.

Cafar goeth about to beliege Pompey.

Elar being informed of these things, enter- Casar. ed into a deliberation, which he first took from the very nature of the place wherein they were: For whereas Pompey's Camp was inclosed about with many high and steep Hills, he first took those Hills, and built Forts upon them; and then, as the condition of each place would bear, he made Works of Fortification from one Fort to another, and determined to inclose Pompey about with a Ditch and a Rampier. And especially upon these considerations; for that he was greatly straitened through want of Corn, and that Pompey being strong in Horse, he might with less danger supply his Army from all parts with Provision: and also to the end he might keep Pompey from Foraging, and so make his Cavalry unserviceable in that kind And further, that he might abate and weaken the exceeding great reputation, which Pompey had attained unto amongst foreign Nations, when it should be noised throughout the World, that he was besieged by Cæsar, and durst not sight.
Pompey would by no means be drawn to leave the commodity of the Sea, and the Town of Dyrrachium, having there laid up all his provision of War, Arms, Weapons, Engines of what fort foever; besides Corn, which was brought from thence to his Army by Shipping. Neither could he hinder Cafar's Fortifications, unless he would accept of Battel, which for that ons, unity to would accept by survey, which you can time be was refolved not to do. Only it remained, as the last thing be could think of, to possess thin-felf of as many Hill at the might, and to keep as much of the Country as he could with good and throng Guard; and by that means, to abstract, as much as possibly he might, Cafar's Forces: as accordingly it fell out. For having made twenty four Castles and Forts, he took in twenty five Miles of the Country in circuit, and did Forage within that Space, and there caused many things to be set and planted by hand, which in the interim ferved as Food for Horfes.

And as our Men perceived their Fortifications to be carried, and continued from one Castle to another, without intermission; they began to fear, lest they had left some places to fally out, and so would come upon them behind, before they were aware.

And the reason they made their Works thus pervent them behind. But they (abounding in number of Men) exceeded in their Works, having also on

And as Cæsar went about to take any place, albeit Pompey was resolved not to fight, or interrupt him with all his Forces: Nevertheless he sent out his Archers and Slingers, of which he had great num-bers; by whom many of our Men were wounded, and stood in great fear of the Arrows: and almost all the Soldiers made them Coats, either of Quilt or Stiffen-ing, or of Leather, to keep them from danger. actis & cen-To conclude, either Party used all force and means to take places, and make Fortifications: Cæsar, to Shut up and straiten Pompey what he could; and Pompey, to inlarge himself, and possess as many Hills as conveniently he might; which gave occasion of many Skirmishes and Encounters.

OBSERVATION.

TE may here take notice of the strangest enterprize, that ever was undertaken by a judicious Soldier. For where else may it be read or understood, that a weaker Party went about to besiege a strong Adversary, and to inclose a whole Country by Castles and Towers, and perpetual Fortifications from Hill to Hill; to the end he might that him up, as he lay incamped in the Field? But herein appear the infinite and reftless endeavours of a Roman Spirit, and the Works they wrought to atchieve their own ends: and yet not besides the limits of Reason. For if that of Seneca have any affinity with Truth, That a Man is but a common, or rather contemptible thing, unless he raise himself above ordinary courses: It is more specially verified in a Soldier; whose Horather, upon such inducements as are here alledged; which shew good reason he had to be so mad.

CHAP. XVII.

A Passage that happened between both Parties, about the taking of a Place.

Cortar

Mongst these Fights and Encounters, it happened, as Castat's ninth Legion had taken a certain Place, and there began to sportise, Pounpey had possessed bimself of the Hill next adjoining thereunto, and began to hinder our Men from their Work, And having from one side an easie access unto it, first with Archers and Slingers, and afterwards with great Troops of light-armed Men, and Engines of Battery, he began to diffurb them in their bufiness. Neither were our Men able, at one and the same time, to defend themselves, and go on with their Fortifications.

Cæsar seeing his Soldiers wounded and hurt from all parts, commanded them to fall off, and leave the Place. But forasmuch as they were to make their retreat down the Hill, they did the more urge and press upon them; and would not suffer them to fall back, for that they seemed to forsake the a General of no worth, if Cæsar's Men could make any retreat from thence (where they were so rashly ingaged) without great lofs.

a Trench of an indifferent breadth, and incumbered the place as much as possibly he could. He lodged also Slingers in convenient places, to defend exceeding great want they endured at Alesia, and be Men in their retreat.

These things being perfected, he caused the Legions to be drawn back. But Pompey's Party began with greater boldness and infolency to press our People: and putting by the Hurdles, which were set there as a Barricado, they passed over the Ditch. Which when Cæsar perceived, fearing lest they should ra-ther seem to be beaten off, than be brought back, whereby a greater scandal might consequently ensue, having almost from the mid-way incouraged his Men by Antonius, who commanded that Legion, he willed that the fign of charging the Enemy (hould be given by a Trumpet, and gave order to affault them.

The Soldiers of the ninth Ligion, putting themfeives suddenly into order, threw their Piles: And running furiously from the lower ground, up the steep of the Hill, drave the Enemy headlong from them : who found the Hurdles, the long Poles, and the Ditches, to be a great hinderance unto them in their retreat. It contented our Men to leave the place without loss: so that having flain many of them, without logs: 10 that having liain many of them, they came away very quietly, with the loft of five of their Fellows. And having flayed about that place a while, they took other Hills, and perfected the Fortifications upon them.

OBSERVATION.

This Chapter sheweth, that advantage of place, and some such industrious courses as may be fitted to the occasion, are of great consequence in extremities of War: but above all, there is nothing more available to clear a Danger, than Valour. Valour is the Hercules that overcometh fo nour, depending upon the fuperlative degree, must many Monsters: and verifieth that faying, which feek out projects beyond all equality: and the cannot be too often repeated, Virtue faciendum cannot be too often repeated, Virtute faciendum eft, quicquid in rebus bellicis est gerendum, What a Man does in matter of War, must be done with Valour. But of this I have already treated.

CHAP. XVIII.

The fcarcity which either Party endured in this

He carriage of that War was in a strange Casi. and unusual manner, as well in respect of the great number of Forts and Castles, containing such a circuit of Ground within one continued Fortification, as also in regard of the whole Siege, and of other confequents depending thereupon. For whofoever goeth about to besiege another, doth either take occasion from the weakness of the Enemy, daunted or stricken with fear, or overcome in Battel, or otherwise being moved thereunto by some injury offered; whereas now it happened that they were far the stronger, both in Horse and Foot. And generally, the cause of almost all Sieges is, to keep an Enemy from provision of Corn: But Cæsar, being then far inferiour in number of Soldiers, did nevertheless besiege an Army of intire and untouched Forces, especially at a time when they abounded with to fait out. To make they level that to ployage the elevery factory Provisions; for every day came great then, in a vain-glony, fay to those that were about force of Stipping from all parts, bringing plenty of all bim. That he would be content to be taken for things needful: neither could there any Wind blow, which was not good from Some part or other.

On the other fide, Cafar having Spent all the Corn he could get, far or near, was in great want and scarand yet with patience and labour had ended a great and dangerous War. They remembred likewife the much greater at Avaricum: and yet, for all that, they went away Conquerours of many great Nations.

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

They refused neither Barley nor Pease, when it was Towns, to repair themselves by taking in the given them instead of Wheat. And of Cattel same. (whereof they were furnished with great store out An of Epirus) they made great account.

Lib. III.

There was also a kind of Root, found out by them that were with Valerius, called Chara, which eaten with Milk did much relieve their want; and made withal a kind of Bread, whereof they had plenty. And when Pompey's Party happened in their Communications, to cast in their teeth their scarcity and besieged by Demetrius. mifery; they would commonly throw this kind of Bread at them, and scatter it in diver places, to discourage them in their hopes. And now Corn began to be ripe, and hope it felf did relieve their want, for that they trusted to have plenty within a short time. And oftentimes the Soldiers, in their Watches and Conferences, were heard to let fall Speeches, that they would rather eat the Bark of Trees, than suffer

Pompey to escape out of their hands.

Besides, they understood by such as ran away from the Enemy, that their Horse of service could scarce be kept alive, and that the rest of their Cattel were all dead, and that the Soldiers themselves were in no good health, as well through the narrowness of the place wherein they were pent, as also by means of the ill Savour and multitude of dead bodies, together with continual labour, being unaccustomed to Travel and Pains, but especially, through the extream want of Water; for all the Rivers and Brooks of that quarter, Cæsar had either turned another way, or dammed up with great Works. And as the places were mountainous, with some intermission and distinction of Valleys, in the form and fashion of a Cave or Den; so he stopped the same with great Piles beaten into the ground, and interlaced with Faggots and Hurdles, and then strengthened with Earth to keep back the Water: insomuch as they were constrained to seek low grounds, and Marish places, and there to sink Wells. Which labour they were glad to undertake, befides their daily Works, albeit these Wells stood far distant from their Garrisons, and were quickly dried up with heat.

But Cæsar's Army was in exceeding good health, and had plenty of Water, together with all kind of Provisions, excepting Wheat; which the season of the Year daily brought on, and gave them hope of store,

Harvest being so near at hand.

In this new course of War, new policies and de-vices of warfare were invented and put in practice by either Party. They, perceiving by the Fires that our Cohorts in the Night-time kept Watch at the Works. came stealing out, and discharged all their Arrows upon them, and then presently retreated. Wherewith our Men being warned, found out this remedy; that they made their Fixes in one place, and kept their Watch

The First OBSERVATION.

FOrasmuch as all matter of attempt doth much import the fortune of a War, we may not omit to take notice of the reasons here expressed by Cafar, which are the true motives of undertaking a Siege. The first is drawn either from the weakness of an Enemy, or as he is daunted with fear, or overcome in Battel. For having thereupon no confidence in his own power, he refteth himself in the strength of the Place which he holderh and poffeffeth: which giveth his Adverfaries occasion to lay siege unto his Hold; and either to force them, or thut them up like Women.

The fecond is, when one State hath offered injury to another (which always importeth loss) beyond that which stood with the course of respect Hunger. formerly held between them. For revenge whereof, the other fide layeth fiege to some of their

And thirdly, the final cause of all Sieges is, to keep an Enemy from Victual, and other manner of Provisions; and so to take them by the Belly, when they cannot take them by the Ears; which is a part to violent, in requiring that which is due to Nature, as it hath made the Father and the Son fall out for a Mouse: as it happened at Athens, Plutario

The Second OBSERVATION.

The fecond thing worthy our confideration is, the patience and deportment of Casar's Soldiers, in their fo great wants and necessities. As first, in helping themselves with this Root called Chara, described by Diescorides, to be a little Seed, Lib. 3.c. 59. tafting somewhat like Anniseed, good to help digeftion, and having fuch a Root as a Carrot, which gettion, and naving iucn a Nove as a Carrot, which being boiled is very good Mear; and is the fame Labor militia which our Phylicians call Caraway-feed: whereoffiding fruwhich our frayicians can consumate the field a fraction with they ferred their turn with fuch contentment, galaxii or as they feemed to have been trained up in the freedom factor of School of Frugality; a vertue worthy of all rection of fine of the first of the fir gard, and the only means to make easie the diffi-Cyrus content-culties of War, being as necessary for a Soldier, ed with bread as the use of Arms; and is that which was aimed and water. at in the answer of Cyrus, to shew the services in a Soldier's diet. For being demanded, what he would have made ready for Supper; Bread, faith he; for we will Sup at the Fountain.

Neither hath it been thought fit, to give way to the natural loofeness of the Stomachs Appetite, upon any occasion; but to use the like modera-tion in the time of plenty. For zero took the answer of them, that would excuse their liberal expences by their ability of means, for no better payment, than they themselves would have taken the excuse of their Cooks, for putting too much Salt on their Meat, because they had Salt enough.

Casar punished his Baker, for giving him better Bread than his Soldiers had. And Scipio cashiered a couple of Romans at the siege of Carthage, for feafting a Friend in their Tent, during an Affault. Which austerity of life raised the Remans to that height of Honour, and made them Mafters of the World, from the East to the Weftern Ocean.

Secondly, as a confequent of this contentment, we may note their resolution to hold on their course of Siege; purposing rather to eat the Bark of Course ot stege; purpoung taunet to cat the bank of Trees, than to fuffer Pompy to escape their hands. Applied It is an excellent point in a General, to keep hime works large felf from irrefolution; being a weakness of ill ge Imputer consequence, and not unlike the disease of the transmission of the trans Staggers, variable, uncertain, and without bottom pro rerum or bound: whereas conftancy to purposes, pro-waritains duceth noble and worthy ends.

An instance whereof is Fabius Maximus, who menum efficient notwithstanding the reproach and scandal cast up-iur. Agapeon him, continued firm in his determination, to tus. the faving of his Country. And if it be fo well nobis cunft and beseeming a Leader, it is of much more regard do restinuit in the Soldier: especially considering that of Xeno-Rem. Enn. phon; Non facile in officio potest miles contineri ab eo, qui necessaria non subministrat : He cannot eafily keep his Soldiers in obedience, which does not provide them necessaries. For, as the same Author observeth in another place, Nullus est adeo fortis Lib. 6. de aut validus, qui possit adversus famem aut frigus Cyropad pugnando militare; There is no Man fo flour and valorous, that can fight against Cold and

The Third OBSERVATION.

Mongst all the parts of the Roman discipline, A Mongit all the parts of the number of their Watch deserveth a particular description; supplying in the Army, the Office of the natural Eye in the Body, which is, to give notice of any approaching danger, for the preventing of the fame. Polybius hath left it to posterity in this manner; Of each fort of the Legionary Foot, as namely the Haftati, Principes, and Triarii, and likewise of the Horse, there was chosen one out of the tenth and last Maniple, that was made free from Watch and Ward. This Party, as the Sun began to decline, came daily to the Tent of the Tribune, and there had given him a little Tablet, wherein the watch-word was writ; which Tablet they called Teffera: And then returning to his Company, delivered it to the Centurion of the next Maniple, and that Centurion to the next, next manipee, and that Centurion to the next, and so in order, until it came to the first and A relation of divers Encounters that happened There is a chiefest Company, which was lodged next unto the Tribunes; and by the Centurion thereof was returned to the Tribune before Sun-fetting.

And if all the Tablets were brought in, then did the Tribune know the word was given to all. If any wanted, they made enquiry, and by the notes of inteription finding which was miffing, they punished the default as they saw cause. And this was their watch-word, by which their Party was diftinguished from an Enemy; and in likelihood (for Polybius doth not affirm fo much) was by the Centurion given to fuch of his Maniple as were to watch that Night.

had three Watches, and every Legate two. A Warch conflicted of four Men, according to the 'by order and prefer print, and the other diffoling general division of their Night into four parts: every thing at he shall think sit. cach of those four having his turn appointed him by Lot, for the first, second, third, or fourth Watch, and the reft fitting by. The Velites kept watch without the Camp, and the Decuries of Horse at the Gates. Besides, every Maniple had private watch within it felf.

Of those that were appointed to watch, a Lieutenant of each Maniple did bring to the Tribune in the Evening, such as were to keep the first watch of the Night: and to them were delivered leffer Tablets, than were given at first, called Tefferulæ, appropriated to every particular Watch; one for himfelf, and three other for his Fellows

The trust of going the Round was committed to the Horsemen: for it belonged to the first Commander of Horse in each Legion, to give order to his Lieutenant, to appoint before Dinner four young Men of his Troop, to go the Round the next; and in the Evening, to acquaint Noting the next; and in the Evening, to acquaint the next Commander to appoint Rounds for the Night following. These Horsemen being thus appointed, did cast Lots for the first, second, third, and fourth Watch, and then repaired to the Tribune; of whom they had order what, and how many Watches to visit, having received the watchword before from their Commander: And then all four went to attend at the Tent of the Primipile, or chiefest Centurion of a Legion, who had the charge of diftinguishing the four Watches of the Night by a Trumpet.

When time ferved for him that was to go the Round the first Watch, he went out accompanied Watches which were assigned unto him. And if he found the Watch-man waking, and in good order, he then took that Tablet from him which Our Party loft not above twenty Men in all these fights; he had received of the Tribune, and departed. But hombeit in the Fort there was not one M:n but was hurt.

if he found him fleeping, or out of his place, he took witness thereof, and departed. The same did the rest of the Rounds, as their Watches fell out in course. And as the Day began to break, all the Rounds brought in the Tablets to the Tribunes. And if all were brought in, there was no more to do: But if any wanted, it was found out by the Character, what Watch had failed: which being known, the Centurion was called, and commanded to bring those that were faulty. If the offence were in the Watch-man, the Rounds was to prove it by witneffes: if not, it fell upon himself; and a Council of War being presently called, the Tribune gave judgment to kill him with a Club. And in this manner did the Romans keep watch in the Camp.

CHAP. XIX.

between both Parties. N the mean time Pub. Sylla, whom Cæsar (at in this place bis departure from the Camp) had left to com-cuited.

mand the Army, being certified thereof, came with two Legions to Succour the Cohort: at whose approach, Pompey's Party was easily beaten off, being neither able to endure the skock nor fight of our Men. For the first being put off, the rest gave back, and left the place: But as our Men purfued them, Sylla called them back, and would not fuffer them to follow far after. Howbeit, many Men think, that if he would have preffed hard upon them, Their Night-watches were thus ordered; a the War had ended that day. But in my opinion, Maniple, or Company. was always appointed to he is not to be blamed; for there is one charge and alia fort watch at the Generals Pavilion. The Treasurer power peculiar to a Lieutenant, and another to him Legati pathat commandeth in Chief: the one doing nothing but res, arque

Sylla (in Cæsar's absence) having freed his Men. was content therewith, and would no further ingage them in fight (which might happily prove subject to ill fortune) left he skould seem to assume unto himself the Place and Authority of a General. There were certain things that made the retreat of Pompey's Men very difficult and hazardous. For having ascended from a bottom to a Hill, they now found themselves upon the top thereof. And as they were to make their retreat down again, they stood in fear of our Men, pressing on them from the higher ground; neither was it far from Sun-fetting (for hoping to end it speedily, they drew out the business until it was almost Night) whereby Pompey was forced to take a resolution from the time, and to pesses himself of a Mount, no further from the Fort than out of frot. There he made a stand, fortified the place, and kept

At the same time they fought in two other places: for Pompey, to Separate and distract our Troops, asfaulted divers Forts together, to the end they might not be succoured from the next Garrisons. In one place, Volcatius Tullus with three Cohorts Suftained the affault of a Legion, and made them for fake the place. In another part, the Germans Sallying out of our Works, flew many of the Enemy, and returned back to their Fellows in safety. So that in one day there were six several fights; three at Dyrrachium, and three at the Fortifications : of all which an account being taken, there were found slain of Pompey's Party, to the number of two thousand, with many Centurions, and other Special Men called out to that with some of his Friends, and visited those War. Among st whom was Valerius Flaccus, the Sen Events. of Lucius, who being Pretor had obtained the Province of Afia: besides, there were fix Ensigns taken.

Four Conturions of one Cohort lost their Eyes; sin pena; In the House of God there never was, fand Arrows Shot into the Fort. There was also a Target of one Scava, a Centurion, which was shewed unto him, being pierced through in Two Hundred and Thirty places; whom Cælar (as having well deserved of him and the Commonwealth) rewarded Millibus du- with Six Hundred Pound Sterling; and advanced him from the Compunies of the eighth Rank, to be Primipilus. the chiefest Centurion, or Primipile of the Legion: For it appeared, that by his means especially the Fore was saved. For the Cohort, he doubled their Pay, as well in Money, as in Corn and Apparel; and rewarded them nobly with ornaments of Military

Pompey having wrought all that Night, to for-Kompey having wrought all that Night, to for-tific his Trenches, the days following be built Towers 15 Foot high; which being finished, he added Mantelest to that part of the Camp. And after five days, having gos a dark Night (shuting all the Ports of his Camp, and ramming them up) in the beginning of the third Warch, he drew out his Army in silence, and betook himself to his old For-

OBSERVATION.

THe breach of the History in this place, is like a Blot in a fair Table, or as a Gap in a Dance of Nymphs, and doth much blemish the beauty of this Discourse. But, forasmuch as it is a lois which cannot be repaired, we must rest contented with the use of that which remaineth.

Out of which we may observe the notice they took of well-deferving; according to the Institu-tion of their Discipline, supported especially by Pramium and Pana, Reward and Punishment. The recognition whereof (according to the judg-Solon Plat. ment of the gravest Law-givers) is the means to raise a state to the height of Perfection. Eo enim impendi laborem & periculum, unde emolu-mentum & honos Speratur, Men will then venture and take pains, when they know they shall get themselves Honour and Preferment by it. The Romans, saith Polybius, crowned the Valour of their Soldiers with eternal Honours. Neither did any thing fo much excite them to the atchievement of Noble Acts, as their Triumphs, Garment of Noble Acts, as their Triumpins, Garlands, and other Enfigns of publick Renown: to treat with Pompey thereof in an impalenable
Which Casar especially observed above the rest. time. But Scipio had that credit and respects, that Which Cassar especially observed above the rest. For besides this which he did to Cassius Scava (recorded by all the Writers of these Wars) Plu-In vita Ca. tarch relateth, that at his being in Britain, he could not contain from embracing a Soldier, that carried himself Valiantly in defence of divers Centurions. And whereas the poor Man, falling down at his Feet, asked nothing but Pardon for leaving his Target behind him; he rewarded him with great Gifts and much Honour. Howbeit, the difference which Sallust hath made in this kind is too generally observed; that, It In reputs.mil- more importeth a Commonweal to punish an ill to prefer to Member, than to reward a good Act: For a malifair in. Vertuous Defire is by neglect a little abated, but memorem sp: an ill Man becomes unsufferable. And thence it thing Bonus, figurer is, That Merit is never valued but upon necessity. for the integral 15, I flat ever it is never values to the Honour of wearing a Lyons Skin, should first kill the Beast, as Hercules did: But to kill a Lyon, and not to have the Skin, is not so available as a meaner

Occupation. Anthony Guevara giveth another

Rule, observed in that Government, which is the true Idea of Perfection: En la casa de Dios and for argument of their endeavour and great nor is, nor shall be, desert unrewarded, or fault unpunished.

CHAP. XX.

Cafar moveth Scipio to mediate a Peace.

Etolia, Acarnania, and Amphilochis being Carler. taken by Cassius Longinus, and Calvisius Sabinus, as is vefore declared, Caesar thought it expedient to attempt and try Achaia, and to proceed further in that course: Whereupon he sent thither L. Calenus, and Q. Sabinus, and to them he added Cassius with his Cohorts. Their coming being bruited abroad, Rutilius Lupus, to whom Pompey had left the charge of Achaia, determined to Fortifie the Isthmus, to keep out Fusius. Calenus in the mean time, with the favour and affent of the States, took in Delphos, Thebes, and Orchomenus, besides some other Places which he took by force. The rest of the Cities he laboured to draw to Cæsat's Party, by Embassages fent about unto them : And therein was Fusius occupied for the present. Cæsar every day following brought out his Army into an equal and indifferent place, to see if Pompey would accept of Battel; insomuch as he led them under Pompey's Camp, the Vanguard being within shot of the Rampier. Pompey, to hold the Fame and Opinion he had attained, drew out his Forces, and so Embattelled them before his Camp, that their Rereward did touch the Rampier; and the whole Army was so disposed, that every Man was under the Protection of Juch Weapons as might be shot from thence.

While thefe things were doing in Achaia and at Dyrrachium, it was certainly known that Scipio was come into Macedonia. Casar not omitting his former purpose, sent Clodius unto him, a familiar Friend to both of them, and one whom Scipio had formerly so commended to Cæsar, that he had taken him in the number of his nearest Favourites. To him he gave Letters and Messages to be delivered to Scipio; whereof this was the effect. That he had used all means for Peace, and yet had prevailed nothing at all : Which he took to be the fault of he might not only deliver freely what he thought fitting, but might also (in some sort) constrain him, and reform his Error. For being Commander in chief over an Army, besides his credit, he had strength to compel him. Which, if he did, every Man would attribute the quiet of Italy, the Peace of the Provinces, and the safety and preservation of the Em-pire to him only. All these things did Clodius make known to Scipio: And for the first days was well heard; but afterwards could not be admitted to speech; Favonius reprehending Scipio, for going fo far with bim, as afterwards we understood upon the ending of the War: Whereby he was forced to return to Cæsar, without effecting any Cæsar, that he might with greater facility keep in Pompey's Cavalry at Dyrrachium, and hinder them from Forage, fortified and sout up two Passages (which, as we have before declared, were very narrow) with great Works, and there built Castles. Pompey understanding that his Horsemen did no good abroad, within a few days conveyed them within his Fortification by Shipping. Howbeit they jamas fue, nies, ni sera, merito sin premio, ni colpa were in extream necessity for want of Forage; in-fomuch as having beaten off all the Leaves of the another, they gave over the enterprise. And it Trees, they fed their Hofes with young Reeds may be upon like confideration, or otherwise, bruifed and beaten in piecest. For they had Jepen the fearing to correct the works of Nature, they for-Corn which was sowed within the Works, and were mus, forced to bring Food for their Cattel from Corcyra and Panama, and so to joyn one Sea to the other, tes, Wellere and Acarnania, by long and tedious Navigation; as was faid to be intended. res, Welkere and Acarnania, by long and tedious Navigation; ab ignosis and where it fell floore, they made it up with Barley, cibus harbas, and so kept Life in their Horses. But afterwards, when as not only their Barley and other Food was Spent in all places, and the Grass and Herbs dried up, but the Fruit alfo wasted and consumed off the Trees, their Horses being so lean as they were not able to stand on their Legs, Pompey thought it expedient to think of some course of breaking out.

OBSERVATION.

pretences to engage Scipio fo far in contriving a Peace, as being General of an Army, he might assume unto himself a commanding Authority; and thereupon breed fuch a jealousie as would keep Pompey and him afunder.

Nevertheless, it is every way worth a Man's Labour, to make Overtures of Peace howfoever: especially considering, how it changeth the relative in the condition of Men, which in War is Hemo homini Lupus, One Man a Woolf to anodederitis, fi ther; and in Peace, Homo homini Deus, One Man dam & per-ther; and in Peace, Homo homini Deus, One Man peruam; fi a God to another: and, proving good, will doubtperaim; a most of anomer, and, proving good, will double making hard lefs continue; if inconvenient, the fooner broken, diagrama, and fo the cale is but the fame it was before. Schilleft, and a secondary, We may note, that there is nothing moneyages fo difficult, but pertinacy and reftlefs Labour, pertinary per directed with diligent and intent Care, will in the diligens end overcome it. For Cafar, that at the first cara. Seese feemed to undertake imponibilities, going about the Eppf-31 to Befiege a great part of a Country, and to flut up a huge Army in an open place, did nevertheless when to find the extremity of Senera feemed to undertake impossibilities, going about payment. (by endeavour) bring them to fuch extremity of Want, that if, as Democritus faid, the Body should have put the Mind in fute, for reparation of loss, which her Ambition and wilful Obstinacy had drawn upon it, she should never be able to pay

> Touching the Isthmus which Rutilius Rufus went about to Fortifie, it is a Neck of Earth, joyning an Island unto the Continent. For as the In-let of the Sea, between two Lands, is called Porthmus (whereupon the Town of Portsmouth in Hampshire hath that appellation, as feated upon the like In-let) so any small Langet or Neck of Earth, lying between two Seas, is called Ifthmus. Whereof this of Achaia is of special note in Greece; being the same that joyned Peloponnesus to the Continent, and was of special Fame for the situation of Corinth.

These Necks of Earth, called Isthmi, are of the nature of those things, as have been often threatned, and yet continue the fame. For albeit the ambition of great Princes hath fought to alter the fashion of the Earth in that behalf. yet I know not how their defires have forted to Plin. lib. 4.; no end. Perfodere navigabili alveo has angustias tentavere Demetrius Rex, Dictator Cafar, Caius Princeps, & Domitius Nero, infausto, ut emnium patuit exitu, incepto; King Demetrius, Cafar the Dictator, Caius the Prince, and Domitius Nero, all of them attempted to draw through this Neck of Land with a Navigable Channel, without any Succeis, as appears by the Issue. In the time of King Sefostris, and fince, in the Empire of the cations: For before that time, no Man, either Soldier Ottomans, they went about to bring the Red-Jea bare to make a Paffage between Nombre de Dios

CHAP. XXI.

An accident which fell out by two Brethren of Savoy, in Cafar's Army.

Here were in Cæsar's Camp two Brethren Cæsar. of Savoy, Roscillus and Ægus, the Sons of Adbucillus, who, for many Years together, was accounted the principal and IT may feem a cunning Trick of Casar, and chief Man of that State: These were Men of sin-perhaps it was his end, to endeayour with fair gular worth, and had done Casar very great services. gular worth, and had done Casar very great service in all the Wars of Gallia; and in that respect Casat had advanced them to great and honourable Charges in their Country, and caused them (extraordinarily) to be taken in the number of the Senators, and bestowed much of the Enemies Lands upon them, besides great summs of ready Money, and of Poor had made them Rich.

These Men were not only well respected by Calar, but were in good account throughout all the Army. Howbeit; relying too much on Cæsar's Favour, and puffed up with foolish and barbarous Arrogancy, they disdained their own Men, deceiving the Horsemen of their Pay, and averting all Pillage from publick distribution to their own particular. The Horsemen provoked with these Injuries, came all to Cæsar, and complained openly thereof: Adding farther, That their Troops were not full, nor answerable to the List or Muster-Roll, by which they required

Cæsar thinking it no fit time of Punishment, and withal, attributing much to the worth of the Men, put off the whole matter, and chid them privately, for making a gain of their Troops of Horse; willing them to expect a fupply of all their Wants from his Favour, according as their Service had well deserved. Nevertheless, the matter brought them into great scandal and contempt with all Men: Which they plainly perceived, both by the Speeches of other Men, as also by that they might judge them-felves, their own Consciences accusing them. With Pennam Constitution of the Consti which reproach and stame they were so moved (and ser ann cathinking peradventure that they were not quit there, los vetain of, but deferred until some other time) that they pecaretum. resolved to leave the Army, to seek new Fortunes, Cic. in wrat. and make proof of other Acquaintance. And ha- Pro Milone. ving imparted the matter to a few of their Followers, to whom they durst communicate so great a Disloyalty, first they went about to kill C. Volusenus, General of the Horse (as after the War was ended was discovered) that they might come to Pompey upon some deserved Service: But after they found it hard to accomplish, they took up as much Money as they could borrow, as though they meant to have paid their Troops, what they formerly had defrauded with their purpofes. Pompey finding them Gentlemen of fort, liberally ought up, attended with a great Retinue, and many Horses, and both of them very Valiant, and in good account with Casar, and withal, for that it was an unusual and strange accident, he led them about the Works, and strewed them all the Fortisior Horseman, had fled from Casar to Pompey; into the Nile; but fearing it would be a means whereas daily they came from Pompey to Casar, 10 drown the Land, one Sea being lower than especially such as were Enrolled in Epirus and Eto-

them of; and having bought many Horses they went to Pompey, together with such as were acquainted Commentaries of the Civil Wars. lia, which Countries were at Cæsar's Devotion. Thefe two Brethren exactly understanding all things in Cæsar's Camp (as well concerning such Works as were perfect, as such others wherein Men skilful in War might find defect, together with the opportunity of Time and distances of Places, as also the diligence of the Guards, with the nature and endeavour of every Man that had a charge) related all particularly to Pompey.

OBSERVATION.

WE may here observe the sincerity and direct carriage of inferiour Commanders in the Roman Army by the scandal these two Savoyens ran into for making falle Mufters, and defrauding the Soldiers of their due: A matter fo ordinary in these our Times, as Custom seemeth to justifie the Abuse. For what more common in the course of our Modern Wars, than to make Gain of Companies, by mustering more than they have in Pay, and by turning that which is due to the Soldier to their own benefit? The first whereof, if it be duly weighed, is an offence of an high nature against the State; and the second, such an Injury to the Soldier, as can hardly be answer-

It is merrily (as I take it) faid by Columella, That, in foro concessum latrocinium, Robbery is lawful in courses at Law. But for those, to whom is committed the fafety of a Kingdom, to betray the Trust reposed in them, by raising their means with Dead Pays, and consequently, affift-ing the Cause with dead Service; as also by difabling their Companions and Fellow-Soldiers from doing those Duties which are requisite, for want of due entertainment; is a thing deserving a heavy censure, and will doubtless fall out unto them, as it did to these two Brethren. The sequel whereof will appear by the Story, and confirm that of Xenophon; Dii baud impunita relinquunt impia & nefaria hominum facta : The Gods do not fuffer the Impieties and Wickedneffes of Men to escape unpunished.

CHAP. XXII.

Pompey attempting to break out, purteth Cafar's Party to great loss.

Ompey being informed of these things, and having formerly resolved to break out, as is already declared, gave order to the Soldiers to make them coverings for their Morions of Osiers, and to get some store of Bavins and Faggots. Which being prepared, he shipped a great number of their Light-armed Soldiers and Archers, together with those Faggots in Skiffs and Gallies. And about Midnight he drew threescore Cohorts out of the greater Camp, and the places of Garrison, and fent them to that part of the Fortification which was next unto the Sea, and farthest off from Cafar's greatest Camp. Thither also be fent the Ships before-mentioned, filled with Light-armed Men and Faggots, together with as many other Gallies as were at Dyrrachium; and gave directions how every Man should employ bimself

Cæsar had left Lentulus Marcellinus, the Treafurer, with the Legion newly enrolled, to keep that Fortification; who, for that he was fickly, and of an ill disposition of Body, had substituted Fulvius Posthumus as his Coadjutor.

There was in that place a Trench of fifteen Foot deep, and a Rampier against the Enemy of ten Foot in heighth, and as much in breadth. And about six hundred Foot from that place was raised another Rampier, with the Front the contrary way, but somewhat lower than the former. For, some few days before, Cæsar (fearing that place, least our Men should be circumvented with their Ships) had caused double Fortifications to be made in that place; that if (peradventure) they should be put to their shifts, they might nevertheless make good Resistance. But the greatness of the Works, and the continual labour they daily endured, the Fortifications being carried eighteen Miles in circuit, would not suffer them to finish it. Whereby it happened, that he had not as yet made a Rampier along the Sea-shore, to joyn these two Fortifications together, for the defence thereof: Which was informed Pompey by these two Savoyens, and brought great Damage and Loss to our People. For as the Cohorts of the ninth Legion kept watch and guard upon the Sea, suddenly, by the break of day, came Pompey's Army; which seemed very strange unto our Men : And instantly, thereupon, the Soldiers from a Ship-board assaulted with their Weapons the inner Rampier, and the rest began to fill up the Trench.

The Legionary Soldiers, appointed to keep the in-ner Fortifications, having planted a great number of Ladders to the Rampier, did amufe the Enemy with Weapons, and Engines of all forts; and a great number of Archers were thronged together on each fide. But the coverings of Oliers which they wore on their Head-Pieces, did greatly defend them from the blows of Stones, which was the only Weapon our Men had for that purpose. And as our Men were overlaid with all these things, and did hardly make Resistance, they found out the defect of the Fortification, formerly mentioned : And Landing their Men between the two Rampiers, they charged our People in the Rere, and fo driving them from both the Fortifications, made them turn their backs.

This Alarm being heard, Marcellinus fent certain Cohorts to Succour our Men: Who seeing them fly, could neither re-affure them by their coming, nor withfrand the fury of the Enemy themselves: Inso-much as what relief soever was sent, was alfracted by the fear and assonssment of them that sted away. Whereby the terror and the danger was made much the greater, and their Retreat was hindered through the multitude of People.

In that Fight, the Eagle-bearer being grievously Wounded, and fainting for want of strength, look-ing towards the Horsemen; This have I, said he, in my Life-time carefully and diligently defended for many Years together, and now, dying, with the Same Fidelity do restore it unto Cælar : Suffer not (I pray you) such a dishonour, the like whereof never happened in Cæsar's Army, but return it unto him in Safety. By which accident the Eagle was Saved : All the Centurions of the first Cohort being flain, but the first of the Maniple of the Principes. And now the Enemy, with great slaughter of our Men, approached near Marcellinus's Camp.

The rest of the Cohorts being greatly astonished M. Antonius holding the next Garrison to that place. upon notice thereof was seen to come down from the upper ground with twelve Cohorts. Upon whose coming Pompey's Party was repressed and staid, and our Men somewhat re-assured, giving them time to come again to themselves out of that astonishment. And not long after, Cæsar having knowledge thereof by smoak made out of the Forts, according to the use of former time, came thither also, bringing with him certain Cohorts out of the

Cæfar.

OBSERVATION.

T is an old faying, That Thieves handfel is always naught. But Traytors handfel is much Arma alienesse grove trans alietrans the Grown of the en and die- in this War, and the first that brought Pompey the exercise good Fortune: Themselves standing culpable of ter, in q e ji as great an Offence, as if they had alienated the Lib. (4 & d: whole Army. In the course whereof we may see plainly that which I have formerly noted; that it is an excellent thing to be still attempting upon an Enemy, so it be done upon good Grounds and Cautions: For while Pempey stood upon the defensive Ward, the Honour of the Contention fell continually upon Cafar. And doubtlefs, he that observeth Calar's proceedings in the carriage of all his Wars, shall find his Fortune to have specially grown from his active and attempting Spirit.

In this Eagle-bearer, we may fee verified that a Valiant Spirit is sometimes great by the favour of Fortune, but always great in a good Cou-

For these Titles of Degrees, as Princeps prior, and the reft here mentioned, having formerly discoursed at large of the parts of a Legion, and the rherarchy of their Discipline, I will rather referr the Reader thereunto, than bumbast out a Volume with distasteful Repetitions.

CHAP. XXIII.

Casar purposeth to alter the course of War; and attempteth to cut off one of Pompey's Legions.

Elar understanding of the Loss, and per-Fortifications, and was Encamped upon the the Cavalry followed after those Cohorts. Sea, in such fort as he might freely go Sca, n fuch fort as he might freely go out to Forzage, and have no lefs accels to his Shipping than formerly he had; changing his courfe of War, which had not fucceeded to his expedition, he Encamped himself fall by Pompey. The Works, being perfected, it was observed by Casar's Scotts. that certain Coborts, to the number of a Legion, were brought behind a Wood into the old Camp. The situation of the Camp was after this manner. The days before, Cæsar's ninth Legion opposing themselves against Pompey's Forces, and working upon the Fortifications (as is before declared) had their Camp in that place, adjoyning unto a Wood, and not di-Stant from the Sea above four kundred Paces. Afterwards Cæsar changing his Mind for some certain Causes, transferred his Lodging somewhat farther off from that place. A few days after the same Camp was peffest by Pompey. And forasmuch as he was to lodge more Legions in that place, leaving the inner Rampier standing, he enlarged the Forti-fication, so that the lesser Camp being included in the greater, served as a Castle or Cittadel to the same. Besides also, he drew a Fortification from the right angle of the Camp, four hundred Paces out-right to a River, to the end the Soldiers might Water freely, without danger. And he also changing In Mind, for some causes not requisite to be mentioned, left the place too: So that the Camp stood empty for many days together, and all the Fortifications were as perfect as at the first.

The Discoverers brought news to Cæsar, that they had seen an Ensign of a Legion carried thither. The same was likewise confirmed from certain Forts which stood upon the higher Grounds.
The place was distant from Pompey's new Camp about five hundred Paces. Cælar hoping to cut off this Legion, and desirous to repair that day's loss, left two Cohorts at work, to make a frew of fortify-ing, and be himself (by a contrary way, in as co-vert a manner as he could) led the rest of the Cohorts, in number thirty three (amongst whom was the ninth Legion, that had left many Centurions, and was very weak in Soldiers) towards Pompey's Legion, and the leffer Camp, in a double Battel. Neither did his Opinion deceive him : For he came thither before Pompey could perceive it.

And albeit the Fortifications of the Camp were great, yet affaulting it speedily with the left Wing, wherein he himself was, he drave Pompey's Soldiers from the Rampier. There food a * Turn-Pike in Eritius. In this Eague-occarer, we may rec vermed that which Patereculus affirment of Militridutes, That the Gate, which gave occasion of Resistance for a a Valiant Spirit is sometimes great by the savour while: And as our Men would have entered, they Valiantly defended the Camp; T. Pulcio, by whose means C. Antonius's Army was betrayed, as we have formerly declared, Fighting there most Valiantly. Yet nevertheless our Men overcame them by Valour : and cutting up the Turn-Pike, entered first into the

But Fortune, that can do much in all things, and especially in War, doth in a small moment of time bring great alterations; as it then happened. For the Cohorts of Cælar's right Wing, ignorant of the Place, followed the Rampier which went along from the Camp to the River, Seeking after the Gate, and taking it to be the Rampier of the Camp: But when they perceived that it joyned to the River, they preceiving that Pompey was got out of the sently got over it, no Man resisting them; and all

OBSER VATION.

Dompey having cleared his Army of that Siege, it booted not Cafar to profecute his purpose any longer: For when the end is miffed for which any course is undertaken, it were folly to feek it by that means. We must rather choose new ways, that may lead us to the end of our hepes, than follow the old Track, which forted to no effect. And yet nevertheless, the sufficiency supress non to no effect. And yet nevertherers, the full extra y suppose mosof the General is no way disabled: For, albeits from it some a Wise Man doth not always keep one pace, yet grad vid. ftill he holdeth one and the same way."

Secondly, That of Xerxes appeareth to betta magris true, that great Attempts are always made with fum pricals great difficulty and danger. Wherein the Wil-Herodot, dom of the Heathen World afcribed all to For-Forman eminia tune, as the fole cause of all remarkable Events, expensa, emma and that which filled up both the Pages of all the copta: & in Books, wherein Men noted the course of things. tota ratione Books, wheten accepte, non semper ignavia, sed metalism, aliquando Fortuna temeritati sunt imputanda, peqinomfaiti. Losses received in War are not always to be'llin. lib.2. imputed to flothful carriage, but oftentimes to cap. 7the temerity of Fortune, faith Archidamus; and is that which is aimed at by Cafar.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIV.

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

The Fight continueth, and Cafar lofeth.

N the mean while Pompey, after so long a respite of time, having notice thereof, took the first Legion from their Works, and brought them to succour their Fellows : And at the same time his Cavalry did approach near our Horsemen, and our Men that possession against them; and discover an Army Embattelled coming against them; and all things were suddenly changed. For Pompey's Legion, assured with a speedy hope of Succour, began to make resistance at the Decumane Gate, and voluntarily charged our Men.

Cæsar's Cavalry being got over the Rampire into a narrow Passage, fearing how they might Retreat in safety, began to fly away. The right Wing, secluded and cut off from the left, perceiving the terror of the Horsemen (lest they might be endangered within the Fortifications) betook them-Selves to the other fide from whence they came : And most of them (lest they should be surprised in the Streights) cast themselves over Works of ten Foot high into the Ditches: And such as first got over being trodden under Foot by Such as followed after, the rest saved themselves in passing over their Bodies.

The Soldiers of the left Wing perceiving from the Rampire that Pompey was at hand, and that their own side sled away, fedring lest they should be Shut up in those Streights, having the Enemy both without and within them, thought it their best courfe to return back the same way they came. Whereby there happened nothing but Tumult, Fear, and Flight: Insomuch as when Casar caught hold with his hand of the Ensigns of them that sted, and commanded them to stand; some for fear left their Ensigns behind them, others for sking their Horses, kept on their Course: Neither was there any one of them that would stand. Notwithstanding, in this so great a calamity and mishap these helps fell out to relieve us, when the whole Army was in danger to be cut off; that Pompey fearing some Treachery (for that, as I think, it appened beyond his expectation, who, a little before saw his Men sty out of his Camp) durst not for a good while approach near the Fortifications; and our Men possessing the narrow Passages and the Ports, did hinder the Horsemen from following after. And so a small matter fell out to be of great Moment, in the carriage of that accident, on either side. For the Rampire which was carried from the Camp to the River (Pompey's Camp being already taken) was the only hindrance of Cafar's Expedite and ensie Victory: And the same thing, hindering the Speedy following of their Horsemen, was the only Safety and help of our Men.

Men Nine Hundred and Threefcore; and Horsemen of note, R. Felginas, Tuticanus Gallus, a Senator's Son, C. Felginas of Placentia, Agravius of Puteolis, Sacrativirus of Capua, ten Tribunes of the Soldiers, and thirty Centurions. But the greatest part of these perished in the Trenches, in the Fortifications, and on the River Banks, press to Death with the fear and slight of their Fellows, without any Blow or Wound given them. There were lost at that time Thirty Two Military Ensigns.

name of Imperator; which Title be then obtained, tamen extitere disciplina; My Mishaps, though and so suffered himself to be stilled afterward: they be unpleasing enough, yet they have full Howbeit he used it not in any of his Missives, nor taught me something.

yet wore any Laurel in the bundle of Rods carried before him.

Labienus having begged all the Captives, caused them (for greater oftentation) to be brought out in publick; and to give the more affurance to such as were fled thither from Cæsar's Party, calling them by the name of Fellow-Soldiers, in great derision asked them whither old Soldiers were wont to fly: and so caused them all to be slain.

Pompey's Party took Such an affurance and Spirit upon these things, that they thought no farther of the course of War, but carried themselves as though they were already Victors: Not respecting (as the casse of all this) the paucity of our Men, nor the disadvantage of the place, and the streightness thereof, the Camp being possessed, and the doubtful Terror both within and without the Works; not yet the Army divided into two parts, in such fort as neither of them were able to help or succour the other. Neither yet did they add to this, that the Fight was not made by any Valiant Encounter, or in form of Battel; but that they received more burt from the narrowness of the place, and from their own Diforder, than from the Enemy.

And to conclude, they did not remember the common chances and casualties of War: Wherein oftentimes very small causes, either of false Suspicion, or of Sudden Fear, or out of Scruple of Religion, do inferr great and heavy Losses; as often as either by the negligence of the General, or the fault of a Tribune, the Army is misordered. But as though they had overcome by true force of their Prowess, and that no alteration of things could after happen, they magnified that days Victory, by Letters and Re-port throughout the whole World.

The First OBSERVATION.

Sometimes we may think to repair a Loss, and thereby hazard a greater Misfortune. For albeit the Saying be common, That a Man must feek his Coat where he lost it, as Gamesters do; yet there is always more certainty in feeking than in finding. For the Circle of Humane Humanarum Affairs being carried round in a course, doth not rerum circumstants. Affairs Deing carried round in a courle, doth not removement infifer happinels to continue with one Party, but figui And thereupon it was, That Pittacus Dedicated eldem forms a Ladder to the Temple of Misylene, to put Men natas (fina in mind of their Condition; which is nothing but Headen. elle but going up and down. The Life of a De Misse has dier is a meer Hermaphrodite, and taketh part vices condition of either Sex of Fortune; and is made by Na-mortalism at ture to beget Happiness of Adversity, and Mil-sexuada, sechances of Good Hap: As if the cause of all canda et al. causes, by intermixing Sweet with Sower, would with respectively. lead us to his Providence, and confequently to Paner. himself, the first Mover of all Motions.

The diversity of these Events are so Inchained In those two Fights, there were wanting of Cæsar's together, as one seemeth to have relation to the other. For this Task admitted not of veni, vidi. vici, I only came, and faw, and overcame, nor went on with Alexander, marching over the Plains of Afia, without rub or controul: But the bufiness was disposed, here to receive a Blow, and there to gain a Victory. And so this loss at Dyrrachium made the Battel at Pharfalia the more glorious, and beautified the course of this War with variety of Chances. The best use of these Disasters, is that which Crassus made of his Pompey, upon that Fight, was faluted by the cross Fortunes, Mei cafut, etfi ingrati, mihi Herodotlib.s

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

The Second OBSERVATION.

A S the Mathematicks, by reason of their cer-tainty, do admit demonstration, as well from the conclusion to the principles, as from the principles to the conclusion: So in the actions of Man's life, it is not hard to affign the precedent causes by the fequel; the event being oftentimes an un-L'event è by the fequel; the event being oftentimes an un-fieffi judica derflanding Judge of things that are paft. And ma imperite although it do no where appear what was the delle elfa., caufe of Labienus's leaving Cofar; yet his infolent carriage towards these Captives, may make at least a probable conjecture, that his revolt proceeded from his own disposition, rather than from any cause on Casar's behalf. For where a Man hath once done an injury, he will never cease heaping one wrong after another, and all to justifie his first errour: Whereas on the other side, a noble spirit, free from all desert, will demean himfelf answerable to his first innocency.

CHAP. XXV.

C.esar speaketh to the Soldiers concerning this mishap; and forsaketh the Place.

Esar being driven from his former purposes, resolved to change the whole course of the War; so that at one and the same time omitting the Siege, and withdrawing the Garrisons, he brought all the Army into one place, and there spake unto the Soldiers: Exhorting them in Safety to their Troops. not to think much at those things that had happened, nor to be amuzed therewith; but to counterpoise this less (which was in a mediocrity) with many happy and fortunate Battels they had gained.

Let them thank Fortune, that they had taken Italy without blow or wound; that they had quieted and put in Peace both the Provinces of Spain, full of Warlike Men, and directed by skilful and practifed Commanders; that they also had subdued the fertile bordering Provinces; and likewife, that they skould not only the Havens and Ports, but all the Coast being full of Shipping.

The Philosopher Grain to be helped by their industry. The loss which was was wont to received, might be attributed to any Man rather isy, That to than unto him: For he had given them a secure be no occasi-on of an ill place to fight in, had possess himself of the Enemies hap, is a great Camp, driven them out, and overcome them in fight. comfort in But whether it were their fear, or any other errour, any manner of Fortune her felf, that would interrupt a Victory al-Plut. in conf. ready gained, every Man was now to labour to repair the damage they had sustained, with their Valour : Which if they did endeavour, he would turn their loss into advantage, as it formerly fell out at Gergovia, where such as before were afraid to fight, did of their own accord offer themselves to Battel.

Having ended his Speech, he difgraced and displaced some Ensign-bearers. The Army thereupon conceived fuch a grief of the blow that was given them, and fuch a defire they had to repair their dishonour, that no Man needed the command either of a Tribune or Centurion; every Man imposing upon himself as a punishment for his late fault, greater labours than ulual, and withal inflamed with an earnest desire of fighting: Insomuch as many of the higher Orders thought it requisite to continue in the place, and referr the cause to a Battel. But contrariwise, Casar exquisite a pattern in this kind, as is extant in feetling of their minds; fearing likewise lest he Military Art, and worthiest the knowledge of a

Should be straitned through scarcity of Corn, upon the leaving of his Fortifications. And therefore without any farther delay, giving order for such as were wounded and fick, as focn as it was Night, be conveyed all the Carriages fecretly out of the Camp, and fent them before towards Apollonia, forbidding them to rest until they came to their Lodging; and fent one Legion withal to convoy them.

That being done, he retained two Legions within the Camp: and the rest, being led out at divers Ports, about the fourth Watch of the Night, he sent the same way. And after a little pause (for the obferving of Military order, and to the end his speeds departure might not be discovered) he commanded them to take up the cry of truffing up their Baggage; and presently setting forward, overtook the former Troop, and so went speedily out of the sight of the

Pompey having notice of his purpose, made no delay to follow after: But aiming at the same things, either to take them incumbered in their March, or aftonished with fear, brought forth his Army, and fent his Horsemen before to stay the Rereward. But Casar went with fo speedy a March, that he could not overtake them, until he came to the River Gemus; where, by reason of the high and uneasse Banks, the Cavalry overtook the tail of the Army, and ingaged them in fight. Amongst whom Casar opposed his Horsemen, and intermingled with them four hundred experienced Soldiers, of them that had place before the Ensigns: Who so much prevailed in the Encounter, that they drove them all away before them, flew many of them, and returned themselves

Cæsar having made a just days March, according to his first determination, and brought his Army over the River Genusus, he lodged in his old Camp over-against Asparagus; and kept all the Soldiers within the Rampier, commanding the Horse that went out to Forage, to be presently taken in by the Decumane Port.

The First OBSERVATION.

remember, with what facility they were all transported in safety through the midst of the Enemies Fleets; A Libeit that of Cato be true, That an Errour presented in safety through the midst of the Enemies Fleets; A libeit that of Cato be true, That an Errour presented in safety through the midst of the Enemies Fleets; out of that which happeneth amis, may always decipient. be somewhat gathered to repair the disadvantage, veget lib. 1. and to dispose a Party to better carriage for the cap. 14future. Accordingly we may note Cafar's notable temper and demeanour, after fo great a lofs; recalling the Courage of his Soldiers, and fettling their minds in a course of good resolution, with as many valuable Reasons as humane Wisdom was able to afford him: Without which, all their other advantages, either of Valour or experience and use of Arms, or their affuredness after so many Victories, or what other thing foever that made them excell all other Armies, had been ut-terly buried in this overthrow. For his better furtherance wherein, he thought it fit to use the help of Time, before he brought them to the like trial. For that which is faid of Grief, If Reason will not give an end unto it, Time will, Finem delem is to be understood of any other passion of the di, qui co silia Mind; which cannot possibly be so great, but non fecerit, Time will confume it. Epift. 64.

The Second OBSERVATION.

The second thing which cometh to be handled, is the manner of Casar's Retreat; being as was not affured of the terrified Soldiers, and thought any Story: And is the rather to be confidered, it expedient besides, to interpose some time for the forasmuch as it is one of the principal points of General, to be able, upon all occasions, to make a fafe and sure retreat. For those that can do nothing else, can easily put themselves into a War:

discover the matter: Who returning, told him of But to return them home again in fafety, is that which concerneth the honour of a Leader.

Lie. III.

Lib. 2.

Many are the causes that may move a Commander to dislodge himself, and to leave his Adversary for a time : But the means to do it safely depend specially upon these two points. The one is, To advance himself onward at first, as far as possibly he can, to the end he may get the start, before the Enemy be ready to follow him: And is taught by Xenophon; who, after the death of Cyrus, in the Battel against King Artaxerxes, brought back a thousand Men into Greece, from an Army of two hundred thousand Horse, that pressed hard upon them, for five hundred Leagues together. Which retreat is exactly ftoricd by the faid Author, in feven Books, containing all the

It much imported us, faith he, to go as far at first as possibly we could; to the end we might have some advantage of space before the Enemy, that pressed so near behind. For, if we once got before, and could out-ftrip them for a days journey or two, it was not possible for them to overtake us; forasmuch as they durst not follow us Casar goeth on in his Retreat: Pompey ceaseth with a small Troop, and with great Forces they could never reach us: Besides the scarcity and want of Victual they fell into by following us, that confumed all before them.

Thus far goeth Xenophon. And according to this Rule, Cafar ordered his retreat: For he eight miles he gained in the Afternoon, as it followerh in the next Chapter, that he was never able to overtake him.

The fecond thing for the affuring of a retreat is, So to provide against the incumbrances of an Enemy, that he may not find it easie to attack him that would be gone. Of all retreats which may any way be taken from example of Beafts, that of the Wolf is most commended: Who never flies, but with his Head turned back upon his Adversaries; and shews such Teeth, as are not to be trusted.

After the Wolfs manner marched C. far: For howsoever the body of his Army retreated one way, yet they turned fo terrible a countenance towards the Enemy, as was not to be endured. And upon these two hinges, is turned the carriage of a skilful retreat.

Howbeit, for the better furtherance hereof, it shall not be impertinent to add hereunto some inventions, practifed by great Commanders, which may ferve to amuse an Enemy, while a General doth prepare himself to observe the former points.

demand a ceffation of Arms, while he buried his betock himself to another resolution. dead, which he purposed to perform the next day, with some care and solemnity. Which being obtained, he dislodged himself secretly that Night, and was got far on his way before the Romans perceived it.

Hamibal, to clear his Army from that of the Romans, which was Commanded by the Conful Nero, about Midnight made many Fires, in that part which flood next the Roman Camp, and leaving certain Pavillions and Lodgings, with some few Numidians, to shew themselves upon the Rampier, he departed fecretly towards Puteolis. As foon as it was Day, the Romans (according to their cuftom) approaching the Counterscarp, the the Enemies departure.

In like manner, Varus (as is formerly related) Lib. 2. debd-left a Trumpeter in the Camp near Vica, with 6 Gwili. certain Tents; and about Midnight, carried his Army fecretly into the Town.

Mithridates, willing to leave Pompey, that cut Front. lik. 12 him off fhort, the better to cover his departure, cap. 1. made thew of making greater provision of Forage than he was accustomed, appointed Conferences the next day, made great flore of Fires in his Camp; and then in the Night escaped away.

The Persians, in the Voyage which Solyman the Turk made against them, in the Year One thousand five hundred fifty four, being driven to a place where the Ottomans thought to have had a hand upon them, gathered every Man a Faggot; difficulties concerning this point: Amongst which, and making a great heap thereof, set them all on fire, in the passage of the Turk Army: Which burned fo furioufly, as the Persian escaped before the Enemy could pass by the Fire.

CHAP. XXVI.

to follow him.

N like manner, Pompey having that day Casar, marched a full journey, betook himself to his former Lodging at Asparagus. And, for that the Soldiers were not troubled with fortifying got the ftart of Pompey so far the first day, by that their Camp, by reason all the Works were whole their Camp, by reason all the Works were whole and intire, many of them went out far off to get Wood, and to feek Forage: Others, rifing haship, had left a great part of their luggage behind them; and induced by the nearnes of the last Nights Lodging, left their Arms, and went back to feech those things that were behind. Insomuch at Castar, seeing them thus scattered (as before he had conceived how it would fall out) about high Noon gave warning to depart, and so led out his Army; and doubling that day's journey, he went from that place about eight mile: Which Pompey could not do, by reason of the absence of his Soldiers.

The next day, Casar having in like manner fent his Carriages before, in the beginning of the Night, fet forward himself about the fourth Watch; that if there were any sudden necessity of fighting, he might (at all occasions) be ready with the whole Army. The like he did the days following. By which it happened, that in his passage over great Rivers, and by difficult and cumbersome Ways, he received no detriment or loss at all. For Pompey being stayed the first day, and afterwards striving King Philip of Macedon, defirous to leave the in vain, making great journeys, and yet not over-Roman Army, fent a Herauld to the Conful, to taking us, the fourth day gave over following, and Cæsar, as well for the accommodating of his wounded Men, as also for paying the Army, re-assuring his Allies and Confederates, and leaving Garrisons in the Towns, was necessarily to go to Apollonia: But be gave no longer time for the dispatch of these things, than could be spared by him that made haste. For fearing less Domitius should be ingaged by Pompey's arrival, he defired to make towards him with all possible celerity: His whole purpose and resolution insisting upon these Reasons; That if Pompey did follow after him, he should by that means draw him from the Sea-side, and from such provisions of War as he had stored up at Dyrrachium; and so should com-Menidian shewed themselves; and then suddenly pell him to undertake the War upon equal Commade after their Fellows, as fast as their Horses ditions. If he, went over into Italy, having joined go about to besiege Apollonia, or Oricum, and so exclude him from all the Sea-coast, he would then besiege Scipio, and force Pompey to relieve him.

Livy 31.

Livy 27.

And therefore having writ and fent to Cn. Domitius, what he would have done (leaving four Cohores to keep Apollonia, one at Liffus, and three at Oricum, and disposing such as were weak through their wounds in Epirus and Acarnania) he fet

OBSERVATION.

Confecto justo itinere ejus diei, having marched a full days March, or gone a just days Journey, faith the Story. Which giveth occasion to inquire, how far this just days Journey extended. Lipfius faith, it was twenty four Miles, alledging that of Vegetius; Militari gradu (faith he) vicap. 14. that Of Vegetius; Militari gradu (talli in.) o-Lib. 1. cap. 1. ginti milia passuum horis quinque duntaxat astivis conficienda: pleno autem gradu qui citatior est, totidem horis viginti quatuor; A Soldiers March did usually reach twenty Miles in five Summer hours, and if they marched with speed, twenty four Miles in the same time: understanding justum iter, a just Journey, to be so much as was mea-fured militari gradu, by a Soldiers March. But he that knows the marching of an Army, shall eafily perceive the impoffibility of marching ordinarily twenty four Miles a day. Befides, this place doth plainly confute it: For, first, he saith that he made a just days Journey; and then a-gain, rifing about Noon, doubled that days Journey, and went eight Miles. Which shews, that their Justum iter was about eight Miles: And so futeth the flow conveyance of an Army, with more probability than that of Lipfius.

CHAP. XXVII.

Pompey hasteth to Scipio, Domitius heareth of the overthrow.

Ompey also conjecturing at Cæsar's purpose, thought it requisite for him to hasten to Scipio, that he might succour him, if Cæsar should chance to march that way: But if it so fell out, that he would not depart from the sea-shore and Corcyra, as expeding the Legions and Cavalry to come out of Italy, he would then attack Domitius. For these causes both of them made haste, as well to assist their Parties, as to surprize their Enemies, if occasion were offered. But Cæsar bad turned out of the way, to go to Apollonia; whereas Pompey had a ready way into Macedonia by Candavia. To which there happened another inconvenience : That Domitius, who for many days together had lodged hard by Scipio's Camp, was now departed from thence, to make provision of Corn, unto Heraclea Sentica, which is fubject to Candavia; as though Fortune would have thrust him upon Pompey. This Cæsar was at that time ignorant of. Moreover, Pompey had writ to all the States and Provinces, of the overthrow at Dyrrachium, in far greater terms than the thing it felf was: And had noised it abroad, that Caesar was beaten. had lost all his Forces, and fled away.

Which reports made the Ways very hard and dangerous to our Men, and drew many States from Cæsar's Party: Whereby it happened, that many Meffengers being fent, both from Cæsar to Domitius, and from Domitius to Cæfar, were forced to turn back again, and could not pass. How-beit, some of the followers of Roscillus and Egus his Army with Domitius, he would go to fuccour (who, as is before flewed, had fled unto Pompey)

Italy by the way of Illyricum. But if he frould meeting on the way with Domitius's Scouts (whether it were out of their old acquaintance, having lived together in the Wars of Gallia, or otherwife out of vain-glory) related all what had happened; not omitting Cafar's departure, or Pompey's coming. Whereof Domitius being informed and being but scarce four hours before him, did (by the help of the Enemy) avoid a most eminent danger, and met with Cafar at Æginium, which is a Town situate upon the frontiers of Theffalia.

OBSERVATION.

TOy is an opening and dilating motion, and oftentimes openeth the body fo wide, as it letteth out the Soul, which returneth not again. And in like manner, the causes of all such exultations do, for the most part, spread themselves further than is requifite.

Pompey having Victory in hope, rather than Humanarun in hand, boafted as though all were his: Not actions for in nand, boatted as though all were in s. Not without the confidering, that the happiness or disafter of licitae infiliation actions, doth not depend upon the par- is fingularium. ticulars rifing in the course thereof, which are rerum parisvariable and divers, but according as the event multi limits, qua shall censure it. Whereupon the Russes have a varia, sed ex faying in such cases. That he that laughs after-events judiward, laughs then too: as Cafar did. Dionyf. HaL

C H A P. XXVIII.

Cafar Sacketh Gomphi in Theffalia.

Æsar having joyned both Armies together, Casar. came to Gomphi, which is the first Town of Thessalia by the way leading out of Epirus. These People, a few days before, had of their own accord sent Embassadors to Cæsar, offering all their Means and Abilities to be disposed at his pleasure; requiring also a Garrison of Soldiers from him. But now they had heard of the overthrow at Dyrrachium ; which was made fo great, and so prevailed with them, that Androsthenes, Prator of Thessalia (chusing rather to be a partaker of Pompey's Victory, than a Companion with Cæsar in adversity) had drawn all the multitude of Servants and Children out of the Countries try into the Town; and soutting up the Gates, dispatched Messengers to Scipio and Pompey, for fuccour to be fent unto him, in that he was not able to hold out a long Siege. Scipio understan-ding of the departure of the Armies from Dyr-rachium, had brought the Legions to Larissa. And Pompey did not as yet approach near unto

Cæfar baving fortified his Camp, commanded

Mantelets, Ladders, and Hurdles to be made ready for a surprize. Which being sitted and prepared, be exhorted the Soldiers, and shewed them what need there was (for the relieving of their wants, and fupplying of all necessaries) to possible them-felves of a rich and populous Town; as also by their Example, to terrific the other Cities: And what they did, to do speedily, before it could be succoured. Whereupon, by the singular industry of the Soldiers, the same day he came thither, gi ving the Assault after the ninth hour (notwith- After three franding the exceeding height of the Walls) he of the clock took the Town before Sun-fetting, and gave it to noon. the Soldiers to be rifled: And presently removing from thence, came to Metropolis, in fuch fort, as he outwent as well Meffengers, as News of taking

The Metropolitans, induced with the same respects, at first shut up their Gates, and filled their Walls with Armed Men: But afterwards, understanding by the Captives (whom Casfar caused to be brought forth) what had happened to them of Gomphi, they presently opened their Gates; and by that means were all preserved in safety. Which happiness of theirs being compared with the desolation of Gomphi, there was no one State of all Theffalia (excepting them of Lariffa, which were kept in with great Forces by Scipio) but yielded Obedience to Caefar, and did what he commanded. Cæsat having now got a place plenteous of Corn, which was now almost ripe, he resolved to attend Pompey's coming, and there to profecute the residue of that War.

OBSERVATION.

Bollo lex: ac-

Lib. III.

Lib. 5.
Objetio cips
we would quickly take, must be prosecuted and capper ouand urged hard. Which Rule Cafar observed: is to urgenda. For he followed it so hard, that he took the tremenda. Town Fortified with exceeding high Walls, in four hours space, or thereabouts, after he began to Affault it. Which Plutarch faith, was so plentifully flored of all necessary Provision, that the Soldiers found there a refreshment of all the Miferies and Wants they fuffered at Dyrrachium: Infomuch as they feemed to be new made, both in Body and Courage, by reason of the Wine, Victuals and Riches of that Place; which were all given unto them, according to that of Xenophon, Lex inter omnes homines perpetua est, quando belligerantium urbs capta fuerit, cuncta corum esse qui cam ceperint, & corpora corum qui in urbe funt & bona; It is a general Law amongst all Men, that when an Enemies Town is forcibly taken, Bionyf Ha- all that is found in it, as well Bodies as Goods.

learn in exis at their disposal who have taken it.

per loggi.

Appian saith, The Germans were so Drunk, that they made all Men laugh at them: And that if Pompey had surprized them in these Diforders, they might have paid dear for their Entertainment. He addeth moreover (to shew the stiffness of the Inhabitants against C.efar) that there were found in a Surgeons-Hall, twenty two principal Personages, stiff dead upon the victory.

Ground, without appearance of any Wound, having their Goblets by them: And he that gave

The the Poylon, fitting upright in a Chair, as dead as the reft. And as Poilip, having taken Acrolisse, in the Country of the Istirians, drew all the rest to his Obedience, through the fear they conceived of their usage: So the consideration of the Calamity which befel Gomphi, and the good Intreaty which the Metropolitans found by yielding his Command.

CHAP. XXIX.

Pompey cometh into Theffalia: His Army conceiveth affured hope of Victory.

Ompey, a few days after, came into Thesfalia; and there calling all the Army together, first gave great thanks to his own Men; and then exhorted Scipio's Soldiers, that the Victory being already obtained, they would be Partakers of the Booty and of the Rewards: And taking all the Legions into one Camp, he made Scipio partaker both of bis Honour and Authority, commanding the Trumpets to attend his pleasure for matter of direction, and that he should use a Praterial Pavilion.

Pompey having strengthened himself with an addition of another great Army, every Man was confirmed in his former Opinion, and their hope of Victory was increased: So that the longer they delayed the matter, the more they seemed to prolong their return into Italy. And albeit Pompey proceeded flowly and deliverately in the bulinels, yet it was but a days work. But some there were that said. he was well pleased with Authority and Command, and to use Men both of consular Dignity, and of the Præ-torian Order, as his Vassals and Servants.

And now they began to dispute openly, concerning Rewards and Dignities of Priesthood; and pointed out those which from Year to Year were to be chosen Confuls. Others begged the Houses and Goods of fuch as were with Cafar. Besides a great Controversie that further grew between them in open Council, whether L. Hirrus were not to be regarded at the next Election of Prators, being absent, and em-ployed by Pompey against the Parthians. And as his Friends urged Pompey with his Promise given at his departure, requiring he might not now be deceived through his Greatness and Authority; the rest, running a course of as great Danger and Labour, saw no reason (by way of contradiction) why one Man should be respected before all others. And now Domitius, Scipio, and Spinther Lentulus began to grow to high Words in their daily Meetings, concerning Cælar's Priesthood: Lentulus alleaging, by way of Oftentation, the Honour that was due to his Age and Authority; Domitius vaunting of the credit and favour he had at Rome; and Scipio. trusting to Pompey's Alliance. Moreover, Atius Rufus accused L. Afranius to Pompey, for Betraying the Army in Spain. L. Domitius gave out in Council, That after the War was ended, all such as were of the Rank of Senators, should be Honoured with a tripple Commission: And that those which were personally in the War, should be of the Commission to judge the rest; as well such as were at Rome, as those that did no service in this War. Notice, as troje true and no jervice in 1080 WAT. The first Commission spould be, to clear such as had well-described, from all danger. The second, Penal: And the third Capital. And to conclude, every Man laboured, either to have a Reward, or to be avenged of his Enemy. Neither did they think so much of the means how to Overcome, as how to use

The First OBSERVATION.

The Tale which the Emperour Frederick re-comineus. lated to the Commissioners of Lewis XI. King of France (concerning the parting between them of the Territories of Charles Duke of Burgundy) Not to fell the Skin before they had killed the Bear; might well have fitted these of unto C.esar, brought all the other Cities under Pompey's Party, that contended for Offices before they fell, and disposed of the Skins e're they had took the Bears: Not sparing, out of their Impatiency, to tax Pompey of spinning out the War, for the sweetness he found in Authority and Command; as Agamemnon did at Troy. Infomuch as Plutarch reporteth, That one Favonius, imitating Cato's Severity and freeness of Speech, went about throughout all the Camp, demanding, Whether it were not great pity, that the ambitious Humour of one Man, should keep them that Year from eating the Figgs and delicate Fruit of Tufculum ? And all Men generally stood io affected, as Pompey could not withftand their enforcements. For, as Florus faith, Milites otium, socii moram, principes ambitum Ducis increpabant. The Soldiers blamed the Sloth, the Confederates found fault with the delay, and the chief Commanders with the ambition of their General.

Only Cato thought it not fit to hazard themselves than those of Pompey's Party, he commanded cerfides, fo in this he ftood alone, and could not prevail against a Multitude.

The Second OBSERVATION.

PLacere fibi ternas tabellas dari, ad indicandum iis, qui erant ordinis Senatorii, They agreed, That all fuch as were of the Rank of Senators, should be honoured with a tripple Commission, faith the Story. Tabellas, I have translated Commissions, as best suiting our English Phrase: But the meaning was as followeth.

It appeareth by History, that the Roman Peo-ple, as well in election of Magistrates, as in causes Criminal, did give their Voices openly and aloud, for fix hundred Years together; until one Gabinius, a Tribune of the People, perceiving that the Commons, for fear of the great Ones, durst not dispose of their Voices freely, and as they would, published an Edict, that the People should give their Voices by Ballating. Which Law Tully commendeth; Grata est tabella que frontes operit, hominum mentes tegit, datque eam libertatem quod velint faciant; It is an acceptable Law, which hides the Faces and Mean-Principium justissima libertatis, the foundation of most just liberty. Upon an election of Magistrates, the Balls were given according to the number of the Competitors; that every Man might choose as he pleased.

In Criminal Caules, every Man had three: one marked with A. fignifying Absolution, and another with C. for Condemnation, and another with N. L. for Non liquet, which they called Ampliatio, defirous to be further informed, which our Grand Juries do express by an Ignoramus. In he had given out in Council some sew days be And in this manner would Domitius have had his fore, that he would Overthrow Caclar's Army, before Fellow Senators either quitted or condemned. The Balls which were given upon the making of a Law, were two: One marked with V. R. which fignified Uti rogas, that it might go on: And the other with A. fignifying Antiquo, rejecting it. For, as Fostus noteth, Antiquare est in modum pristinum reducere, to Antiquate, is to

CHAP. XXX.

C.cfar finding the Enemy to offer Battel in an indifferent Place, prepareth to undertake him.

Rovision of Corn being made, and the Soldiers well resolved (to which end he had interposed a sufficient space of time, after the Battel at Dyrrachium) Casar thought it time now to try what purpose or will Pompey had the Camp, he embastelled his Troops, first upon the of. There is a very small piece of that Army embastelled and the companies of the Camp, he embastelled his Troops, first upon the of. There is a very small piece of that Army embastelled his Troops, first upon the of. There is a very small piece of that Army emaining: A great part of them are dead, as it successful to the small piece of the own cannot otherwise be, in so many Bartles. The Trenches, and brought his Army under the Hills whereon the Enemy lay Encamped. This made his many of them; many are gone home, and many Army daily the more bold and affured. He kept con- are left in the Continent. Have ye not heard, tinually his former course with his Horsemen; who upon a desperate Man, that had neither hope or tain lufty Toung Man, chosen out of them that flower the lept, but in Fortune. But, as in most things bebefore the Enfignt, for their nimble and fwift running to Fight amongst the Horsemen; who, by reaning to rigot amongst we two tenen; www, w tenengton of their daily practice, had learned the use of that kind of Fight. So that one Thousand of cur Cawalry, in open and champaign Places, would, when need were, undergo the charge of seven Thousand of theirs, and were not much terrified with the multitude of them. For at that time they made a fortunate Encounter, and slew one of the two Savoiens, that had formerly fled to Pompey, with divers

> Pompey having his Camp upon a Hill, Embattelled his Army at the lower foot thereof, to see if he could get Cæsar to thrust himself into an unequal and disadvantageous place. Casar thinking that Pompey would by no means be drawn to Battel, thought it the fittest course for him to shift his Camp, and to be always in moving: Hoping by often removes from place to place, he should be better accommodated for Provision of Corn; and withal, might upon a March find some occasion to Fight; besides, he should weary Pompey's Army, not accustomed to Travel, with daily and continual Journeys. And thereupon he gave the sign of dis-

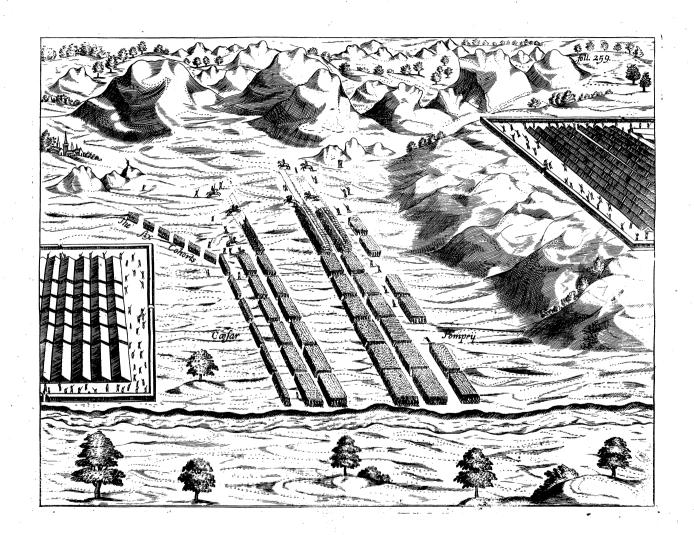

But as the Tents were taken down, it was a little cepanic Law, which made the taces and release ings of Men, and gives all liberty to do what they please. And in another place, he calleth it somewhat further from their Trenches, than ordinarily they were accustomed; so that it seemed they might Fight in an equal and indifferent place. Whereupon Cæsar, when his Troops were already in the Gates fetting out, It behoveth us (faith he) to put off our removing for the present, and bethink our felves of Fighting, as we have always defired; for we shall not easily hereafter find the like occafion: And prefently drew out his Forces. Pompey also, as it was afterwards known, was resolved (at the instance of all that were about him) to give Battel; the Troops came to joyn Battel.

And as many that stood by wondered at it : I know, faith be, that I promise almost an incredible matter: But take the ground whereupon I speak it, that you may undergo the business with more affurance. I have perswaded the Cavalry, and they have promised to accomplish it, that make the thing, be as it was before.

And in this manner they would have proceeded Vinus fein: against Cesfar's Partizans, being altogether mi-hard to do, for us that are fo ftrong in Horse. And withal, he gave Order that they should be ready against the next day, for a much as the occasion was offered (according as they had often intended) not to deceive the Opinion which other Men had of their Prowess and Valour.

Labienus seconding this Speech, as contemning Cæsar's Forces, extolled Pompey's Resolution to the Skies. Do not think, Pompey, saith he, that this is the Army wherewith he Conquered Gallia, or Germania: I was present my self at all those Bat-Peftilence (the last Autumn) in Italy consumed That the Cohorts which are now at Brundusjum, because they were less in number by many degrees are made and raised of such as remained behind there to recover their Healths? These Forces that ye see were the last Year gathered of the Musters made in the hither Gallia; and most of them of the Colonies beyond the Po: And yet all the flower and strength of them was taken away in the last two Overthrows at Dyrrachium.

When he had spoken these things, he took a solemn Oath, not to return into the Camp but with Victory, exhorting the reft to do the like: Pompey commending him, took the same Oath : Neither was there any Man that refused it.

These things being thus carried in the Council, they rose up and departed, with great hope and joy of all Men; as having already conceived Victory in their Minds: And the rather, because they thought that nothing could be spoken vainly by so skilful a Commander, in so weighty and important a Cause.

OBSERVATION.

COncerning the fashion of the Cavalry, in which either Party reposed so much Confidence, we are to note, that the Romans had two forts of Horsemen; the one compleatly Armed (according to their manner) and Incorporated in the body of their Legions, whose entertainment was thrice as much as the Footmen. Eque impotens postulatum fuit (saith Livy) ut de stipendio equitum (merebant autem triplex ea tempestate) ara demercutur; It feemed as unreasonable a Motion, that the Horsemens Pay, which at that time was tripple, flould be leffened. And the other were as Light-Horsemen, which they called Alarii

Lib. 3. Excid. The first fort were thus Armed, as Fosephus witneffeth; They wore a Sword on their right fide, fomewhat longer than that of the Footmen. and carried a long Staff or Spear in their hand, a Target at their Horfe fide, and three or more a Target at their Horse side, and three or more keep the Camp. He gave the left Wing to Anto-Darts in a Quiver, with broad Heads, and not nius, the right to Pub. Sylla, and the middle Squamuch less than their Staves; having such Head-Pieces and Corfelets as the Footmen had.

The Light-armed Men had either light Darts, or Bow and Arrows. And doubtless, their chiefest Service was with their casting Weapons. And accordingly Tully putteth his Son in mind of the Praise he had got in Pompey's Army (where he Commanded a Wing of Horse) Equitando, jaculando, omni militari labore tolerando, in Riding, casting Darts, and undergoing all Military

And as their Service confifted in breaking their Staves upon an Enemy, and in casting their Darts: So we exercise the practice of the former, in our Triumphs at Tilt; and the Spaniards the latter, in their Focus di cane.

Our modern Horsemen are either Lanciers, Petronelliers, or Piftoliers. The Petronelliers do discharge at distance, making their Lest-hand, that holds the Bridle, their Reft : Which is uncertain, and to no great effect.

The Piftolier, that will do fomewhat to purpose, doth come up close to the other, and dis- these things. Neither was he willing at any time to charge his Pistol in his Enemies Neck, or under mispend the Soldiers Blood, or to deprive the Comthe Corfelet, about the Flank or feat of a Man; and commonly miffeth not.

I have feen a Device to use a Musket on Horseback, which, if it prove as serviceable as is by some conceived, will be of great ad- Trumpet. CHAP. XXXI.

The manner of Embattelling their Armies.

S Cæsar approached near unto Pompey's Gæsar. Camp, he observed his Army to be Em-battelled in this manner: There were in the left Wing two Legions, which, in the beginning of these Wars, were, by Order and Decree of the Senate, taken from Cæsar; whereof one was called the first, and the other the third: And with them stood Pompey. Scipio had the middle Squadron, with the Legions he brought out of Syria.

The Legion of Cilicia, joyned with the Spanish Cohorts, which Afranius brought with him, made the right Wing. These Pompey held to be very strong. The rest of the Troops were interlaced between the middle Squadron and the Wings. All made One Hundred and Ten Cohorts, which amounted to Fifty Five Thousand Men : Besides Two Thousand old Soldiers and Men of Note, whom he had called out to that War, and dispersed them over all the Army. The rest of the Cohorts, which were seven, he had left in the Camp, or disposed about the Forts near adjoyning. The right Wing was flanked with a River, that had high and cumbersome Banks: And thereupon he put all his Cavalry, together with the Archers and Slingers, in the left Wing.

Cæsar, observing his former Custom, placed the Tenth Legion in the right Wing, and the Ninth in the Left; albeit they were very much weakened in the Fights at Dyrrachium : But to this he fo joyned the Eighth, that he seemed almost to make One of Two, and commanded them to succour each other. He had in all about Eighty Cohorts, which made Twenty Two Thousand Men: Two Cohorts he left to dron to Cn. Domitius, and put himself opposite to Pompey. And withal, having well observed these roungey. and without, naving wen wipe out most bings (according at 1 have formerly declared) fearing least the right Wing stould be inclosed about with the multitude of the Cavadry, he speedily drew six Cohorts out of the third Battel, and of them he made a fourth, to Encounter the Horsemen, and shewed them what he would have done; admonishing withal, that the Victory of that day consisted in the Valour of those Cohorts: commanding the third Battel, and likewise the whole Army, not to joyn Battel without Order from him; which when he thought fit, he would give them notice of by an Enfign.

And going about to encourage them to Fight, acand going apone to encourage them to regot, ac-cording to the ufe of War, be put them in mind of be his Favours, and his carriage towards them from to manihos time to time; and effecting, that they themselved well quan-were Witnesser, with what labour and means he had about. lought for Peace, as well by Treaty with Vatinius, bean, is, 7; as also by employing A. Clodius to Scipio: And likewise how he had endeavoured at Oricum with Libo, that Embassadors might be sent to treat of monwealth of either of those Armies. This Speech being delivered, the Soldiers both requiring and longing with an ardent defire to Fight, he commanded the sign of Battel to be given by a

OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the order used in disposing these Armies, for the tryal of this Cause it appeareth by the Story, that Pompey fet two Legions in his left Wing, which are here named the first and the third. Howbeit Lucan faith, that those Legions were the first and the fourth.

Lucan, lib. 4.

----- Cornus tibi cura sinistri, Lentule, cum prima, que tum fuit optima bello, Et quarta legione datur. -

The left Wings care,
Which the first Legion, (best in all that War)
And fourth made up, O Lentulus, was thine.

The middle Squadron was led by Scipio, with the Legions he brought out of Syria, which were also two; Exspectabat cum Scipione ex Syria legiones duas, he expected Scipio out of Syria with two Legions, as it is in the fecond Chapter of this

In the right Wing was the Cilician Legion, with the Cohorts that Afranius brought out of Spain: Which amounting to the number of a Legion, made that Wing equal to the reft. And fo of these fix Legions, which were the strength and finews of his Army, he fashioned his Battel into a middle Squadron, and two Wings. His other Forces, being young Soldiers, he disposed in the distances between the Wings and that middle Squadron.

Frontinus speaking of this point, faith; Legiones secundum virtutem, firmissimas in medio, & in cornu locavit; spacia his interposita tyronibus sup-plevit: He disposed his Legions according to their Goodness and Worth: The stoutest he placed in the middle Squadron and the Wings; filling up the spaces betwixt these with his young Soldiers. His number of Men, by our Text, was Fifty Five Thousand; but Piutarch maketh them not above Forty Five Thousand.

Cafar had not half fo many Men, and yet made a tripple Battel; but not fo thick or deep with Legions: For in the right Wing he put the Tenth Legion, and in the left the Ninth and the Eighth; being both weak and far spent, by the former Overthrows. Of the other Legions he maketh no mention: But it seemeth they filled up the diftances between the Wings and the body of the Army; and were as Flesh to those Sinews and Bones, which, out of the Prerogative of their Valour, took the place of the Wings, and the middle bulk of the Battel. And fearing left his right Wing fhould be circumvented by the mul-titude of their Cavalry, he drew fix Cohorts out of his third or laft Battel, to make a fourth Battel to oppose the Cavalry: Which got him the Victory. For howfoever the Text faith, Singulas cohortes detraxit: Yet Plutarch faith plainly, that those Cohorts he thus took were fix, and amounted to Three Thousand Men; which riseth to the number of fo many Cohorts. And Appian agreeing hereunto, faith, that his fourth Battel Lih2. cap. 3. confifted of Three Thousand Men. Frontinus likewise affirmeth, he took out fix Cohorts, Et tenuit in subsidio, sed dextro latere conversas in obliquum; and kept them as a referve, placing them off obliquely from the right Wing. Where-

---- Tenet obliquas post signa cohortes.

He plac'd these Troops oblique behind the Battel.

unto that of Lucan agreeth ;

Which is thus to be understood; that they turned their Faces towards the left Wing of Pompey's the Cavalry coming on to enclose Cafar's right Wing; as being fure of the other fide, which was fenced with a River and a Marish.

Touching Cafar's Speech to the Soldiers, it feemed like that of Themistocles at the Battel of Salamina: Where Xerxes made a long Oration to encourage the Persians, and lost the day; Themistocles spake but a few words to the Greeks, and got the Victory. Howsoever, one thing is not to be omitted, that Plutarch, and such others as have dipped their Pens either in the Sweat or in the Blood of this Battel, do all agree, that Cafar had not above Twenty Two Thousand Men.

CHAP. XXXII.

The Battel beginneth; and Cafar Overcometh.

Here was one Crastinus in Cæsar's Army, Casa: called out to this War, who, the Year before had led the first Company of the Tenth Legion, a Man of fingular Valour; who. upon the fign of Battel given, Follow me, Saith he, as many of you as were of my Company; and do that endeavour for your Emperour, which you have always been willing to perform. This is the only Battel remaining unfought: Which being ended, he shall be restored to his Dignity, and we to our Liberty. And withal, looking towards Cæfar, I will, faith he, O Emperour, fo carry my felf this day, that thou shalt give me Thanks, either alive or dead. And when he had thus spoken, he was the first that ran out of the right Wing: And about One Hundred and Twenty elected Soldiers of the same Century followed voluntarily after him.

There was so much space left between both the Battels, as might serve either Army to meet upon the Charge. But Pompey had commanded his Men to receive Casar's Assault, and to undergo the shock his Army, without moving from the place wherein they flood (and that by the Advice of C. Triarius) to the end that the first running out and violence of the Soldiers being broken, and the Battel distended, they that stood perfect in their Orders, might set upon them that were sourced and dispersed: Hoping the Piles would not fall fo forcibly upon the Army standing still, as when they advanced forward to meet them; and that it would fall out withal, that Cæsar's Soldiers, having twice as far to run, would, by that means be out of Breath, and spent with Weariness.

Which, in my Opinion, was against all Reason : For there is a certain Incitation and Alacrity of Spirit naturally planted in every Man, which is enstamed with a desire to Fight. Neither should any Commander repress or restrain the same, but rather increase it, and set it forward.

Nor was it in vain of ancient time Ordained, that the Trumpets should every where sound, and every Man take up a Shout; but that they thought these things did both terrisie the Enemy, and animate their own Party.

But our Soldiers, upon the fign of Battel, running out with their Piles ready to be thrown, and perceiving that Pompey's Soldiers did not make out to meet them (as Men taught with long use, and ex-ercised in former fights) stope their course of their own accord, and almost in the mid-way stood still; that they might not come to Blows upon the spending of their Strength: And after a little respite of Time, running on again, threw their Piles, and Army, that they might be the readier to receive presently drew their Swords, as Caesar had commanded them. Neither were Pompey's Soldiers wanting in this business; for they received the Piles which were cast at them, took the shock of the Legions, kept their Ranks, cast their Piles, and betook them to their Swords.

Lib. III.

themselves out. Whose assault our Horsemen were not able to endure, but fell back a little from the place wherein they stood : Whereby Pompey's Horsemen began to press them with more eagerness, and to put themselves in Squadrons, to inclose the Army about. Which Cafar perceiving, gave the fign of advancing forward to the fourth Battel, which he had made up of fix Cohorts; who came with fuch a fling upon Pompey's Horsemen, that none of them were able to stand before them, but turning their backs, did not only give place, but fled all as fast as they could to the highest Hills: Whereby the Archers and Slingers being left naked without succour, were all put to the Sword. And with the same violence, those Cohorts incompassed about the left Wing, notwithstanding any resistance that could be made by Pompey's Party, and charged them behind upon their backs.

At the same time Cæsar commanded the third Battel, which as yet stood still, and were not removed, to advance forward: By means of which, fresh and sound Men, relieving such as were faint and weary, as also that others did charge them behind upon their backs, Pompey's Party were able no longer to endure it, but all turned their backs and Neither was Cæfar deceived in his opinion, that the beginning of the Victory would grow from those Cohorts which he placed in the fourth Battel, against the Horsemen; according as he himself had openly spoken, in his incouragement to the Soldiers. For by them first the Cavalry was beaten, by them the Archers and Slingers were flain, by them Pompey's Battel was circumvented on the left Wing, and by their means they began to flie.

their means eney vegan to jue.

As soon as Pompey saw his Cavalry beaten, and perceived the pare wherein he most trusted, to be amused and affrighted, and distrusting the rest, he forthwith left the Battel, and conveyed himself on Horseback into the Camp. And speaking to the Centurions that had the Watch at the Pretorian Gate with a loud voice, as all the Soldiers might hear, he faid, Keep the Camp, and defend it diligently, to prevent any hard Cafualty that may happen. In the mean while, I will go about to the other Ports, to fettle the Guards of the Camp.

And having thus faid, he went into the Prætorium. distrusting the main point, and yet expecting the

The First OBSERVATION.

Pompey so carried himself in the course of this War, as he rather feemed a Sufferer than a Doer: Never disposing his Army for any Attempt or Onfet, but only when he brake out of the place wherein he was Befieged at Dyrrachium. And accordingly he gave Order, that in the main action and point of Tryal, his Soldiers should suffer and sustain the Assault, rather than otherwise. But whether he did well or no, hath fince been in question. Cafar utterly disliked it, as a thing contrary to reason. Est quadam (faith he) animi incitatio atque alacritas, naturaliter innata omnibus, que studio pugne incenditur; hanc non reprimere, fed augere Imperatores debent. There is a certain as he galloped up and down the Ranks, was heard incitation and alacrity of Spirit naturally planted in every Man, which is inflamed with a defire to thetical, and effectual for a Victory: As thus, Solfight. Neither should any Commander repress or dier, cast right at the Face: Whereas Pompey restrain the same, but rather increase it, and set called to his Men, to spare their fellow-Citizens.

Agreeable whereunto is that of Cato the Great : that in cases of Battel, an Enemy is to be charged At the fame time, the Caedary, according as was with all violence. And to that purpose it is re-commanded them, issued out from Pompey's left quifite, to put the Soldiers (at some reasonable Wing, and the whole multitude of Archers thrust in cases of Battel, an Enemy is to be charged quifite, to put the Soldiers (at some reasonable distance) into a posture of vaunting and defiance diffance) into a posture of vaunting and defiance, with menaces and cries of terrour; and then to fpring forward in fuch manner, as may make them fall upon their Enemies with greater fury: As Champions or Wraftlers, before they buckle, ftretch out their Limbs, and make their flourishes as may best serve to affure themselves, and discourage their Adversaries; according as we read of Hercules and Anteus.

> Ille Cleonai projecit terga Leonis, Antaus Libyci: perfudit membra liquore Hospes, Olympiaca servato more Palastra. Ille parum fidens pedibus contingere matrem, Auxilium membris calidas infudit arenas.

The one throws by's Cleonean Lion's Skin, The other's Libyan; and ere they begin, The one anoints himself from top to toe, As the Olympian Gamesters use to do. Not fure his foe would let his feet touch ground, Himself with Sand Antaus sprinkles round.

Howbeit, forafmuch as all Men are not of one temper, but require feveral fashions to tune their minds to the true note of a Battel, we shall find feveral Nations to have feveral Customs in this point. The Romans (as appeareth by this of Cafar) were of ancient time accustomed to found Trumpets and Hoboies, in all parts of the Army, and to take up a great clamour and flout, whereby the Soldiers (in their understanding) were in-couraged, and the Enemy affrighted. Whereas, contrariwife, the Greeks went always with a close Home and filent Mouth, as having more to do than to Biad. 31 fay to their Enemies. And Thucydides, writing of the Lacedamonians, (the flower of Greece for mat-ter of Arms) faith, That instead of Trumpets and Corners to incite them, they used the sweet harmony of Flutes, to moderate and qualifie their paffions, left they should be transported with unbridled impernofity.

It is reported, that Marshal Biron the Father, feemed to diflike of our English March (hearing it beaten by the Drums) as too flow, and of no encouragement: And yet it so fitteth our Nation (as Sir Roger Williams then answered) as we have divers times over-run all France with it. Howfoever, the event of this Battel is sufficient to disprove Pompey's errour herein, and to make good what Cafar commanded.

The Second OBSERVATION.

THese fix Cohorts, which made the fourth Bat-tel did so encounter Pompey's Cavalry, that they were not able to withftand them. It is faid, that Casar gave them order not to fling their Piles, as commonly they did, but to hold them in their hands like a Pike or a Javelin, and make only at the Faces of those Gallants, and Men at Arms on Horseback. For the holding of them in their hands, I do not understand it, and cannot conceive how they could reach more than the next Ranks unto them in that manner. But for making at the faces of the Cavalry, Florus faith, that Cafar, Lib. 4. cop. 2. to let fall bloody and bitter words, but very pa-

Eutropius,

concerning that of Cafar;

Adversosque jubet ferro contundere vultus.

He bids them ftrike just at the Enemies face.

Lib. 4. cap. 7. Frontinus hath it thus: C. Cafar, cum in partibus Pompeianis magna equitum Romanorum effet manus, eaque armorum scientia milites conficeret, ora oculosque corum gladiis peti jussit, & sic adversam faciem cedere coegit : Pompey having in his Army a great company of Roman Knights, who being well skill'd at their Weapons made an end of their Enemies : Cafar commanded his Men to make at their Faces and Eyes: And thereby compelled them to turn away their Faces.

The Third OBSERVATION.

A Mongst these Memorials Crastinus may not be forgotten, being the first Man that began In the Life of the Battel; whom Plutarch calleth C. Craffinius, and faith, that Cafar feeing him in the Morning as he came out of his Tent, asked him what he thought of the fuccess of the Battel. Crastinus, ftretching out his right hand unto him, cried out aloud, O Cafar, thine is the Victory; and this day shalt thou commend me either alive or dead. And accordingly, he brake afterwards out of the Ranks; and running amongst the midst of his Enemies, with many that followed him, made a great flaughter. At last one run him into the Mouth, that the Swords point came out at his Neck, and fo flew him. By him, and others of like courage and worth, was C.efar raised from the extremity of his wants, and the difgrace of his former loffes, to the chiefest height of Earthly Glory: And herein might well assume unto himself, that which was formerly faid of the People, Magna populi Romani fortuna, sed semper in mali major resurrexit; Great is the fortune of the People of Rome; but it ftill grows greater and increaseth by troubles: Together with that of Plutarch, Res invicta Romanorum arma, The Roman Arms are things invincible. Lucan speaking of Scava formerly mentioned, faith, He shewed a great deal of Valour to get Rome a Lord. But upon Crastinus he layeth a heavy doom.

Dii tibi non mortem, que cunctis pena paratur, Sed sensum post fata tua dent, Crastine, morti, Cujus torta manu commisit lancea bellum, Primaque Theffaliam Romano fanguine tinxit.

May'ft thou not only die, which all Men do; But die, and have thy fenses after too. A Lance thrown by thy hand the fight began. When with brave Roman blood Theffalia ran.

CHAP. XXXIII.

C.cfar preffeth hard after the Enemy, and taketh the Camp.

Ompey's Soldiers being thus forced to fly into their Camp, Cælar thinking it expedient to give them no time of respite, ex-horted the Army to use the benefit of Fortune, and to assault the Camp: Who notwithstanding the extream heat (for the business was drawn out until it was high Noon) were willing to undergo Carfet.

Eutropius, in his Epitome of Suetonius, affirm- any labour, and to yield obedience to his commandeth the same thing, both of the one and of the ments. The Camp was industriously defended by the other: And Lucan seemeth to aver the same, Coborts that had the Guard thereof; but much more stoutly by the Thracians, and other succours of barbarous People. For fuch Soldiers as were fled thither out of the Battel, were so terrified in mind and spent with weariness, that most of them (having laid aside their Arms and Military Ensigns) did rather think how they might best escape, than to defend the Camp. Neither could they which stood upon the Rampier any longer endure the multitude of Weapons; but fainting with Wounds, for fook the place, and prefently fled into the high Mountains adjoining unto the Camp, being led thither by the Centurions and Tribunes of the Soldiers. In the Camp were found Tables ready laid prepared with Linen, together with Cupboards of Plate furnished and set out, and their Tents strewed with fresh Herbs and Rushes; and that of Lentu-lus and divers others with Ivy, and many other fuperstuities, discovering their extream Luxury and affurance of Victory. Whereby it was easily to be conceived, that they nothing feared the event of that day, being so careful of such unnecessary delights. And yet for all this, they upbraided Cafar's patient and miserable Army, with riot and excess: To whom there were always wanting such requisites as were expedient for their necessary uses.

Pompey, when as our Men were come within the Camp, baving got a Horse, and cast away all Ensigns of Imperial Authority, got out at the Decumane Gate, and made towards Larissa as fast as his Horse could carry him. Neither did he stay there; but with the fame speed (having got a few followers that escaped by stight) posting Night and Day, came at length to the Sea-side with a Troop of thirty Horse, and there went aboard a Ship of burthen : Complaining that his opinion only deceived him; being as it were betrayed by fuch as began first to sty, from whom he hoped chiefly to have had the Victory.

OBSERVATION.

WHereas it is faid, That a dilatory course Villa course is very profitable and fafe; we are to un-residiation. erftand it as a chief and main point in the duty Halicar. of an Embaffador, to temporize in things which lib. 8. are pressed hard upon him: As being accountable are pressed hard upon nim: As being accommande for Words and Time; but no way charged with tunius legalic tunius legalic expeditions of War; wherein Protraction is of-triremes, aut tentimes the interrupter of absolute Victory, and loca, and legion the only supplanter of that which is defired. Vin- net, aut area, the only supplanter of that which is defined. The fed with of cere feis, Hannibal, fed victoria uti nefeis; Thon tempora. knowest well enough how to get the Victory, Demost de like legal to the it salls legal. Hannibal, but thou knowest not how to use it one. was a common by-word, and happened then well for the State of Rome. But now it fell out otherwife; having met with one that knew how to Conquer, and how to follow Victory to purpose.

For notwithstanding the Battel he had fought, and the advantage he had thereby got, might I. Labor in have feemed fufficient for one day's labour; yet nagato, he would not let occasion pafs, without taking 2. Fritindam periodo. the benefit that was then offered: and never 3. Industria ceased until he had forced the Camp, and over- in agends, taken those that escaped the Battel: And so emploised to emploise the composition of the made Victory fure unto him, by driving the were Confact Nail home to the head. In regard whereof, he did properties. not unfitly use for his word or Motto, (as they call it) Mindir a'rabaλλομου, BY DEFER-RING NOTHING.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Lib. III.

Cafar beliegeth those that were escaped into rhe Hills.

Æsar having got the Camp, instantly required the Soldiers not to look after Pillage and Booty, and let slip the means of age and boot, and tee jup to e means of ending the rel of their business. Which after he had obtained, he began to inclose the Hill the loss of a Man. about with works of Fortification. They of Pom-pey's Party, distrusting the Place, for that the Hill had no Water, left it at an instant. And all those that were partakers of that fortune, made towards Lariffa. Which Cæsar observing, divided his Forces, Lalius attempteth to block in the Haven at and Commanded part of the Legions to remain in Pompey's Camp, and part he sent back into his own: And leading four Legions along with him, he took a nearer way to meet with them; and having gone six Miles, he imbattelled his Forces. Which they perceiving, betook themselves unto a high Hill, under which ran a River.

Cæsar perswaded the Soldiers, albeit they were spent with continual labour all that day, and that Night was now at hand, yet they would not think it much to cut off the River from the Hill by a Fortification, to keep them from watering in the Night. Which Work being perfected, they began by Com-missioners to treat of Conditions of yielding themfelves. Some few of the Senators escaped in the Night-time away by the flight.

Cælar, as soon as it was Day, caused them all to come down from the Hill into the Plain, and there to cast away their Arms: Which they performed without refusal; and casting themselves upon the Earth, their Hands spread abroad, with shedding of many tears, defired Mercy. Cæsar comforting them, commanded they should stand up: And having spoken somewhat touching his Clemency, a little to ease them of their fear, he gave them all their Lives with safety; commanding the Soldiers not to hurt any of them, nor that they should want any thing that was theirs.

These things being thus atchieved with diligence, he caused other Legions to meet him from the Camp, fending those he had with him to rest themselves; and the same day came to Larissa. In that Battel he lost not above two hundred Soldiers; But of Centurions, Valiant Men, he lost thirty. And Crastinus fighting valiantly was slain (of whom we formerly made mention) with a Sword thrust into the Face. Neither was that false which he said as he went to the Battel: For Cæsar was perswaded, that Crastinus behaved himself admirably in that Fight, and did deserve as well of him as a Man possibly

There were slain of Pompey's Army about fifteen majores co- thousand: Howbeit there were of them that yielded pie fternut themselves above twenty four thousand. For such tur's minori-bus. Dion. Cohort's as were in the Forts, did likewise yield themselves to Sylla: and many fled into the next Towns and Cities. Of Military Ensigns there were brought out of the Battel to Cæsar one hundred and fourfcore, with nine Engles. L. Domitius flying out of the Camp into the Mount, fainting for want of Strength, was flain by the Horsemen.

OBSER VATION.

A Nd thus we see the issue of that Battel, and the Victory which Casar obtained at as cheap a rate as could be imagined: For there were flain twenty three thousand of the Enemy, and as many taken, by furrendring themselves,

Centurions; amongst whom was Crastinus: whose death obliged Cafar to make this honourable mention of his Valour. But as it is observed by Dionysius Halicarnasseus, Non Deus quispiam se ducibus, pro Lib. 8. Salute omnium qui certamen ineunt, sponsorem sistit: nec ea conditione imperium accepimus, ut omnes homines devincamus, nullo ex nostris amisso. No God can promife a General the fafety of all his Men: Neither do we take Commands upon that condition, to Conquer all our Enemies without

CHAP. XXXV.

Brundusium: And Cassius fireth Casar's Ships

Bout the same time D. Lælius came with Calit. his Navy to Brundusium; and according as Libo formerly did, took the Island in the mouth of the Port. And in like man-ner Vatinius, Governour of Brundusium, having furnished and sent out divers Skiffs, inticed out Junifect and fett our sivers oxigis, mixed our Lælius's Ships, and of them took a Galley, with two leffer Ships, that were further floot out into the firaights of the Port: and also had disposed his Cavalry along the shore, to keep the Mariners from fetching Water. But Lælius having the time of the Year more favourable and fitter for Sailing, Supplied his Army with Water from Corfu and Dyrrachium: Neither could be be beaten off bis design, nor be driven out of the Port, or from the Island, either with the dishonour of the Ships he loft. or with scarcity and want of all necessaries, until he heard of the Battel in Theffalia.

About the same time also Cassius came into Sicilia, with the Navy of Syria, Phoenicia and Cilicia. And whereas Cæsar's Ships were divided into two parts; Pub. Sulpitius, Prator, being Admiral of the one half, and lying at Vibone in the Straights, and M. Pomponius Admiral of the other half at Messana; Cassius came first to Messana, and was arrived before Pomponius heard of his coming : By which means he surprized him, distracted, and much amused, without any Order or Guards. And finding a strong and favourable Wind, filled the Ships of burthen with Rosin, Pitch and Tow, and like matter of firing; and sending them out to Pomponius's Navy, he burned all the Ships, being in number thirty five, amongst which there were twenty that had Decks. By means whereof they conceived such a ter- Configura. rour, that albeit there was a Legion in Garrison at Messana, yet the Town was bardly kept. And, but that certain Messengers coming Post, brought News at the same instant of Cæsar's Victory, mess Men thought the Town would have been lost: But the News coming so opportunely, the Town was kept.

Cassius departed from thence, and went to Sulpitius's Fleet at Vibone; where our Ships being brought to store for from the like danger, he there did as he did before; for finding the Wind good, he sens in forty Ships of burthen, furnished with matter to burn the Navy. The fire having taken hold of both Wings of the Fleet, five of them were burned down to the Water. And as the flame began to be further carried with the Wind, the Soldiers of the old Legions which were left for the defence of the Shipping, and were of the number of them that were fick, did not endure the dishonour: But getting aboard of their own accord. put the Ships from the shore; and setting upon Cas-fius's Fleet, took two Gallies, in one of the which was Caffins himself: but he being taken out with a Skiff, fled away. And furthermore, they took two Triremes. with the loss of two hundred Soldiers, and thirty Not long after certain News came of the Battel in Theffalia, fo that Pompey's Party believed it: For before that time, it was thought to be but a thing given out by Calar's Legates, and other of his friends. Whereupon Caffius departed with his Navy, and left those places.

OBSERVATION.

THe Branches of a Tree do receive life from the Stock, and the Stock is maintained by the Root, which being once cut afunder, there remaineth no life for Stock or Bough, Leaf or Branch. Accordingly it happened with this large-spred Party; the Root whereof was then in Theffalia: And being broken afunder by the violence of Cafar's Forces, it booted not what Lalius did at Brundusium, or Cassius either at Messana, or Vibone. For all the parts were overthrown with the Body: And the fortune of the Battel over-fway'd other petry loffes whatfoever; being so powerful in the opinion of the World, Ut quo se fortuna, eodem Pompeius opinion of the World, Or quo Je Journal, Trague, lib. 6. etiam favor beminum inclinat, That what way focver Fortune goes, the fame way goes the favour of the People: Or, as Lucan faith,

------ Rapimur, quo cunsta feruntur,

We're fnatch'd that way that things are carried.

C H A P. XXXVI.

Cafar pulueth Pompey: Who is flain in Egypt.

Æsar setting all other things apart, thought it expedient for him to purfue Pompey into what parts forver he frould betake himfelf, left he should raise new Forces, and renew the War again: And thereupon made forward every day, as far as his Cavalry was able to go; commanding one Legion to follow after by leffer journeys. There was a Publication made in Pompey's Name at Amphipolis, that all the Youth of that Province, as well Greeks as Citizens of Rome, Should come to be inrolled for the War. But it is not possible to discocover, whether Pompey did it to take away all cause of suspicion, that he might the longer hide his purpose of slying away; or whether he went about by new Levies to keep Macedonia, if no Man pressed hard

Howsoever, he himself lay at Anchor there one Night. And calling unto him his ancient Hosts and Friends, he took fo much Money of them as would defray his necessary charges: And understanding of Cæsar's coming, within a few days he hoised sail and departed thence, arriving at Mitylene; where he was kept two days with foul weather; and there re-inforcing his Fleet with some Gallies he took to him, he went into Cilicia, and from thence to Cyprus. There he understood, that by the general consent of the Antiochians, and fuch Citizens of Rome as were there refiding, the Citadel was already taken to keep him out : And that Meffengers were fent about, to those that were fled from his Party into the bordering Cities, forbidding them to come to Antioch; for if they did, they should hazard it with the danger of their Heads. The like happened to L. Lentulus, who the Year before was Conful, and to Pub. Lentulus, of Consular Dignity, and to some other at Rhodes, For as many as fled thither after Pompey, and came unto the Island, were neither received into the Town nor into the Haven; but were commanded by Meffengers Sent unto them, to depart from thence, and forced to weigh Anchor against their Will. And now the fame Cæsar's coming was spread abroad throughout all

Whereupon Pompey, leaving off his purpose of go-ing into Syria, having taken what Money he found in Bank. belides what he could borrow of his private Friends, and putting aboard great store of Brass for the use of War; with two thousand Armed Men (which he had raised partly out of the Towns, and partly had forced up amongst the Merchants, and Such others of his followers whom he thought fit for this business) he came to Pelusium. There by chance was King Ptolomy, a Youth under Age, with great Forces making War against his Sister Cleopatra; whom a few Months before, by means of his Allies and Friends he had thrust out of his Kingdom: And Cleopatra's Camp was not far distant from bis.

Pompey fent unto him, that in regard of ancient Hospitality, and the amity he had with his Father, he might be received into Alexandria; and that he would aid and support him with his Wealth and means. being now fallen into Mifery and Calamity. But they that were sent, having done their Message, began to speak liberally to the King's Soldiers, and to exhort them, that they would stand to Pompey, not despising the low ebb of Fortune he was brought to. Amongs them were many that had been Pompey's Soldiers. which Gabinius had received out of his Army in Syria, and had brought them to Alexandria; and upon the ending of the War, had left them with Ptolomy, the Father of this Child. These things being known, fuch as had the procuration of the Kingdom in the minority of the Boy, whether they were induced through fear of gaining the Army, (as afterwards they confessed) whereby Pompey might easily seize upon Alexandria and Egypt; or whether despising his fortrue (as for the most part, in time of Misery a Man's Friends do become his Enemies;) did give a good answer publickly to such as were sent, and willed him to come unto the King: But fecretly plotting amongst themselves, sent Achillas, a chief Commander, and a Man of fingular audacity, together with L. Septimius, Tribune of the Soldiers, to kill Pompey. They giving him good words, and he himself also knowing Septimius to have led a Company under him in the war against the Pirates, went aboard a little Bark with a few of his Soldiers: and there was flain by Achillas and Septimius. In like manner L. Lentu-lus was apprehended by commandment from the King, and killed in Prifon,

The First OBSERVATION.

F it be now demanded, Where was Cafar's de-I fire of Peace? and, Why pursued he not a treaty of Composition, at this time, whenas his Tale would have been heard with gladness, and any conditions of attonement very acceptable to the vanquished? the answer is already made in the beginning of this Commentary; That there was but one time of making Peace: And that was when both Parties were equal; which was now past, and Casar too far gone, to look back upon any thing that might work a reconcilement. The one was crept fo high, and the other cast down to low, that they feemed not compatible in any Medium, although it were to the faving of the Empire. Howbeit, it is not denied but that Pompey gave great occasion of these Wars. For Seneca faith; Pompeius es He had brought the Commonwealth to that pass, redegit Remthat it could not longer fland, but by the benefit pub. at faire of fervitude. And he that will look into the reasons the non rester of this Confusion, shall find all those Cause corrum-fermitis. pentes, or ruining causes, which are noted by s. de benef. Aristotle to threaten the welfare of a State, in the 16. 5. Polit. excess of Pompey's exorbitancy. For having nothing equipo, was in a Mean, he held all his Fortunes by the writ in Gitenure of Nimium; and was overgrown, first dea Letters at with too much Honour, secondly, with too Delphos. muchWealth, thirdly, with too much Power; whereby he exceeded the proportion of his Fel-low-Citizens and so blemished the beauty of that State, whose chiefest Graces were in a suiting Justime beland the sequality. And adding to these the Convulsions of Feat, he made no difficulty to engage Rome in a militime for a bloody War; as having no other hope, but in the confusion of Arms.

It is faid, that at his arrival at Mitylene, he had much conference with Cratippus, whom Tully mentioneth in his Offices: Wherein, amongst other Remonstrances, the Philosopher made it plain, that his course of Government had brought a receffity of changing that State from the liberty of a Commonwealth, to the condition of a just Monarchy. And fince it fell to Cafar's Fortune, if there were any Error committed in the feizure. he may take the benefit of the general Pardon, exemplified by Trebellius Polio, That no Nation can shew a Man that is altogether blameless.

The Second OBSERVATION.

Oncerning the State of Agypt, we are to note, that Alexander the Great being cut off by Death, his Captains laid hold upon fuch Provinces and Kingdoms as were under their Commands: Amongst whom one Ptolemeus, the Son of Lagus, a Macedonian, seized upon Agreet, where he Reigned Forty Years; and of him were all his Succeffors called by the name of Prolemy. This first Prolemy posses'd himself of Egypt, about the Year of the World 3640. which was 275 Years before Pompey's Overthrow. nor nothing answerable to the hope which Theo-His Son that succeeded by the Name of Ptolemy Philadelphus, caused the Bible to be Translated out of Hebrew into Greek by Seventy Interpreters, which are called the Sep nagint; and made the famous Library, which was burned in these Wars.

The Father of this young Ptolemy, was the ninth in Succession from the first, and at his Death, made the People of Rome Tutors to his Children. His Eldest Son, and Cleopatra his Daughter reigned together six Years; but in the end fell to strife and Wars, and were deeply engaged therein when Pompey Arrived. But shortly after Cafar so ordered the Differences, that he set the Crown upon Cleopatra's Head; who held it peaceably, until she came to play that Tragical part with Antony: Which being ended, the Kingdom was then reduced to a Province, under the obedience of the Roman Empire.

Concerning this miserable end of Pompey, it is truly faid of Seneca, that Death is alike to all: Mors omnium For although the ways are divers by which it Addressment for attnough the ways are civers by which it part of the part of t in quoi de Chiarry the manner of the transfer of the relation thereof.

When Pompey heard news that King Ptolemy poma, ast was in the City of Pelufium with his Army, making War against his Sister, he went thither, making war against his onset, as the King, to across russis. and fent a Messenger before unto the King, to Plut in vita advertise him of his Artival, and to entreat him of his Artival. to receive him. King Ptolemy was then but a young Man, infomuch that one Photinus Governed all the whole Realm under him. He affembled a Council of the chiefest and wifest Men of the Court, who had fuch Credit and Authority as it pleafed him to give them. They being affembled, he commanded every Man in the King's Name to fay his Mind, touching the receiving of Pompey, whether the King should receive him or not. It was a miferable thing to fee Photinus, an Eunuch of the Kings, and Theodorus of Chio, an hired Schoolmafter to Teach the young King Rhetorick, and Achillas, an Egyptian, to confulr among themselves what they should do with Pompey the Great. These were the chiefest Counsellors of all his Eunuchs, and of those that had brought him up.

Commentaries of the Civil Wars.

Now did Pompey ride at Anchor upon the Shore fide, expecting the resolution of this Council: In the which the Opinions were divers; for some would not have him received, others conferred that he should be received. But the Rhetorician Theodotus, to shew his Eloquence, perswaded them, that neither the one nor the other was to be accepted. For, quoth he, if we receive him. we shall have Cefar our Enemy, and Pompey our Lord; and if we do deny him on the other fide. Pompey will blame us for refusing him, and Cafar for not keeping of him: Therefore this would be the best Resolution, he told them, to send to Kill him, for thereby they should win the good Will of the one, and not fear the displeasure of the other. And fome fay, moreover, that he added this Mock withal, A Dead Man bites not. They being determined of this among themselves, gave Achillas Commission to do it. He taking with him Septimius (who had charge aforerime under Pompey) and Salvius, another Centurion allo, with three or four Soldiers befides, they made towards Pompey's Gallies, about whom were at that time the chiefest of his Train, to see what would become of this matter. But when they faw the likelihood of their Entertainment. and that it was not in Princely shew nor manner, phanes had put them in, seeing so few Men come to them in a Fisher-Boat; they began then to mistrust the small account that was made of them; and Counselled Pompey to return back, and to launch again into the Sea, being out of the danger of the hurling of a Dart.

In the mean time, the Fisher-Boat drew near. and Septimius rose, and saluted Pompey in the Roman Tongue, by the name of Imperator, as much as sovereign Captain: And Achillas also spake to him in the Greek Tongue, and bade him come into his Boat; because that by the Shorefide there was a great deal of Mud and Sand Banks, so that his Galley should have no Water to bring him in. At the very same time they faw afar off divers of the King's Gallies, which were arming with all freed possible, and all the Shore besides full of Soldiers. Thus, though Pompey and his Company would have altered their Minds, they could not have told how to have escaped: And furthermore, shewing that they had miftrusted them, then they had given the Murderer occasion to have executed his Cruelty. So taking his leave of his Wife Cornelia. who lamented his Death before his end, he Commanded two Centurions to go down before him into the Egyptian's Boat, and Philip, one of his Slaves Enfranchifed, with another Slave, called Scynes. When Achillas reached out his hand to receive him into his Boat, he turned him to his Wife and Son, and faid these Verses of Sophocles unto them ;

The Man that into Court comes free, Must there in state of Bondage be.

These were the last Words he spake unto his People, when he left his own Galley and went into the Egyptians Boat, the Land being a great way off from his Galley. When he saw never a Man in the Boat speak friendly unto him, beholding Septimius, he faid unto him; Methinks, my Friend, I should know thee, for that thou hast served with P p me beretofore. The other nodded with his head, that it was true, but gave him no Answer, nor shewed him any courtesie.

Pompey feeing that no Man spake to him, took a little Book he had in his hand, in which he had written an Oration that he meant to make unto King Ptolemy, and began to read it. When they came near to the Shore, Cornelia, with her Servants and Friends about her, flood up in her Ship in great fear, to fee what should become of Pompey. So she hoped well, when she saw many of the King's People on the Shore, coming towards Pompey at his Landing, as it were to receive and Honour him. But even as Pompey took Philip's Hand to arise more easily, Septimius came first behind him, and thrust him through with his Sword: Next unto him also Salvius and Achillas drew out their Swords in like manner. Pompey then did no more but took up his Gown with his Hands, and hid his Face, and Manfully abode the Wounds they gave him, only Sighing a little. Thus, being 59 Years old, he ended his Life the next day after the day of his Birth.

They that rode at Anchor in their Ships, when they faw him Murthered, gave such a fearful Cry, that it was heard to the Shore: Then weighing up their Anchors with speed, they hoised Sail and departed their way, having Wind at will that blew a lufty Gale. As foon as they had gorten the main Sea, the Egyptians which prepared to Row after them, when they faw they were paft their reach, and impossible to be overtaken, they let them go. Then having ftricken off Pompey's rous to fee him.

Philip, his Enfranchifed Bond-Man, remained ever by it, until fuch time as the Egyptians had feen it their Bellies full. Then, having washed his Body with Salt-Water, and wrapped it up in an old Shirt of his, because he had no other shift to lay it in, he fought upon the Sands, and found at length a piece of an old Fisher's Boat, enough to ferve to burn his naked Body with, but not all fully out. As he was busie gathering the broken pieces of this Boat together, thither came unto him an old Roman, who, in his Youth, had ferved under Pompey, and faid unto him; O friend, What art thou that preparest the Funerals of Pompey the Great? Philip answered, That he was a Bond-Man of his Enfranchised. Well, faid he, thou skalt not have all this Honour alone: I pray thee yet let me accompany thee in so devout a Deed, that I may not altogether repent me to have dwelt so long in a strange Country, where I have abidden such Misery and Trouble; but that to recompence me withal, I may have this good hap, with mine own hands to touch Pompey's Body, and to help to Bury the only and most famous Captain of the Romans.

The next day after, Lucius Lentulus (not knowing what had passed) coming out of Cyprus, Sailed by the Shore fide, and perceived a Fire made for Funerals, and Philip standing by it; whom he knew not at the first. So he asked him, What is he that is Dead and Buried there? But ftreight fetching a great Sigh, Alas, faid he, per-haps it is Pompey the Great. Then he Landed a little, and was streight taken and slain. This was the end of Pompey the Great. Not long after Cafar also came into Egypt, that was in great Wars; where Pompey's Head was presented unto him: But he turned his Head afide, and would not see it, and abhorred him that brought it as a detestable Murtherer. Then taking his upon was Engraven a Lyon holding a Sword, he burst our a Weeping. Achillas and Photinus he put to Death. King Ptolemy himself also being Overthrown in Battel by the River Nilus, Va nished away, and was never heard of after. Theodotus, the Rhetorician, escaped C.esar's hands, and wandered up and down Egypt in great Mi-fery, despited of every Man. Afterwards Marcus Brutus (who flew Cafar) Conquering Afia, met with him by chance, and putting him to all the Torments he could poffibly devise, at the length flew him. The Ashes of Pompey's Body were after-wards brought unto his Wife Cornelia; who Buried them in a Town of hers, by the City of Alba.

And having in this manner paid the Tribute which the Law of Nature doth exact, the Law More Nature of the Twelve Tables did free his Sepulchre tributum off. of the I welve I alones and thee his deputation relief me of from any further diffurbance; "Obi corpus demor-sissuage mutui hominis condat, facer effo, Let that place be taking. Sacred, where the Body of a dead Man is Bunatural. ried. Only this may be added; That as Fabius Pabius distus was called Maximus, Scipio Magnus, and Pompey Maximus.
Magnus, which Titles they carried as Marks of Polyamus, special Nobleness, to raise them above the com- lib. 8. Epift. mon worth of Men: So their ends made them 100. even with the lowest of the State. According to that of Seneca; Intervallis distinguimur; exitu aquamur : Here we are diftinguished by diftances, but Death makes us all equal.

C H A P. XXXVII.

Head, they threw his Body over-board, for a Prodigious Accidents happening upon the Battel in Pharfalia. Cafar cometh into Egypt.

Æsar coming into Asia, found T. Ampius going about to take the Money out of the This that Temple of Diana at Ephelius: And for followeth, that cause to have called transfer all the second that cause to have called together all the another Stile. Senators that were in the Province, that he might use them as Witnesses in the matter. But being interrupted by Cæsar's Arrival, he fled away. So that two several times the Money was saved at Ephefus by Cæfar's means. It was further found very certain, that in the Temple of Minerva at Elis (a just calculation of the time being taken) the Same day that Casar Overthrew Pompey, the Image of Victory, which flood before Minerva, and looked towards her Portraicture, did turn it felf towards the Portal and the Temple-Gate. And the same day likewise there was such a noise of an Army twice heard at Antioch in Syria, and such sounding of Trumpets, that the City ran in Arms to keep the Walls. The like happened at Ptolemais. likewise at Pergamus, in the remote and hidden places of the Temple, which are called adver, into which it is not lawful for any Man to enter but the Priests, were Bells heard to Ring. Besides the Tralles, in the Temple of Victory (where they had fet up a Statue to Cælar) there was shewed a Palm-Tree, which, in those days, was grown from between the joynts of the Stones, out of the Pavement.

Cæsar staying a few days in Asia, hearing that Pompey was seen at Cyprus, and conjecturing he went into Egypt, for the Amity and Correspondency he had with that Kingdom, besides other opportunities of the place; he came to Alexandria with two Legions, one that he commanded to follow him out of Thessaly, and another which he had called out of Achaia, from Fusius, a Legate, together with Eight Hundred Horse, Ten Gallies of Rhodes, and a few Ships of Asia. In these Legions were not above Three Thousand Two Hundred Men ; the rest it as a detestable Murtherer. Then taking his were either Wounded in the Fight, or from with Ring wherewith he Sealed his Letters, whereplace would entertain him with sufety.

At Alexandria be understood of Pompey's Death: The Friets of Egyp faid, And as he was going out of the Ship, he heard a Clamour That when of the Soldiers which the King had left to keep the This when of the Soldiers which the King via a cy is referred about the Axe and the Town, and Jaw a concounfe of People gathered about bundle of Rode came him; all the multitude crying out, that the Kings into Ateas authority was diminified. This Tumult being aparties the control of the Con peased, there were often uproars and commotions of their Kings the People for every day after; and many Soldiers should pre-fently cease: were Slain in divers parts of the City. Whereupon sensy coale.

According as Cæsar gave order for other Legions to be brought it was write him out of Asia, which he raised and enrolled of ten in a Co-Pompey's Soldiers. He himself was stayed by the umnot Gold Winds called Etelize, which are against them that Sail from Alexandria.

In the mean time, for a smuch as he conceived that if the Controversie between the King and his Sister did appertain to the People of Rome, then confequently to him as Conful; and fo much the rather it concerned his Office, for that in his former Confulship, there was a League made by the decree of Senate with Ptolemy the Father: In regard hereof he signified that his Pleasure was, that both the King and bis Sifter Cleopatra should dismiss their Armies, and rather plead their Cause before him, than to decide it by Arms.

There was at that time one Photinus an Eunuch, that had the administration of the Kingdom, during the Minority of the Child. He first began to complain among his Friends, and to take it in scorn, that the King should be called out to plead his Cause: And afterwards having gotten some assistance of the King's Friends, he drew the Army se-cretly from Pelusium to Alexandria, and made Achillas (formerly mentioned) General of all the Forces; inciting him forward, as well by his own Promises, as from the King, and instructing him by Letters and Messengers what he would have

Lib. III.

Ptolemy the Father, by his last Will and Testament, had left for Heirs the eldest of two Sons, and likewise the eldest of two Daughters: And for the confirmation thereof, had, in the same Will, charged and required the People of Rome by all the Gods, and by the League he made at Rome, to see this accomplished. For which purpose he sent a Copy row which purpose to first copy of first copy of bit Will to Kome, to be kept in the Treafors; Cefar Landeth his Forces, taketh Pharus, and which, by reason of the publick Occasions that admitted no such business for the preferra, were left with Pompey: And the Original, figned and fealed up, was brought to Alexandria. While Casar was handling these things, being very desirous to end these Controversies by Arbitrament it was told him on a suddain, that the King's Army, and all the Cavalry were come to Alexandria. Cæsar's Forces were not such that he durst trust upon them, to hazard Battel without the Town; only it remained, that he kept himself in such places as were most fit and convenient for him within the Town, and to learn what Achillas intended. Howfoever, he commanded all the Soldiers to Arm; and exhorted the King, that of those which were nearest unto him, and of greatest Authority, he would send fome to Achillas, to know his meaning.

Dioscorides and Serapion being deputed thereunto, having been both Embassadors at Rome, and in great place about Ptolemy the Father, they came to Achillas : Whom, as foon as they were come into be Presence, and before he would hear or understand what they would have, he commanded to be taken away and slain. Of whom, one having received a Wound, was carried away by his own People for Dead : The other was flain outright. Whereupon trusting to the same of his great Exploits, did not Cæsar wrought to get the King into his own hands doubt to go with these weak Forces, thinking every thinking that his Name and Title would prevail much amongst his. People : As also to make it appear, that this War was rather moved by the private practice of some Seditious Thieves, than by order and commandment from the King.

OBSERVATION.

THe multiplicity of Occasions and Troubles which happen to such as have the ordering of any bufineffes of Import, doth make that of Pliny often remembred ; Veteribus nevotiis nova Lib. 2. Ep. 8. accrescunt, nec tamen priora peraguntur; tot nexibus, tot quasi catenis, majus indies occupationum agmen extenditur: New businesses come in the neck of old, and yet the first are not dispatched: With so many Tyes and Chains as it were, is the troop of businesses every day made longer and longer. For albeit Pompey had now fpent his Malice, and was no more to appear in Arms against Casar: Yet his hap was by flying, to draw him (as it were by way of Revenge) into a place where he was necessarily to be entangled in a dangerous War.

To these Prodigies here mentioned, may be added that of Aulus Gellius, that the fame day Lib. 15.6.18. the Battel happened, there fell out a strange Wonder at Padua: Where a certain Priest called Cornelius, of Noble Race and Holy Life, fuddainly fell into an Ecstasie, and said, he saw a great Battel afar off, Darts and Piles fly thick in the Air, some flying and some pursuing, great Slaughter, accompanied with many lamentable Groans and Cries: And in the end cried out, That Cafar had got the Victory. For which he was mocked for the prefent, but afterwards held in great admiration.

Pliny maketh the small increase of Nilus to be a Fore-teller of Pompey's Death; Minimumque Lik. 5. cap.9.

Pharsalico Bello: Veluti necem Magni, prodigio quodam, flumine aversante: The least encrease of Nilus was at the time of the Pharfalian Battel: The very River prodigiously shewing (as it were) a detestation of the Murther of the Great Pomper, CHAP. XXXVIII.

He Forces that were with Achillas, were neither for their number, or fashion of Men, or use and experience in War, to be contemned. For be had Twenty Two Thousand Men in Arms. These Troops consisted of the Gabinian Soldiers: Which were now grown into a Custom of Life and Liberty of the Egyptians; and having forgot the name and discipline of the People of Rome, had there Married Wives, and most of them had Children. To these were added fuch as were gathered from the Thieves and Robbers of Syria, the Province of Cilicia, and other finitimate Regions: Besides many Banished Men, and others condemned to Die, that fled thither. And for all our Fugitives, there was ever a sure and certain receipt at Alexandria, and a certain condition of receip as enexamining, and a certain condition to Life: for upon giving up of his name, he was pre-fently involled a Soldier. And if one chanced to be taken and apprehended by his Mafter, he was prefently refcued by the concourse of Soldiers, who being all in the same condition, did strive for him as for themselves. These required the King's Friends to be Slain; these were accustomed to rob Rich Men of their Goods to better their Pay, to Pp 2 Refere

Bessege the King's House, to expel some out of the supply him: For he had sent to all the consining Kingdom, and to send for others home, according Regions for aid. In other places of the Town they to an old custom and privilege of the Alexandrian

There were besides, Two Thousand Horse, that had been of ancient continuance in many of the Wars held at Alexandria, and had brought back Ptolemy the Father, and restored him to his Kingdom; had flain Bibulus's two Sons, and had made War with the Egyptians: And this use and knowledge they had of War. Achillas trusting to these Forces, and contenuing the small number of Cæsar's Troops, did take and possess Alexandria: and further assault-and it came at length to a very forcible Encounter: For having drawn out their Troops, the Fight began to be hot in divers Streets and Lanes; and the Enemy (in great Troops) went about to possess themselves of the Gallies, of which there were Fifty found there, that were sent to serve Pompey, and returned home again after the Battel in Thessalia. These were all Triremes and Quinqueremes, rigged, and ready to go to Sea.

Besides these, there were Twenty Two, which were always accustomed to be the best, for the defence of Alexandria, and were all furnished with Decks: Which, if they had taken, together with Casar's Winds, if they would have had the Haven and the Sea at their command; and, by that means, hin-dered Cælar from Succours and Provision of Victual. In regard whereof they fought hard on both fides; Achillas expecting Victory, and our Men for their Safety. But Carlar obtained his purpose: And because he was not able to keep so many several things with so small Forces, he set them all on Fire, toge-ther with those that were in the Road, and presently Landed fome Soldiers at Pharus ; which is a Tower Lanaca Jone Sodaiers at Pharus; which as a lower in an Island, of a great height, and built with strange Workmanship, taking that name from the Island. This Island lieth over-against Alexandria, and so maketh it a Haven. But former Kings had enlarged it Nine Hundred Paces in length, by a line with the Marketh of the And the there. raifing great Mounts in the Sea: And by that means had brought it so near to the Town, that they joyned them both together with a Bridge.

In this Illand dwelt divers Egyptians, and made a Village of the bigness of a Town: And what Ships soever had fallen off their course, either by Tempess or Error, were there Robbed by those Egyptians. For, by reason of the narrow entrance, no Ships can come into the Haven, but, by the favour and leave of them that hold Pharus. Cafar being afraid of this, while the Enemy was busie in Fight, so fought, that they gave over at length upon equal Conditions: (Which happened by reason of the narrounes of the Passages and a few of each side being slain, Cæsat took in such places as were most convenient for him, and Fortified them in the Night. In this Quarter of the Town was contained a little part of the King's House (wherein he himself, at bis first arrival, was appointed to lodge) and a Theatre joyned to the House, which was instead of a Orașie, popica ve pre riouje, worton was injiera o ic Cafile, and bad a paffage to the Port, and to other parts of the Road. The days following he encreded these Fortifications, to the end he might have them as a Wall against the Enemy, and thereby need not Fight against bis Will.

In the mean time, the younger Daughter of King Ptolemy, hoping to obtain the Crown now in que-fion, found means to convey her self out of the King's House to Achillas; and both, joyntly together, undertook the managing of that War. But presently there grew a controversie between them, who should Command in Chief; which was the cause of great Larges and Rewards to the Soldiers, either of them being at great Charges and Expences to gain their good Wills.

While the Enemy was bussed in these things,

Photinus, the Governour of the young King, and Super-Intendant of the Kingdom on Casar's Party, fent Meffengers to Achillas, Exhorting him not to defift in the business, or to be discouraged. Upon the discovering and apprehension of which Messengers, Cæsar caused him to be Slain. And these were the beginnings of the Alexandrian War.

OBSERVATION.

DHarus is a little Island in the Sea over-against Alexandria; in the midft whereof Ptolemy Philadelph built a Tower of an exceeding height, all of white Marble. It contained many Stages, and had in the top many great Lanthorns to keep Light in the Night, for a Mark to fuch as were at Sea. The Architector Ingraved thereupon this Inscription; Softrates Gnidius, the Son of Dexiphanes, to the Gods Conservators, for the Safety of

It was reckoned for one of the Seven Wonders of the World. The first whereof was the Temple of Diana at Epbelus. The feecond was the Sepulcre which Artemilia, Queen of Caria, made for her Husband Maulolus, whose Ashes she drank. The third was the Colossus of the Sun at Rhodes. The fourth was the Walls of Babylon. The fifth was the Pyramids of Egypt. The fixth was the Image of Jupiter Olympius at Elis, which was made by Phidias, and contained three-Afraug tons, where the Eurony was vaye in 1200, Landed bis Soldiers, took the place, and there put (core Cubits in height; and was all of Ivory, a Garrison. Whereby he brought it to pass, that and pure Gold. And the seventh was this Phaboth Corn and Succeurs might safely come by Sea to rus.

The Duke of ROHAN's REMARKS.

and Litte; he teems to have out-done himself be about 150000 Crowns, which Pompey had given whole Armies in Spain by open force, and having reduced them to his Mercy, to diffinits them with their Commanders without Alliest without Ransom: their Commanders, without obliging them to engage no longer to make War against him: To others, Massacred as many of his Soldiers as fell

F Cafar's Clemency and Liberality are fo borrows Money from his own Captains to pay commendable, during the whole course of his own Men, to restore at once to Domitius Enowhat-ever was theirs, while Bibulus, Labienus and pay the Arrears due to his Enemies, while he into their Hands; are actions to be admir'd, but never to be imitated: Especially in an Age in which the practice is very different from this fluid his Victory. This shows us full the useful-Generofity: And even from what he had practis'd in Gallia, where he fometimes us'd great Severity. Let us therefore enquire into the Reafons which enclin'd him to this blind Clemency, which feem'd to be fatal to his Men: In order to which, I am of Opinion that we must diftinguish the Defigns. He was a Conqueror in Gallia, so that whenever they abus d his first and natural Clemency, he practis'd Severity to awe those by Fear, which he had not been able to Subdue by his Mildness. But here he is enof maintaining the Liberty of the People, he defigns to enflave the People and Senate. To that end he lays aside all his Passions, the better to effect his defign, and the more his Enemies are Cruel against him, the milder he appears a-gainst them: So that his Enemies only dreading him in Battel, and not despairing of a Pardon, submit with ease at the first frowns of Fortune. But the Case is very different in such Civil Wars, as are only made for the defence of ones Perfon or Religion: For having no defign in fuch to subvert the State, you are obligd to repel Cruelty by Cruelty, or else you will find no Adherents: But when you Fight for Dominion, you must obtain it, by behaving your self in fuch a manner that neither Vengeance nor Cruelry may be fear'd from you, and by showing a great Liberality, and all forts of Vertues: For People never defire a change of Condition, unless it be to make themselves easier. Thus, with this Liberal Resolution and Clemency, retaining his Dictatorship but a Fortnight; doing nothing contrary to the common practice, as Protector of the Common-Wealth, justifying all his Actions, showing himself as desirous of a Peace as Pompey seem'd averse to it, in order to animate his Citizens and Soldiers against him; and prosecuring the War much better than he, he atchiev'd the greatest and most glorious design that ever was undertaken.

Lib. III.

Cafar having joyn'd all his Forces, endeavours to Fight Pompey, and not being able to draw him to a Battel, he undertakes a high Defign, viz. To Besiege him in his Camp, tho' he was weaker than he. It was near Durazzo, where he began to enclose him with Trenches, taking the advantage of small Hills, of difficult access, (which in my Opinion induc'd him to that defign:) the Reasons alledg'd by him, are, that being weak in Cavalry, and having a scarcity of Corn, he could not possibly get any, Pompey's Army being free, which he thereby also deprived of Forrage, and made it useless to all the Factions of the War; fince it would leffen Pompey's Reputation throughout the Empire, and encrease his own, when it should be reported that Cafar kept him Befieg'd, and that he durft not Fight him; which was of great use to him, fince People commonly fide with the ftrongest. On the other hand, Pompey being unwilling to quit the Sea-fide, or to remove from Durazzo, where he had put his Stores and Provisions, resolv'd to subsist there; and finding that his Cavalry would fuffer too much unless they return'd to Forrage, he made an enclosure of Trenches on his side, of sisteen Miles circumference. Thus the two Captains omitted nothing in order to the fuccess of their Defigns. Finally, Pompey finding himself very much streightned by this enclosure, Attacks one of the ends of Cafar's Retrenchments, in which ness of Retrenchments, and how easie it is thereby to avoid a Combat against an Army we stand in dread of; to re-encourage one that is difficartened; and to flarve another ftronger than our own. For the skill of War conflits chiefly in never being forc'd to Fight against ones Will, to which end 'tis necessary to take care not to want Provisions, to exercise the Soldiers to handle their Arms well, and to observe their Orders, and to know how to make Retrenchments; for had Cafar been to deal with a less skilful Captain than gag'd in a Civil War, in which, under pretence Pompey who had fuffer'd himself to be enclosed at first, he would either have ruin'd his Army, or have forc'd him to Fight.

Cæfær being sensible that he could no longer block up Pompey, nor yet remain near him without being reduc'd to great inconveniencies for want of Provifions; undertakes a long Retreat of feveral days March. To that end he disparches away his Baggage in the Evening with one Le-gion, and the remainder of his Army about Midnight, excepting two Legions, and with his Cavalry, which he himself followed at break of day. Pompey purfues him with speed, and find-ing him lodg'd where he had formerly been En-camp'd, he also takes Possession of his old Camp near him: But whereas Cafar feemingly fends near nan: but whereas capar techningly lenus out his Cavalry to Forrage, (making it return fecretly into his Camp again) Pompo fends out his in earneft, and most of his Soldiers being gone back to fetch fome Baggage they had left in their former Camp; he Marches away suddenly in the same order as the day before. So that Pompey not being able to follow him at that time, and the other making great Marches still in the fame order; he could not possibly overtake him; and in three days time defifted his pursuit. This is a fine Lesson to show how dangerous it is to make a Retreat within fight of an Enemy; and how to avoid a Combat, and what Order is necessary to be observed not to be incumber'd with the Baggage, and how a Retreat is made better with part of the Army, than with the whole. For fince Cafar was afraid of Retreating within fight of Pomper, with an Army fo accustom'd to Vanquish, and dreaded by Pompey himself, what must Generals do in these our Times, who Command Armies newly rais'd, without Order, without Obedience, full of Baggage, where Soldiers do not understand their Arms, nor the Captains how to Teach them; and yet they would think it a reflection upon their Honour, to retire by Stealth? Presumption and Ignorance are two ill Counsellors in War.

At the Battel of Pharsalia, Pompey was as strong again as Casar, especially in Cavalry, on which he rely'd particularly for Victory: But his Army was neither fo well experienced, nor fo accustom'd to Fight as Cafar's, so that dreading they would break their Order in going to Charge, he commanded them to tarry and fuftain the shock of the Enemies Army, without moving from their place. Casar not approving this Advice, commanded his Army to begin the Onset, alledging that it would excite the Courage of his Men, which it is fitter to encrease than to leffen, not disapproving the ancient way, beginning the Combat with a general Shout. And experience informs us, that in all Warlike Actions, he that Attacks redoubles his Courage, and that he that is Attack'd has fome fear.

As for the Order of Pompey's Battel, having of the ends of Cegar's Actientininenes, in which he had so much advantage in two Combats that a Brook on his Right, he placed all his Horse on were fought in one day, that Cesar confess, that the Left, flattering himself, that after having.

Overthrown Cafar's, it would enclose his Army. Cefar being fensible that his Cavalry was not better yet how to pursue his Victory, and to strong enough to resist Pompey's, reinsore'd it with improve it. But never comparably to that of fprightly Soldiers, whom he mixes among it; Pharfalia, in which he did not alone content himmoreover, he makes a Detachment out of every Battalion, with which he compos'd another to Battalion, with which he compos'd another to further or further of the farmy upon a Hill, on furthain it, which he purs out of the Rank of the three Orders of the Infantry, and Commands them not to Charge, until they receive Orders from him; fo that when Pompey's Cavalry had beaten back Cofar's, which they could not do without putting themselves in disorder, they men this Battalion which flopt them flort: And then obliged them to run their Backs, and wholly to abandon the Left Wing of Pompey's Army, through which Cofar pursuing his Point, easily the point of the Army upon a Hill, on the fides and in the Rar and Land, until he trace'd him to his Grave in Egypr, where he arriv'd almost as soon as he, never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. This teaches us to improve occasions when they offer themselves, and never allowing him time to recollect himself, or any wife to Rally. both on the fides and in the Rear; that the first being Overthrown, may not Overthrow them that are to fusfain them, leaving them a convenient space to pass, and to Rally behind.

As Cafar knew how to Vanquish, to he knew felf with forcing the Camp, nor with Befieging the remainder of the Army upon a Hill, on

COM-

COMMENTARIES

ON THE

Alexandrian War.

By Aulus Hirtius Pansa, Casar's Friend and Companion in his Wars.

Now first made English.

The Argument.

TESAR purfues POMPET to Alexandria, where understanding that he was Slain, but that King Ptolemy did design to entrap him, he was constrained to stand upon his Guard, though under the Disadvantage both of Time and Place, it being Winter, and within the Walls of a Town, in the Possession of a most powerful and cunning Enemy, he himself poor and destitute of Conveniencies for a War. A Diffention between Arfinoe, youngest Daughter to King Ptolemy, and Achillas, Captain of the Guard, about the Government. Cafar releases young Ptolemy, who (contrary to his most solemn Promises) Fights against him, but is overcome. Besides this War of Alexandria, Hirtius in this Book does likewise give an Account of the Disturbances in Spain, under Q. Cassius Longinus the Prætor: As also of the Pontick Expedition against Pharnaces. In all shewing great variety of Fighting and Embattelling an Army, Fortune still appearing, like her self, Inconstant.

I. HE War of Alexandria being refolved upon, Cefar fends for the whole Town was divided into two Parts, the Army left from Robets, Syria, and Cilicia, might be managed by one Advice and Direction; calls the Archers out of Crete, and the Horsemen from Malchus, King of the Nabathai: Commands Ammunition, Provisions, and Supplies to be got together from all Parts, and fent in. Mean while the Fortifications are daily augmented by the Addition of new Works, and all fuch parts of the Town as are look'd upon to be less ftrong, are fitted with Testudo's and Covert-ways, and from one Building to another the Battering-Rams are let in through Holes, all the old Ruines and void Spaces being taken up with Fortifications. Alexandria, is in a manner Proof against Fire, because the Houses are at a convenient diftance one from another, and are not built of Wood, but fenced about with Walls and Arches, and cover'd over either with a fort of Tiles or hard Terrace. Cafar endeavour'd all he was able to cut off the narrowest part (so made by a Moat or River that runs from the South) from the rest and then, fuch as were over-power'd, might be relieved, and have help fent em from the other part of the Town: But especially, that Water and Provision might easily be had; for of one of these they had but little, and of the other none at all; both which the River or Moat could abundantly fupply 'em with.

II. All this while those of Alexandria were not idle in managing their Affairs; for they fent. Ambaffadors, and made Proclamation through all parts of the Confines and Kingdom of Egypt for Affiftance; they convey'd a vaft many Bows and Arrows into the Town, and got together an incredible number of People: Also in the City they had huge Magazines of Arms; befides this, they arm'd their Servants that were able, and left the Veterane Cohorts at liberty in the most open to the ten the control part to make by a make the victorian control at more, and the most open or River that runs from the South) from the reft places of the City, that what Quarter foever of the City, that part being defigned for the fhould be affaulted, they might be ready with Works and making of Vines or Coverts; having their whole Force to come to its Aid. They ran up a Triple Palisado before each Gate and Postern, built of large square Stone, full Forty Foot high. The lower Parts of the City they fenced with very high Towers of Ten ascents. Besides, they made walking Towers of the like number of Degrees or Steps with Wheels, and having put Ropes to 'em, they drew them with Hories, moving them to what quarter they pleafed, along fuch Streets as were even and direct.

III. The City being both Wealthy and Populous furnished them with all Necessaries. The Men being very Ingenious, and extraordinary Acute, did so dextrously perform whatsoever they faw our Men do, that you would have thought our Men had imitated them: Befides, they had many things of their own Invention; at the same time infefting our Fortifications and defending theirs. Moreover, their Princes or Chiefs in their Councils and Speeches, spoke to 'em to this effect; The People of Rome, according to their Custom, are come to take Possession of our Towns by little and little. Not many Years ago (you may remember) Gabinius entred Egypt with a Powerful Army; And now Pompey being Overcome, fled hither, whither Cafar has purfued him with his Forces; and though he be dead, yet Cafar continues amongst us: Who (if we do not force him out) will turn our Kingdom into a Province; and all this (which is to be maturely thought upon) in a tempestuous time of the Year, when he can receive no Succours by

IV. While these things were in Agitation, there arose a diffention berween Achillas, Captain of the Veteranes, and Arfmoe, King Ptolemy's Younger Daughter, each laying wait for other, he practifing to get the Government into his hands. But Arlinoe, by the help of Ganymedes the Eunuch, gains Achillas his Father-in-law, to her Party, and by that means flays him; who being dead, she obtained the whole Government, without any Copartner or Controller. Gammedes is made General of the Army, who having taken that Office upon him, encreases the Soldiers Pay, and administers other Matters with equal diligence.

V. Alexandria is in a manner all of it undermined, and has Dreins or Canals as far as the Nile, by which the Water is brought into Conduits or Water-Houses, which, by little and little, in time grows clear and fettles: This Mafters and their Families make use of; for as it comes from the River Nile, it is so muddy and thick, that it breeds many and various Diftempers : But Servants and poor People are forced to be contented with it as it comes, because there is not fo much as a Well or Spring in the whole City. Further, this River (the Nile) lay on that fide of the City which the Alexandrians were possessed of: Which thing Ganymedes knowing very well, that our Men might be kept from Water, who were diffributed up and down in every Street for the Defence of the Fortifications, and made use of Water, drawn from Water-Houses, Dreins, and Ponds, he undertakes a great and difficult iton, but by all means to think of being Control Task; for having cut off the Dreins, and all Parts of the City, in his Possession, being secured, he does what he can to draw a vast quantity of Water out of the Sea with Ropes and Engines, which from the rifing Grounds, he let fall upon that part which Cafar was possess of the Water coming felves to digging of Wells without intermission; by means whereof the Water coming felves to digging of Wells without intermission, were in great admiration, how it could happen : neither were they fatisfied whether they might believe themselves, till the inferiour or common fort of People alledged also that the Water they used was of another Nature and Taste to what it was formerly; and by comparing one with the other, and talking them, they found the difference thereof. In a little while after this, that in the upper Conduits could nor be drunk at all, and that in the lower grew every day more corrupt and falt.

VI: This done, and they being fully convinced, fuch a fear fell upon them, that they all thought themselves at the last Extremity: Some said Cafar ought not to delay, but get on Ship-board; others feared that Remedy would be worse than the Disease, because it was not possible they should conceal their flight from the Alexandrians, seeing they were so near 'em; and if they follow'd, there would not be room enough in the Ships to receive them. Befides, there were a great many of the Townsmen in that part of the City where Cafar was, whom he had fuffer'd to continue in their Habitations, because they had openly diffembled themselves faithful to our Men, and seem'd to have revolted from their own; fo that, had I been to defend the Alexandrians, I could have faid much as to their Fidelity and good Conduct: But let any Man confider their Nation and Nature at the same time, and he cannot doubt but they are a fort of People above all Mankind fittest for destruction.

VIL Cafar, by fair Words, and dint of Rea-fon, leffend the fear of his Soldiers, alledging, on, temend the rear of his sources, aneuging, "That fresh Water might be found in the Pits and Trenches; for all Sea-Shoars have naturally Veins of it. But, if the nature of the Egyptian Coast should prove contrary to all others, yet feeing they had the Sea at Command, the Enemy having no Navy, they could not be hinder'd from ferching Warer when they pleas'd with their Ships, either from Paratonium on the Left, or from the Island on the Right hand; which Navigations being made at divers times, could never all miscarry by contrary Winds: But that there was no thought of flight, neither for those who had the chief Power, nor even for those who had nothing to think on, but how to fave their lives: That it was found hard enough to fustain the shocks of their Enemies with the help of their Fortifica-tions, much less could they do it if they left them, being unequal both by their ignorance of the place and their number; befides it would be both redious and difficult to get into the Ships, especially from the Skiffs. On the other hand, the Alexandrians were very fwift, and understood well the nature of the Place and the Buildings; but chiefly being proud of the Victory they would get before them, and posfels themselves of the rising Grounds and tops of Houses, and thereby hinder them in their flight, and getting to their Ships; therefore exhorted them to think no more of that Resolu-

VIII. Having made this Oration to his Soldiers, and the Courage of all being excited, he gave Order to the Centurions, That all other bu-Malion; by means whereof the upper Conduits or fo much as in the Night-time. Having begun Water-Houses, the better fort of Inhabitants the Work, and every one being intent upon it, in one nights time they found abundance of fresh Water; fo that in a very little time the Operofe Engines and vaft Endeavours of the Alexandrians were rendred useless. Two days after, the Seven and thirtieth Legion of Pompey's Soldiers, that farrender'd themselves, with Corn, Arms, and Bows and Arrows, having been put on Board of Ship by Domitius Calvinus, were brought to the Coast of Africa, a little above Alexandria. These Ships, by reason of a West Wind which blew for many days, could not get into Port; yet the places all thereabouts are remarkable for good Anchoring. They, being long weather bound, and very much straiten'd for want of Water, fend an Express to Cafar, to acquaint him with their Con-

IX. Cafar, without confulting any body but himself, what was proper to be done, gets on Ship board, and orders all the Fleet to follow him; but puts never a Land-man on Board; because, being to go a great way off, he was not willing to leave the Works unguarded. When he arrived at Cherrhonefus, and had put his Boats ashore to take in fresh Water, some of the Company going a good way from the Ships for Plunder, were taken by the Enemies Horsemen: Of whom they learn'd that Cafar himself was come along with the Fleet, and that he had no Soldiers aboard. Understanding which, they were of opinion that a good Opportunity was offered them of Advantage: Whereupon they mann'd all the Veffels they had ready for fail, and met Cafar as he retuin'd with his Fleet; who for two Reasons declin'd fighting that day; one, because he had no Soldiers on board, and it was past the tenth hour of the Day, thinking the night would give his Enemies Courage, who trufted much to their Knowledge of the places; the other, that he had not time to encourage his Men, being of opinion that no Exhortation is of any validity, wherein Valour and Cowardice are not, the one commended, and the other exploded. For which Causes, Cafar drew all the Ships he could to fliore, into a place where he thought the Enemy could not follow him: But there was one Ship, a Rhodian, in the right Wing at a great diftance from the reft; which the Enemies seeing they could not contain themselves, but immediately four large Ships and a great many small open Vessels ran upon her with full Sail. Whereupon Cafar was conftrained to give her his Affiltance, that he might not be a shameful Spectator of his Difgrace; though if a worse thing should happen, he thought he ought to take it for his pains. A Battle commences hereupon, with great fury by the Rhodians, who, as they excelled both for Skill and Valour in all Encounters, fo at this time especially they did not refuse to bear of his own Ability, to'de his best, he sails round the whole brunt of the Battle themselves, because it should not be said the Romans came to any Damage by their milmanagement. This Fight was fortunate to the Romans; for one of the Enemies Ships of four Banks of Oars was taken, another funk, but all the Men were faved; and a very great number of Sea-men were flain in the reft: And if the Night had not put an end to the Fight, Cafar had got the whole Fleet of the Enemy into his Possession. The Enemies being throughly frighted with this ill Fortune, Cafar (the Wind blowing gently against him) tow'd his Ships of Burthen, with his Men of War, to Alexandria.

X. The Alexandrians were fo mightily discouraged at this Lofs, when they faw themselves o-

but in the Skill of their Pilots. (in whom, and the tallness of their Ships, they much confided I that they doubted whether their Forts were able to defend them; wherefore they made all the Blockades possible, being afraid lest our Fleet should come fo near as to annoy them, even on fhore. They, after Ganymedes had ratified the fame in Council, fer themselves to repair and make good the number of fuch Ships as were loft, being very diligent in refitting their old Ships, not at all doubting but they should be able to effect the same. And although they loft above a hundred and ten long Ships, and all their Naval Stores in Port, yet they laid not aside their hopes of making the same good again: For they faw that neither Forces nor Provisions could be brought to Cafar, if they were but strong enough in Shipping; besides, the Seamen both of the City and Maritime Country, who had been brought up to the Sea from Children, covered to flock in for so natural and National a Good; neither were they infensible of what Advantage their small Crast was to them. These things confidered, they fet about repairing their Navy with all possible Diligence.

XI. They placed Guards at each mouth of the Nile, to take the Customs or Toll : Old Ships, belonging to the King, that had lain in obscure Docks, and that had not been made use of for many years past, they refitted, and brought to Alexandria, but without Oars. They uncover'd the tops of the Gates, Schools, and publick Buildings; made Boards or Planks ferve initead of Oars: Natural Industry furnish'd 'em with some things, the Plenty of the City with others .Laftly, their Prepafation was not for a long Voyage, but fuch as was fuitable to the present Necessity; for they foresaw their Conflict must be in their very Port. Therefore in a few days, contrary to all Expectation, they had got ready two and twenty of four Banks apiece, and five of five Banks each, with abundance of small open Vessels. Having made Trial what each of 'em could do, before they went our of Port, they put a convenient number of Landmen on board, and made themselves in all things ready for a Battle.

XII. Cafar had with him nine Ships of Rhodes, for of ten that were fent, one founder'd in her Voyage upon the Egyptian Coast) eight from Pontus, five from Lycia, and twelve from Asia. Of these there were five of five Banks apiece, and ten of four ; all the reft were less, and for the most part open: Nevertheless, trufting to the Valour of his Soldiers, having learned the strength of the Enemy, he prepared to fight them; for when each Man had taken a Resolution, from a Confidence with the Fleet to the Isle Pharos, and drew up his Ships in Order of Battle against the Enemy, placing the Rhodians in the right Wing, and those of Pontus in the left. Between 'em he ieft a space of 40 Paces; for fo much he thought convenient for the drawing the Ships off upon occasion. After he had thus order'd them, he disposed of the rest for a Referve, appointing and commanding which should follow and affist one part, and which the

XIII. The Alexandrians undauntedly bring out their Ships, and range em in order. In Front they place two and twenty; the rest, as Reserves, they place in the fecond Rank: Besides, they bring out a great number of leffer Ships and Skiffs, vercome, not only in the Valour of their Seamen, with Bavins and Fire, to try if by their Number, Shouting, and Lights, they could put our. Men into a Fright.

There were between the two Fleets narrow Fords, which belong to the Coast of Africk; (for they fay, that one half of Alexandria is in Africa) where they waited a long time, one expecting when t'other should pass the same; because, whichfoever enter'd, if he should chance to have the worse, would find it a difficult Matter to get out again in the Retreat.

XIV. Euphranor was Admiral of the Rhodian Ships, who, for his greatness of Mind, and Courage, was rather to be compar'd to the Romans than the Grecians. This Man, because of his very great Skill and Magnanimity, was fo beloved by the Phodians, that they gave him the Command of their Fleet: Who, when he understood Cafar's Mind, faid, Cælar, thou feemest to me to be afraid that shouldst thou enter these Fords before thou art obliged to it by Fight, thou shouldest not be able to bring the Ships off again: Commit this Affair to us Rhodians; we will justain the Brunt of the Battle, while the rest follow us, and in this we will not balk thy Expectation; for to fee thefe Men longer to vaunt it, even under our Noses, is a borrid shame and troubie to us.

XV. C.esar having encouraged him, and given him all due Praise and Commendation, gives the Signal for Battle. Euphranor with four Rhodian Ships paffes beyond the Ford, which are furrounded by the Alexandrians, who run upon them with great Violence; which they fuftain, and with great Dexterity and Cunning clear themselves of em: And so excellent a thing is good Discipline, that in fuch an unequal number not a Ship of ours came fide ways upon the Enemy, not an Oar of any of 'em was loft or fwept away; but they always met them full butt as they came. In the mean while the rest of ours came up, when we were forced of Necessity to leave Art or Dextesity, by reason of the narrowness of the place, and betake our felves wholly to Valour. There was not one Man in Alexandria, either of our Men, or the Townsmen, of those imploy'd in the Works or in the Defence of the place, but got on the tops of the highest Buildings and places of Eminence, being defirous to fee the Encounter; each with Prayers and Vows to the Immortal Gods, wishing Victory to their respective Party. For had ours been beat, we had had no Refuge either by Sea or Land; nay, even all things future were uncertain to us, though we had been Conquerors. They, if they had overcome us at Sea, would have got all; if worsted, their other Fortune would have been in jeopardy. This withal was a grievous and fad thing to confider, That the Good and Safety of the whole should turn upon the Fare of a few, of whom, if any should despond or be dishearten'd, the rest must also fall, nor having Ability to defend themselves. These things Cafar, fome days before, had declared to his Soldiers; that they might fight with fo much the greater Courage, fince they faw that the Safety of all lay in their hands: Each particular Man, following Casar's Directions, exhorted his Friend and Companion that he would not balk his and the Expectation of all the Roman People, fince they had pitch'd upon him as one on whom they might hazard the Fate of a Battle. With this Resolution therefore it was determin'd, That neither the Industry nor Experience of the Coasters or Seamen should be any Protection, nor their multitude of Ships, of any Advantage to 'em; nor could they equal us in the number of valiant Men.

XVI. In this Fight was taken one Ship of five Banks of Oars, with all the Soldiers and Seamen. and three funk ; (without the loss of one on our fide) the reft make off the nearest way to the Town, where they were shelter'd by Molds with Forts to fecure em, which hinder'd our Men from

XVII. Cafar, that this might not be an Obstacle to him at every turn, thought it his best Policy to strive by all means possible to get the Island. with the Mold belonging thereto, into his hands. The Fortifications therefore being in a good meafure finished in the Town, he hoped both the Mold and it might be accosted at the same time. This Counfel being taken, he puts ten Cohorts and the chief of the light armed Soldiers of the Gaulillo Horsemen, whom he thought most proper, on board the leffer Ships and Skiffs: One part of the Island he attacks, with his Ships covered for the Protection of his Men, offering him great Rewards that should first set foot upon it. At the first Onfet they fustain'd our Men with equal Bravery; for, at the same time that some defended their Coafts, others threw Darts and other offenfive Weapons from the tops of the Houses: For by reason of the unevenness of the place, the Landing was very difficult for our Men; and with their Skiffs and long Ships they nimbly and skilfully defended the narrowness of the place. But as foon as (the places being known, and the Fords throughly tried) a few of our Men were got afhore, and others came and back'd them, and ftoutly resisted the Enemy upon equal ground, all the Inhabitants of Pharos run away. These being put to flight, the rest, leaving the custody of the Port, apply themselves to the Shore and to the Town. and left their Ships, to defend their Honses, XVIII. Not could they long defend themselves by the help of their Fortifications, though the Buildings were not unlike those of Alexandria, (fuffer me to compare less things with greater ;) the Towers were both high, and stood so close together, that they ferved inftead of a Wall; and our Men came not prepared for a Siege, with Scaling Ladders, Hurdles, and other fuch like Implements: But Fear robs Men of their Understanding and Reason, and debilitates the Body, as then it fell out. They that thought themselves able to encounter us on plain and equal ground, being now frighted with the flight of some and the flaughter of a few of their Men, durft not now trust themfelves to their Fortifications of 30 Foot in height. but threw themselves through the Mold into the Sea, and fwam to a Town 800 Paces off; though we kill'd a great many of 'em, and took fix hundred Prisoners.

XIX. Cafar, having given the Soldiers leave to plunder, commanded the Houses to be pull'd down, and the Caftle to be fortified on all fides as far as the Bridge that is next to Pharos, and put a Garison into it. This the Pharites had fled from, but that which was strongest, and next to the Town, the Alexandrians kept: However, the next day he accosts it in the same manner, because (the Caftle and the other Bridge being taken) he perceived all fear of Excursion of their Shipping, and fudden Ambuscades, was taken away; he having also with Arrows and Darts drove those from the Ships which lay before it for its defence, and forced them into the Town, landed about three Cohorts, the place being so narrow, that it would hold no more; the rest of the Forces keeping their Commentaries on the Alexandrian War.

Station on Shipboard: Which being done, he com- fame place, with great Fortifications and abunmands a Trench to be thrown up before the Bridge that was right against the Enemy; and an Arch being built, to support the Bridge, he caused the Paffages, where the Ships used to go out, to be fill'd up with Stones. One of which Works being finished, that not fo much as one Boat could get out, and the other begun; all the Forces of the Alexandrians threw themselves out of the Town, and stood together in a large place overagainst the Fortifications of the Bridge; and at the same time the Ships that they used to send out through the Bridge, to burn our Ships of Burthen, they placed together against the Mold. Our Men fought from the Bridge and the Mold, theirs from the Platform over against the Bridge, and from their Ships over against the Mold.

XX. Cafar being taken up with these matters, and exhorting his Soldiers, a great number of Watermen and Mariners, from on board our long Ships, threw themselves into the Mold; part with a defire to fee the Fight, part with an eager defire to fight. These Men first forced the Enemies Ships from the Mold with Stones and Slings; and their Darts feemed to be of good use to em: But after they got beyond that place, their Flanks being unguarded, a few Alexandrians ventured out and come over to his People; for all of 'cm were of their Ships; fo that as our Men went out without a Sign given, without any Confideration or Order, so they fled back to their Ships in Disorder: With whose flight the Alexandrians being command; by whose Guarranty, if they might encouraged, they came out of their Ships, and pursued our Men, who were in great Confusion; at the fame time those that staid behind in the long Ships, fnatch up the Ladders, and haften to force the Ships from the shore, lest the Enemies should possess themselves of 'em. Whereupon three Cohorts of our Men, that were on the Bridge and in the first Mold, when they heard a shouting behind them, and beheld our Men funning at the fame time, valiantly at first withstood the violent shock of the Enemies Darts; but fearing they should be off, and no way would be left for their Retreat, they left the Fortification they had begun upon the Bridge, and made all the hafte they could poffible to the Ships; whercof part having got a-board the next Ships, they funk with the great number and weight of the Men; part hefitating, and being doubtful what course to take, were flain by the Alexandrians: Some few, referv'd for a better Destiny, follow'd the Advice-boats, by up by their Shields, strove with all the strength they had, and fwam to the next Ships.

XXI. Casar did all that in him lay to get his Men upon the Bridge and Fortifications again, he venturing himself in the same common danger with them: But feeing none would flir, he got aboard himfelf, whither fuch a multitude of Men follow'd him, that they had neither room to ftir one for another, nor get the Ship from Land, He, fuspecting what did afterward indeed fall out, threw himself out of the Ship, and swam to some Ships at a good diftance off; whence he fent Boats to help his Men, that were in a very great strait, and faved fome; for his Ship, depressed with the multitude of the Soldiers, perished, together with most of the Men. In this skirmish were lost about 400 of the Legionary Soldiers, and of the Rowers and Mariners about the like number.

XXII. The Alexandrians built a Castle in this dance of Artillery; and having cleared the stones out of the Sea again, they let their Ships pals in and out, as before they used to do.

XXIII. Our Men were fo far from being difcouraged at this Loss, that, being the more incenfed and excited, they made greater Advancements; for in affaulting the Enemies Works, in daily Skirmishes, and whentoever an opportunity offer'd it felf, we took many a Party of Men from the Alexandrians, in their Excursions and Sallies, by the indefatigable Industry of ours: Nor could Cafar's Order, when it was made publick, abate either the Toil of the Legions, or their defire of Fighting; infomuch that it was a harder matter to deter and reftrain them from the most dangerous Encounter, than to excite them to it, XXIV. The Alexandrians, when they faw that Profperity ftrengthen'd, and Adversity excited and sharpen'd the Romans, as we may reasonably conjecture, either being admonished by their King's Friends that were in Cafar's Garrisons, or by their own Counsel, approv'd of by secret Messengers from the King, they fent Ambaffadors unto Cafar, That he would fuffer their King to be difmits'd, ready (being spent with weatisomeness, the fiduciary Reign of a Girl, and most cruel Domination of Ganimedes) to do what the King should come under Cafar's Protection and Friendship, no fear of danger should hinder em from delivering themfelves to him.

XXV. Cafar, although he very well knew the Fallaciousness, Diffimulation, and Cunning of the Country, yet thought it convenient to grant their Request; because, if they did determine to do what they requested, he trusted, if he let the King go, he would continue firm in his Fidelity; but if (which was more agreeable to their nature) they hemm'd in behind, and that the Ships would go only required the King to lead them out in Bartle against him, it would be more noble and commendable to fight against a King, than against a Band of Strangers and Fugitives. Therefore having exhorted the King, That he would take care of his Kingdom, spare his most excellent Country, which was laid wafte with most shameful Burnings and Devastations; first restore his Citizens to satety, and then fnew himfelf faithful to the People of Rome and to him; and thinking he only fent him the Anchors, and so got off safe; and a few, bore to his Enemies in Arms, they shook one another by the hand, and Cufar began to difinifs him; (for he was now of full age) but the Royal Soul, well instructed in the most fallacious Cant, that he might not degenerate from the fashion of his Country, weeping, begun to entreat Cafar that he would not let him go; for that a Kingdom it felf was not more pleafant to him than Cefar's Presence. The Young-man's Crying being stinted, Cafar himself being moved thereat, prefently fent him away to his own people, not doubting but that, fince he was so taken with his Presence, he would be true to his Interests: But he was no sooner set at Liberty, but he wages War so vigorously against Cesar, that it appear'd the Tears he shed in Discourse with C.efar were shed for Joy he was released. Hereat many of Cafar's Legates, Friends, Centurions, and Soldiers Rejoyced, because his over-good Nature was put upon by the Sophistries of a Child; as though indeed Cefar had done it, mov'd thereto by his good Nature only, and not by the most prudent deliberation.

der, and finding themselves never a whit the ftronger, nor the Romans the weaker, (the Soldiers deriding the King's Age and Weakness) they were mightily troubled; Nor were they ever a whit benefited thereby; and there were Rumours abroad that great Supplies were brought to Cafar by Land out of Smia and Cilicia; which Cafar as ver heard nothing of. In the mean time they determined to intercept our Provisions that were coming to us by Sea; to which end, having fitted out Ships, which they disposed of in proper Stations about Canepus, they laid wait for our Convoy, which as foon as it was told Cafar, he commanded the Fleet to be prefently equipp'd and fitted out, and makes Tiberius Nero Admiral. In this Fleet went the Ships of Rhodes, under Euphranor, without whom never any Sea-fight was finish'd with good Success; but Fortune, (which very often relevves those for a worse Fate, whom she before had honour'd with abundance of Favours) centrary to her wont, was now against Euphranor: For when they came to Canopus, and had drawn up the Fleets on both fides in order of Battle, and Euphrania, as he used to do, had begun the Fight, and had there made a hole through one of the Enemies Ships of three Banks, and funk it, he purfued the next too far, (the reft of his Squadron coming but flowly up after him) and was hemm'd in by the Alexandrians, without any to help him; either because they thought his own Valour and good Fortune would defend him, or because they were afraid of themselves: Therefore he only of em all behaved himself well in that Fight, and perish'd with his victorious Quadrireme.

XXVII. About the fame time Mithridates Pergamenus, famous for his Noble Birth, Knowledge in War, Valour, Fidelity, and high Place in the Friendship of Cafar was sent into Syria and Cilicia in the beginning of the Alexandrian War, with a good Force, to raise Supplies, which he speedily effected, by means of the great Willingness of the Citizens, and his own Diligence, and by Land brought them to Pelusium, where Egypt joyns to Spria; which Town (possess'd with a strong Gatison by Ackillas) because of the Conveniency of the place, (for all Egypt is believed to be secured, as it were with Blockades, with Pharos by Sea, and Pelulium by Land) being fuddenly furrounded with a great Army, they fought tightly with the numerous Garison and other great Forces, which being every one wounded and tired out, he subdued; and, by Perseverance and continued Assaults, the same day he lay down before it, the same day he brought it under his Subjection, and put a Garison of his own into it. Thence, having happily accomplish'd the Siege, he directs his Course to Cafar at Alexandria; and, by that Authority which commonly attends the Victorious, he pacifi'd and brought into Cafar's Friendship all those Countries through which he pass'd.

XXVIII. There is a place, one of the most noted of all those parts, not far from Alexandria, called Delta, so named from its similitude to the Letter Delta; for there is a certain Branch of the River Nile, which has but one Original, but dividing into two Streams, widens gradually to a very great distance at its fall into the Sea: To which River when the King understood Mithridates did draw near, and knew that he must pass it, he fent great Forces against him; with which he hoped, either to overcome and totally defeat Mithridates, or at least to be able to hinder his XXVI. The Alexandrians having got their Lea- Progress: However, he wish'd he might be overcome, which was all he defir'd, namely to cut him off from Cafar, and keep him Prisoner. The first of his Troops that could pass the River at Delta. and meet Mithridates, begun the Fight; making hafte, that those who came after might have no share in the Victory: Whose Shock Mithridates fuftain'd with great wariness, having intrench'd himself according to the Roman custom; for when he faw them enter heedlessy and infolently upon his Intrenchments, he caused a Sally to be made on all fides, and flew a great number of them s and if the reft, knowing the places very well, had not hid themselves, and some of em got to their Ships in which they paffed the River, they had been all cut off. But their Fear being a little over, and having joyned those that follow'd after them, they began again to make head.

> XXIX. Mithridates sends a Messenger to acquaint Cafar with what he had done; and the King understanding by his Soldiers what had happen'd to them; so that much about the same time that the King went out to oppose Mithridates, Cie-far set out to succour him. The King makes use of the more expeditious Navigation of the River Nile, in which he had a great Fleet ready equipp'd. Cafar would not take the fame Course, that he might not encounter the Ships in the River; but going round by that Sea which borders on part of Africa, as we shew'd above, he prevented the King's Forces before they could fall upon Mithridates, and joyn'd him and his Army, yet victorious and in fafety. The King fat down with his Forces in a place fortified by Nature, it being upon a rifing Ground, a Plain lying round him every way, but fortified on three fides by divers forts of Fortifications: On one fide lay the River Nile, on the other a high Mountain, and the third was furrounded by a Fen or Bog.

XXX. Between their Camp and Cafar's March was a narrow River with very high Banks, which ran into the Nile, but diftant from the King's Camp about 7000 Paces. The King, when by this March he perceived Cafar a coming, fent all his Horse and nimble light Foot to that River, to hinder Cafar in his paffing it, and at a diffance begin the Fight, taking the advantage of the Banks: And here it was Valour had no fuccess, and to be flothful brought danger; which thing did mightily grieve our Men, both Foot and Horse, because they had contended fo long with the Alexandrians without any Advantage; therefore at the same time the German Horse disperse themselves, and feeking out fordable places in the River, fwam over it where the Banks were low; and the Legionaries, having cut down great Trees, fo long that they would reach from one Bank to the other, they laid them a-cross, and fomething being thrown in of a fudden, to stop the Rapidness of the Stream, they passed over; whose On-set the Enemy were so afraid of, that they placed their Safety in their Heels; but even that was in vain, for few in the Flight got fafe to the King, the rest being almost XXXI. Cafar, having luckily put an end to this business, perceiving that his sudden coming would ftrike a great Terror into the Alexandrians, haftens with all speed as Conqueror to the King's Camp; which when he perceived to be furrounded with vaft Works, and naturally fortified, (befides he faw a multisude of Armed Men placed ready in the Pass) he would not suffer his Soldiers, weary with the Journey, and with fighting, to proceed thrown away their Arms, and left their Works, to force their Camp; wherefore he pitch'd his and put on such a Habit as Supplicants use when Tents not far distant from the Enemy. The next they deprecate great Persons or Rulers, and all day Cessar set upon a Castle that the King had their holy things being brought forth, with which fortified in the adjoyning Village, but a little way from his Camp, having united it with Wings to the Works thereof, for the better conveniency of retreating thereto; and affaults it with all his Forces; not that he thought it might not be reduced with a less number of Soldiers, but that by that Victory the Alexandrians being Terrot-struck, he might presently assault the King's Camp: Therefore in the same Pursuit, in which the Soldiets followed the Alexandrians flying from the Castle to their Camp, they approached their Fortifications, and begun very vigoroufly to encounter 'em before they closed. Our Men had access two ways to affault 'em; one, where there was no Fortifications; the other, where they had an indifferent Pallisado between the Camp and the Nile. The great and choicest part of the Alexandrians defended that part which was of easiest Access; and the Enemy had great fuccess in beating off and wounding our Men who made their Affaults on that fide next the Nile; for they were shot with many Ar-Camp, and those behind 'em from the River, in which there were many Ships full of Archers and Slingers, galling of 'em.

XXXII. When Cafar faw his Soldiers did all they were able, and yet it did but little avail them by reason of the difficulty of the place; and when he confider'd that the highest part of the Camp was relinquithed by the Alexandrians, because it was fenc'd by Nature, and partly with a defire to fight, and partly with a deire to be Spectators, they had run down to the place where the Fight was, he commanded the Cohorts presently to go round their Camp, and possess themselves of the highest place. Over these he made Carsulenus General, a Man excellent both for his Magnanimity and Skill in Military Affairs: Whither they were no fooner come, a few only defending the Fortifications, and our Soldiers on the other hand refifting them stoutly, but the Alexandrians, frighted with the different shouting and manner of Fight, trembling began to fly on all hands; by whose diforder the hearts of our Men were so elated, that almost at the same time from all Quarters rushing in, (but chiefly those who had postess'd themfelves of the highest place, and ran down) they flew a great multitude of the Enemy : Which danger abundance of the Alexandrians feeking to avoid, threw themselves on heaps out of the Pallifado into that part which was next the River; the foremost of whom being trod down by the Crowd in the very Ditch of the Fortifications, afforded a more easie escape to those that came after. It appear'd that the King himfelf fled out this way, and and being taken on Ship-board, together with the multitude of those that swam to the next Ships, was cast away.

XXXIII. This Bufiness being most happily and expeditionly finished, Cefar, in confidence of his great Victory, takes the next way by land to Alexand is with his Horsemen, and as Victor enter'd that part of the Town which was Garrison'd by the Enemy: Nor was he deceiv'd in his expectation; for the Enemy, having heard of their Armies overthrow, laid afide all further thoughts of War; fo that coming, he received a Reward be-fitting his Valour and Greatness of Mind: For all the whole multitude of the Townsmen having their holy things being brought forth, with which they were wont to pacific angry and offended Kings; they ran and met Cafar as he came along, and turrendred themselves up to him. Cesar having received them, comforted ein, and came through the Works of the Enemy to his own Quarter of the Town, to the great joy of his People; who rejoyced, not only for that the War and Battle was ended, but also for his so happy

XXXIV. He having possess'd himself now of Egypt and Alexandria, appointed those to be Kings whom Ptolemy had nominated by his Will, and beseeched the Roman People that they might not be changed: For the elder of the King's two Sons being drown'd, he gave the Kingdom to the younger, and to the elder of the two Daughters of Cleopatra, who had continued faithful to him, and remain'd in his Garisons; but the younger, Arlinoe. under whose Name, as we have shewn, Ganymedes had impotently a long time bore Rule, he derows, those before 'em out of the Pallisado of the termined to drive from her Kingdom: And that no new Diffention might again arife, by means of Seditious Men, before the King's Governments were well confirm'd unto him, taking the fixth veterane Legion with him, he left the reft there. the ftronglier to establish those Kings in their Government; who could neither have the Love of their Subjects, because they had continued firm in Cafar's Friendship; nor that Authority which their Kings antiently had, being Kings but of yesterday, and besides known to be in the Interests and publick Utility of our Empire. If their Kings continued faithful, they might be safe under our Garifons; but if they prov'd ungrateful, by the same Garilons they might be reftrained. Thus all marters being ended and disposed of, he takes his Journey by land into Syria.

> XXXV. While these things were transacted in Egrpt, King Deiotarus, to whom Casar had given the Government of Asia and the Neighbouring Provinces, came to Domirius Calvinus to pray that he would not fuffer Armenia the lefs, his Kingdom, nor Cappadocia, the Kingdom of Ariobarganes, to be enter'd into and laid waste by Pharnaces: From which Calamity if they were not freed, to make the best of their Governments, they could not pay Cafar the Money which they promis'd him. Domitius, confidering not only that the Money would be necessary for the Payment of the Soldiers, but that it would also be a Disgrace to the People of Rome, to Cxfar, a Conqueror, and to himfelf, to fuffer the Kingdoms of their Affociates and Friends to be poffets'd by a Stranger King; prefently fent Messengers to Pharnaces to depart out of Armenia and Cappadocia, and not by a Civil War to try the Right and Majesty of the Roman People. When he confidered that this Threatning might have the greater Force if he drew nearer those Countries with an Army, going to the Legions, he took one out of three (which was the XXXVI) with him, and fent the other two into Egypt to Cafar, he having writ for them; one whereof is not mention'd in the Alexandrian War; it being loft in its March through Syria by Land. To the 36th Legion Cneius Domitius joyns two from Deiotarus, which he had many years train'd up to our way of Fighting, and to our Arms, together with a hundred Horse; and the same Number from Aribarganes. He fends P. Sextins to C. Pletorius the Rг Quaftor, to bring the Legion that was made up of the Soldiers that mutinied in Pontus; and Quintus Patiscus he fent into Cilicia, to get Supplies: Which Forces, by the Command of Domitius, were freedily convened at Comana.

XXXVI. In the mean time the Ambaffadors bring back Pharnaces's Answer, which was, That he had left Cappadocia, but that he had retaken Armenia the less, it being but just he should possess in Right of his Father; lastly, That the Title to that Kingdom should be reserved entire to Casar, he being ready to ratifie what Casar had required. Cneius Domitius, confidering that he had left Cappadocia, not of his own free Will, but obliged thereunto by Necessity, (because he could better defend Armenia, which joyned to his own Kingdom, than Cappadocia, which was more remote; and because he believed Domitius would bring all the three Legions, of which when he heard two were fent to C.e (ar, he the more audaciously tarried in Armenia) begun to pursue his Resolution that he should depart out of that Kingdom also; for he had no more Right to Armenia, than he had to Cappadocia; neither could he justly require the matter should be wholly deferr'd till Cefar's coming; for that was to leave the matter entire, namely, to leave the Kingdom in the same state he found it. These Answers being given, with those Forces abovementioned he went into Armenia, determining to march over the Mountains; for from Pontus to Comana there is a high woody Ridge of Mountains leading into Armenia the less, where Cappadscia is bordered upon by Armenia: Of which March, these were the true Reasons, because in the higher places no fudden Eruption of the Enemy could happen to em, and because Cappadocia. Iving below these Mountains, would afford great plenty of Provisions.

XXXVII. Mean while Pharnaces fends a great many Embaffies to Domitius, who should treat of a Peace, and brought him Royal Gifts; all which he despised with great Equanimity, and answered the Embassadors, That nothing was of greater Value to him than the Dignity of the Roman People, and to regain the Kingdoms of their Associates. When he was come, by great and continued Marches, to Nicopolis, a Town in Armenia the less, in a Plain, but with high Hills on two fides at a good diftance from it, he pitched his Tent a good way from Nicopolis; about 7000 Paces from which Camp, the place being narrow and hard to pass, Pharnaces there placed an Ambuscade, consisting of the flower of his Foot, and almost all his Horse; and commanded them to let a great number of Cattle graze within the Defile, and the Villagers and Townsmen to walk frequently up and down in those places; that if Domitius should enter those Streights, he might suffect nothing of the Ambuscade, when he saw the Men and Cattle to and again in the Fields, as if they expected no Enemy, but Friends : But indeed, that when he should come into the Enemies Confines for Booty, the Soldiers might be diffipated, and flain in the Difpersion.

XXXVIII. When he had order'd these matters, he did not cease for all that to send Ambassadors to Domitius for Peace and Friendship, thinking hereby the easier to deceive him; but unfortunately; for the hope of a Peace caused Domitius to abide in the Camp where he was: So that Pharnaces having loft the first Opportunity, fearing his Treachery might be discovered, he recalled his Solnear Nicopolis, and pitch'd his Tents before the Town, which whileft our Men were fortifying, Pharnaces, after his manner and model, puts his Army in order of Battle; for in the Front was a fingle Battle only; but the Wings were back'd by three Reserves each. For the same Reason these were placed in the midfteof the Battle, leaving two Spaces, both on the Right and Left. Domitius finish'd the Work of our Camp which he had begun, making part of the Forces serve instead of a

XXXIX. The next night Pharnaces intercepted onr Letters which brought Domirius an account of our Affairs in Alexandria; whereby he understood Cefar was in a great streight, and defired Domitius to fend him fome Succours with all the freed he could, and that he himfelf should come nearer Alexandria, by way of Syria; which Pharnaces understanding, he thought it would be as good as a Victory if he could delay time, thinking Domitius must speedily draw off. Therefore, where he saw the easiest Access to the Town, and the best place for our Soldiers to fight in, he threw up two Ditches at a little diftance the one from the other, four foot deep, between which he placed his Foot, determining not to ftir out, continually exercifing his Men; but on both fides beyond the Ditch he placed all his Cavalry, who would otherwise have been useless, though they far exceeded ours in number

XL. But Domitius, being concern'd more for afar's danger than his own, when he reflected that he could not draw off with fafety, if he should again defire those Conditions he had rejected, or depart without Cause, he drew the Army out of the Camp in form of Battle; the 36th Legion he placed in the Right Wing, that of Pontus in the Left, the Legions of Deiotarus in the middle; between which and the two Wings he left a very little space, and the rest of the Cohorts he placed in Referve. Thus both Armies being drawn up in form of Battle, they proceed to fight.

XLI. The Sign of Battle being given on both fides at the same time, they run on furiously with various Success; for the 36th Legion, having made their Attack upon the King's Cavalry on the out-fide of the Ditch, did it so successfully, that they came to the very walls of the Town, paifed the Dirch, and encounter'd the Enemy on the further fide; but on the other hand, the Pontick Legion, having given a little back, and attempting a fecond time to compass the Ditch, and engaging the Enemy with their Flanks bare, were ftop'd and beat down just as passing the Trench: Neither were the Legions of Deiotarus scarcely able to suftain the Shock. So the King's Forces being Victorious in the Right Wing, and in Front, applied themselves to the 36th Legion; which notwith-standing valiantly bore the Shock of the conquering Enemy, and being furrounded by the great numbers of them, they presently in the twinkling of an eye threw themselves into a round Figure, and betook themselves to the foot of the Hills, fighting all the way; to which place Pharnaces would not follow them, by reason of the rough-ness thereof. So the Pontick Legion being almost all cut off, and a great part of Deiotarus's Soldiers being flain, the 36th Legion got a-top of the heights, with the loss only of 250 Men. In this Fight died divers worthy and illustrious Gentlemen of Rome. Domitius, notwithstanding his having received this Overthrow, gathered together the diers into his Camp, Dimitius the next day draws remainders of his featter'd Troops, and betook himfelf by fafe Marches through Cappadocia into Asia.

XLII. Pharnaces, elated with his good Fortune. at a time when he might have obtained of Cefar what he could defire, enters Pontus with all his Forces, and there, both a Victor and a most inhuman King, when he had happily carved out for himself his Patrimony, he laid waste many Towns. took away the Goods of the Citizens of Rome and Pontus, and inflicted fuch Punishments on those who had any Commendation for Beauty or Years, as were more intollerable than Death it felf; and boafting, faid, He bad regained Pontus, bis Father's Kingdom, without any Opposition.

XLIII. About the fame time we received a difadvantage in Illyricum; which Province for fome preceeding Months was kept, not only without Ignominy, but with Commendation; for Q. Cornificus, Cafar's Quaftor, being fent thither in Summer with two Legions, as Prætor, although it was very unfit for the Maintenance of an Army, being fack'd and wasted by intestine Wars and Diffentions; yet by his Prudence and Diligence (for it required great Care) he both took and defended it: For he both demolished many Castles that were built upon Eminencies, under whose Protection the Garifon was embolden'd to make Excurfions and War upon them, and gave the Booty to the Soldiers; which, although it was but fmall. yet in fuch a barren Province it was acceptable, especially being obtained by their Valour. And when Octavius, in his flight from the Battle of Pharfalia, betook himself into that Port with a great Fleet, with a few Ships of the Jadertines, who were always very ready to ferve the Commonwealth, he took the dispersed Ships of Octavius: fo that he was able to encounter a Fleet, the Captive Ships being joyned with those of the Allies, When Cafar (being Conqueror, and pursuing Cneius Pompeius in the furthermost part of the World) heard that abundance of Enemies, having recollected their Troops after Flight, betook themselves into Illyricum, by reason of its nearness to Macedonia; he fent Letters to Gabinius, That he should pass into Illyricum with the Legions of Tyroes, that were newly lifted, and being joyned the Forces of Q. Cornificus, if they were like to be any Detriment to the Province, to drive them out : but if it could not be defended without more Forces, that they should bring the Legions into Macedonia; for he believed that a War would restore all that part and Country, Cn. Pompeius being yet living.

XLIV. Gabinius, as foon as he came into Illyricum, (which was in the Winter, and very difficult) either supposing the Province to be more plentiful than it was, or relying too much on the Victorious Cafar's Fortune, or else trufting to his own Valour and Conduct, which he had often tried in the Wars, he having done great and fortunate matters by his Conduct and Daringness; neither being affifted by the Forces of the Province, which were partly useless & partly perfidious; neither could he be supplied with Provisions by Sea, by reason of the Season, and being urged by great difficulties, made War, not voluntarily, but forced thereunto by Necessity: So that when in very hard Seasons, for want, he was obliged to lay Siege to Castles or Towns, he met with frequent Inconveniencies; and was so despised by the Barbarians, that, betaking himself to Salona, a Maritime Town, inhabited by the most valiant and most faithful Citizens of Rome, he was forced to fight in his Retreat; in which Fight above 2000 common Soldiers being flain, 31 Centurions, and 4 Tribunes, he got into Salona, with the rest of the Forces; and being there press'd with a very great want of all things, he died in a few Months: Whole ili fortune when he was alive, and now fudden Death, put Offavius in great heart of obtaining the Province; whom notwithstanding, both the Fortune, which in War can do much, and the Vigilance of Cornificus, and the Valour of Vatinius, fuffered not long to continue in Profperity.

XLV. Vatinius being at Brundisium, understanding how things went in Illyricum, and being fent to by frequent Letters from Cornificus, to bring Succour to the Province; hearing also that M. Octavius had entred into a League with the Barbarians. and in many places had affaulted the Garifons of our Soldiers, partly by a Fleet of his own fitting out, and partly by Land-forces raised among the barbarous People, although he was very fickly, and his Body scarce able to keep pace with the strength of his Mind; yet by his Courage he overcame the Inconvenience of Nature, the Difficulties of Winter, and the fuddenness of the Preparation. For, feeing he had but a few long Ships in Port, he fent Letters into Achaia to Q. Calerus, to fend him a Fleet: But being more flow in their doing of it, than the danger our Men were in did require, who were not able to fuftain the Forces of Offavius, he put Beaks upon the Transport-Ships, whereof he had a pretty good number, though not enow to engage in fight: Having added to these the Long Ships, and the number of the Fleet being encreafed, and the Veterane Soldiers put aboard, of whom he had a great many out of all the Legions that were left fick at Brundissum, when the Army was to be transported into Greece; he set sail for Illyricum, and some Maritime Cities that had revolted. and put themselves under Octavius his Protection, he took into Friendship again, but others remaining resolute he passed by; not willing any Delay or Necessity should hinder him, but that as fast as he could possible he might pursue Octavius; Whom he forced at his coming from before Epidaurus, a Garison of ours, which he had befieged both by Sea and Land, and entred it himself.

XLVI. Octavius understanding that Vatinius's Fleet was in the main made up of Transport-ships, and trufting in the strength of his own, he staid with it at the Isle Tauris, whither Vatinius went, pursuing his Course; not that he knew Offavius would be there, but because he designed to pursue his Voyage farther. When he came near to Tauris, his Ships being at a diffance one from another, both because there was a terrible Storm, and also because he had no suspicion of the Enemy, on a fudden he fees a Ship coming full against him full of armed Men, with Streamers hanging to the middle of the Main mast: Which as foon as he beheld, he commanded them to furl the Sails with all speed, and let the Antients loose, and the Soldiers to arm themselves; and having set up the Standard, which was the fign to fight, he fignified to the rest of the Ships that came after to do the fame. Vatinini's Men made themselves ready, being accosted 'ere they were aware, but Odavius's came ready fitted out of Port. The Ships were drawn up on both fides, Octavius's indeed in berter Order, but Vatinius's Men had more stomach

XLVII. Vatinius, feeing he was exceeded both by the greatness of their Ships and in the number of Men, was the rather willing to commit the Affair to Fortune: Wherefore he himself first with he again bestowed some hundreds of Sellerium his Quinquereme run with all his force against the Quadrireme wherein Octavius himself was: On the other hand, he most swiftly and most valiantly made towards him with his Oars; and the Ships ran to violently one against another with their Beaks, that Oftavius's Ship having loft its Beak, had nothing to defend it but the Wood. In other places the Fight was fierce, the Captain-Ships being chiefly made at; for when every one was ready to fuccour his Party, they came to a great and close Fight in a narrow Sea; and the less room was left for the Ships to engage in, the better for those of l'atinito's fide, who with wonderful Courage fearod not to leap out of their own Ships into those of their Enemies, and by fighting on even ground, they far exceeding them in Prowels, happily put an end to the Controverse. Ollavita's own Quadrireme is funk, belides many taken, or, being perforated with our Beaks, funk: The Warriours on board Octavin's Ships had some their Throats cut, others threw themselves headlong into the Sea. Octavius himself get him into a Skiff, into which a great many flying with him, it funk ; yet he, tho' wounded, iwam to his Brigantine, where being taken aboard, the Night putting an end to the Fight, he made his escape with Sails in a great Storm. Him some of his Ships follow'd, which good Fortune had pretery'd from that Peril.

XLVIII. But Vatinius, this Brush being happily over, founded a Retreat, and his Ships being all tafe, went Conqueror into that very Port, out of which Offavius came to fight him. He took in this Encounter one of five Banks, two of three, eight of two, and abundance of Oars. After two days stay there, while he refitted his own and the Ships he had taken, on the third he makes Sail for the Island Isla, thinking Octavius might be fled thither, it being the chief Town in all those parts, and most entirely in Octavius's Interests; whither when he was come, the Inhabitants befeeched him to take them under his Protection; they letting him to know that Octavius himfelf, with a few fmall Ships and a good Wind, was gone for the Coast of Greece, thence, to Sicily, and thence into Africa, there to remain. So in a fhort time, the War being most happily ended, the Province being retaken and given to Cornificus, the Enemies Ships being wholly driven out of those Ports, he returned tale to Brundistum with his Army and Fleet.

XLIX. But in those times, when Cafar belieged Pompey in Dyrrhachium, and carried the Matter with fuccess in the Battle of Pharsalia, and warred with great danger at Alexandria, yet even then Report made the Danger greater than it was; Caffins Longinus, left by the Prator in Spain, for the gaining of the farther Province, either by the cuing Quæstor he had taken that Province upon him, self. being there wounded by Treachery, he made appear the great efforts of his Malice; or because, being conscious the Province had an eye upon him, as he might guess by the mutual Signs and Teftimonies of those who can hardly diffemble their hatred; he was defirous to make Recompence for the Injury done to the Province, by his Love to the Army; wherefore as foon as he had brought the Soldiery together into one place, he promifesthem some hundreds of Sestertiums; and not long after, when he had taken Medobrega, a Town in Lusitania or Portugal, and the Mount Herminius by Storm, to which Mountain the Inhabitants of Me-upon his Soldiers, befides many and great Rewards upon fingle Persons; which rendred the Love of the Army for the present very conspicuous, yet by degrees and privately they lessen'd Severity and Military Discipline.

L. Cassius, having put the Legions into Winter-Quarters, went back to Corduba, to try Causes ; and having contracted a great Debt among them. he resolved to pay it by laying most heavy Taxes noon the Province; and, as the manner of Donation requires, through the specious pretence of Liberality, many things are acquired for the Donor: Moneys were commanded from the Wealthy, which Longinus did not only fuffer, but even forced to be fpent upon himfelf; flight causes of Fines were put upon the Wealthy part, and no fort of Gain, either great and commendable, or little and fordid, was let pass, whereby the House and Throne of the Emperor might be supported. There was no body who should incur any Displeasure, but prefently he should find Security, or be reckoned in the number of the Guilty. For which cause it came to pais, That, Longinus doing the fame things being Emperor, that he had done being Quarttor; the Inhabitants of the Province entred again into their former Resolutions to kill him. Some of his Familiars confirm'd the hatred of these things, who, though they were concern'd with him in his Rapines, yet nevertheless hated him by whose Authority they offended, and brought fuch their Goods again as they had taken them from unjustly; all that fell fhort, or was witheld, they put upon Caffius's Account. Notwithstanding, he raises a new fifth Legion, and from the very Chufing and Charge of it (it being additional) encreases their hatred. He also makes the Horsemen up 3000 compleat, and the People are loaded with great Impositions; neither does the Province enjoy any

LI. In the mean while he received Letters from Casar, to pals with the Army into Africa, and that he should march through Mauritania to the Confines of Numidia; because King Juba had sent great aids to Cn. Pompeius, and he did not know but he might fend greater still. Having received these Letters, he vannted it with a great deal of Pride, that so large a Power was offer'd him as that of nine Provinces and a most fertile Kingdom. He therefore takes a Journey into Lusitania, (now Portugal) to fend for the Legions and draw the Auxiliaries together; and to certain Men entrufts the business to provide Corn and get ready a hundred Ships, and to collect Money by force, that when he came back, he might not be hindred. His Return was quicker than any body could exgaining of the farther Province, either by the cu-from of his Nature, or out of hatred, because be-

LII. The Army being drawn together into one place, he pitch'd his Tent near Corduba, and in his Speech to the Soldiers he acquaints 'em what Cafar had commanded him to do, promising, when he came into Mauritania, to give each of them 100
Sefterces, and that the Fifth Legion should continue a Softerce in Spain. After his Speech was ended he went to 2 d. ob. of Corduba, and the very fame day at twelve a clock, our money. going into the Judgment Hall, one Minutius Silo, Servant to L. Racilius, making as if he would have ask'd fomething of him as a Soldier, gave him a Libel, and then flipping behind Racilius, (for he dobrega had fled, where they fliled him Emperor, walk'd by the fide of Cassius) as if he expected an

Antwer, who prefently giving way for him to except then as bought themselves of with Money thrust in, he catch'd fast hold of him with his Left for he openly agreed with Capharnias for ten Se-Hand, and with his Right run him twice through the Body with a Dagger; and then having fer up a Shout, all the Conspirators rush in together.

Munarias Planeus runs the next Lictor through with his Sword, and having flain him, wounds Q. Caffius the Legate: There T. Vafius and L. Mergi.io, with the like Confidence, affift their Freedman Plancus; for they were all of Italica, (now Corfinium) in Italy. L. Licinius Squillus makes up to him, and wounds him as he lay along.

LIII. At last Cassius's Friends run together for his defence, for he always used to have Heroes, and a great many felect Men armed about him, by whom those that came behind to back the Affassines were thut in ; of which number were Calphurnius Salvianus and Manfius Tufculus. Minutius fleeing, was knock'd down in his Flight with the carried home to his House, he was carried before him. Racilius betakes himfelf into the next House, a familiar Friend's of his, till fuch time as he certainly understood whether Cassius were dead or no. L. Laterenfis, not doubting but he was really dead, run rejoycing into the Camp, and congratulates the Soldiers that were Natives, and of the Second Legion, to whom he knew Cassius was especially odious. He is taken away of the Multitude, into the Capitol, and named Prætor; for there was no Man born in the Province, or a Soldier of the Legion of the Natives, or made Denizons by Length of Time, as was the Second Legion, that, together with the whole Province, did not agree in the hating of Cassius; for the Thirtieth and Twenty first Legions having been fent into Italy a few Months before, Cafar had affign'd them to Longinus; the Fifth Legion, but a little before, being there cut mightily stomach'd by all.

LIV. In the God-speed News is brought to Laterensis, that Cassius was still living; with which Message, being more grieved than deterred from his purpose, he presently got himself ready, and goes to give Cassius a Visit. This thing being known, the 30th Legion brought their Enfigns to Corduba, to affift their Emperor; the same does the 21ft, after them the 5th, the two other Legions remaining in the Camp: Those of the Second fearing they should be left alone, and from thence their ill Intentions be guess'd at, followed the Steps of their Superiors: Only the Legion of the Natives continued in their Resolution, and could not be frighted out of it by any fear of

LV. Caffus commands those to be laid hold on, who were named as guilty of the Affaffination; and fends back the Fifth Legion to the Camp, retaining only Thirty Cohorts. He understood by the Discovery of Minutius, that L. Racilius, L. Laterensis, and Annius Scapula, a Provincial-Man, of the greatest Dignity, and best beloved, and as familiar with Cassius as either Laterensu or Racilius, were in the Conspiracy: Nor does he keep himfelf long in pain, but commands them to be prefently put to death. He delivered Minurius to his Freed-Men, to be tormented; as also Colphurnius Salvianus, who made a Confession, and so increafed the number of the Conspirators, really, and of his own accord, as some think; but others complain, that it was extorted from him. L. Mergilio is punished with the same Tortures. Squillus impeaches more, whom Caffins commands to be flain, flereiums, and with Q. Sextius for fifty; who, though they were very guilty, were admitted to Fine; fo having forgot the danger of his Life, and the smart of his Wounds, for the Money, he plainly shew'd how his Cruelry did contend with his Avarice.

LVI. After a few Days he received Letters sent from Cafar, by which he understood Pompey was overcome in Fight, and fled, having loft all his Forces; which was both Pleasure and Pain to him: But the Meifenger of the Victory expressed his Joy. The War being ended, it put an end likewise to the Licentioniness of the Times: So he remained doubtful, whether he had best fear nothing, or whether he might not do every thing he had a mind to. His Wounds being healed, he fent for all those who had received Money of him, Stones which they threw at him; and Cassius being and commands them to restore it: Such as he thought were highly taxed before, he now burthens the more. He also determined to make a Draught our of the Roman Horse-men; whose Names being taken in all the Convents and Colonies, and being afraid to go to War beyond the Seas, he made them buy themselves off from the Obligation of their Oath. This raifed him a great Sum of Money, but made him still more odious, These things being over, he takes a View of the whole Army, and lends the Legions and Auxiliaries, which he was to carry into Africa with him, to Utrecht : He himself goes to Hispalis, to take a View of the Fleet he was making ready; and flays there, to the end that those that had not paid their Moneys, according to his Command, might come to him there, puriuant to an Edict he had published all over the Province: Which Evocation was > LVII. In the mean while L. Titius, at that time Tribune of the Legion of the Natives, acquaints him, that the Thirrieth Legion, of which & Coffius, when he was Legate, was General, as he lay encamped before Ilurgis, had raifed a Sedition, and (fome of the Centurions being flain, that would not let them take away the Enfigns) were gone away, bending their Course roward the Second Legion, which was led to the Sea by another way. When Cassis understood this, he marches away in the Night, with five Cohorts of the Nineteenth Legion; but the Morning coming on, he ftops his Course, to consider what he had best to do, and goes to Carmona. Having here got together the Thirtieth and the Twenty first Legions, four Cohorts, and the Fifth Legion, and all the Cavalry, he understood that four Cohorts, overcome by the Natives of Obucula, were come with them to the Second Legion; where being all joyned, they had chose T. Thorius of Italica their Leader. Hereupon he prefently called a Council, and fends Marcellus to Corduba, to keep it tight to his Interests; and Q Cassius to Hispalis. In a few Days News was brought him, that the Affembly at Corduba was revolted from him; and that Marcellus, either of his own accord, or necessitated thereunto, (for it was reported both ways) had agreed to do the fame; and that two Cohorts of the Fifth Legion, which were in Garison in Corduba, were joyned with them. Cassius being throughly vexed hereat, removes his Camp, and came the next Day to Segovia Silicensis, and there made a Speech to his Soldiers, to try how they stood affected; and found that they were very true to him, not for his own fake, but for Cafar's, who

to they could but re-gain the Province to Cafar.

LVIII. In the Interim Thorius draws the old Legions to Corduba; and that the beginning of the Revolt might not be thought to be inherent in his Nature, and that of the Soldiers; and at the same time, that he might fet a Man of equal Authority against Q Cassius, who, under Casar's Name, he openly declared, that his Intent was only to regain the Province to Cn. Pompeias: And perhaps he did this out of his Harred to Cafar, and his Love to Pompey, whose very Name would go a great way with those Legions under M. Varro's Command: But what in reality moved him hereunto, we cannot politively fay; certainly, this was had Pomper's Name engraven on their Shields. The frequent coming to the Soldiers, not only of the Men, but also of the Women and Youths. plainly shews it; who intreated that they would not take Corduba in hostile manner: That, indeed, they had unanimously agreed to act against Cassius, but prayed they might not be forced to do any thing prejudicial to Cafar.

LIX. The Army being moved with the Pravers and Tears of such a Multitude, when they perceived there was no need either of Pompey's Name or Memory to profecute Caffius, he being odious as well to Cafar's as Pompey's Friends, and that they could neither bring over the Affembly nor Marredhis to act against Casar's Interest, they rased Pompey's Name out of their Shields, choie Marcellus. who declared he would defend Cafar's Caufe, their Leader, and named him Prætor, and joyned with him the Affembly, fetting up their Tents near Corduba. Cassius, at two Days March, about 4000 Paces from Corduba, on this fide the River Bath, in fight of the Town, upon a rifing Ground, pitches his Tent, and fends Letters into Mauritania, to King Boguds, and to M. Lepidus, Proconful in the hither Spain, to come and help him and the Province for Cafar's fake, with all the speed they could. Mean while he wastes the Fields of those of Corduba, and burns their Houses.

LX. At which Infamy and Indignity the Legions, who had chosen Marcellus for their Leader, run to him, and pray him to lead them out to Battel, and fight him before he had Orders, rather than he should with so much Contumely consume with Rapine, Fire and Sword the noble and large Possessions of the Cordubians, under their very Noies. Marcellus, though he knew it would be most dangerous to hazard a Battle, because both the Loss of the Conqueror and Conquered would redound to Cufar, neither had he Orders to fight, carries the Legions over the Batis, and draws them up in Order of Battle; but when, on the other hand, he faw Caffius had drawn up his Army before his Camp, upon an higher Ground, fomething interpoling, that he could not come down ftreight upon them, Marcellus perfuaded the Soldiers to return into their Encampment, and accordingly, begun to draw them off. Caffius, with all the Speed he was able, knowing Marcellus to be but weak, falls with his Horse upon the Legions as they retreated, and killed a great many of the hindmost upon the Banks of the River. When by this Loss Marcellus learn'd what Difficulty and Danaage there was in paffing the River, he carries his was absent; and that they would uread no Danger, out any Action, because of the Inequality of the

LXI. Marcellus was by much the ftronger in Foot, for he had with him the Veterane Legions, who had been flesh'd with many Battles. Cassus trusted more to the Fidelity than Valour of his Legions; therefore when the Camps were oppofed one against the other, and Marcellus had taken thought would get more Forces together than he; a convenient Castle, whereby he could hinder the Soldiers of Caffius from getting any Water, Caffius fearing he should be block'd up in a strange Country, which hated him, goes filently out of his Camp in the Night, and with swift Marches goes towards Ulla, which Town he thought was true to him; wherefore he there pitches his Tent, just under the Walls of the Town, that by the Situa-Thorius's pretence, as the Soldiers did confess, who tion of the Place, (for Olla is built on the Top of an high Hill) and the Fortification of the City, he might be fafe from Affaults on all Sides. Marsellus follows him, and, as near to Ulla as he can, pitches his Tent, over against Cassius; and having learn'd the nature of the place, he found himfelf under a necessity neither to give Battle, (from which, if he had been able, he could not have reftrain'd the Soldiery) nor fuffer Caffins to ftraggle far out of his Camp, left many Cities might undergo the like Fate with Corduba, Castles being therefore built in convenient places, and Works continued round the Town, he block'd up both the Town and Caffius with his Fortifications; but before they could be finished, Cassius sent out all his Horse, who he thought would be of great use to him, if they could hinder Marcellus from foraging and bringing in Provisions; but a great De-triment to him, if, block'd out, they eat up the Provisions, without doing any good.

> LXII. A few Days after King Bigud, having received Callius's Letters, arrives with Forces, and joyns to the Legion he had brought, a great many Auxiliary Cohorts of the Spaniards; for, as it usually happens in Civil Diffentions, fo at this time fome Cities in Spain strove te serve Cassius, but more favoured Marcellus. King Bogud comes with his Forces near to the Out-works of Marcellus; fo that there happen tharp and frequent Skirmithes on both fides, and, as it usually falls out, formetimes one, fometimes the other had the better on't; yet for all that, Marcellus was never driven from his

LXIII. Mean while, Lepidus, from the hither Province, with Thirty five Legionary Cohorts, and a great Number of Horse-men, and the rest of the Auxiliary Troops, comes to Ulla, fully refolved immediately to put an end to the Difference between Cassus and Marcellus. To him, at his coming, Marcellus, without Hesitation, intrusts and offers himself. On the other hand, Cassus kept himself and Soldiers close within their Intrenchments, either because he thought he had more Right on his Side than Marcellus had, or because he was afraid that Lepidus might be prepoffessed with the specious infinuations of his Adversary. Lepidus pitches his Tents before Ulla, close to Marcellus, and prohibits the two Armies fighting; inviting Caffees to come out of his Trenches, promiling him fafe Conduct in all Respects. When Caffins had a long time remained doubtful what he had best to do, whether he should trust Lepidus or no; neither could he, if he perfifted in his Opistion, find any End of his Intention; he therefore Camp over it; where both of them very often requires that the Works may be thrown down, draw out their Legions in Order of Battel, with- and a free Baffage made for him to come out,

The Treaty was not only agreed upon, but the works were in a manner levell'd, and the Cenpreserving and defending the Province, he dismittries withdrawn, when King Bogud's Auxiliaries made an Affault upon that very Castle of Marcellus which was next to his Tents, without letting any body know of it, no not Caffins himfelf (for he even doubted his Fidelity) where they killed a great number of Soldiers; and if the Tide had not been quickly ftem'd by the Indignation and Help of Lepidis, the Lois had been yet greater.

LXIV. When the Way was made clear for Cassius to come out, Marcellus joyns his Camp to that of Lepidus, and marches, together with him. to Corduba. Much about the fame time Trehming comes to Narba, to take possession of the Province in the Conful's Name: Of whose coming when Caffius was advertised, he put the Legions he had with him, as also the Horse, into Winter-Quarters; and having pack'd up all his Things with great Celerity, he makes the best of his way to Malaca, where, at a very ill Season of the Year for failing, he got a-Ship-board, as he himfelf gave out, left he should fall into the hands of Trebonius, Lepidus and Marcellus; but as his Friends reported, that he might not make his Journey through the Province in less State than formerly, a great part of it being revolted from him; and, as others thought, left that Money which he had scraped together by his infinite Oppressions should fall into his Enemies hands. Having fet fail with as favourable a Gale as could be expected in the Winter time, as foon as he was come to the River Iberus (now Ebro, in Spain) the Wind blowing a somewhat fresher Gale, but believing his failing would be never the more dangerous, he makes up against the Waves, at the Mouth of the River, in its very Jaws; and being neither able to turn the Ship, fuch was the Rapidness of the River, nor bear up against such great Seas, he perish'd together with the Ship.

LXV. When Cafar was come out of Egypt, into Syria, and understood by such as came to him from Rome, as also by Letters from the Citizens, that many things were there ill administred, and that no part of the Commonwealth was manag'd to that advantage it should be; as also, that by the Contentions of the Tribunes, pernicious Seditions were iprung up; and by the Ambition and Indulgence of the Tribunes of the Soldiery, and those that were over the Legions, many things were acted contrary to Custom and Military Order, such as the Neglect of Discipline and Severity; and perceived that all these things very much wanted his presence; yet he thought is most necessary so to settle those Provinces and Countries through which he came, as that they might be free from Domestick Broils, receive Laws and Rights, and thake off the Fear of Enemies from abroad. These things he hoped he should quickly effect in Spria, Cilifia and Afia, as being Provinces free from War; but in Bithmia and Pontus he forefaw he should meet with greater difficulty: For he had received Advice that Pharnaces was not yet gone out of Pouris, neither thought he of doing it, being mightily puffed up with a successful Battel he had gained over Domizius Calvinus. Having stay'd almost in all Cities of greater Note, he publickly beftowed Rewards, Man by Man, on such as had deserved well: He took an Account of their ancient Controversies. and appointed them Kings, Princes and Rulers of the Province: And all the Borderers that came unto him, he received into his Protection; and led them, as the greatest Friends to him and the Roman People.

LXVI. A few Days being spent in this Province, he fet Sex. Cafar, his Friend and near Kinsman, over the Legions in Spria, and in the fame Ship he arrived in, he fet fail for Cilicia; where being come, he affembles all the Citizens of that Province at Tarfis, it being the most noted, and best fortified Town in all Cilicia; where, having dispatch'd all the Affairs of the Province, and neighbouring Cities, he made no long stay, being defirous to begin the War; and having made long Marches through Cappadocia, he tarried two Days at Mazaca; whence he went to Comana, where is the most ancient and most holy Temple of Bellona in all Cappadecia, which is held in such great Esteem, that the Priest of this Goddess, for Majesty, Empire and Power, is look'd upon by the whole Country to have no Superior but the King: This he adjudged to Nicomedes the Bithmian, a very Noble Person; who, being descended of the Race of the Kings of Cappadocia, by reason of the adverse Fortune of his Ancestors. might very well lay claim thereto: But Ariarates, the Brother of Ariobarzanes, both of whom had deserved well of the Commonwealth, lest either the Birthright of the Kingdom should invite Ariarates, or the Heir thereof afright him, he committed to Ariobarganes, who was under his Empire and Jurisdiction, and then pursued his Journey with his usual Velocity.

LXVII. When he came near to Pontus and the Confines of Gallogracia, Deiotarus (then Tetrarch of almost all Gallogracia, because the other Tetrarchs accused him as being disobedient both to the Laws and Customs of the Romans, though the Senate had honoured him with the Title of King of Armenia the Lefs) having put off his Royal Robes, and being cloathed, not only in a private, but in the Habit of a guilty Perfon, he came in a suppliant manner to C.esar, praying that he would pardon him; for that he was placed in a part of the Country where were no Garifons of Cafar, but what were in the Hands of Cn. Ponpeius; and that he ought not to be a Judge of the Differences of the Roman People, but obey the prefent Rulers.

LXVIII. Against whom Casar, when he had reckon'd up the many Offices which he, being Conful, had bestow'd upon him by publick Decrees; and when he had rejected his Defence, not being able to find any excuse for his Imprudence, because it is not likely a Man of his Prudence and Diligence could be ignorant who was Governor in each City of Italy; where the Senate and People of Rome was, and where the Commonwealth; or who was Conful after L. Lentulus and M. Marcellus: But however, he was willing to remit this Matter, (in confideration of former good Turns, old Acquaintance and Friendthip, the Dignity and Age of the Man) to be deprecated by the Intreaties of fuch as were his Friends and Familiars; that for the future he would take cognizance of the Differences of the Terrarchs himfelf, and therewithal restored him his Royal Habit; but he commanded him to bring the Legion which he had raifed among his own Citizens, and train'd up to our Way and Discipline, together with all the Horse, to carry on the War.

LXIX. When

LXIX. When he came into Ponlus, and had think it had been made to by Art! About this pretty confiderable, (except the fixth Legion, which he carried with him to Alexandria, being old and wore out with much Labour and Perils, many of the Soldiers, partly with hard Marches and going by Sea, and partly by the many Fights they had been engaged in, being dead; to that there were not a thousand Men left in it: And three other Legions, one of Deiviarus, and two that had been in the Fight between Cn. Domitius and Pharnaces before-mentioned;) Ambaffadors fent by Pharnaces come to Cafar, and in the first place befeech him. That he would not come in an hoffife manner; for Pharnaces was ready to do whatever should be commanded him; particularly remembring him, That Pharnaces would not atlift Pompey with any Suc. ours against him, and that Deiotarus, who did atilit Pomper, found favour with him.

LXX. Cefar answer'd, He would be very just to Pharnaces, if he would perform what he had promited; But he advised the Ambaffadors with in that piece of Service, That they had not fent Faults, or than to be able to forgive those the publick Injuries done the Provinces, who had not been forward to affift his Enemies against him: That that Kindness they had mentioned was of better uie to Pharnaces, who thereby took care not to be overcome, than to him, to whom the Immortal Gods had given the Victory: Therefore he pardoned Pharnaces those great and crying Injuries he had done the Roman Citizens, who were negotiating their Affairs in Pontus, because he was not able to make full Restitution; for he could neither restore Life to those he had slain, nor Virility to those he had Castrated or Gelded, which Punishment, more intollerable than Death, many of the Roman Citizens had undergone: But that he should depart immediately out of Pontus, should fend back the Families of fuch as received the Customs, and restore all other things to the Allies and Citizens of Rome, that were in his possession: Which when he had done, he should forthwith fend Cafar Presents and Gifts, such as Emperors, when things are done well, are wont to recieve from Friends: For Phanaces had fent him a Crown of Gold.

LXXI. Having thus answered the Ambassadors, he fent them away. But Pharnaces, (having very readily consented to all things) thinking Cafar (who was in more hafte to be gone than the matter would permit, to the end he might proceed the speedilier and more honourably to business of greater Import) would more willingly believe his Promises; (for it was no Secret to any one, That C.efar, for many weighty Reasons, was recall'd to Rome) begun to act more flowly, to require a Day for his Departure, to interpose longer Articles, and in fine, utterly to disappoint him. Cefar understanding the Tergiversation or Cunning of the Man, what he used at other times to do by nature, that he now did, being forced thereto by necef-fity, that he might joyn Battle before any body was aware of it.

LXXII. There is a Town nam'd Ziela in Pontus, fufficiently well fortified, confidering tis built on a Plain; for the Wall is raifed upon a natural Hillock quite round the Town, fo steep, you would drawn his Forces all up together in one place, Town are many and great Hills with Valleys be-which in Number and the Exercise of War were tween, clear round it; one of the highest whereof, tween, clear round it; one of the highest whereof, (much noted in those parts for the Victory of Mithridates, the Overthrow of Triarius, and the loss of our Army) by the furthest parts thereof, and the Passages, does almost joyn the Town, it being not much above 3000 Paces from it. This place Pharnaces (the old Fortifications of the Camps of his fortunate Forefathers being repair'd) polles'd himself of with all his Forces.

LXXIII. Cafar, having pitch'd his Tents 5000 Paces from the Enemy, and feeing that those Valleys which furrounded or defended the King's Camp, did likewife furround his, provided the Enemies had not first possels d themselves of those places which lay near to the King's Camp, commanded the Baggage to be convey'd within the Fortifications: Which being prefently done, the next Night, in the fourth Watch, all the Legions being fent out, and their Luggage being left behind in the Camp, by break of day, before the Enemies were aware, he took that very Poft, in which Migentle Words, as he used to do, that they should the strict the strict that the strict the strict that the str Attendants on the Camp to be brought, and that Succours to Fompey; for that he did nothing more no Soldier should go without the Works, seeing willingly than parden such as were sorry for their the Enemies Camp, cut off by a Valley, was nor above 1000 Paces from the Works begun in Cafar's.

> LXXIV. Pharnaces, being advertised of it as foon as 'twas break of day, draws up all his Forces before his Camp, which, by reason of the unevenness of the place between the two Armies, Casar thought were drawn up after a very old way of martialling them, or to hinder the carrying on our Works, by keeping the more of our Men in Arms; or else twas done to flew the King's Courage, that Pharnaces might not be thought to defend the place more by the Fortification thereof, than by his Men or personal Valour. Norwithstanding, Casar was not afraid to carry on the Works with the refidue of his Army, while the first Battalions stood as a Bulwark for their Defence. But Pharnaces, encouraged either by the prosperousness of the Place, or induced thereto by good Omens and Auguries, which we heard afterwards he was very credulous of; or having learned the paucity of our Men in Arms, thinking that vaft number of Servants, that daily laboured in carrying the Baggage, wete of the Soldiery; or else in confidence of his Veterane Army, which his Legates boafted had fought with the 22th Legion in a pitch'd Battle, and overcome it, as also in Contempt of our Army, which he remember'd he repulsed when Domitius was their Leader; having taken a Resolution to fight, he began to descend by a hollow place in the Hill: Whose soolish Ostentation and Compressure of the Soldiers in that place, which no Enemy in his wits sould have entred into, Cefar for fome time laugh'd at; when prefently he began, with the fame Pace that he descended, to ascend a high Hill, with his Forces in Order of Battle.

LXXV. Casar, astonish'd at his incredible boldness, being set upon 'ere he was aware, and unready, at the fame inftant he calls the Soldiers from the Works, commands them to arm, opposes the Legions, and Marshals his Army; the suddenness of which put our Men into a great fear, they not being yet in Order of Battle. The King's Chariots that were armed with Scythes do mightily annoy our Men that were in Confusion, but are notwithstanding quickly overcome by the Multitude of our Darts: After these follow'd the main Body he had put an end to the greatest War in so short of the Enemy, and after having fet up a Shout, begun the Fight; the fituation of the place being a great help to us, and the Benignity of the Immortal Gods a greater; who, as they are prelent in all the Chances of War, fo are they more especially present with those by whom nothing could be executed with Order.

LXVI. A great and sharp Fight being begun at a diftance in the Right Wing, in which the Sixth Veterane Legion was placed, the Victory began to dawn in that part, the Enemies being forced down the Hill; and by the affiftance of the fame Immortal Gods, though much more flowly, our Left Wing and the Body of our Army put all the King's Forces to flight; which, as fast as they could get upon a rifing ground, were as fast forced from it, and bore down, by reason of the unevenness of the place: Therefore a great many of their Soldiers being partly flain, and partly oppressed with the slight of their Men, those that were swift a-foot, and could escape over the Valley, leaving their Weapons behind them, could be of no use, tho' on the upper ground, they being unarmed. But our Men, clated with the Victory, were not at all afraid to venture upon the unevenness of the place and the Fortifications, and foon obtained the Camp of the Enemy from those Cohorts that Pharnaces left in Garison to defend it; the whole Multitude of their Men being either kill'd or taken, except Pharnaces, who escaped with a few Horsemen; who, if the Fortifications had not afforded him an easie way to escape, had been brought alive into Cafar's Jurisdiction.

LXXVII. Cafar, so often a Conqueror, was extreamly well pleafed with this Victory, for that a time; and that which made him still more glad, was the Remembrance of the Suddenness of Danger, which, out of the most pressing Difficulties, ended in an easie Victory. Having regained Pontus, all the Plunder of the King's Palaces being granted to the Soldiers, he fet forward the next day with his Light-horse; commands the Sixth Legion to return into Italy, there to receive their Stipends and Honours: the Auxiliary Troops of Deiotarus he sent home again; left two Legions with Calius Vintianus in Pontus; and so takes his Journey, through Gallogracia and Bithynia, into Asia; hearing and determining the Controversies of all those Provinces, and distributing Laws to the Tetrarchs, Kings, and Commonwealths. Mithridates Pergamenus, whom we mentioned before to have speedily and happily dispatch'd his Affair in Egypt, being descended of a Royal Family, and educated also in King-like Discipline, (for Mithridates, King of all Asia, had brought him with him to his Camp at Pergamos, when a little Child, and had kept him there many years, for the Nobleness of Descent) he made King of Bosphorus, because he had been under the Empire of Pharnaces, and had most friendly defended the Provinces of the People of Rome from the Barbarians, and fuch Kings as were their Enemies; he also adjudged to him the Superintendency of the Laws of the Gallogreeks, both by Right of Birth and Affinity, for some years before held and possessed by Deiotarus: Nor did he fray longer in any place than the Necessity of composing the Seditions of the Cities did feem to require. So that all his Affairs being most luckily and most readily dispatched, he returned back into Italy fooner than was expected by any body.

The End of the Alexandrian War.

THE COMMENTARY

Aulus Hirtius,

CONCERNING THE

AFRICAN WAR.

The ARGUMENT.

A Fter the Defeat of Pharfalia, Cafar pursues Pompey into Egypt, where he makes War upon the People of Alexandria, and Ptolomey their King; and afterwards marches through Syria, as far as Pontus, to find out Pharnaces. In the Interim, Pompey's Officers, that had made their Escapes from Pharsalia, flocked into Africk, where they imagin'd to perform mighty Matters with Actius Varus's Forces, and the Affiliance of King Juba. The most eminent Men of this Party were Q. Metellus Scipio, Pompey's Father-in-Law, Petreius, Afranius, Torquatus, T. Labienus, Faustus Sylla, but especially M. Cato, an invincible Afsertor of the Roman Liberty; who being by common Consent chosen General of the Army, quitted that honourable Post to Scipio: But while he consulted his Reputation in this Affair, he forgot the true Interest of the Republick; for, in all probability, he had given Casar greater Difficulty, had he accepted that Station himself. After the Expedition of Pontas was over, Casar returns into Italy; where having composed some Tumults that arose in the City, and suppressed the Mutiny of his Soldiers, who demanded not only a Donative, but to be freed from War, he passes over into Africk, against the Advice of the Augurs, and at an unseasonable time of the Year, to hinder the Enemy's Forces from increasing. This Attempt succeeded very fortunately to him, for he defeated them, though they were superior to him in Number and all Military Provisions, At his Return to the City, he celebrated four magnificent Triumphs for his reducing of Gaul. Alexandria, Pontus and Africk. Hirtius is supposed to be Author of this and the former Book, though Suetonius leaves it uncertain.

ÆSAR arrived at Lilybaum by mo-* Kalends of January, without the intermission of one Day, and resolved to embark the first Opportunity that presented it self, although he had only one Legion of new-rais'd Men, and scarce fix hundred Horse with him. He ordered his Pavilion to be fet up near the Shoar, fo that the Waves almost dath'd it. He defign'd by this to prevent his Men from thinking to make any long fray there, and to be in a posture of readiness every Moment. It so happen'd that the Weather at this time was Provision-Ships arrived, and some Legions of newvery tempestuous, and unfit for failing: However, he order'd the Rowers and Soldiers still to continuc on Ship-board, that he might lose no time in two Thousand Horse.

getting ready when-ever the Season would perderate Marches on the 14th of the mit; especially after the Inhabitants of that Province had inform'd him of the great Forces of the Enemy, who had an infinite number of Horse, four Royal Legions, abundance of † Light-armed Men, ten Legions of Scipio, an hundred and twenty Elephants, and feveral Veffels. But this Livy. did not in the leaft shake his Resolution, but he still supported himself with his usual Bravery and Valour. In the interim the number of his Gallies daily increased, and abundance of rais'd Men, and with them the Fifth Legion, wholly made up of Veterane Soldiers, and about

II. Having

II. Having now got together fix Legions and Horfe, that his Army chiefly confifted of new2000 Horfe, he commanded the Foot to embark in the Galleys in order as they came, and the a Town of that firength, that it was not conve-Horse in the Transport Ships. After this, he com-manded part of the Fleet to fail before him, and my to be fituate over a-gainst Lilybæum, towards Africk.

touch at the Island * Aponiana, which is not far from Lilphaum; while he W. find mention of the blank of the state of Allienus the Prætor, who at that time valry. govern'd Sicily; and a particular Charge to see the rest of his Army thipp'd off with all Expedition, and then went at The 25th board on the VIth of the Calends of Janand in a of our De short time reach'd the Fleet. Thus having a fair he came within fight of Africk in four Days, with Gale, a few Gallies; for most of his Transportthips, being dispers'd in bad Weather, were driven to several places. He sailed by Clupea, and afterwards by Neapolis, and feveral other Towns and Castles on the Sea-Coast.

> III. As foon as he arriv'd at Adrumetum, where the Enemy had a Garison, commanded by C. Confidius, he faw Cn. Pifo appear on the Sea-Coaft, on the fide of Clupea, with the Horie of Adrumetum. and about 3000 Moors. After he had lain at Anchor fome time before the Port, waiting till his other Ships came up, he landed his Army, confiftof 3000 Foot, and 150 Horse; and pitching his Tents before the Town, strictly prohibited his Men from committing any Plunder or Ravage. In the mean time the Inhabitants fill'd the Walls with armed Men, and affembled before the Harbour to take the best Measures for their own defence; and their Garison might amount to two Legions. Casar having made the Tour of the Town on horseback, to observe the Situation of the place, return'd to the Camp. Some People accused him of a great Overlight for not affigning a certain place for his Officers to meet him, or giving them a Commission sealed up, as it was his Custom before, which they were to open at a time appointed, to direct them where to make their Rendezvous. But this he did not do without very good reason; for, having never a Port in Africk for his Fleet to meet him, where he could promife them to be fafe from the Attempts of the Enemy, he committed the reft to Fortune, and refolv'd to land where he should see the fairest Prospect of fucceeding.

IV, In the mean time L. Planeus, one of Cafar's Lieutenants, begg'd of him to give him leave to treat with Considius, to see if he could by fair means reduce him to Reason. Having obtain'd permisfion, he writ a Letter to him, and gave it to a Captive to carry it to him in the Town. As foon as this Captive came into the Garison, and offer'd to deliver the Letter as he was commanded, Confidius asked him before he received it, from whence he brought it: And as the Captive answer'd, That he came from Cafar the General, I know but one General of the Roman People, says he, and that is Scipio. He afterwards order'd the Captive to be kill'd in his fight, and then fent the Letter feal'd as it came to him, for he would not read it to

V. Cafar, after he had ftay'd a whole Night and a Day before the Town, and received no Anfwer from Confidius, in regard that his other Forces nient to harass his Schliers too much at their first landing, that the place was extreamly well fortified, and difficult to be attack'd, that he receiv'd Advice that abundance of Horse were coming up to their Relief; upon these Considerations he did not judge it expedient to form the Siege of the place, left while he was employ'd in that Affair, he might be furrounded with the Enemy's Ca-

VI. As he begun to decamp, those of the Garifon fallied out upon him; and fome of King 7uba's Horse, that were sent to receive their Pay, accidentally joyning them, possessed themselves of his Camp which he had just abandon'd, and fell upon the Rear. Upon this the # heavy-arm'd Foot #Legistard. made an Halt, and the Horse, though so inconsiderable for their number, charg'd this vast Multitude with all the Vigour and Gallantry imaginable. What will scarce find Belief with Posterity, not full 30 Gaulish Horse bear the whole Morish Cavalry, confifting of 2000; and purfued them unto the Town. As foon as they were repulied, and beaten back into their Worke, Cafar began to continue his March; but as they frequently fallied out upon him, and fometimes purfued, and then again were beaten back by his Horse, into the Town, he placed some of his Veterane Troops, with part of his Cavalry, in the Rear, and 10 march'd on gently with the reft. Thus the farther he march'd from the Town, the flower the Numidians were in their pursuit. In the mean time, the Towns and Castles that he found upon his March fent Deputies to him to promise him Provisions, and to assure him they were ready to do whatever he commanded them. So he encamped that Day, being the * Kalends of January, * Our News

VII. From thence he march'd directly to Leptis, a free City, governing by its own Laws, where fome of the Inhabitants came to rell him that they were wholly at his devotion. After he had placed some Guards at the City-Gates, to hinder the Soldiers from entring the Town, left they thould cause any Disorders in the place, he pitched his Tents on the Sea-shoar, not far from the Town. Hither some of his Gallies and Transport-Ships arriv'd by chance, who inform'd him that the reit, not knowing where he was, failed towards Utica. For this reason he would not remove from the Shoar, or march farther into the Country, left he should miss of them; and order'd all his Horse to continue on Ship-board, for this reason, as may be supposed, to preserve the Country, and caused fresh Water to be brought to the Ships. But as the Soldiers and Sea-men went fometimes a-shoar to fetch fresh Water, the Moorish Horse fell unawares upon them, killing fome, and wounding others with their Darts : For their way was, to hide themselves in the Vallies, and then to make a fudden Onser and retire, but not to make a for-

VIII. In the mean time Cafar dispatch'd Meffengers into Sardinia, and the rest of the neighbouring Provinces, to furnish him with new Supplies of Men and Provisions, and that they should take care to fend them as foon as they had received his Letters. He likewise sent Rabinius Postumus to Sicily, after he had unladed part of his Galwere not as yet come up to him, that he wanted lies, to bring a fecond Convoy from thence. He

"Tie in the Original Lie

T.e 4 of our January.

with ten Gallies, to find out the rest of the transport-Ships that had lost their way, as also to clear the Sea from the Enemy. He commanded C. Salustius Crispus, the Prætor, to go with part of the # A finall Fleet towards the Island + Cercina, which the Ene-Ist and near my had then in their Possession, because he was infor of the formed that there was ftore of Corn to be had in lifer synes, that place. He gave these Orders so well, that that they executed their Commission immediately, withformed himfelf, by fome Deferters and Natives of the Country, in what a Posture the Affairs of Scipio, and those that were embarked in the same Caufe with him, ftood, how he was forced to maintain King Juba's Cavalry at his own proper Charges; which made him both pity and wonder at the itrange Madness of these Men, who choic rather to be Tributaries to a foreign Prince, than pencea-Liv to enjoy their Estates and Fortunes at home, and live among their Friends and Relations.

The ? of our IX. On the *third of the Nones of Fanuary. January. C.efar decamped, and leaving a Garison of fix Cohorts at Lepris, under the Command of Saferna, he marched back with the rest of the Army to Rushina, where he lett his Baggage behind him, and then went out with a Body of light armed Men to forrage about the Villages, and commanded the Inhabitants to follow him with Horles and Waggons. Thus having furnished himself with great quantities of Corn, he returned to Ruspina; which in my opinion he did for this end, That he might nor be obliged, for want of Provisions, to leave the Sea-Ports destitute of Garisons, but might quarter fufficient Forces there to ferve as a Retreat and Security for his Fleet.

> X. Having Posted P. Saserna in this place, Brother to him whom he had left at Lepts, with a Legion, he ordered ftore of wood to be brought into the Town, and marched himself out of Rushina at the head of feven Veterane Cohorts, which had been engaged at Sea with Sulpicius and Varinius, and arrived at the Harbour, which is abour

† The Realer is here to be informed once for all, That the Romm Mile confifted precifely of 1000 Pacet Tout at it much fhorter than the Italian or our Mile is, and that four of them make a midern League.

two † Miles from the Town, and embarked with these Forces towards the Evening. As none of his Soldiers were acquainted with his Defigns, they laboured under strange Fears and Apprehenfions, to fee themselves, who were but a handful of Men, and but newly raised, left to the Mercy of a fubtle and perfidious Enemy, who were infinitely fuperiour to them in number. The only thing that supported them at this Juncture was the wonderful Gayety and Vigour they discovered in their General's Looks, who, as he was Mafter of a great and undaunted Soul, so his Men securely acquiesced in his Conduct, and thought they were capable of furmounting all Difficulties by his good Management and Dexterity.

XI. Casar passed the whole Night in his Fleet, and as he was going to fail by break of day, nnexpectedly the Remainder of his Navy, of whose Safety he was somewhat doubtful, came in fight; upon which, he immediately commanded his Men to land, and thus to receive them on the Shore. As foon as these Ships were enter'd the Port, and their Men landed, he returned to Ruspina, where he pitched his Tents, and with thirty felect Cohorts went to forrage. This made people imagine that Cafar's Defign was to go and meet his Transport Ships that had loft their way, left they should ordered some of his Men to cruise upon the Sea fall unawares upon their Enemy's Fleet, but would nor communicate these Intentions to his Men. left the Confideration of their own Weakness, and the great Multitudes of those that opposed them, might make them lofe all their Courage.

> XII. By that time Cafar had gone about three Miles from his Camp, he received advice by his Scouts that the Enemy was not far off; and no fooner was this notice given him, but he faw a great Duft, which confirm'd the truth of it. Upon this, he commanded all his Horse, and the Archers he had with him, that were but few in number, to follow him with a gentle Pace, while himfelf advanced with a few armed Men. And now, being within fight of the Enemy, he ordered his Soldiers to put on their Helmets, and to prepare themselves for the Fight. His Forces in all amounted to 30 Cohorts, with 400 Horse and Archers. # #Here some.

XIII. In the mean time the Enemy, commanded the Original Labinous and the two Parising in by Labienus and the two Pacidii, drew out their nal. Army in a long Front, confifting of Foot intermingled with Horse, and placed between them the light armed Numidians, and the Archers that ferved on Foot, in so close order, that Casar's Men at a distance thought them to be Foot, and supported their right and left Wing with several Squadrons of Horse. Cafar on his fide ranked all his Forces upon one line, by reason their numbers were so imall, covering the Front of his Battle with his Archers, and the Flank with his Cavalry; and ordered them to take care not to fuffer themselves to be furrounded with the Multitudes of the Enemy's

XIV. When now both Armies were in fight of . each other, expecting who should begin the Onset, and Cafar did not advance, as very well judging that he was rather to employ Stratagem than main Force against so numerous an Adversary; on a sudden their Horse began to extend themselves about the Hills, and to encompais Cafar's Cavalry on all fides, fo that they found it a difficult matter to preserve their Post. At the same time the Enemy's Horse, supported by the Infantry of the light armed Numidians, parted from the midst of the Battle, and threw their Darts at Cafar's Foot, and as his Legions advanced to give the Charge, their Horse fell back, and their Foot sustained the shock till the others returned again to relieve them.

XV. C.efar observing this new way of Fighting, and finding his own Ranks were broken by purfuing the Enemy, (for while his Foot followed their Horse too far from their Colours, they left the Flank open to the Numidians, who eafily wounded them with their Darts, and their Cavalry avoided the Javelins of our Men by the swiftness of their Horses) he published Orders, That no Soldier should advance above four Foot from the Front of Battle. In the mean time Labienus, relying upon the vaft numbers of his Horfe, endeavoured to furround those of Cesar, who being now overpower'd, by the Multitudes of their Enemy, and perceiving their Horses wounded under them, began to give ground by degrees, while the others continued to press more vigorously upon them. Thus the Army in an inftant faw themselves invested on all sides, and being as it were got within the Toils, were forced to fight in a Circle.

XVI. Labients advanced bare-headed on horseback, fometimes encouraging his own Men, and fometimes turning towards Cafar's Soldiers, cried out aloud to them, You fresh water Soldlers, what whose Fidelity he thought himself now assured of, makes you fo furious? Caefar has cajol'd you with his fair Speeches, and brought you into a fine Præmunire bere; upon my word I pitty your Cafe. Then one of the Soldiers answer'd him, I am no new Soldier, but a Veterane of the Tenth Legion. I don't see their Colours . favs Labienus. No matter for that, replies the Soldier, you shall soon know who I am. With that he threw his Helmet from his head, that so he might be known by him, and as he endeavour'd to throw his Iavelin at Labienus with all his strength, he miffed him, but wounded his Horse in the Breft, and then cried out, Now, Labienus, be fatisfied that I belong to the Tenth Legion. However, the rest were ftrangely dismayed, especially the new raised Men, who had been never engaged in fuch hot Service before, so that they had their eyes still upon Cefar, and minded nothing elfe, but how to avoid the Darts of the Enemy.

XVII. In the mean time Cafar, perceiving the Enemy defigned to encompass his Army, commanded them to make as great a Front as they could, in order to break their Ranks on the Right and Left; and turning the Face of his Battalion on one fide, and that of another to the opposite, to make a Front both in the Head and in the Rear, fell upon them at the same time on all sides, with his Cavalry in the middle, and to put them to flight. After this, he retired without advancing any farther, for fear of some Ambuscade, and in this Order marched back towards his Camp.

XVIII. While this happen'd, M. Petreius and Cn. Pifo, with 1100 choice Numidian Horie, and great numbers of light-armed Foot, came to the Relief of the rest, who now recovering out of their fright, and taking fresh Courage, began to fall upon the Rear of Cafar's Army, and hinder'd them from getting into their Camp. Upon this, Cafar order'd his Men to face the Enemy, and begin the Battle afresh. But as Labienus contented himself only with skirmishing, without coming to handy-blows, and Cafar's Horse, what with their late Fatigues at Sea, and their Weariness, Thirst, and Wounds, were uncapable of pursuing the Enemy, and Night now began to draw near, he commanded his Men to make one vigorous Effort all at the fame time, and not to give over till they had beaten the Enemy behind the Hills. Thus giving the Signal, when the Enemy made but a feeble and weak Refiftance, he poured with his Squadron and Cohorts upon them, and in an instant beating them with small difficulty out of the Field, and forcing them behind the Hills, he made a Halt for fome time, and then his Men retired flowly towards their Camp, as they were ordered. The Enemy did the fame on their fide, and having been thus rudely received, went back to their own Garisons.

XIX. After the Battle was over, Cafar was informed by feveral Deferters and Prisoners, That the Enemy defigned to terrific and allarm the new raifed Soldiers by this new and unufual manner of fighting, and to furround them with their Horse, as Curio had been formerly served; and that Labienus had boafted in a Council of War, That he would find the Enemy to much work, with pouring fresh Forces continually upon them, that tho' they got the better at first, yet they should be wearied at last with mere killing and slaying, and so be obliged to give way. Besides, That he had heard that the Veterane Legions had mutinied at Rome, and refused to pass over into Africk, he reposed no after three years Service in Africk. He had great Numbers of light Numidian Horse and Foot, without reckoning the Gauls and Germans, whom after Pomper's Defeat at Pharfalia he had rallied and carried with him from Brundusium, and those that he had raised in Africk. as well Slaves as

* Mungril Freed-men, whom he had berini Hybrida, by which the Amber means fuch as taught to manage their Horses with † Bridles. Add to this King Juba's mere Romans by the Father and Eureigners by the bic-ther's fide.

† Earthe Numidians did Forces, 120 Elephants innumerable Troops of Horse, and XII Legions. Full of these hopes and Expediations, not use Bridles: Whence Virgil calls them Numiden Labienus came to attack Cajar in a large open Plain, on the #day before the Nones of January, three days after his Arrival into Africk. He brought with him 1600 Gaulish and German Horse, 8000 Numidians, who used no Bridles, not reckoning the Reinforcement of Petreius, which confifted of 1100 Horfe, and four times the number of light-armed Foot. with several Slingers and Archers, that served as well on horse-back as on foot. The Dispute continued from the *fifth hour Dipute continued from the day in the day of the day till Sun-fer. In this Battle for the day till Sun-fer. In this Battle from the form compared their day wounded, that he was obliged to quit

XX. In the mean time Cafar redoubled the Guard of his Camp, and fortified himfelf with more diligence, and drew two Retrenchments, one from the Town of Ruspina, and the other from his own Quarter down to the Sea, in order to have free Communication on both fides, that fo his Succour might arrive to him without running any danger. He likewise ordered the Arms and warlike Machines which he had on Ship-board to be brought to his Camp, and armed part of the Seamen and Soldiers that were in the Rhodian and Gaulish Fleet, to intermingle them with his Cavalry, after the Example of the Enemy, and daily augmented his Forces with the † Itrre-† Itures, a Country of Paleftine. Pliny, L. 5. teks an and Syrian Archers. For he had received Intelligence that Scipio would us it was very mannai-nous, and parted from the rest of Judges by the River arrive within three days to joyn his Forces with Labienus and Petreius, whose Army was reported to consist of eight Legions, and Four thousand Horse. Upon this, he efected feveral Working-houses, to make Arms, caused great quantities of Arrows and Darts to be provided, ordered Bullets to be caft, and store of sharp Poles to be got ready. He also dispatched Messengers into Sicily, to send him Iron and Lead, as also Hurdles, and Timber to make Battering Rams, because there was none proper for fuch an use in Africk. Besides, he began now to consider that he should find no Corn in this Country, unless he took care to furnish himself from other places. For the last year the Enemy had lifted most of the Plough-men, and forced them to turn Soldiers; for which reason the Harvest was not gathered in most places, and that little Corn that was in the Country was carried into the strong Towns. All those Towns where the Enemy had not left Garifons were demolished and razed to the ground, and the Inhabitants carried to other strong Places. In short, the whole Country had been so miserably ravaged and laid wafte, that it could afford no manner of Subfi-

XXI. Cafar lying under these Necessities, by his obliging Deportment and free manner of acsmall Considence in the Number of his Men, costing all persons, had got some Corn into his Ga* It was not their way then to introde the Safety of a whole Army to two or three Centinels, but they ordered a whole Company so to stand at the Entrance of their Camp; which, from that posture, was said to be In Statione.

rilors, which he manag'd with great Frugality.

He daily visited the Works, and placed fome * Cohorts alternately upon the Guard, by reason of the vast Multitudes of the Enemy, Labinus order'd his Wounded, which were very numerous, to be carried in Wagons to Adrametum. In the mean time, Cafar's Provision-Ships, that were unacquainted Coafts, and knew not where the Army was, straggled up and down; and as they happen'd to be fever'd one from the other. feveral of the Enemy's Long-Boats fell upon them, 'and burnt and took them. Cafar being inform'd of these Losses, distributed his Fleet about the Islands and Harbours, for their security.

XXII. All this while M. Cato, who commaneled in chief at Utica, continually reproach'd Cn. Pompey for lying idle, and still awaked his Courage with fuch or the like Speeches: Your Father, fays he, when he was of your age, and faw she Commonwealth miserably oppressed by hold and profiligate A. Cinna † Usurpers, and the best Members of the Republick and Caibo. either bufely slain, or plunder'd of all, and sent to tach's Life starve abroad, though he was but a private Man, and of Pompey very + young, yet, inspired by Glory and his own Cou-# Ht. was rage, he gather d the Remainders of an Army which then twenty rage, he gather d the Remainders of an Army which those Tear had fere'd under his Father, and deliver'd Rome and old. See Pa- Italy, which in a manner lay buried in their own Ruines, Afterwards with incredible Celerity he re-conguer'd Sicily, Africa, Numidia and Mauritania; by which Exploits he advanc'd himself to those Henours, that made his Reputation known all over the Wirld; and had the Glory of a Triumph even when he was but a young Man, and a private Knight of Rome. When he first undertook to serve his native Country, be had none of those Advantages which you may fo justly pretend to ; neither bad be that Reputation with the People, nor could be boast of such Numbers of Dependants ready to facrifice their Lives and Fortunes for him. And will not you who inherit all his Glory, and want neither Courage nor Greatness of Mind. ufe all your Efforts, and fummon all your Father's Friends, to retrieve the Liberty of the Commonwealth, and fave so many vertuous and good Patriots from Destruction ?

XXIII. The young Man touch'd with these Reproaches of Cato, whose Gravity gave an unconquerable Authority to all his Counfels, took thirty Vessels of all forts, in which number he had a few Men of War, and parted from Utica, for Mauritania. He soon enter'd King Bogud's Kingdom; and gathering an Army which confifted of 2000 Men, as well Slaves as Free-men, armed as unarmed, he march'd directly towards the City Ascurum, in which place was a Royal Garison. Those within suffer'd him to pass on without the least Interruption, till he came near the very Gates and Walls of the City; when immediately fallying out, they fell upon Pompey's Men with that Vigour, that they foon broke their Ranks, and beat them back to their Ships. Upon this Miscarriage Cn. Pompey drew off his Fleet, and landed no more in Africk, but directed his Course *Two Islands towards the * Baleares.

ran the when the KNIV. In the mean time Scipio, after he had Spain, Ja. left a sufficient Garison at Advanceum, advanced monty for with his Forces, whose Numbers we have alreamerly for with his Forces, whose Numbers we have aireathey are cal. After he had refreshed himself there for a few led Majorca Days, he march'd in the Night-time, and joyn'd he kept within his Camp;) and immediately difand Minor the Army of Percin and Labiens; which being patch'd Letters to Sicily, to Allients the Presor and now united together, took up three Miles in length. Their Cavalry made daily Incursions, and came up to Cefar's Retrenchments, where they carried off all those that ventur'd out of the Lines to fetch Water, or go a Foraging. Thus they oblig'd their Enemies to keep within their Works, for fear of being taken; by which means Celar's Men foon came to labour under the Inconveniences of Famine: Befides that, the expected Convovs from Sicily and Sardinia were not yet arriv'd; and the Ships durft not venture out to Sea, by reason of the † Rigour of the Season, without running a † This hapmanifest Danger. He had not the entire Com-freed deur he was very much incommoded for want of Fo-neary. rage; and the Veterane Soldiers and Troops, who had been engag'd in feveral Wars, both by Land and by Sea, and had frequently struggled with the like Extremities and Hardships before, making a Vertue of Necessity, gather'd the Weeds that grew upon the Sea-shoar, and washing them in fweet Water, gave them their Horses and Cartle to feed upon, and so made a shift to keep them

XXV. While things were in this posture, King Juba being inform'd what Difficulties Casar tabonr'd under, and what a fmall handful of Men he had with him, he thought it not convenient to give him time to recover his Men, and increase the number of his Army. Upon this he rais'd great quantities of Horse and Foot to strengthen his own Party, and began to march out of his own Kingdom. But P. Litius and King Bogud receiving Advice of Juha's March, joyn'd both their Forces together, and advanc'd directly towards his Country. The most considerable Place they attack'd was Cirta, the wealthieft City in his Kingdom; which, after a few Days, they won by Affault; and possessed themselves besides of two Towns of the Getulians, where having propos'd to the Inhabitants to fuffer them to depart with Bag and Baggage in case they would surrender the Town, upon their refusal, when they took the Place, they put them all to the Sword. From hence they made farther Incursions into the Country, and committed great Ravages where-ever they came. No fooner was Juba inform'd of thefe Diforders, but he ftopp'd fhort, though he was within a few Days March of Scipio's Army, and judg'd it more advisable to go immediately to the Relief of his own People and Country, than while he endeavour'd to support others, to run the hazard of lofing his whole Kingdom. Upon thefe Confiderations he withdrew, and re-call'd the Forces he had in Scipio's Service, as being apprehenfive of his own danger: However, he left him thirty Etephants, and then return'd to fecure the Frontiers of his own Dominions.

XXVI. Cafar finding that the Inhabitants of the Province still doubted of his Arrival, and did not believe that himself was come in Person with these Forces into Africk, but one of his Lieutenants, he fent Circular Letters about the Country, to fatisfie them that he was come. As foon as this News was communicated, feveral Persons of eminent Quality flock'd to his Camp, and made heavy Complaints of the barbarous Inhomanity of the Enemy. Their Tears and Complaints made fo great an linpression upon Cefar, that he resolv'd to take the Field as foon as he had got all his Forces together, and the Weather was favourable, (for at that time

Rabirise Posthumas, which he fent by one of his othe favour of the Centurion to dispatch him first. • Per Cataf: Excuse of the Winds and Weather, they would fend him the rest of his Forces; That unless they made all imaginable dispatch, the Province would be foon over-run and made a Prey to his Enemies: and if a timely Relief did not come to his Allies there, they would not have so much as a house left where they could live fecure from the Infults of the cruel Adversary. At this Juncture he was so ftrangely impatient, that the very next day after he had disparcht the Courier to Sicily, he complain'd that the Army and Fleet lost time, and had his Eyes and Thoughts night and day turn'd towards the Sea, to see if this long wish'd for Affistance was in fight. Nor is this to be wonder'd at; for he receiv'd fresh Informations every Moment of the burning of Villages, ravaging of the Country, carrying away and flaughtering of Cattle, the daily demolithing and abandoning of Towns and Castles, the Imprisonment or the Murdering of the principal Inhabitants, and the carrying their Children Captives, under the pretence of keeping them for Hoftages. He had to inconfiderable an Army with him at that time, that he was not in a condition to redrefs the Grievances of these poor people, though they perpetually implor'd his Affiftance: However, he kept his Men still employ'd, fortified his Camp, and raifed feveral Forts and Ramparts, which reach'd as far as the Sea.

XXVII. Scipio in the mean time was not wanting to train up his Elephants for the War, which he perform'd after this manner: He dispos'd his Slingers in two Troops; one of which attackt 'em in the Front as if they had been the Enemy, and threw Stones at 'em; and when the Blephants, terrified at this rude Treatment, began to fall upon their own Men, the others beat 'em back with Stones after the like manner, and made 'em face the Enemy. But this could not be done without a great deal of pain and difficulty: For an Elephant, though he has been fitted for the Service never fo many years, yet in the heat of Battle may prejudice his own Party at well as that of the Advertary.

XXVIII. While these matters past between the Generals of both Armies near Rufpina, Caius Virgilius Petronius, who commanded at Thapfus, a Seaport Town, feeing Cafar's Ships float up and down, not knowing where he was, took his advantage of this opportunity, and fill'd a Barque with fome Soldiers and Archers, to which he joyned fome Shalops, and thus began to pursue the stragling Ships. Although he frequently had the worst in these Engagements, and was often beaten back with hole, yet he did not abandon his Defign, and accidemally attack'd a Ship wherein were the two Tieis, young Spanish Gentlemen, Tribunes of the Fifth Legion, whose Father had been made a Senatour by Cufar; and a Centurion of the fame Body, whose name was T. Salienas, who had befieged M. Messalla, one of Casar's Lieutenants, at Messina, and by his feditious practices had been the occasion that the Money and the Ornaments defigned for his Triumph were floor. Touch'd with the Remembrance of his former Crimes, and fearing to be brought to due Punishment, he for this Reafon perfuaded the Young men to make no Opposition. but favrender themselves to Virgilian. But the o ther had no fooner got them in his power, but he took care to have them fent to Scipio, by whole Order they were pur to Death three days aftet. As they were carried towards the place of Execution, tis reported that the elder Brother begged * Scour-Ships, That without any farther Delay or which he eafily obtained; and thus they were put to Death.

> XXIX. In the mean time the Horse-guards of both Armies had frequent Skirmifles one with another; and the Germans and Gauls that ferved noder Labienus, fometimes convers'd with Cafur's Horse, upon giving one another Assurance to commit no Actions of Hostility. Labients likewise en-deavour'd with part of his Cavalry to possess himfelf of the City of Leptis, where Saferna commanded with three Cohorts; but the place being ftrong by nature, and well fortified with all warlike Preparations, it eafily defended it felt. As the Enemy's Herse still continued to attack the place, and a large Squadron of 'em flood before the Gate, the Officer that commanded 'em was kill'd by the Owner that commanded the was all a first vegeties fluden Accident, retir'd with great Precipitation makes with rowards their Camp, and durft never make any international content of the c new Efforts upon the Town. On the other hand lifts, and is Scipio rang d his Army in Battle Array almost eve-west thousand ry day, within 300 Paces of his Camp, and having by one Man; in this Exercise spent the better part of the Day, ns'd to retire to his Tents towards the Evening. This he frequently did, and no one ftirr'd out of Cafar's Camp to give him the least Disturbance. At last, despiting the Patience of Casar's Men, he brought his whole Forces into the Field, with 30 Elephants, that had Towers upon their backs, ar the head of 'em; and his Army behind, extended upon a great Front, to give the greater Terrour; and in this manner appear'd not far from Cafar's Camp.

XXX. Cafar, upon Information of this, order'd his Soldiers, who had gone beyond the Fortifications, either for Forage or ferching of Wood and other things necessary, to retire within their Works flowly, and without Tumult or Confusion, and there to ftand in a Posture of Readiness : He alfo commanded his Horse that were upon the Guard to continue in their Poft, till they were within the throwing of the Enemies Darts, and that if they prefied nearer upon em, they should retire within their Fortifications as orderly as they could. He commanded another part of his Cavalry to get themselves ready; each in their respective Quarrer. He did not give these Orders from the top of the Rampart, to observe the Countenance of the Enemy, but fent 'em out by his Scouts and Messengers, while he fat in his own Tent; fo great Experience and Refolution he was Mafter of: For he knew well enough, That aithough the Enemy had a mighty Army in the Field, yet they had been frequently routed and vanquished by him, and that he had given 'em their Lives, and pardon'd em for what they had acted against him. For which Reason, he imagin'd they would never have had the Hardiness to attack him in his own Camp, while their former Cowardice was fo fresh in their Memory: Befides, he was not ignorant that his very Name was become formidable to that Party; and then the estraordinary Fortifications of his Camp, the prodigious height of the Trench and Ditches, and the Calthrops that were for artificially plac'd without, were capable of themselves to stop the Progress of the Enemy, although there hat been no Soldiers to defend the Works. To this maybe added. That he had made great Provision of Scorpions, # Caraputes, and other warlike Engines + ne fame proper for making a Defence, which he had pro with the Bar wided, not out of any Fear or Apprehension of the sines field for Ining These all Dars, al pieces of Buter.

Commentaries on the African War.

Enemy, but by reason that his Army at present sew days before with his Fleet, arrived at the were but few in number, and not long acquainted with the Fatigues of War. However, it was not merely upon the score of their Inequality and want of Experience, that he forbore to bring his Army into the Field, as if he diftrufted the Victory in case he hazarded a Battle; but he thought it concern'd his Honour in what manner he should triumph over an Enemy whom he had so often beaten: He thought it would be ignominious for him, after he had performed fo many great Exploits, and vanquisted so many Armies, if it were faid, That he had obtained a bloody Victory over the scatter'd Remainders of his Enemies. that were gathered together after so many Defeats. He was therefore refolv'd to fuffer their Infolence. and leave it unchastis'd, till such time as part of his Veterane Legions came to him by this fecond Convoy, which he to impatiently expected.

XXXI. In the mean white Scipio, after he had tarry'd some time in a fighting Posture in the Plains, in contempt of Cafar, draws back his Troops by little and little into his Camp; and fummoning an Atlembly of 'em, he boafted how much the Enemy dreaded him, and in what a desperate Condition Cafar's Army was; and after he had encourag'd them, he promis'd in a short time to lead 'em on to certain Victory. Cafar, on the other hand, caus'd his Men daily to work upon the Fortifications, and under this pretence kept the young Soldiers still employ'd. In the mean time, the Numidians and Getulians daily deserted from Scipio's Camp; part of 'em went home, and the reft flockt by whole Companies into Cafar's Camp, because they and their Ancestors had receiv'd great Oblikations from C. Marius, and they were informed that Cafar was related to him. Some of the principal Getulians he fent back into their own Country, with Letters to the respective Villages where they liv'd, in which he exhorted 'em to take up Arms for the Defence of themselves and their Children, and not to comply with the Defires of their Enemies any longer.

As we meet the name of no facts place in the eld Geographers, 'tis perhaps the farme with the Acolla in St abo and Livy, a Maritime Tum of Africk, properly so called.

XXXII. While Matters happen'd thus at Rufpina, Deputies came to Cafar from Acilla, a free City, who promis'd readily to perform whatever he commanded 'em to do; only they defir'd him to give em a Garison, that so they might be able to do this with more Security to themselves: That they would furnish him with Corn, and what other Provisions they had, out of a Consideration that he was come to deliver 'em. These things were nofooner demanded but granted: So he commanded Caius Messius, who had formerly bore the Office of Ædile, to march with these Forces to Acilla; which coming to the Knowledge of Confidius Longus, who commanded at Adrumetum with two Legions and 700 Horfe, he endeavour'd to prevent him, and to surprize the place. But Meffits making greater Expedition, arriv'd with his Forces there before him; so that when he drew near the Town with his Men, and found that Cafar had already Garifon'd the place, not daring to engage himself in so hazardous an Attempt, he return'd to Advumerum, without doing any thing, confidering what Forces he had with him. Soon after, he obtain'd fome Horse of Labienus; and then he sat down again before the place, and began to form the Siege of it.

XXXIII. About this time, C. Salustius Crifpus,

Island of Cercina: Upon whose Arrival, C. Decimus, who with a great Garison, wholly confisting of his own Family, guarded the Enemy's Convoy, embarked himself in a small Vessel, and made his Escape. In the mean time Salustius the Prætor was very well receiv'd by the Inhabitants of the Island; and finding great Magazines of Corn in the place, he loaded all his Provision-Ships, of which he had great store, and so sent em to Casar's Camp. Nor was Allienus, the Proconful of Sicily, wanting in his Duty; for he embark'd the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Legion aboard the Transport-Ships at Lilybeum, with 800 Gaulish Horse, 1000 Slingers and Archers, and fent a tecond Supply of Provisions to Cefar: All which Ships, having a favourable wind, within four days arrived fate at Ruspina, where Cafar lay encamped. Thus Cafar was possest with a double Pleasure at the same time, to see himself plentifully recruited with Men and Provisions; nor was it a finall Satisfaction to his Men, to fee their late Scarcity turned to great Plenty of all things. After he had unladen the Veffels, and that his Horse and Foot were recovered of the Illness they had contracted on thip-board, he diffributed em into several Castles and fortified places.

XXXIV. All this while Scipio and those of his Party were surpriz'd with Admiration that C. Cafar, who never us'd to be backward in giving Battle, was grown so reserv'd on a sudden; and this they imagin'd he did not without very good Reason. To discover his Designs, (for this unusual Reservedness in Cesar gave 'em terrible Apprehenfions) they chose two Getulians, whom they lookt upon to be faithful and very well affected to them. and promised them a considerable Reward, if they would go into Casar's Camp, and bring them a true account of every thing. As foon as they were brought before Cafar, they begg'd leave that they might be allow'd to utter their Minds freely, without incurring any Danger; which being granted em, several of our Countrymen, say they, most nobic General, who have in their time been oblig d by C. Marius and the greatest part of the Roman Citizens that are in the Fourth and Sixth Legions, have long desired to make their Escapes into your Camp, but are bindred, by the Guards of Numidian Horse, from putbinared, of the charast of Nutmaian riogle, from pur-ting it into Execution. But now we are fent as Spies by Scipio, (and we readily accepted the Commission) to fee what Snares or Ambuscades had been laid before your Entrenchments for the Elephants, and after what manner you design'd to attack those Animals, that so baying made an exact Observation of all things, we should bring bim word in what manner every thing was disposed. Casar commended them for their Fidelity to him; and after he had gratified them with some Presents, they were carried to the Quarter of the Deferters. The truth of what they had delivered was foon confirmed; for the next day, feveral Soldiers, out of those Legions which the Getulians had named, quitted Scipio's Camp, and came over to Calar

XXXV. While these Passages happen'd at Ru-Spina, Marcus Cato, who commanded at Utica, made new Levies daily of Free-men and Africans, nay and Slaves too, and all that were capable of bearing Arms, and caused them continually to file off towards Scipio's Camp. In the mean time Deputies arriv'd from Tifdrum, where 3000 Bushels of Wheat were laid up in a Magazin by several Labourers and Italian Merchants, and came to Cefar, telling him what flore of Provisions they had whom, as we have already observed, Cesar sent a in their Town; and withal, defired that he would be pleased to send them a Garison for their farther Security. Cafar receiv'd them with great Civility, and promised to answer their Demands in a short time; and after he had exhorted them to be of good Courage, he fent them back to their Fellow-Cirizens. At the same time P. Sitius enter'd the Frontiers of Numidia, and took a strong Castle, fituated upon a Mountain, where Juba had laid up great Stores of Corn, and other Military Preparations. Now Cafar having thus increased his Army with two Veterane Legions, befides the Horse and Light-arm'd Foot which he had received by the fecond Supply, immediately order'd fix Transport-Veffels to fail for Lilybaum, to bring over the Remainder of his Army; and on the * The 27th * fixth of the Kalends of February, about the first of our Ja Watch, he commanded all his Spies and Scouts to put themselves in a posture of Readiness; and thus with great Silence and Secrecy, the Enemy fulpecting nothing of the matter, he order'd all his Legions, ahout the Third Watch, to leave the Camp, and follow him towards Ruspina, where he had a Garison, and which was the first Place that had declar'd openly for him. From thence having passed a small Descent, he led the Legions towards the Sea, on the Left Hand of the Camp. This Plain took up the Breadth of about fifteen Miles, which a great Chain of Mountains, beginning from the Sea, made to resemble the Form of a Theatre: At the Top of this Mountain were a few rifing Hills, on which fome old Forts and Watch-Towers were placed, at the last of which Scipio lay encamp'd.

> XXXVI. After Cafar had ascended the abovemention'd Mountain, and all these Hills, he began to erect some Castles and Towers, which he effected in less than half an Hour; and when he came near the last Hill and Tower, which stood nearest to the Enemy's Camp, (where, as I have already observ'd, was a Guard of Numidians ; he made a Stop for a short time. After he had obferv'd the fituation of the place, he fet his Horse on the Guard, and caused his Legions to make a Retrenchment through the midst of the Mountain, from the place where he then was, down to that from whence he fo lately came. As foon as Scipio and Labienis were inform'd of this Movement, they drew all their Horse out of the Camp, and after they had ranged them in Battle, they advanc'd about a Mile from their Fortifications, and then placed their Infantry upon a second Line, within 400 Paces of their Camp. Cafar, not at all daunted at the Numbers of his Enemy, still encouraged his Soldiers to work upon the Fortifications; and when he now found that there was not above a Mile and a half between the Enemy's Army and his own Works, and understood that the Enemy still advanced nearer, to hinder his Soldiers, and make them defift from this Employment, he detach'd a Squadron of Spanish Horse to seize on the next Hill with all speed, and beat out the Soldiers that were posted there; and order'd some Lightarm'd Foot to support them. They made the Attack with fo much Vigour, that they foon render'd themselves Masters of the place, after they had either taken or wounded part of those Numidians that guarded it, and beaten back the reft. Labienus perceiving the Disorder and Flight of his Men, that he might the fooner relieve them, took almost all the Right Wing of his Cavalry, and thus advanc'd to their Relief: But when Casar saw that Labienus was at a great distance from his Forces. he detach'd the whole Left Wing of his Horse to cut them off.

XXXVII. In the Plain where this Action hap-Towers, which hinder'd Labienus from feeing what paffed, fo that he did not perceive that he was furrounded with Cefar's Horse; and thus he did not see Casar's Troops, till he beheld his own Men attack'd in the Rear. This put the whole Numidian Cavalry into fo great Consternation, that they fled immediately towards the Camp, leaving the Germans and Gauls to sustain the Fight, who were encompassed on all hands, and cur in pieces, after they had defended themselves with great Bravery. In the mean time, Scipio's Infantry, which were ranged in Battle before their Camp, beholding this Disorder, were so strangely affrighted, that they began to flee back again into their Camp, at every Gate. Cefar, after he had dislodg'd Scipio and his Forces, as well out of the Plain as the Hills, and obliged him to retire to his Camp, founded a Retreat, and order'd all his Cavalry to come within the Works; and now the Field of Battle being open, he faw the large and mighty Bodies of the Gauls and Germans, part of whom had follow'd Labienus out of Gaul; others, prevail'd upon by Money and fair Promiles, had lifted themselves in his Service; and some who had been taken Prisoners at Curio's Defeat, and had their Lives given them, were willing, in acknowledgment of that Favour, to venture them again for the Party. The Bodies of these Men were of a wonderful bigness and shape, and lay dispersed and featter'd all over the Field.

XXXVIII. After this Exploit, Cafar the next Day draws all his Troops out of the Garisons, and ranges them in the Field; but Scipio did not think it advisable to stir out of his own Retrenchments, by reason he lost so many of his Men the preceding Day. Cafar having drawn out his Army, march'd flowly at the Bottom of the Hill, near the Fortifications; and now his Forces were come within less than a Mile of Vzita, which Town Scipio kept in his possession, and used to supply his Army from thence with Water, and other Necesfaries: For which reason fearing to lose it, he drew out all his Troops, and rang'd them in Battle upon four Lines; the first of which, according to his Custom, was composed of Cavalry, intermingled with Elephants that were arm'd, and carried Towers on their Backs. Thus he marched towards the Relief of the place; which when Cafar perceivid, he now concluded that Scipio came with a full Resolution to fight him; but the other making an Halt before the Town, at the aforefaid place, cover'd the Main Body of his Army with the Town, and exposed the Right and Left Wings. where the Elephants were, to the full view of the XXXIX. After Cafar had thus waited in vain till it was almost Sun-set, and found that Scipio had no mind to quit the Ground where he was posted, but would rather act upon the Defensive, than give him Battle, he thought it not convenient to move any nearer the Town that Day, because he knew there was a strong Garison of Numidians in the place, and that the Enemy cover'd the Body of their Army with it. Besides, he was sensible that it was in a manner impracticable for him to carry on the Affault, and at the fame time to fight his Men on the Right and Left Wing, with the difadvantage of the Ground; especially considering that they had flood under their Arms ever fince the Morning, hungry and fatigu'd, without any Refreshment. So marching his Forces back again, into the Camp, he refolv'd the next Day to carry on his Works nearer to the Enemy's Army. In the mean time, Considius, who with a Body of Nu-midians and Getulians belieg'd Messius, and the eight Cohorts in Acilla, after he had made several Attacks to no purpose, and feen his Machins deftroy'd by the Towns-men, upon the News of Scipio's being defeated in the late Horse-Engagement. burnt the Corn, of which he had plenty in his Camp, and spoil'd his Wine and Oyl and other Provisions, and so raised the Siege of the Place. After this, marching through Juba's Kingdom, he left part of his Mcn with Scipio, and then retired to Adrumetum.

XL. On the other fide, one of the Provision-Ships which Allienus ient with the last Convoy from Sicily, in which were Q Cominius and L. Ticida, a Roman Knight, happening to straggle from the rest of the Fleet, was taken by Virgilius, with the help of some Barks and Shallops, and carried to Scipio. A Gally belonging to this Ficet run the same Deftiny; for being separated from the rest in ill Wea-. to Mard and forced upon the Isle of * Ægimurus, it was taor Seek ricken by the Naval Forces of Varus and M. Octavius. nee, Graf in this Gally were some Veterane Soldiers, with a in the Centurion, and a few New-raifed Men, whom Vair) in the Centurion, and a few New and a to be brought not far from 123 thed kindly enough, and older a to be longer Coffee, & before Scipio. As foon as they were introduced into his presence, he being then seated in his Tritwee Lity bunal, I am well fatisfied, fays he, that it is not of your own accord, but by the Command and Instigation of your Tyrannick General, that you are come here to pursue the Lives of your Fellow-Citizens, and of all shofe that are engaged in the true Interests of the Commonwealth. But fince Fortune has deliver'd you into my hands, if, as you are in Duty bound, you will side with Men of Integrity, to defend your Country against the wicked Attempts of Usurpers, you may be certain that you shall not only have your Lives and Fortunes secured to you, but be nobly rewarded. Therefore frankly tell me what Measures you are refo'v' d to take.

> XLI. Having thus harangu'd them, as he vainly flatter'd himfelf that they would receive this Grace with all the Ardour and Submiffion imaginable, the Centurion of the Fourteenth Legion thus answered him, I thank thee, Scipio, (for General I must not call thee) that being thy Prisoner, thou hast made me Offers of Life and Liberty: And perhaps I might accept them, if I could do so without being guilty of the most horrid Baseness that can be. What! Shall I prefent my felf in Battle against Cæ-sar, after I have fought † sixteen Years under him; or draw my Sword against my Companions, for whom I have so often bazarded my Life? This I am refolved never to do, and would advise thee to de-fift from thy Undertaking: For, to let thee

if thou never madest the Experiment before, I will now convince thee: Let me

† In the printed Copy 'tis XXXVI Teats, but two of the Tens are to be firsted, out, to make it just XVI
Tears, (as some Mossuscripts rightly have it;)
for Caesar was a General but so many Tears, and no See against whose Forces thou dost now fight.

A Logion confifted of ten Coharts, and every Ca-bert, for the meft part, of 420 Men: But if the Legion was fuller stan ordinary, fo were the Coloris the War, by that of our Combat. 200, and might recken 5 or 600 complest Men. XLII. After the Centurion had thus expressed his Mind, Scipio, enrag'd to the highest degree, and boyling with Indignation, gave the rest of the Centurions to understand what he would have done to him; so he was killed at his Feet, and separated from the New-rais'd Men: Take awar those barden'd Fellows, savs he, that are stain'd and defiled with the Blood of their Country-men. Upon this they were immediately carried without the Trenches, and there most barbarously butchered. He gave Orders for the New-rais'd Men to be diffributed amongst the other Troops, but would not fuffer Cominius or Picids to be brought into his fight. Cafar much concern'd at this Accident, dismissed the Captains who commanded his Gallies before Thapfus, where they were appointed to cruife, from his Service; and for their farther Mortification and Difgrace, publish'd a very fevere Edict against them.

XLIII. Much about this time a strange and unexpected Mischance befel Casar's Army, For the the printed Copies sis Virgiliarum figno confecto, which certainly is a great mistake; for the Vir-gilize, or the Piciades, set about the middle of No-vember. Now the Mu-ther of this Book expressy tells us, that Caesar arri-ved in Africk not before the end of December. D'Ab-lancourt resuld hereby preve the faultines of the old Ca-lender, which led People in-to these Assignates. But the late learned Publisher of the late learned Publisher of the Douprin's Edition has, our of three ancient Manzaferips, carrelled it, Vighamm figno confecto; and him I have chief to follow: For, at the Romans divided their Night into the First Second Think the

Which almost answers

First, Second, Third and Fourth Watch, So they noti-

eur Mid-right.

about the Second Watch of the Night, after the †Trumpet had given the Signal, a great Tempest, accompanied with a most prodigious Shower of Hail, arose. What serv'd to make this unexpected Calamity more difmal to them, Cafar had not put his Men into Winter Quarters, as the Generals before him were used to do, but decamped every third or fourth Day, that he might come nearer the Enemy, and still fortified his Camp; fo that the Soldiers being continually thus employ'd, had no time to make Huts for themselves. Besides, he was so hafty to transport his Army from Sicily, that, except the Men and their Arms, he would not fuffer any of their Equipage, or Slaves, or, in fhort, any thing which might be ferviceable to them to be carried on Ship-board; and they were so far from being able to get any Provisions in Africk, that they had soon consum'd their own, by with their Cloaks, and cover'd them with Reeds and Wisps of Straw. Thus when this violent Storm of Hail fell at Midnight, the Soldiers half beaten down by the Tempest, and overwhelm'd with Water, their Fires all put out, and their Victuals all fpoil'd, wander'd up and down the Camp, and cover'd their Heads with their Helmets. The same Night the Tops of the Javelins belonging to the Fifth Legion took fire on their own accord.

XLIV. In the mean time, King Juba receiving Advice of Scipio's late Defeat, and being importun'd hy him to come to his Relief, left part of his Army under the Conduct of his Lieutenant Sabura, to make head against Licius, and arrived with three Legions, 800 Horse with Bridles, a vaft Number of Numidians that rode without Bridles, feveral Companies of light Infantry, and thirty Elephants, to his Affiftance, thinking by his Authority and Presence to hinder the Men from flanding in fear of Cafar. Upon his Arrival, he pitched his Royal Pavilion by himself, not far from Scipio. Cafar's Men had been long terrified with the expectation of Juba's Army, and their Apprehensions still encreased as they were informed that he came towards them: But after they had narrowly observed his Forces, and compar'd them with their own, they laid afide their Fears, and deoccasioned when absent, he forfeited now by his Prefence. However, Seipio was not a little encouraged with this Reinforcement; and the next day, drawing out all his own and the King's Men into the Field, with 60 Elephants in most sumptuous Furniture, he advanced a prerry way beyond his Lines, where after he had tarried a fhort time, he retired back again to his Camp.

XLV. Cafar being now fensible that he would not refuse him Battle, because all the Forces he expected were now arrived to him, began to advance by the top of the Mountains, still making Retrenchments, and building of Forts, and as he possess'd himself of these eminent places, he still endeavoured to come nearer to Scipio. The Enemy confiding in the numbers of their Men, had feized on the next Hill, and by that means hindred him from advancing any farther. Labients was the Man that recommended this Defign, and as he lay next to it, fo he was the first that made him felf Mafter of it.

XLVL Before Cafar could come to this Hill. where he had a mind to post himself, he must pass through a broad Valley, the defcent into which was very freep, with feveral hollow places that refembled Caves; and beyond it was a great Plantation of Olive Trees. Labienus, who was aware that Cafar, if he intended to make himself Master of that Post, must of necessity take his way through the aforefaid Valley and Plantation of Olives, being well acquainted with these places, lay in Ambuscade, with part of his Horse, and some light armed Foot, and placed the reft of his Horse at a farther distance behind the Mountains; that fo. as foon as he had fallen upon Cefer's Infantry, they should advance from the Hills, and then Cafar's Men. attackt in the Front and Rear at the fame time, and unable either to march forward or to retire, but fur rounded on all fides, would infalliby be cut in pieces. Cafar, who knew nothing of this Ambuscade, ordered his Horse to march first; and when they came to this place, Labienus's Men. either militaking or forgetting the Orders that were given them, or fearing to be over-run by the Horse in the Ditch, began to thew themselves one by one in feveral places, and to climb the Hill. But Cafar's Horse pursuing them, cut some of them in pieces, and took the rest Prisoners. After this, they made towards the Hill, and putting Labiemu's Soldiers to the Rout, foon poffessed themselves of it. Labienus, though he fled with part of his Horse in great Precipitation, yet all he could do. he hardly made his escape.

XLVII. This Exploit being performed by the Horse, Casar ordered the Foot to fortifie this place, and drew two great Retrenchments cross the Plain, from his Camp over against the City of Uzita, which stood between his and Scipio's Camp, so that they met at the right and left Angle of that Town. The Reason of this was, That when he drew his Forces nearer to the Town, and began to attack it, he might fecure himfelf on all fides, by these Works, from being encompassed with the Enemy's Horse, and not be obliged to quit the Affault. Befides, that this would give him more liberty to communicate with those of the Townsand if any Soldiers had a mind to defert and come over to him, which they could not do before without apparent danger, they might now do it with greater Ease and Security. He was also desirous to fee, whether, as he still approached nearer to them, the Enemy had a mind to fight them. To the above-mentioned Reasons, we may add anosties, which was, That this place lying low, he might with more Convenience dig Wells here; bedante when he was in the other Station, his Soldiers were forced to go through a long and narrow way to fetch their Water. While his Legions were employed in these Works, part of the Army. drew up before the Retrenchment, in Order of Battle, and skirmished against the Cavalry and light Foot of the Enemy.

XLVIII. As Casar towards the Evening retired with his Forces from the Works, to regain his Camp, Juba, Scipio, and Labienus made a sudden Onset upon them, with all their Horse and light Foot. Cafar's Cavalry, over-pressed with such vast muscitudes, gave ground at first; but the Succeis of this Attack fell out otherwise than the Enemy expected. For Cafar making a Halt, advanced with his Legions to support the Horse, who now taking fresh Courage, returned to the Charge with great Vigour, and finding the Numidiens that purfued them disordered, they beat them back to their Camp, killing and wounding abundance of them. So that if the Night had not unfeafonably ended the dispute, and the Dust hinder'd their fight, they had in all appearance taken Juba and Labiewas, and cut all their Horse and light Foot in pieces. In the mean time, Scipio's Soldiers, belonging to the Fourth and Sixth Legions, daily deferted in great Numbers to Cafar's Camp: And feveral of Curio's Horse, distruiting now the Fortone of Scipio and his Forces, did the fame.

XLIX. While these things happen'd between the Generals of both sides near Uzita, the Ninth and Tenth Legion embarked upon the Transport-Veffels in Sicily; and as they were now not far from the Harbour of Rufpina, discovered Cafar's Ships which lay at Anchor before Thatfus. So fearing to fall among the Enemy's Fleet, whom they imagined to lye in wait for them there, they put to Sea again; where having been toffed by the Winds for the space of several Days, and almost fpent with Hunger and Thirst, at last they came fafe to Land, and arrived at the Camp. No fooner were these Legions come ashore, but Cefar, remembring the Diforders which his Soldiers had committed in Italy, and the Rapines of some Officers, took the first occasion which presented it self to be revenged upon them; and because C. Avients, a Tribune of the Tenth Legion, had wholly taken up one Veffel for his own Family and Equipage, and brought not fo much as one Soldier with him from Sicily, he fummoned the next Day all the Officers of the Army, and in their Presence, fitting in his Tribunal, I could have wifeed, faid he, with all my heart, That some Men would have put bound to sheir ill Manners and Insolence, and not everlastingly abused my good Nature and Clemency: But since they ftill run on in their Crimes, and observe no tollerable Measures, I am resolved to chastise them according to the Rules of War, to serve as an Example to their Fellows. And first for you, Caius Avienus, because you have firred up the Soldiers of the Roman People against the Republick, plundered several Towns, and been unserviceable, both to me and the Commonwealth; and further, not content with these Disorders, have taken up whole Veffels for your own Retinue and Horfes, so that through your means we want Soldiers now in a time of Necessity, I here discard you, and com-mand you to leave Africk this very day. As for you, Aulus Fonteius, I likewife Cafbiere you as a feditious Officer, and an ill Citizen. And lastly, T. Salienus, M. Tiro, C. Cluthas, fince jus purchafed your Com-

Fourth Watch, so they noting fed each of these Watches four times a Night by Sound of Trumper; as we find in Vegetius de Re Milkare, reason of the great Scarcity of Victuals lib. L. C.p. 8. and Fronci-nus, lib. 1. Stratagem. there. Upon which account, few of the Men lay under Tents, the rest being forced to secure themselves from the Weather take only fix of my Comrades, to fight against the best ‡ Cohort theu hast in thy Army; and judge then of the Event of the reft of the Veterane Soldiers he order'd to be spiled them. Thus the mighty Terrour he had missions in my Army by Favour, and not by Merit; eet, and came to post themselves upon an eminence and have shown your selves to be neither Valians in not far from Casar's Quarter, who did the same on War nor useful in Peace, but fitter to stir up the Soldiers against their General, than to do your Duty, I look upon you to be unworthy to ferve in my Troops any longer, and therefore break you, with Orders to depart immediately. Having ended his Speech, he delivered them up to the Centurions, and commanded them to be separately sent on Ship-board, allowing only one Servant to each.

L. In the mean time, the Getulian Deferters.

who, as we have already observed, were fent to their own Country with Letters and particular Orders from Casar, arrived there; and the People, partly induced by their Authority, and partly by Cesar's Reputation, were easily prevailed upon to take up Arms and revolt from their Prince. When Juba received advice of this Infurrection, finding Mgaing P. himself now engaged in a * three-fold War at Strius, the once, he was obliged to detach fix Companies out Genilans, of the Forces he had brought against Cafer, to oppose the Progress of the Getulians. Casar having now finished his two Retrenchments, and carried them on very near, but so that a lavelin out of the Town could not reach him, fortified his Camp, and placing flore of military Engines before the Front of his Lines, directly over against the Town, he put the Soldiers that defended the Walls into terrible Fears, and ordered five Legions to come to him there. This gave an Opportunity to feveral Persons of Condition in both Armies to defire the fight of their Friends and Relations, and to have frequent Conversation with one another; which was of great Importance to Cafar's Affairs, as he very well knew. For the principal Officers of the Getulian Cavalry, who were in Juba's Service, and some others of the better fort, whose Fahad obtained confiderable Lands in this Country, but fince Sylla's Victory, were subjected to King † This is not † Hiempfal, found now a fit Opportunity towards the Hiemp the Evening, when the Fires were lighted, to make is mention a by Saluft, but their Escapes with their Horses and Servants, to K. of Numi- the number of 1000. and arrived at Cafar's Camp, dis, who was which was in the Plain near Uzita. LI. Scipio and those of his Parry were not a lirmafter re- tle diffurbed when they received the News of this established by Desertion, and chanced to see, much about the Sylla's Com- same time, M. Aquinius talking with Caius Saverna. Scipio fent him word that he ought not to hold any Commerce with the Enemies After the Meffenger had delivered this Message, and the other still continued his Discourse, Juba sent one of his Guards to bid him break up the Conference; which he, fearing to incur that Prince's Displeasure, acaccordingly did. A strange thing, that a Roman Gentleman, already advanc'd to Dignities in the State, should rather choose to obey a Foreign King than Scipio, and be guilty of fo mean a thing, as to defire to return home after the Ruine of his Party. But indeed this Affront did not fo much concern Aquinius, who was but a new-made Senator, as Scipio, who commanded the Army, and was Illustrious for his Birth as well as his Dignity. 'Tis confidently reported, That Scipio, who before the King's coming used to wear a Purple Robe, upon Juba's telling him that he ought not to wear the same fort of Habit as himself, chang'd it immediately for one of a white colour; and in this and other Affairs shew'd himself always compliant to that most arrogant Prince.

his fide, and put himfelf in Order of Battle before his Camp, imagining that the Enemy, feeing them-felves fo much encreased by the King's Forces, and drawing out first, would foon begin to attack him. He rode through all the Ranks, to encourage his Men, and give them the word, and there expected the coming up of his Enemies; but he would not advance too far from his Retrenchments, because Scipio had feveral Companies of Men in Uzita, and fac'd the Town on his right fide; which made him apprehensive that if he went any farther the Townsmen would fally our upon him and cut his Men to pieces: Besides there was an uneven place before Scipio's Quarter, which it was impossible to pass without some disorder.

LIIL I believe it will not be impertinent here to relate in what Form and Manner both Armies were drawn out. Scipio plac'd his own and Juba's Legions in the Front, supported by the Numidians, who were fo thin Fil'd that one would have been apt to imagine afar off, that the Battle was only double upon the Wings. He plac'd the Elephants upon the Right and Left, at equal diffances, and behind 'em, the light armed Infantry and the Auxiliary Troops of the Numidians. All his Horse that used Bridles he disposed upon the Right Wing; for the Left was covered with the Town, and there was not room enough on that fide to draw out in Squadrons: Within 1000 Paces of his Right Wing, towards the foot of a Mountain, he had placed all the light Numidian Cavalry, at the greatest distance both from the Enemy and his own Forces; which he did with this defign, That when the two Armies began to be engaged, his Horse fetching a larger Compass, might on the sudden surround Cathers had served under Marius, and by his Favour far's Men with their Numbers, and disorder them with their Darts. After this Manner did Scipio order his Bartle.

> LIV. But Cafar's Army (to begin with the Left Wing, and so come to the Right) was rank'd in this Order; He had the Ninth and Seventh Legion in his Left Wing, the Thirtieth and Nine and twentieth in the Right, and in the Interval between the two Wings, four other Legions, viz, the Thirteenth, the Fourteenth, the Twenty eighth, and the Twenty fixth. ‡ The second Line was com-+Iberebere posed, on the Right Wing, of part of the Cohorts followed Mr. of these Legions, and some others of the new-court i Fronrais'd Men. But the Troops of the third Line he flation for I rais d Men. But the I roops of the third Line he Matin first disposed in his Left. Wing, and extended them as most able far as the middle Legion of his Army, and so play so first give ced them, that he seem'd to have three Lines on original, that side: The Reasino of it was, because his Right methods with the work of was defirous to have his Left Wing strong enough to refift the great Numbers of the Enemy, and therefore ranked all his Cavalry on that fide. But because he expected no mighty matters from his Horse, he sent the Fifth Legion to support them, and mingled the light Infantry with them. His Archers he distributed every where, but principally upon the Wings.

LV. Both the Armies thus drawn up, at not above 300 Paces diftance from each other, which never happen'd before but they fought, flood there from the Morning till the *tenth Hour of the *which and Day. And now when Cafar began to draw back four our 4 his Army within his Retrenchments, all the light in the Af-Cavalry of the Numidians and Getulians, who stood LII. The next day they drew out all their For- off at some distance, as I have already said, began to near upon the Right, and marched towards and Seamen; the reft of the Fleet doubled the Cafa's Camp, which was upon a Hill; All this while, Labienu's Horse continued still in their Post, and hinder'd the Legions from moving, when on a fudden, part of Cafar's Horse, with the Light Infantry, march'd without Order against the Getulians, and having pals'd a Morals which cover'd them, were not able to fustain the shock of fo vaft a multirude, and being abandon'd by the Foot, were conftrain'd to resurn in some disorder. In this Action one Trooper was kill'd, several Horses wounded, and 26 of the Foot lost their Lives. Soipio not a little rejoycing at this good fuccess, drew back his Forces to his Camp, but his loy for this advantage did not last long, for the next day Cafar fending part of his Cavalry to Lepin to Guard the Provisions, they met in the way fome Numidian and Getulian Plunderers, whom they immediately fell upon, and kill'd or took Prisoners about a hundred of them. In the mean time, Cafar did not cease to advance his Retrenchments through the Plain, and to draw our his Legions, that so he might prevent the Incurfions of the Enemy: On the other hand, Scipio approach'd as near as he might to the Mountains, and made Retrenchments over against those of Celar. Thus the Generals on both fides, continually kept their men employ'd; however, the Horse had daily Skirmishes with one another.

LVI. While these things happened, Varus receiving Advice that the seventh and eighth Legion were parted from Sicily, immediately got his Fleet ready, which he had laid up at Utica by reason of the Winter, and having Manned them with Soldiers and Getulian Mariners, went out to Iye in wait for their coming, and arriv'd at Adrumetum with fifty five Ships. Cafar, who knew nothing of this matter, dispatched Lucius Cifpius with twenty Sail, to lye at Anchor near Thapfus, to Convoy these Ships he expected from Sicily, and fent Aquila, for the same reason, before Adrumetum with 13 Gallies more. Cifpius foon arriv'd whither he was fent, but Aquila meeting with bad weather was not able to double the Cape, and having found a certain Creek where he might Ride fafe, he shelter'd himself there with his Fleet: The rest of the Vessels lay in the Road of Leptis, and while the Seamen were gone to the Town to buy them Provisions, or were wandring up and down the shore, Varus being inform'd of it by some Deferters, finding now a fair opportunity, Sail'd out of Adrumetum by the second Watch, and by break of day came with his whole Fleet to Leptin: The Transport and Provision Ships which stood off to Sea, and were farthest from the Harber, he burnt, and took two Gallies, with five Oars apiece, without opposition, as having no men to defend

LVII. Cafar receiving notice of this by some Couriers, as he visited his Works which were about fix Miles from the Harbor, he took Horse immediately, neglecting all other Affairs, and foon arriv'd at Leptis. Here he made a short stay, to give time to the rest of his Fleet to join him, and went a Board a small Vessel, and in his way meeting Aquila, who had been surpriz'd and affrighted at the multitude of his Enemies, he pursued them with all imaginable speed; but Varus, strangely aftonish'd at the boldness and celerity of Casar, made the best of his way towards Adrumetum, but Casar over-taking him, after about a League's Sailing, recover'd one of his Gallies, with all the men that were in her, and a hundred and thirty Soldiers that were left to Guard her, and took another Gally with three Oars, full of Rowers

Cape, and gain'd the Harbor of Adrumetum. Cafar could not possibly double it with the same Wind, and therefore stood out to Sea all Night, and Anchor'd there, but the next morning bore up to Adrumetum, where burning all the Transport Ships that lay without the Harbor, he tarry'd some time to fee whether the Enemy would hazard an Engagement with him, and afterwards return'd to his Camp. He found in the Gally which he took, P. Vestrius a Roman Knight, and P. Ligarius one of Afranius's Party, who had been taken and let at liberty by him in Spain, but afterwards belook himself to Pompey's Party, and after his defeat went over into Africk and join'd Varus; to he order'd him to be put to Death for his Perjury and Perfidiousness, but he Pardon'd P. Vestrius, because his Brother paid his Tax at Rome without difficulty; as also, because he satisfied Casar, that being taken in Nasidius's Fleet he was laved by Varus's Interest, as he was going to be put to Death, and had found no opportunity fince that time to make

LVIII. 'Tis the Cuftom of the People in Africk to hide their Corn in Caves under ground, and that principally in rime of War, to secure it from falling into the Enemies hands; Cafar being informed of this, marched about the third Watch with two Legions, and all his Cayalry, ten Miles from his Camp, and plentifully supplying them with Corn returned home. This being discover'd to Labienus, he marched about eight Miles from his Camp, through, the same Mountains which Cafar had paifed the day before, and erected a Fort capable to hold two Legions. As he imagin'd that Cafar would often come the fame way to Forage, he daily came there with several Squadrons of Horse, and some Light Foot, and Posted himself in a very advantageous place. In the mean time, Cafar being inform'd of this by some Deferters, let some days pass to render the Enemy more remis and negligent, and parted early one morning out of the * Porta Decumana, with leven Veteran Lecomp, and fleed directly ed early one morning our of the *Porta Decumana, with leven Veteran Legions, and part of his Cavalry; He fent his Horfe before, and falling unexpectedly upon the Enemy, who lay in Ambush there, cut about 500 of ment. them to pieces, and made the rest retire in great precipitation; in the interim, Labienus came up with all his Horse to relieve his men. and Cafar finding his Cavalry unable to fuftain the shock of so unequal a number, suddenly advanced with his Legions to Fight the Enemy, at whose coming Labienus being affrighted, and defifting from the pursuit, he found means to bring off his Horse safe. The next day, Juba commanded all those Numidians, who had abandon'd this Post and fled to the Camp, to be Hang'd for a Terror and Example to the reft.

LIX. At this time Cafar being press'd with want of Provisions drew out his Forces, and after he had fer his Camp on fire, and left Garifons at Leptis, Ruspina and Acilla, with Orders to Aquila and Cifpius to Iye with their Fleets, one before Thapfus, and the other before Adrumetum, he withdrew about the fourth † Watch of the Night in Order of Battel, command-

† The Romans divided ing his Baggage to File off upon the Left Wing. As foon as he artivid at a Town called Agar, where the Iar Special Wile with the Special Control of the Special

208

habitants had defended themselves with great Bra- part of them pursu'd the Rear : Burno somer did very against the frequent Attacks of the Getulions. he Encamp'd in the Plain, and marching our with part of his Army to Forage about the Neighboring Villages, he found great quantities of Barly Ovi. Wine and Figs, the but very little Wheat; And thus, after he had refresh'd his Men, return'd to inform'd of his departure, purfu'd him by the way of the Monntains with all his Forces, and Encamp'd within a League and half of him, in three feparate Camps, which took up a great space.

LX. Scipio fent out two Legions to Forage as far as ' Zetta, which was about ten Miles from his ine fame to the fa Town of a first of greater security, and having left some Troops presend that to Guard it, he parted about the fourth Watch of the Night on the lide of the Enemies Camp, and Zerbi, but made himself Master of the Town. He had nothis whole tice that Scipio's Legions went farther into the Country has Country to Forage, and going to follow them, he been fo gien found the whole Body of the Enemy flood ready the suscen to relieve them. This retarded his Progress; that we can lo taking C. Mutius Reginus, a Roman Kriight, an and be seen intimate Friend of Scipio, who Commanded in the Town, and P. Atrius one of the same Dignity, who belonged to the Jurisdiction of Utica, and 32 Calmels belonging to the King; He left a Garifon there under the Command of Oppius his Lieutenant, and so began to retire to his Camp.

> LXI. Being now not far from the place where Scipio lay Encamp'd, through which he must of Necessity pais to reach his own, Labienus and Afranius, who lay in Ambufcade with all their Cavalry and Light Foot, began to show themfelves upon the nearest Hill, and Charge him in the Rear. As foon as Cafar perceiv'd this, he fent his Horse to support them, and commanded all his Soldiers to carry all their Baggage to one place, and make a vigorous Onfet; This they effected with that fuccess, that the Horse and Light Foor of the Enemy, at the first attack of the Legions, was disorder'd and beaten from the Hill. As Cafar now thought, that the Enemy being repuls'd would incommode him no longer, he continued his March, but he faw them appear in an Instant upon a Neighboring Hill, from whence they came to attack him with their Horse mingl'd with the Light Infantry, who show'd an incredible swiftnels, whether they were to advance or retire: This they did frequently retiring, when he made affault, and preffing upon him when he began to march. C.efar perceiv'd that their defign was only to compel him to Encamp in that place where there was no Water, that so his Men, who had Eaten nothing from the fourth Watch to the tenth hour of the day, and his Horses, might dye with hunger and thirft.

LXII. The Sun being now ready to fet, and Cafar finding that he had not advanc'd full a hundred Paces in four hours, he drew off his Cavalry from the Rear, where the Enemy had kill'd him abundance of Horses, and made his retreat with the Legions in their turns: Thus marching on flowly and gently, he found his Foot supported the Onset of the Enemy more conveniently. In the mean time, great numbers of the Numidian Horse run full speed before him on the Right and Left through the Mountains, endeavouring to encompals Celar's Army with their Multitudes, while three or four of his Veteran Soldiers rutn head, and throw their Javelins at the Numidians that gall'd them, but they made above two thouland of them fly at the fame time. Who for all that did not forbear to return to the Charge as foon as the faw them begin to march. Thus Gefar formetimes his Camp again. Scipio, in the mean time, being moving forwards; and fometimes making an hale. brought back all his Men fafe to the Camp about the first hour of the Night, having but sen of his Men wounded. Labients likewife retir'd throughly fatigud, after he had loft above three hundred men, befides his Wounded that were in great number. In the mean time, Scipie return'd with his Legions to his Camp, after he had all this while stood in Order of Battel with his Elephants, whom he had plac'd before his Tenes in fight of Cefar's Men, to cause the greater terror.

> LXIII. To frustrate the designs of an Enemy. who made War after this manner, Cefar instructed his Men, hot as a General uses to do a Veteron Army, which in their time have gain'd leveral Victories, but as the Mafter of a Fencing School teaches his young Scholars the use of their Arms. thewing them in whee manner they were to meet or retire from the Enemy, how and in what place to make a Feinte, or throw their Javelins, and in what space to give or make a Retreat, for the Light Infantry kept them still in Breath, hindering the Cavalry from coming to the Charge, and Fa-tiguing the heavy Arm'd Soldiers by their fittange fwiftnels, who when they were purfu'd by them, and flood to receive them, the others immediately gave back, and so avoided the danger.

LXIV. This gave no finall Inquietude to Cafar, because whenever he hazarded a Battel without his Legions, his Horse were by no means an equal Match to that of the Enemy; He was so much the more troubled, because he had not as yet try'd their Legions, and knew not after what manner to support himself against their Horse and Light Infantry, which wou'd give him no little trouble if the Legions once came to join them; besides his Soldiers were terrified at the number and prodigious bigness of the Elephants, altho to cure them of these Apprehensions, he had formerly caus'd fome Elephants to be Transported into Isaly, that so his Men might be better acquainted with the Shape and Qualities of these Beafts, and find which part of their Body might the soonest be wounded: For when these Elephants were let out in all their Military Furniture, he show'd his Men where they lay most open and expos'd, that so they might direct their Darts accordingly: He took care likewife that his Horses, by frequent seeing them, might not be afraid of the fmell, the noise, and the shape of these Beasts; and this he had in great measure effected, for his Soldiers stroked the Beafts with their hands, and were fensible how flow they were, and then the Cavalry threw blunted Javelins at them; and thus, by degrees, brought their Horses to bear very well the fight and presence of these Animals.

LXV. For the above-mentioned Reasons Casar became more flow and referv'd, and was not fo eager to fight, as he had show'd himself on several other occasions; nor are we to wonder at it, for when he was in Gaul, his Men were accustom'd to fight in large open Plains, and had to do with a frank open Enemy, unacquainted with Stratagems and Tricks, who rely'd upon their Bravery and Valor, and fcom'd to have recourse to little Ar-tifices: But now he engaged against a Cunning + Thubene, Subjects to King Juba; who liv'd in the Town ! and Subtile Energy, and therefore was oblig'd to that so they might be in a Capacity to avoid them. To die end that his Men might the fooner leave all their Politick Petches, he would never fuffer his Legions to stay fong in a place. But under a prutence of fending them out to Forage, he carry'd them up and down the Country, knowing well that his Enemies Forces would not be far from him. Three days after he pass'd before their Camp and offer'd them Battel in the Plain, but feeing them decline the Fight, he return'd with his Men towards the Evening.

LXVI. In the mean time there arrived Deputies from Vacca, a Town lying next to Zetta, of which place, as we have already observed, Cafar had made himfelf Mafter. They humbly defired him to fend them a Garifon, promiting to furnish him with abundance of things serviceable in War. But before he fent it, Juba had carry'd the place by Affault, and after he had put all the Inhabitants to the Sword. gave the Town to be Plunder'd and Destroy'd by his Soldiers, Celar *Mysering made a general Review of his Army on the * 12th of Maich. of the Calends of April, and march'd out the eleven from Scipio's, he flood in Order of Battel, but being fensible that the Enemy, whom he had it. he returned back with his Forces; He decamp'd the next day, and marched towards the gan to incommode his Rear with his Horse and Light Foot, and happening to intercept the Bagand had the hardiness to come nearer to the Legions, thinking that the Soldiers, wearied with the Burthens they carry'd, were not able to fight; but Cafar made his advantage of it, for he detach'd Legion, and caus'd them to make a vigorous Onfer upon Labienus's Horfe, who being daunted at their coming up, began diffionourably to fly, leaving several of his Men dead upon the spot, and a greater number wounded : The Infantry his Men fo far, that making a brave Impreffion returned to their Colours, and began to march whither they intended, while Labienus still followed them afar off by the highest Eminence of the Hill.

sw 21

LXVII. After Cafar arrived at Sarfura in the fight of the Enemy, he put all Scipio's Garison to the Sword, after a brave refiftance made by P.Corin Chief, and was at last over-power'd and kill'd. or wounded. He had no fooner made himfelf Matter of the Town, and diffributed Corn amongst his Soldiers. but he came the next day before Tifdra, where a Company of Gladiators. Cafar having observ'd the fituation of the place, and being unprovided of Military Engines necessary to reduce it. abandon'd this Defign, and having march'd about four Miles, Encamp'd in a place where he had ftore of Water, and parting from thence four days after, he return'd again to his Camp at Agar, and Scipio did the fame on his fide.

and Subtile Energy, and therefore was obligd to the farmermost Marktime parts of his Kingdom, Anick, p infruct his Soldiers how to find out their Fraudt, put the Royal Gardon all to the Sword, and tent and ment put the Boyal Gardon all to the sweet, and the mad by Pot.
Ambaffadbrs to Cloper to acquaint him what they mad by Pot.
fidus in the had done. They earneftly entreated him, that life of Se, fince they had performed to confiderable a Service Autin. to the Roman People, he would take care to fupport them; Cafar approv'd their Conduct, and ient Marcus Crifbus, a I ribune, with a Cohort and abundance of Archers and Machines, to fortifie the place. About the fame time there arrived at life Camp Four thousand Soldiers, who, being either hander'd by Sickness, or having a Furloe granted them, had not an Opportunity to pass over into Afficiek before; together with Four hundred Horse and a Thouland Archers and Slingers. After this Reinforcement, he drew out all his Army, and femoving eight Miles from his old Camp, and about four from Scioie's, he encamped in a Plain.

LXIX. Below Scipio's Camp stood a Town called Tagea, where Scipio used to keep a Garison of about # Terre are 400 Horse, which being drawn out on the Right of the same and Left of the place, he drew his Legions out of name in the Camp, and posting them upon a Hill some defender. what lower than that whereon his Camp lay, he But this is marched not above a Mile from his Intrenchments, in Africk. next day with all his Forces, and advancing and there he flood in Order of Battle. After Sci- oddiffree. about five Miles from his own Camp, and about pio had thus flaid a long while in the fame place, and Cafar faw that the day passed without any Action, he fent his Cavalry, supported by his Archfo often invited to fight, were refolv'd to decline ers and Slingers, to make a vigorous Onfet upon that of the Enemy, which stood in guard before the place. This was no fooner put in execution, Town of Surfura, where Scipio kept a Garison of and Cafar's Horse with great speed begun to make Numidians, and had laid up a great Magazine of a vigorous Onlet, but Pacidius extended his Caval-Corn, which as foon as Labients perceivu, he be- ry upon a great Front, to encompais that of Cafar, and yet at the fame time to make a flour Oppofition: Which as foon as Cafar perceived, he orgages of the Sutlers and Merchants, who carry'd dered 300 light armed Men of the nearest Legion their Goods in Wagons, he receiv'd fresh Courage, to relieve his Horse. On the other hand Labienus fent new Succours to his Cavalry; and in the room of the wounded and farigu'd, he fent fresh Men to support them. As soon as Casar saw that his Horse, who did not amount to above 400. were three handred light Armed Soldiers out of every not able to maintain the Dispute with the Enemy, who was 4000 ftrong, and were wounded by the light armed Numidians, and began to give ground by degrees, he fent another Wing to relieve them in this Extremity with all speed. This encouraged upon the Enemy, and having kill'd abundance of them, and wounded more, they purfued them 3 Miles, and at last, after they had drove them into the Hills, returned to their Camp. Cafar having tarried in Battle Array till the tenth hour of the day, retir'd to his Camp without the Loss of one Soldier; but in this Action Pacidius was dangeroufly wounded in the head with a Javelin, and nelius, Scipio's Lieutanant, who Commanded there feveral Officers and brave men were either flain

LXX. Cafar now finding that he endeavoured in vain to draw his Enemies into the Plain, and Considius Commanded with a strong Garison, and that he could not encamp nearer them, by reason of the great Scarcity of Water, was fully fatisfied that they did not so much rely upon their own Valour, as upon his want of Water: So on the Day before the *Nones of April he decamped about . Treath of the third Watch of the Night, and marching 16 our April Miles in the Night, from Agar, he pitch'd his Tents before Thapfus, where there was a strong Garison under the Command of Virgilius, and the fame day began to work upon his Lines of Cir-LXVIII. In the mean time, the Inhabitants of cumvallation, and fortified feveral convenient Posts to hinder any Succours from coming to the Town. in the mean time, Scipio discovering what Cafar defign'd, found himself oblig'd to fight, left he should seem to abandon Vingilius and the Inhabitants of Thapfus, who were heartily devoted to his Interests: For which Reason be immediately followed Cefar by the Mountains, and encamped himfelf within eight Miles of the Town in two feveral Camps.

LXXI. There was a Morals full of Sale-Pits. between which and the Sea lay a narrow Neck of Land not above a Mile and a half-long, through which Scipio delign'd to make his Entrance, and throw Relief into the Town, But Cafar had taken effectual Care to prevent it; for the day before, he had caused a small Fort to be built there. where leaving a sufficient Garison to maintain it, he with the rest of his Troops invested the Town. Scipio finding this Pass thut up, was constrained to pass the Night above the Morass; and the next Morning by break of Day he encamped not far from the Fort and Camp, within 1500 Paces from the Sea Upon this News, Cafar ordered his Men to delift from the Works, and leaving the Proconiul Astrenas with two Legions to Guard the Camp and Baggage, he marched in haste against him; and ordering part of his Fleet to lye before Thapfus, he commanded the rest of his Ships to make as near the Shore as they could, behind the Enemies back, and to observe his Signal: Upon the giving of which, they were to make a sudden noise to cause the greater Terrour to the Enemy, that so in this Disorder they might be obliged to look behind them when they were engaged in the Fight.

LXXII. As foon as Cafar came hither, and perceiv'd Scipio's Army to be drawn out before the and Right Wing, while part of the Soldiers at the fame time were busie in working upon the Fortifications of his Camp, he disposed his Army in three Lines, and placed the Second and Tenth Legion upon the Right Wing, the Eighth and the Ninth upon the Left, and five others in the middle Space, covering the Flank of the Battle, where he had ranged the Slingers and Archers, with five Cohorts, to withftand the Efforts of the Elephants, and mingling his light Infantry among his Horse. He walked on foot through all the Ranks, putting the veterane Soldiers in mind of their former Battles and Victories, and encouraged the new-raifed Men, who never had been in a Fight before, to imitate their Valour and Gallantry, that so they might one day fill their place, and fucceed them in their Glory.

LXXIII. As he was thus employed and vifiting his Army, he manifestly perceived that the Enemy betrayed figns of Fear, by returning sometimes to their Camp, and fometimes advancing out of it without any Reason. As other People observed this as well as himfelf, immediately the Lieutenant-Generals and the Voluntiers encompassed Cafar, and conjur'd him not to let slip this Opportuity, which the Gods presented him with, of giving the Enemy a total Overthrow. While Cafar deliberated about the matter, not being willing to attack them at the head of their Retrenchments, and frequently endeavoured to keep the Soldiers back, on the fudden a Trumpeter on the Right Wing, without any Orders from Cefar, but conftrain'd by the Soldiers, founded a Charge: Upon Opposition of the Centurions, who vainly endear voured to keep them back till they had received their General's Orders.

LXXIV. Cafar being now fentible, That the Heat and Ardour of his Soldiers was not to be repreffed, gave the Word, which was Good Fortune; and spurring his Horse, bore down directly up-on the Enemies first Ranks. In the mean while the Slingers and Archers that were placed on the Right Wing made a violent Discharge upon the Elephants; and these unweildy Beasts, affrighted at the noise of the Slings, and incommoded with the Darts and Stones that fell inceffantly upon them, turn'd back upon their own Men whom they threw into a great Dilorder, to gain in bafte the Entrances into the Camp, which were not as yet compleated. And now the Moorish Cavalry, who were posted in the same Wing with the Elephants, finding themselves destitute of this Relief. were the first that began to flee; so that now it was no difficult matter for Cefar's Legions to force their Retrenchments, where some were slain, that defended themselves with great Resolution, and the rest sled in great Precipitation towards the Camp, which they had abandoned the day before.

LXXV. I think it not amifs to relate a remarkable Action of a veterane Soldier belonging to the Fifth Legion, fince it is as remarkable an Instance of Bravery and Valour as History affords: For as an Elephant in the Left Wing, wounded and enraged with the Pain, fell upon one of the Sutlers, who was unarmed, and keeping him under his Feet, then leaning upon his Knees, making dismal Cries, and shaking his Probosos, squeezed and preffed and killed him with his weight; this Soldier could not forbear, but he must encoun-Intrenchments, the Elephants placed on the Left ter the Elephant: So he advanced with his Javelin in his hand, and by that Action obliged the Elephant to turn upon him, and quit the Body he then trampled upon: He took up the Soldier in his Trunk, and thus armed as he was hoifted him up in the Air; but the Soldier, without lofing Courage, gave him fo many Cuts with his Sword. upon his Probofcis, wherein he was twifted round. that he constrain'd the Elephant to drop his Prize and fly towards the reft, making a terrible Noise all the way, out of the excessive Anguish his Wounds gave him.

LXXVI. In the mean time the Garison at Thapfus fallied out the Gate next the Sea-fide, either to relieve their Companions, or to fave themselves by Flight, defigning to abandon the Town; and thus marching up to their Navels in the Sea, were making towards the Land; but the Slaves and Boys that were in the Camp fo gall'd them with Darts and Stones, that they obliged them to return back again to the City. And now Scipio's Ranks being wholly broken, and flying all over the Plain, Cafar's Legions purfued them with that Vigour and Fury, that they did not give them time to rally. As they were now arrived at the other Camp, whither they fled to repair the Works, and putthemselves in a posture of Defence, they could find no Person of Authority there to head and command them; fo throwing down their Arms, they fled towards the King's Camp; where finding Cafar victorious, and now despairing of their Lives, they retired towards a Hill, and began to implore his Clemency, and to falute his Soldiers by the name. of Brothers. But this ferv'd them in little flead; which, all the Cohorts marched with their Co- for the Veterane Soldiers, incensed with grief and lours directly against the Enemy, in spite of the anger, could not be prevailed upon to give the Enemy Quarter, notwithstanding all the Submissions fresh Courage at Casar's Victory, beat back the they made, but killed or wounded feveral Persons of Quality whom they called the Authors of this unnatural War; in which Number was T. Rufus, a Quæstor, who was run through with a Javelin; and Pompeus Rufus, wounded in the Arm with a Sword, had certainly been killed upon the Spot, if he had not in great hafte run to Cefar. Upon this, feveral Roman Knights and Senators, affrighted at the utage of the rest, retired out of the Fight, to avoid the Fury of the Soldiers, who, after fo great a Victory, took the liberty to commir what Actions of Barbarity they thought fit, as thinking the great Services of this Day would excuse them. Thus all Scipio's Men, though in a lamentable manner they implor'd Cefar's Mercy, who cried out to his Soldiers to spare them, yet they were every one flain in his presence.

XXVII. Cafar having thus made himself Mafter of three Camps, kill'd 10000 of the Enemy, and put the reft to flight, retired towards his own Quarters, with the Loss of no more than fifty Soldiers, and a few wounded. But he tarried some time in Order of Battle before Thapfus, and order'd fixty four Elephants, whom he had taken, adorn'd with Towers and other Furniture of War; to be led in fight of the Town, to see if by this means he might induce Virgilius, and those that were besieg'd with him, to lay down their Arms, and cease from making any farther Oppofition. After this, he called out to Virgilius himfelf and gave him frequent Instances of his Clemency and Mercy; but finding he return'd him no Answer, he withdrew from before the Town. The next Day, after he had perform'd Sacrifice, he affembled his Army before the place, commended the Soldiers, and gave large Donatives to all his Veterane Legions, besides the Rewards which he distributed to each Man in particular, who had fignalized himfelf in this Action, from his Tribunal. Thus, after he had left three Legions with C. Rebellus the Proconful, to continue the Siege of the place; and two with Cn. Domi-tius to invest Tifden, where Concidius commanded in chief, he marched towards Utica, and fent Marcus Meffalla before with his Horse.

XXVIII. In the mean time, Scipio's Cavalry, that had escaped out of the Battle, as they made all Expedition to get to Utica, arrived at Parada; where finding the Inhabitants would not open their Gates to them, because they had received the News of Cesar's Victory, they took the Place by Assault; and bringing great Heaps of Wood into the Market-place, upon which they threw all their Goods, they fet it on fire; and driving the Inhabitants, without having any regard to their Age, Quality or Sex, into the Flames, they there forced them to expire in a most dismal manner. At last they came within fight of Utica, where M. Cato commanded; who, because he look'd upon the People of that place to be ill-affected to his Party, by reason of Cetar paffed a Lam, by which the Free People were fewered in their Roghts and Liberties; and the Roman Magifrate were forbidden to violate them. Such were the Cities of Actual, Theffily, and the inft of Greece. the * Julian Law, which confirm'd their Franchizes and Liberties, he had fome time before turn'd the meaner fort of People out of the Town, who were conftrain'd by this means to en-camp under the Walls, before the Warlike Gate, defended only by a small Retrenchment; where he kept a sufficient Guard, and compell'd them to live, while the Senators and those of the better Sort stay'd within Horse with Stones and Clubs; who finding themfelves unable to force this Camp, threw themfelves into Usica, where they killed feveral of the Inhabitants, and plunder'd their Houses. Cato used all his Authority to persuade them to defend the Town in Conjunction with himself, and to defift from this Blood-shed and Rapine; but finding now what it was they aim'd at, to appeale their Fury, and put an end to these Disorders, he distributed † 100 Sesterces to every Man. Fau- Taking the If it Sylla gave them the like Sum out of his own Seftercehor Pocket, and retired with them from thence, to feering is wards Juba's Kingdom.

ime Gender.

This Denative made about 12 Shillings of our Money. But if me read it Sefterium, in the Neuter Gender, is mould arife to to great a Sum, viz. about 200 Feunds.

LXXIX. In the mean time stragling Parties daily arriv'd at Utica, whom Cato affembling together, with 300 who furnish'd Scipio with Money to carry on the War, he advised them to set the Slaves at liberty, and defend the Town. Some few approv'd of his Motion, while the reft, afraid of their Lives, were only intent how to make their Escapes. Upon this, he forbore to recommend it to them any longer, and affign'd them Ships to go where they should see convenient. As for himself, after he had given necessary Orders with great Care, and recommended his Children to Lucius Cafar, who at that time exercifed the Office of Quæftor in the City, he retired to his Chamber without any Suspicion, pretending to lie down and refresh himself with a little Sleep, with the same Unconcern in his Face and Discourse as formerly, and there run himself through the Body with his own Sword. At the noise which he made in falling, his Physician and Domesticks imagining now some such matter, broke into the Room, and run to his Affiftance; but as they endeavour'd to ftop the Flux of Blood, and bind up the Wound, he open'd it again with his own Hands, and thus expired without the leaft Concern or Emotion. Though the People of Utica hated him upon the Account of his Party, yet they had his great Integrity and other Vertues in Admiration, and gave him an honourable Sepulture, because he was not like the other Commanders, that had pillaged them ; as also, because he had fortified the Town with feveral Forts and Towers of wonderful Archite-Cture. After his Death, Lucius Cafar, to make his best Advantage of this fad Accident, affembled the Inhabitants, and advised them to open their Gates, and rely upon Cafar's Generofity, from which they had reason to expect every thing. Thus the Gates were open'd, and he went out of the Town to meet Cafar upon the Way. Messalia, according to Orders, arrived at Utica, and placed Guards at all the Gates.

LXXX. In the mean time, C.e.far leaving Thapfus arrived at Usceta, where Scipio had left a confiderable Magazine of Corn, and other Warlike Ammunitions, with a small Garison; so that he made himself Master of all without any opposition. After this he came to Adrumetum, which likewise open'd its Gates to him without delay; after he had inform'd himfelf what Arms, and Corn, and Money, were in the place, he Pardon'd Quintus Ligarius Son to Caius Concidius, and parted the fame day to go to Utica, leaving Livineius Regulus there with a Legion: He met L. Cafar upon the Roads who threw himself at his Feet, and asked nothing else but his Life, which Cesar, acthe Town for its Defence. These People taking cording to his Inclination and usual Custom, readily granted. The same he did to Cacina, C. Ateins, to them, and parted the next Day with his Horse P. Atrius, L. Cella the Pather and Son, M. Espius, M. Aquinius, Cato's Son, and the Children of Damatippus, and towards Night he came with lighted Flambeaux to Utica, but lodg'd without the Town that Night for fear of fome diforder.

LXXXI. He made his Entry the next morning into the Town, and Summoning an Atlembly of the People, he thank'd them for their good Affections towards him, but express'd himself in bitter terms against the Roman Merchants, especially the three hundred who had furnish'd Varus and Scipio with Money to carry on the War, and made a very long Recital of their Crimes. At Lift he bid them thow themselves, and told them that he would grant then! their Lives, but that he would Conficate their Estates, with this condition however, that they might redeem them for a certain Sum; in confideration of which, they should enjoy their other Priviledges. As they apprehended a more fevere Treatment than this, (for they delpair'd of their Lives, confidering what they had done) they willingly accepted his offer, and humbly requested him to impose a certain Sum of Money upon all of them in general. Thus impoling a Fine of two hundred thousand Sesterces upon them, which they were to pay at fix equal Payments in the compais of three Years, not one of them refused it, but each Man looking upon this to be the day of his Nativity, humbly thank'd Cafar for his generofity and kindness.

LXXXII. On the other fide, King Juba having escap'd out of the Battel with Petreius, drew off towards his own Kingdom, concealing himfelf all the Day, and marching only by Night, till he ar-* Acin in riv'd at * Zama, where, belides his Wife and Africk, a Children, he had carry'd all the Money, and the best five most valuable things of his Kingdom; and which, Day Jum ever fince the beginning of the War,he had ftrength-Carth ge, to ned with great Fortifications. But the Inhabitants ward where of the Town thut their Gates against him upon Jubi which the joyful News of C.efar's Victory; as also, because this Prince having inconsiderately engag'd himself in a War with Rome, had rais'd a mighty Pile of Wood in the Market Place, that in case he happen'd to be defeated, he might burn them with all their Goods there, and afterwards throw himfelf upon it, with his Wife and Children, and all his Treasures. He had recourse at first to Menaces, but finding they made no great impreffion upon the People, he earnestly entreated them to receive him; but feeing that this way wrought no effects, and that neither fear nor angry Words could procure him Admission, he at last begg'd of them, that they would deliver up his Wife and Children to him, that he might carry them along with him: At last, when he found they return'd him no Answer, and that he made all these Instances in vain, he departed from Zama, and withdrew to one of his Country Houses with M.Petreius, and a few Horic, LXXXIII. In the mean time the Inhabitants of Zama dispatched Ambassadors to Calar, at Utica, to desire him to fend them a sufficient Rehef, before the King could get any Forces together, and but himself in a Condition to incommode them; affuring him that they kept the Town, and fo would continue to keep it for his Service as long as they lived, and that they would be never wanting to support his Party in any Respect. Cafar thanked them for their Zeal, and fent them home from Utica; where meeting feveral Officers belonging to the King's Army upon the Way, who humbly defired him to pardon them, he accordingly forgave all that was past, and came along with them to Zama. The Report of his Clemency being spread all over the Country, several Perfons of the best Condition slock'd in to him from all Parts, and were by him foon deliver'd from their Dangers and Apprehensions.

LXXXIV. While these Things happen'd, Confidius, who was at Tifdra with a Garrison of Getulians and Gladiators, besides his ordinary Retinue, having received Advice of the Defeat of Scipio, and frighted at the Approach of Domitius, he abandon'd the place, as not thinking himfelf capable to keep it, and privately fled away with a confiderable Sum of Money, and a few Barbarians in his Company, and thus endeavour'd to make his Escape into Juba's Kingdom. But his Companions, the Getulians, greedy of this Parchase, cut his Throat upon the Road, and afterwards dispersed themselves into several places. On the other fide, C. Virgilius, who was at Thap-fus, feeing himself block'd up by Sea as well as by Land, and all those of his Party either dead or diffipated; hearing likewife that M. Cato had laid violent hands upon himself at Utica; that King Juba, abandon'd by his own Subjects, was despifed by all the World; that Salura and his Forces were defeated by Sitius; that Cafar was receiv'd at Utica; and that no Remainders were left of fo vaft an Army, that could give him the leaft Affiftance, he enter'd into Articles with Cneiss the Proconful, who belieged him, and thus furrender'd himself, with the Town and all-within LXXXV. In the mean time, King Juba finding himself contumeliously shut out of all his Cities, despairing now of ever retrieving his Affairs, executed that Resolution which he had taken with Perreius to die generously: So + after they had dined, iln the prin. Ferrements the generously say ratter may mad unned, rouse pro-taking their Swords in Their Hands, they thrulf it shed it at one another; but Juba, which was the fitnonger comming of the two, foom dispatched Petricity and after-its in food wards trying to run himself through with his cown matter is the committee of the two days are able to defail it be measured bow and show a disk it to manife the impossion. Sword, but not able to effect it, he prevail'd with Editor reads one of his Slaves to do him that kindness; who convincing accordingly put him out of his Mifery. On the fallowed, for other fide, Pab. Sieine defeated Sabura, Juba'sfe Florus re-Lieutenant, and kill'd him on the place; and as lates the Stehe crofs'd the Country of Mauritania with part of 77. his Troops to joyn Cafar, he accidentally mer Faustus Sylla and Afranius, who were retiring towards Spain with that Body of Horse which had pillaged Utica, and made about 1500 in number; fo placing an Ambuscade for them in the Nighttime, he fell upon them with great Fury by Break of Day, and, except a few Horse who made their Escapes in the beginning of the Action, he either killed all the rest, or took them Prisoners. Among the rest, Afranius and Faustus Salla were taken, with the Wife and Children of the latter. ‡ A few Days after, a Mutiny happening in the ‡ Florus and A few Days arer, a Mutiny happening in the Floras and Army, Faultu and definants were killed; but Care Surveys for preferved Pompeias, Faustus's Wife, and her that hey Children, and left them in free Possession of their were killed Fortunes.

I YYYUI In the mean time Social with the Muting Part relate.

LXXXVI. In the mean time, Scipio, with Da-the Matter masippus, Torquarus and Platorius Rustianus, Were at our Autoffed up and down by Tempefts at Sea, as they to satisfie the People that he would speedily come design'd to pass over into Spain, and at last, by

Stress of Weather, were forced into the Harbour of Hippo, where Psieius's Fleet at that time lay : by whose larger Ships their small Vessels were funk, and there Scipio, with those above-mention'd, lott his * Life Cafar, after he

* Livy and Florus rehad publickly fold at Zama the Goods pert; that when he found the Ship was taken, he run his Sword into his Belly s of King Juba, and of those Roman Citizens who had carried Arms against his Swera into no weny; and that when Enquiry was made lione the General was, he flooded anfaser, The General is very well.

their Country, gave confiderable Gra-tuities to the Inhabitants of the Town, who had advised the shutting out of Juba, and changed the Kingdom into a Province, after he had freed them from those Taxes and Imposts which Juba had laid upon

Sefterces, and their † Fraternity to

3000; those of Adrumetum to 30000

Sefterces, and their Fraternity to 50000: For which Confideration, he exempted them from Pillage and Plun-

LXXXVII. Thus, leaving Crispus Salustius Governor of the Country, he parted from Zama, and took the Road to Utica, where he likewise exposed in publick Sale the Goods of those Officers who had served under Juba and Petreius, and condemned those of Thapfus to a Mulct of 20000

† The Word in Latin is Convenius; by which the Author means, the Frater-nities or Sodalities of Ro-man Gentlemen trading in thefe Provinces formerly plunder'd, but upon their Complaints, the Senate had fatisfied for their Loffes by Commissioners appointed for that purpole, were condemned to furnish 200000 Pounds of Oyl every Year, because they had made an Alliance with this Prince in the beginning of the War, through the Diffention of their principal Inhabitants, and had affifted him with Money, Men and Arms. Those of Tisdra, by reason of the smallness and poverty of the Place, he only amerced to pay a certain quantity of Corn.

LXXXVIII. After this was over, Cafar embark'd at Utica on the # Ides of June, and arriv'd three Days after at * Caralis in Sardinia, where he fined the 13th of our June. † Sulcitani 100000 Sesterces, because Nom 'tis called Can they had entertain'd Nasidius and his liai. Fleet, and furnish'd him with a new Supply of Men; and imposed an Eighth wifind them mention diffy the instead of a Tenth which Mela, lib. 3. cap. 7. they paid before. After he had fold the Goods of some private Persons, that were confiscated, he parted from thence on the # 3d of the # Our 29th Kalends of July; and failing near the Coasts, he Just. arriv'd within 28 Days at Rome, having been detain'd a long while in feveral places by contrary der. Those of Lepeis, whom Jula had

Of MODERN TRAINING or TACTICK PRACTICE. By CLEMENT EDMONDS, Remembrancer of the City of London:

Orasmuch as my purpose was to make this Task of Observations as a Parallel to our Modern Discipline, I did not think it fit to mingle the Tactick Practice of these Times with the use of foregoing Ages, but rather to shut up these Discourses therewith, as the se-cond Line of this Warlike Parallel, which is thus drawn in the best Fashion of Modern Art.

In the Knowledge of Marshalling an Army, there is nothing more especially to be regarded, than that from a confused Company of Men (having chosen the fittest for the Wars) we should so place and digeft a convenient number of them, that in Marches, in Encamping, in Battels, we may be able with a few well ordered to encounter a far greater Army in Confusion; and to overthrow them. From hence Areas did define the Art of War to be the Knowledge of warlike Motions.

Before this unexpert Army shall be able to be moved in such fashion, it shall not be amis to acquaint it with the most usual Terms, wherewith they shall be often commanded into divers Postures, as occasion shall be offered. For as in the Art of Fencing, no man shall be able to turn and wind his Body for his best advantage, to offend his Enemy, or defend himself, unless first his Master shall instruct him in the several Parts and Postures thereof: So every Soldier, or the whole Troop as one Body, or one Soldier, shall never be readily instructed to transform or turn it self by divers Motions into different Forms, unless they first understand what is meant by Fronts and Flanks, by Files and Ranks, what by Leaders and Followers, by Middlemen and Bringers up. By this means each Soldier understanding what the term doth fignisse, shall readily both apprehend and execute such Commandments as the Captain or Officer shall direct him.

A File is a certain number of Men, following fingly one Leader, unto the depth of eight or ten, A File as they shall be commanded. The Ancients have called this File Seriem, Ordinationem, or Decuriam. It confifteth of Leaders and Followers, placed according to their Worth and Valour: And especially there ought to be regarded the Leader or Decurio, the fifth, fixth, or Middlemen, and the tenth and last, called the Bringer-up or Tergiductor.

First therefore, every Soldier being aptly fitted unto his several Arms, according to his Worth, The Ladder.

Age, and Stature, they are to be disposed into several Files; wherein every one is especially to acknowledge his Leader or Foremost man to be the Author of all his Motions: And therefore duly attending what Directions shall be commanded, each Follower shall, according to the Motions of his Leader or Foremost man, order his own; and is to be excused, if he attend the Motions of his Leader before he move himfelf.

When than Files are thus disposed together, all the Leaders making one and the same Front, and their Followers observing likewise one and the same Proportion of distance, before, and after, and a Rank of on each side; these Files thus joyned make one Battalion, the Front whereof is called a Rank, and from so likewise the second and third in depth, according to the number of Men in each File. The first, sidenim. fecond, and third, and fo forward in each File, are called Sidemen, in respect of the same numbers in the next File. Neither must every Soldier only regard the Motions of his Leader, but he must also diligently respect his Sidemen, and such as shall be placed on his right and left hand, called his Ranks: So that both in Files and Ranks he may always be found in the same distance wherein he

It should be impertinent to the purpose to prescribe a certain number of Soldiers unto these Bat- The number talions, only thus much for the Proportion; That it ought never to exceed so much, but that it may of Soldiers talions, only thus much for the Proportion; I nat it ought never to extern to much, out that it may, easily upon any occasion be changed into such a Form or Fashion to fight, as may be thought fitted in such for the present.

r the present.

The length of this Battalion is diverfly termed amongst the Latins, as Front, Facies, Adfrustio, Fur The length, gum, Go. but in our modern Practice, most familiarly, the Front or Rank.

The breadth of the Battalion, which is from the Leader to the Bringer-up, with the distance be- Breadth of tween all the Followers, is faid to be the length or depth of one file or flank.

In the disposing of Soldiers into Files and Ranks, besides their observing a right Line in their places and standing, we must likewise especially respect the different Worth and Quality of the Soldiers, Dignities in that every one according to his worth may be fuited unto his proper place, and accordingly receive of crued. advancement, as the Death of his Leaders and true value of his Defert by his Commander shall give

First therefore there must be especial choice made of the Leaders of each File, or first Front or The first Ranks of the Battalion, of the most expert, ablest, and best armed men; because that as from them Rank the rest are to receive Directions of their After-motions, so in them the greatest hope of the day doth

Next unto the first, it must be provided that the Bringers up or last Rank, called Tergiductores, The Bringbe little inferiour, well experienced, wife and valiant; that they may both know when to reprehend error trends to their res, or late their former Ranks, and urge them forward if they fee them declining or yeilding upon falle occafions; as also to be able, upon any sudden Alarm given in the Rear, to turn Faces about, and make themselves a Front for the best Resistance.

Of Modern Training

Neither must it be neglected concerning the second and ninth Ranks, that they also may be furnished with the next most sufficient Men, both because of their nearness unto Danger, as also that if their Leaders or Bringers-up shall either be slain, or disabled by Wounds, they may presently succeed in their Places, and make them good.

There is also a good Decorum to be observed in the Middlemen, or fifth and fixth Ranks, both for the Men themselves, and their Arms; that in our Marches, when the Middlemen or fixth Ranks shall be called up to front with their Leaders, they may in some fort and proportion answer their places: As also when we double our Front, by calling up Middlemen to fight in a greater breadth, they may not be unsuitable; but especially in Marches, that they may be able to make the best refiftance, when they shall become the Flanks of the Battalions.

As these Respects ought to be observed in Ranks, so the Files also are not without their different Degrees of Dignity. As the Leader of the right-hand File is accounted to have the first place of honour in the Battalion; for he doth not only lead the reft in his own File, but he is the Author and Beginner of the Motions of the whole Battalion.

The Leader of the left-hand-File hath the next place, because that he, with the Leader of the right-hand File, do always in their marching and embatteling rectifie or rank the whole Front of the Battalion; and so consequently all the rest of their Files as they stand in Order, even until the middle, who are accounted the laft in Dignity.

The Battalion being thus disposed into Files and Ranks, and each File and Rank according to his Worth and Experience rightly advanced; it followeth that there should be a just distance proportioned between either, that at all times, upon all occasions, they might be found ready, and in comelieft Fashion, either to offend their Enemy, or defend themselves. These Distances which every Follower must observe in respect of his Leader, and every Leader and Follower in respect of the Sidemen, may be reduced into three feveral Orders, as followeth.

The first is called open Order; the Distance whereof is twelve Foot between every Follower and his Leader, or between every Rank; and fix Foot between them and the Sidemen, or between every File. This Order is commonly used upon Marches, when the Enemy is known to be far off. as also in private Exercising of Soldiers for their several managing of their Arms. It differeth somewhat from the Ordinatus Miles amongst the Romans, who always observed but four Cubits in Files and Ranks.

The second distance is called Order, when we contract the Battalion both in Length and Breadth. and gather the Soldiers within a nearer Scantling both in Files and Ranks; that is, by observing fix Feet in their Files between the Follower and Leader, and three Feet between the Ranks or Sidemen. This Distance is used when we march toward an Enemy near at hand, or in Marches, by reason of the Opportunity of the place, suspiciously dangerous. This is also near unto Densatus ordo, but only that that was but two Cubits in both Files and Ranks.

The third and last Order, is, when either we attend the Enemy's present Assault, or that we in-Pould'en 29 tend to charge him upon our securest and best distance; when every Follower standeth three Feer. Poulds on. or his Rapier's length behind his Leader, and a Foot and a half from the Sidemen or Files; or when every Soldier occupieth but one Foot and a half for his own Station, joyning Pouldron to Pouldron. or Target to Target. This differeth from Constipatus Ordo, because that alloweth but one Cubit for Files and Ranks, and this close Order alloweth one Cubit in the File, but two in the Ranks.

The manner This diffance doth agree also best with the length of our Pikes of fifteen or fixteen Foot long. of charging For it is thought fit oftentimes that the Battalion confifting of ten Ranks, there should not charge more at one time than the five foremost, so that the Pikes of the fifth Rank might be three Foot over the foremost's Shoulder; and the other sive Ranks should in this close Order, or nearer if it be posfible, follow the other charging, with their Pikes advanced, until some Occasion should require their Charge. In the mean time they should perform their Duty, in keeping the five foremost Ranks from retiring, and belides add ftrength unto the Charge or Shock.

The Manner of Exercifing composed Battalions, with their different Motions.

THE Files and Ranks being thus understood, disposed and ordered, and all Parts and Members of the Battalion being joyned in their just Proportion and Diftance, able and fit to be altered upon any sudden occasion (as it were but one entire Body) into several and divers Postures, and to make Refiftance unto what Forces foever shall oppugn the same; it might be thought needless to have made the Disposition of the Members to exact, unless by continual Practice and Exercise they might be made nimble and ready, not only to defend themselves and their whole Body on all sides but also to be able to offend whensoever they shall espie the least occasion of Advantage.

The Terms of Direction or Command, which are commonly used in this modern Discipline of Martial Exercise, as they are not many, only answering to the different Postures which are required in the Battalion; so they are and must be short and perspicuously plain, that by this means being suddenly uttered, eafily apprehended and understood, they may as speedily be put in execution by those which shall be commanded,

First therefore, that the Batallion may be commanded into some one fashion of posture, from Stand in whence it shall be fit to convert it self into all other, the Captain or Officer shall bid them that in First. Front. When every particular Soldier composing himself after his foremost Leader, standeth comely statu. in File and Rank, fronting unto some certain place, or to the Captain, as shall be thought best for the prefent.

In this and all other directions whatfoever, it shall be especially observed, that every Follower attending what is commanded, mark his next Leader, and accordingly move himself, as he shall see

The Battallion therefore thus Fronting, if the Enemy should suddenly either assault the right or right or left. left Flank, it shall be commanded to face to the Right or Left, when every Soldier observing his Decimate Leader shall turn his face, and make his Flank his Front according to the direction.

There is also a doubled Motion or Declination to the Right or Left, when every Soldier observing term. his Leader, shall turn their bodies twice to the Right or Left, and by that means become turned Face about with their faces where their backs were, as if they expected an Enemy in the Rear, or being to per- to the right form some motion that may be offered: beginning this alteration from the right or left as shall be Dublicate

As every particular Soldier in the Troop is thus commanded at fometimes to turn his face to the or mutation right or left, or about, the Battalion standing in order, that is, according to the distance before Wheel to named; so the whole Battalion being reduced into their close order, is commanded to turn as one the right or body to the right or left. It is performed thus: Imagine the Battalion stand first in order, it shall left. be commanded that they close their files to the right; when the right file ftanding ftill, the rest turn- basen well ing their faces to the right,march into their close order and return as they were : next that, they close scutum. their ranks from behind, when every follower marcheth forward to his leader unto his Rapiers point, as is faid before. This done, (the leader of the right file standing immoveable) all the rest (as the body of a Ship or a great Gate) turn about that leader, as about the binge or center, every one keeping the same distance and order wherein they were first placed, as if they were but one entire body.

When the same Battallion is to be restored into the same station wherein it was first, it is com-At year.

When the same Battallion is to be restored into the same station wherein it was first, it is com-At year.

Restored when the name paraminon is to be removed into your order from whence you were closed. Then more manded; Face about to the left, and march into your order from whence you were closed. Then more Revolution. let your leaders or first ranks stand still, and the rest turning face about, march ranks in order as Reverse. before: then turn as you were, and you are restored.

When the whole Battalion being in their close order, should turn about and make the Rear the Front, Wheel about it is done by a double turning or declination, and commanded to wheel about, which is answerable I-flexio to the former face about or mutation.

There is also another wheeling in this fort, when the Front changeth the aspect thrice; for as Reflexio. wheeling about maketh the Front the Reer, so this wheeleth from the right to the left, or contrariwise: which fashion is so seldom used, that we scarce afford it a name.

In all fuch Motions and Alterations, it is most fit that all Men perform their directions with their Pikes advanced, being in that fort most easie to be commanded, as also leis troublesome to their followers and leaders.

Counter-marching Files and Ranks.

There is also another means to prevent the Enemy his affaulting us in the Rear or Flank, left he should find our worst men least able to make resistance; and this is performed by Countermarching both Files and Ranks three divers ways apiece.

The first was used by the Macedonians, after this fashion: First the leader turneth his face about Files, from to the right or left, and so the next follower marching behind his leader turneth also, and so the the Rear third and sourth, until the bringer up have carried himself out into a new place in the Rear further through. from the Enemy, as he was before next unto him. But this neither was nor is accounted fafe or fe-Evolution cure, because it doth somewhat resemble a slying or running away from the Enemy, which might give him no fmall incouragement, and therefore it is not much in practife.

Only at some times, the bringers up marching throughout beyond the leaders, until they possess the fame space before them which they did behind them, all turning their faces about, make their leaders to front the Enemy, who were before farthest from them.

The Lacedamonians used the contrary, as it were pursuing the Enemy: the bringer up first being From the faced about, and so the next marching before him, and so the third, until the leader himself became Latenica also turned, and in the foremost front unto the Enemy. Which with us is somewhat otherwise, but evolution yet both fronting, and as it were pursuing the Enemy: because our leaders first begin this motion and to Countermarching through on the right or left, become in the Front in a new space of ground, who were before in the Reer.

The third and last was invented by the Persians, whom when the place or near approach of the Enemy would not fuffer to change their ground, they were wont to Countermarch the Front to the right or From the left; and being come unto the depth of the bringers up, to fland ftill until the other half file had Front and likewise marched forth, and fallen upon their leaders in every file. In all these it is especially commanded, to march still in the same distance, and by whole ranks, to prevent confusion, which (cipe consume cially the Enemy at hand) must needs be most dangerous, and therefore carefully to be avoided.

First

Of Modern Training.

209

In like fort the Ranks may countermarch, when either the right wing would be ftrengthaed by the left, or the left by the right, always marching by whole files towards the right or left, according as they shall have the direction, either changing the ground, or upon the same ground, as in the former countermarches.

There is used also another kind of strengthening both the front and flank when occasion shall be offered, viz by doubling either files or ranks. And this, either by doubling the number of Soldiers in the fame files or ranks, keeping still the same breadth and depth of ground; or else by doubling the ground, keeping the same number of Soldiers. The files are doubled, when the second file shall inbling of ground, keeping the fame number of Jointers. The nies are doubled, when the fector in leading in-files to the fert it less into the first, the leader thereof putting himself a follower unto the leader of the first. and the next follower follower to the next in the first file, and so forwards. And likewise the fourth file inserting it self into the third, and the fixth into the fifth. And this is to be performed when the Battalion standeth in his order. Duplicare

To double the place or depth, is when the same number of men shall put themselves out of their order into their open order, either by advancing forward, or by falling backwards, as they shall be

The ranks are doubled two manner of ways; either by inferting the fecond into the first to the erting, or right or left, as before in the files; or else (the Enemy being at hand) by joyning whole Troops together to the right or left wing, according as occasion shall be offered: and this is held to be the safest when the Enemy is near, to avoid confusion. It is performed either in the same ground, or by doubling the ground, when either we defire to exceed the front of our Enemy's Battalion, or to prevent lest we our selves be included. The terms to both are; Double your files or ranks to the right or left: and when you would have them return again into their proper places, it is commanded;

The ordinary directions which are especially given in these Martial Exercises are, first that no man in the time of Exercising or Marshalling shall be lowder than his Officer: but every one attending to his place, when he is commanded, shall diligently hearken to such directions as shall be given. The Captain in the Front shall speak, and the Sergeants in each slank shall give the word unto the Lieutenant or Enfign in the Rear: who as in his proper place, feeth all things executed accordingly as the Captain shall command. It shall be unpossible to perform any thing herein, unless first every one do exactly observe his leader and his sideman: and to this purpose it is often commanded, Keep your files, Keep your ranks.

Of Marches.

In a Cham. IN Champaigns there needs no great labour to Marshal particular Troops for their after-marches; because they may march either by whole divisions, observing only their course of indifferency, that every Division may every third day have the Vanguard; or else in such form and fashion as the General hath proposed for a day of Battel, according as the danger of an expected Enemy shall give occasion. But because all Countries will not afford a Champaign for the marching of an Army, and therefore not possible to march far with many Troops in Front, nor many files of any one In fireights Troop or Division, by reason of often streights, and passages betwixt hills, woods, or waters; It is provided, though by long induction, the whole Army shall be extended into a thin length and few files, yet the Soldiers well disposed shall be as readily able to defend themselves and offend the Enemy on their flanks, (from whence only in such streights the danger is imminent) as if they were to front an Enemy with an entire Battalion in a Champaign Country.

paffages.

First, therefore, a Division or Battalion being ordered and drawn before the Quarter, into one marlbal a even Front of just files, ten in depth; the Musqueteers equally divided on the right and left flanks of the Pikes, all standing in their order, that is to say, six feet distant in files and ranks; the Captain carefully provideth, that the first, fifth, fixth and tenth ranks be always well filled, and furnished with his most able and best-armed Soldiers. Which done, he commandeth first the middlemen or half-files to come a-front with their leaders; fo that the Division becometh but five in depth. Next he commandeth to face to the right or left, as direction shall be to march from that Quarter; and so the whole Division resteth ready in his fashion to march five in front, the one half of the Musqueteers in the Vanguard, and the other in the Rear, the Pikes in the Battel, and both flanks well furnished with the ablest and best men to offend or defend, as there shall be occasion: that is to fay, the right Flanks with the first and fifth Ranks, and the left with the fixth and tenth Ranks. If occasion afterwards shall be given of a halt in a Champaign, or before the Quartering, the Captain commandeth first unto all, (they being first closed into their order). Face as you were; next unto to reasons the half Files; Face about, and march out, and fall again upon your Files. By which means the into their Division becometh again reduced into the same Front and fashion from whence it was first transformed, ready to encounter an Enemy, or to be drawn into the Quarter. When Pikes are to charge Pikes in a Champaign, it useth to be performed two several ways. The manner of charging First the whole Division being commanded into their close order, the five first Ranks charging their Pikes with Pikes, every Follower over his Leader's shoulder directer his Pike as equally as he can, and the first Rank with Pikes Four Rank shall have three feet of his Pike over the foremost shoulder. The other five Ranks with their Pikes advanced follow close up in the Rear, either to second the foremost, or to be employed in the b) the Rear as occasion thall be offered. Otherwise and most usual, when the whole depth of the Files whole depth throughout the Division shall charge together, all shall locked and united together, and therefore most able to make the strongest shock offensive or defensive: provided always that none mingle their Pikes in others Files, but the whole File one in another's shoulder.

Pikes in others rites, but the whole the one in another's mounter.

In charging with Musqueteers, it is observed no way convenient that there should be too many in To charge a Rank, or that the Ranks should be too long. For the first Rank is commanded to advance ten paces with Musqueteen paces with Musqueteen paces. a reams, of that the reams mount or too mag, to the intervals is commanded to advance ten paces with motion before the fecond, and then to difcharge, and wheeling either to the right or left, falleth into the quetters. Rear; and so the second advancing to the same distance, dischargeth and wheeleth as before; and Really and to the recome advancing to the same untance, unchangern and wheeleth as before; and likewife the third, and so forward as long as the Officer shall be commanded. Which shall not so the same well be performed the Ranks being extraordinary long, because it will require so long a time to many in a smary in a wheel from the Front, that the second may succeed, unless by direction the Rank may divide it self, Rank. the one half to the right, and the other to the left, in wheeling to the Rear.

In the Retreat the whole Ranks having turned their Faces about, are to march three or four paces In the Reforward: their Chief Officer coming in the Rear, first commandeth the last Rank to make ready, treat. and then to face about and discharge, and wheel about to the head or front of the Division: and being clearly passed, the next Rank to perform as much; and so the rest in order.

Where the paffages are narrow, and the Division cannot come to charge in Front, as between two The manner Waters or Woods, the manner of charging is different: for there being five or ten Files led in the of changing waters of woods, the mainer of changing a sometent, not there being ave of ten rines ted in the young induction, that File which Flanketh the Enemy difchargeth first only, and the rest marching contributions of the state of th induction, that the winch remarks in the national property of the property of Flank, and makes ready; and fo the fection File, and the third, fo long as the Enemy shall conti-nue, there being a continual Difcharging by Files, as before by Ranks. Unless it be in the Passes is the post-of Breland, meeting with an irregular Enemy, where they use to intermingle their Files of Shot land. with Pikes, that the one may be a Defence for the other, when the Enemy shall come up to the

How Directions are delivered in the Wars.

ALL Directions in the Wars have ever been delivered either by Signs subject to the Eye, by Word of Mouth, or the Sound of a Drum, or some such Warlike Instrument. Concerning those visible Signs displayed unto the Soldiers, the falling of Mists, the raising of Dust, Showers of By Jigms. Rain and Snow, the Beams of the Sun, Hilly, uneven, and crooked Paffages by long Experience have found them to be most doubtful and uncertain; as also, because as it was a Matter of great Difficulty to invent different Signs upon all sudden occasions; So it is almost an Impossibility that the floary to invent enterior organ upon an inducen occasions, so it is amout an importantity that the Common Soldier (who oftentimes is found fearce capable of the understanding of plain Words diffinely pronounced) should both apprehend and understand studently, and execute directly the true Sense and Meaning of his Commander's Signs.

Senie and meaning of his Commander's Signs.

The Drum and Trumpet are yet used. But because many different Sounds are not easily difftinguished in Soldier's Understanding, without some danger of Confusion, we only command by the or Trumpet, inarticulate Sounds, to Arm, to March, to Troop, to Charge, and to Retreat: With all which several Notes the Soldier is so samples are acquainted, that so soon as he hears them beaten he was to be read to Sidden to the samples and to Sidden to Sounds. may be ready suddenly to put them in execution, as if he heard his Captain pronouncing as much.

The Directions by Word of Mouth are infinite, according to the different Occasions which shall By word of The Directions by Word of Mouth are infinite, according to the different Occasions which shall by word of be offered; yet always with this Cavear, That they be shorr, yet perspicuous, without all Ambiguithauth. Try, and plainly pronounced, sirth by the Captain, then derived by the Serjeants through the Division or Battalion. Though infinite, yet the most usual are these; To your Arms; Keep your Files, The most keep your Ranks: Follow your Leader; Leaders, look to your Files; Keep your Distance; Face to usual three through the property of the property o keep your Kanks: rollow your Leauer; Leauers, now to your Ranks; Stand as you are; As you ding term the Right; Face to the Left; Clole your Files; Clofe your Ranks; Stand as you are; As you ding term were; Face about to the Right; Wheel about to the Right or Left; Double your Ranks; Double 'vie Exertyour Files; Leaders, Countermarch through to the Right or Left; Leaders, Countermarch to the fallon or your rises, Leauris, Connermant through or the tagin of Late, Leauris, Countermarch to the sation or Right or Left, and stand, Middlemen, come forth and fall upon your Leaders. Besides many fit Division. Terms commanded in managing particular Arms, as Pikes and Muskers, which are omitted.

And thus much touching the Tractick Practice of our Modern Wars: which I have the rather added, in regard that divers Soldiers, as unacquainted both with the manner and the value thereof, do think a heap of People unmartialled, to be as available for a great defign, as any other number diftinguished in Files and parts, and disposed for facile and easie motions, according to the powerful circumstances of time and place. Wherein, howsoever the practise of the Turk and the Hungarian may feem to give warrant to that opinion, yet the use of Arms amongst the Gracians and Romans, whose Conquering Armies are pregnant Witnesses of the excellency of their Military Discipline, shall speak sufficiently for order and Tractick motion, as most necessary parts in a well-ordered War.

FINIS.